lose all the pains you have been at? A little more would cast the door wide open, and make you an altogether Christian. Go then a little further, O sinner, to save your soul. Open to Christ all the powers and faculties of your soul. Open to him fully here, as you would have him to open freely to you hereafter. O, what mean you to open to Christ by halves? Alas, the half open door will be ready to close again, and if so, it may never open for the future. Let it be your concern to go a little further than the almost Christian, and rest not in fair beginnings.

IV. Observe, how great the advantage is of opening the door to Christ. Why! I will come into the house, saith he, even the Friend of sinners, the King of glory will come in, the best guest that ever came into a poor man's house: how honourable, how profitable, how happy and blessed, must such a visit be! Quest. For what end will Christ come in? Ans. He will come in to enlighten the house; for the soul is a dark dungeon while Christ is shut out: he will come in to adorn and enrich the soul with the ornaments and treasures of his grace: he will come in to reign in the soul, and pull down the tyrant that hath long oppress you: he will come in and sup with you, and cause you to sup with him: and, because you have no fitting provision in the house, he will bring it with him. And O how rare are Christ's dainties, his hidden manna, the fruits of the tree of life, the grapes of Canaan, the bread that comes down from heaven! How excellent is the water of life! One drop of it would be an everlasting spring in thy soul, that would keep thee from thirsting after the creature any more. What a rich feast are the graces of the Spirit quickened to a lively exercise! What a blest feast is pardon of sin, peace with justice, peace with the law, an interest in Christ's purchase, intimations of Christ's love, gospel-promises applied, communion with God, views of eternal life, well grounded hopes of immortal glory! &c. O how precious and delicate are those gospel rarities which are set before you on the communion-table, and freely tendered to every one that opens the door to Christ! Who would not welcome such a Guest that brings such glorious provision with him? Had poor sinners spiritual appetites sharpened for Christ's feast, there would not be so many shut doors against him.

V. Observe, how solemnly Christ offers these gospel-blessings to you, with a Behold I stand, &c. Christ takes witnesses upon it, witnesses against the refusers: behold, ye angels, and witness for me, how kind and bountiful my offers are to Adam's rebellious children! Behold, ye ministers, and witness against those who shut me out! Behold, ye stones and timber of the house, ye elements and communion-tables, bear witness for me and against them! Behold, ye fellow communicants and hearers, bear witness one against another, that I knocked, I called, I knocked loud, I knocked long, but ye kept your doors bolted against me. It is a melancholy thought for those who are ministers to entertain, that they will one day be brought in as witnesses against those who shut out their Saviour; but when called, they must witness against such, though never so dear to them now, that Christ called, but they refused; he made kind and large offers, but they regarded them not. O then let every soul set about sweeping and washing all the rooms, and cast open all the doors, as wide as they can, to the King of glory, and receive him with acclamation and praise. Take the crown off the head of self, and put it on the head of Christ, ascribing all the glory of your salvation to him, and nothing to free-will, or your own doings.

ADVICE IV.—“COME, EAT OF MY BREAD, AND DRINK OF THE WINE,” &c. PROV. IX. 5.

Christ is the “Wisdom of God,” who hath made rich provision for entertaining his people, and hath set it before them in the ordinance of the Lord’s supper; even Christ crucified, with all the fruits of his purchase. “His flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed.” The fruits we feast upon are, “pardon and peace, righteousness and grace, the assurance of God’s love, the consolations of his Spirit, the promises of the gospel,” and all the earnest and pledges of eternal life. To this feast starving souls are invited, to feed by faith upon those promises Christ hath prepared for them, applying them to themselves, and taking the comfort of them.

Bread and wine are chosen as fit resemblances of this spiritual feast. As bread and wine serve to preserve our natural life, and to strengthen and cheer us, when weak or fainting; so Christ crucified, apprehended by faith, preserves our spiritual life, and procures eternal life, strengthens weak believers, and cheers drooping souls. As bread and wine incorporate with our bodies; so Christ by his Spirit dwells in us, and we by faith and love dwell in him. As bread and wine satisfy our hunger and thirst; so those, who by faith lay hold and partake of Christ’s flesh and blood, shall no more hunger or thirst after earthly things. Bread is the most necessary thing in the world, hence called the staff of bread, it upholds our lives; so Christ is the mercy of mercies, the most useful and necessary blessing to preserve our starving souls. Christ is the Staff of bread, indeed, to believing communicants, a Staff that supports you, a Staff that will beat off all your enemies: if you take hold of this Staff by faith, it will rout and put all your foes to flight. There is no bread like this! “I am the Bread of life,” saith Christ.

We read, Judges viii. 13. of a dream of one of the Midianitish host; he dreamed when Gideon was coming upon them, that a cake of barley bread came tumbling into the host of Midian, and smote a tent that it fell to the ground. Strange! A piece of bread overturn a tent! Behold the interpretation of that dream in the holy sacrament! Here a piece of bread, if eaten by faith, that will invade the Midianitish host of the devil, and the lusts of the flesh, strike down all their tents, and put them to flight. Come then, eat of this bread believingly, and take faith’s view of Christ’s body represented by it, as bruised and broken by your sins; this will weaken their power, and turn your heart against them, and make you resolve that those enemies of Christ shall not live in your soul. If the sight of Cæsar’s bloody robe incensed the Romans against the murderers who slew him; much more a sight of Christ’s wounds and bruises in the sacrament, should excite you to hate and kill sin, and revenge Christ’s death upon this cruel murderer.

Again, would you have strength for your wilderness journey, and for the temptations and trials you meet with, before you have occasion of another sacrament? Come eat of this bread that strengtheneth the hearts of men. Here is food more substantial, durable, and nourishing, than Elijah’s cake baked on the coals, and the cruse of water provided for him by the angel; and yet it is said, he “went in the strength of that meat forty days and forty nights, until he came to Horeb the mount of God,” 1 Kings xix. 7, 8. There we find Elijah twice awakened by the angel, that he might take a double meal, “Arise and eat, for thy journey is long.” So God may be saying to thee, O Christian-traveller, arise and eat, awake, O faith, awake, O spiritual appetite, thy journey may be long; take a good meal, you know not what hills you have to climb, what winds and storms may blow in thy face, before another occasion of this sort: Satan’s storm may blow, and death’s storms may blow, so that you may not see another table like this till you come to the mount of God above. This is the same bread the glorified saints feed on in heaven. Christ is the manna that came down from heaven to feed perishing souls. The Israelites’ manna was a type of Christ, and hence called spiritual bread, 1 Cor. x. 4.

The manna was freely given to them, and fell every morning round their tents, and all of them were at freedom to gather it, and there was enough for the whole camp; so Christ is God’s free gift, and in him is a fulness of grace for the whole believing world, and every gospel-hearer is free to gather it, though indeed the morning of our lives is the most proper gathering time. There was a memorial of this manna preserved in the ark; so is there of Christ in the Lord's supper, as the food of our souls. Manna was ground in a mill, or beaten in a mortar, and baked in an oven, before it was fit for food; so Christ was bruised and ground by sufferings, and seared in the fiery oven of his Father's wrath, that he might become a fit Saviour, and fit food for our souls.

But Christ crucified infinitely exceeds the Israelites' manna: theirs was peculiar to themselves; but Christ is free to both Jews and Gentiles: theirs ceased when they came to Canaan; but ours continues for ever, and is enjoyed most fully in the Canaan above: theirs only preserved a natural life; but ours gives a spiritual and eternal life. O come, then, eat of this heavenly bread, when set before you in plenty, with hunger and desire, blessing God for it, saying, "Lord, evermore give us this bread." Come with spiritual appetites and purified hearts. The Israelites' manna was laid up in the ark, and kept in a pure golden pot; to teach you to cleanse your hearts from sin and corruption, that they may be fit to lodge Jesus Christ our heavenly manna. If the vessels which contain the sacramental bread were foul or polluted, you would censure it as most indecent; but much more unbecoming is it, to receive Christ into a foul heart.

Come to this table with humility, and a deep sense of your ill-deservings, acknowledging, that the least crumb of this bread will be a great mercy to such an unworthy creature! "Truth, Lord, I am a dog," vile and polluted, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from the children's table! May I plead for a crumb for thy free mercies' sake. O, I am unworthy of the common bread that is set upon my own table, much more of the heavenly bread that is set upon thine! Instead of bread thou mayest give me a stone; instead of a smile, a frown; instead of the cup of the New Testament, thou mayest put a cup of wrath and trembling in my hand: but thy free grace and large offers encourage me to wait and hope, that "the needy shall not be forgotten, and the expectation of the poor shall not perish."

Come with a lively faith to receive and eat, not only of the bread of life, but also to receive the bread, the Lord, your Immanuel, in person, and make use of him in all his offices. Come, eat with love and thankfulness, to him that was willing to be beaten, bruised, ground, and scorched, that he might be bread for nourishing or starving souls. Receive this bread of heaven thankfully as a distinguishing blessing, which is not granted to all indifferently; for as God rained down manna from heaven upon the Israelites, so he rained down fire and brimstone upon Sodom and Gomorrah.

ADVICE V.—"COME NEAR TO ME, I AM JOSEPH YOUR BROTHER, WHOM YOU SOLD," GEN. XLV. 4.

Joseph was an eminent type of Christ; though he was hated, sold, and cruelly used by his brethren, yet he still loved them, forgave them, and laid out himself for their preservation and happiness. Though Christ be Lord of heaven and earth; yet, O believing communicants, he owns himself as your brother, "bone of your bone, and flesh of your flesh;" nay, he is not ashamed to call you brethren. "Go tell my brethren," said he to Mary, Mat. xxviii. 10. Though you be mean and low, and Christ highly raised, yet his exaltation doth not cause him to forget his poor friends below; he still owns them as his brethren. He is indeed the elder Brother, and Heir of all things; yet he is pleased to adopt his younger brethren into his right, and make them joint heirs with him of the inheritance above. As Joseph was most condescending to his poor brethren, though he was lord over all the land; so is Christ. As they did not know Joseph until he told them, "I am Joseph your brother;" so neither do we know Christ, until he discover himself to us. As Joseph seemed to deal roughly with his brethren at first, to make them remember the injuries they did him; yet in the meantime he loved them, gave them food, and afterwards spoke kindly to them. So Christ at first takes ways to humble his people, and make them sensible of their sin; yet, at the same time, he secretly supports them, and at length brings in consolation to them, saying, "I am Jesus your brother; it is I, be not afraid." "Come near to me," said Joseph, in a kind and familiar way to his brethren; so Christ saith to you, draw near to me with a sincere heart, and I will manifest myself unto you as a loving Brother.

But if you would have the gracious intimations of his favour, you must first be humbled for the wrongs you have done him. You have dealt treacherously and inhumanly with Christ, as Jacob's sons did with their brother Joseph. These sold their brother for twenty pieces of silver; but, ah! have not some of you sold Jesus, your brother, for less, even for some vile lust or filthy pleasure? Nay, have you not murdered him by your sins? As Cain slew his innocent brother openly in the field; so your sins have openly nailed Jesus to the cross, in the fields without Jerusalem, and shed his blood like water on the ground. O how can you answer for such horrid cruelty to your innocent Brother? How can you look him in the face, after all you have done against him?

What feelings have you of the injuries you have done him? Are you deeply humbled, and heartily grieved for them? Then I have good news to tell you, you have to do with a most loving and forgiving Brother; though you have betrayed him, sold him, wounded him, murdered him; yet he is willing to forget and forgive all to the humble penitent: "Come near to me," saith he, "I am Joseph your brother;"—stand not at a distance, but come near me by faith and prayer, embrace me in the sacrament, and I will give you a sealed pardon of all your crimes; I will give you all the good things of the land, far excelling the richest fruits of Egypt, even my own body and blood, with all the spiritual and eternal blessings purchased thereby.

Object. But, alas! I have dealt so basely and treacherously with my Brother Joseph, I have no confidence to go and meet him, I am afraid he frown on me. Ans. He has indeed good ground to do it, but he is full of bowels of tenderness, and pity to penitents, and most ready to forgive. Let me advise you to imitate Jacob when going to meet his brother Esau, whose wrath he very much dreaded. He carried presents alongst with him to his brother. In like manner, do you take presents with you; such as, 1. A broken, contrite, and humbled heart, "a broken heart he will not despise." 2. Take faith with you, and the stronger it is, it will be the more agreeable present to Christ; put a firm trust and confidence in his blood and bowels, press and urge kindness on him, like the woman of Canaan, "Truth, Lord, I am dog;" but dog as I am, I may plead for a crumb, seeing thy faithful word warrants me do it. This present from that poor creature was so acceptable to Christ, that he immediately answered, "O woman, great is thy faith; be it unto thee even as thou wilt, Matt. xv. 28." 3. Take with you a firm purpose and resolution, in the strength of your Brother, not to betray or wound him any more, and seal a covenant with him upon these terms. 4. Take with you a sincere heart and purpose of imitating your Brother, and studying conformity to him. "Learn of me," saith he, "for I am meek and lowly in heart." These presents would be most acceptable to your grieved and offended Brother. But seeing you have nothing of your own, cry, Lord, give them first to me, and I will offer them unto thee.

What condescension is this that Christ, the King of kings, should say to all believers, Ye are my brethren and sisters! Who would not desire to stand in this honourable relation to an earthly king, and far more to the King of glory? Would we have him then for a Brother to own us, succour and sympathise with us in all our troubles; let us forthwith embrace and close with him by faith, as he is tendered to us in the rich, large, and free offers of the gospel, and then the relation is presently made up. O! how inviting and alluring is that word, I am Jesus, your Brother! It should conquer the most stubborn will, and make every believing heart to receive him like Thomas, and say, "My Lord, and my God."

Let every believer in distress come like the bee, and suck honey from this Flower. I am Jesus, your Brother, "Be not afraid, it is I." Do not mistake me for an enemy in any of my dealings with you. It is I, your Brother, that means you no harm. It is I that loves you, and laid down my life for you. It is I who, by my blood, purchased sanctified afflictions to you, to work for good. It is I that doth all things well, and have infinite wisdom and love to order and direct every dispensation for your interest and benefit. It was I that swate blood for you in the garden, was spit on and buffeted in the high-priest's hall, and nailed for you to the cross; and all to purchase eternal happiness and glory for afflicted brethren. I am Jesus, your Brother, "behold my hands and my feet." It is I that died and rose again for you, and have ascended to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God; and have gone up to prepare a place for you. It is I that sit at the helm, and all power is given to me. It is I that am faithful and true, and I have the same tender heart and yearning bowels for you I had on earth.—It is I that never failed any that trusted in me. It is Jesus your Brother, who am still the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. Be not afraid in trouble. It is I your dear Friend and Brother; come near to me in the daily exercise of faith. Come near and close to me at my table, and take a narrow look to my five wounds, and draw consolation from them. Behold the two wounds in my hands, and the wounds in my feet, which were made to bring you back from hell to heaven. Behold a fifth wound in my side, and look into my heart, and see it panting with love, and do not question your Brother's love to you any more.

ADVICE VI.—"A CERTAIN KING MADE A MARRIAGE FOR HIS SON," MATT. XXII. 2.

The gospel-covenant, or covenant of grace, is a marriage-covenant betwixt Christ and believers; a surprising marriage this is, and yet a marriage of God's making. Wonderful! The great God is content to give his dear Son in marriage to fallen Adam's daughter, that was become a slave to the devil! Yea, he hath drawn up the contract, and all the articles of it. Christ, the Bridegroom, hath cheerfully subscribed the contract, he dipt the pen in his own blood on the cross, and put his hand to it in the view of God, angels, men, and all the world. Now the Bridegroom wants your consent to the marriage-contract, and he hath long been courting you to subscribe it. Some of you have often been purposed to do it, yea, taken the pen in your hand, but, upon some small temptation, have stopt and thrown by the pen. This day Christ hath set an appointment with you to conclude the bargain, and his ambassadors are come, in his name, to spread the contract before you with all its articles. Well then, "Will you go with this man?" Will you put your hand to the contract?

O sinners, you have no reason to be shy in this matter, you have nothing to be vain of, you are mean born, of low extract; you are loathsome lepers, you are deformed, black, and have no beauty; you are cripples, cannot walk, unless Christ lift you; you are drowned in debt, many old scores hath Christ to clear for you, if he match with you. O who would make love to such a wretched creature! Yet, behold, here is one that is fairer than the sons of men, of the blood-royal of heaven, the heir of all things courting you! Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this match! One infinitely rich with a beggar; the heir of heaven with the heir of hell; the beauty of heaven and earth with a deformed negro! But if the Bridegroom be content, why should you stick? Can you give any reason for your refusal or delay? Now the God of heaven is setting an appointment with you to conclude this bargain with you at his table, and calling you there to sign and seal a marriage-contract with his Son, and that before all the Persons of the glorious Trinity, before the elect angels, before Christ's ambassadors, and before all the congregation, witnesses thereto. There have been many meetings heretofore, about this grand affair, to no effect. The world, Satan, and the flesh, have formerly broken off the treaty; forbid it, Lord, that they do it this day. O that the long spoken of match between a crucified Jesus and lost souls may hold at last. This may be the last appointment, the last offer Christ will make; it may be now or never with you. Lay your hand to your heart then, and consider well before you refuse.

Come, take another view of this beautiful Bridegroom that is in your offer. Behold how delicate his complexion is, "He is white and ruddy;" white in regard of his innocence, and ruddy in his bloody passion. O how peerless is his person! How ravishing his beauty! How charming his voice! How stately his goings! How fragrant are his garments! They smell of aloes, myrrh, and cassia! Search all the world, you cannot find his equal. One glimpse of him is enough to ravish men and angels; "His locks are black and bushy as the raven, his lips are like lilies dropping sweet smelling myrrh, his legs as pillars of marble set upon sockets of fine gold; his countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars; yea, he is altogether lovely!" Now, can you refuse such a lovely person, especially when you think how he loved you, so as to suffer a cruel and bloody death for you, and to send his portraiture with the marks of his wounds, to be put in your hands at his holy table, and all to win your heart? Come, view and remember the many wounds he received for you, by the thorns which pierced his head, by the pincers that plucked his hair, by the scourges that tore his back, by the nails that pierced his hands and feet, and by the spear that opened his side! Surely those wounds do not mar his beauty to the eye of faith; nay, though he be all over wounded, mangled and bleeding, yet to a believer he is still "white and ruddy, the chiefest among ten thousand, fairer than all the sons of men;" nay, and all the sons of God too.

Certainly the Bridegroom must be in earnest, when he comes in his marriage robes to win backward hearts, when he puts on his dyed garments, and is red in his apparel; when he displays his glory, brings the marriage-contract in his hand, spreads it on the communion table, and calls all who love him to sign it. O that many were made willing in a day of his power, to go in to all the articles of this marriage-covenant, saying, "My heart is now content to go with the man Christ, that wonderful man; I consent to all his terms;" he is "My Lord, and my God," my glorious Emmanuel; "My Beloved is mine, and I am his." Quest. I would know particularly what he requires on my part of the contract, that I may distinctly close with him? Ans. He would have you, 1. Convinced of your sinking and perishing state, while you stand upon the old bottom of the covenant of works; and willing to leave it, and leap from it, and cleave to a covenant of grace, and a borrowed righteousness for all the ground of your hope. 2. He would have you humbled and grieved for your long slighting his kind offers by your unbelief, and for your preferring Satan's drudgery to his service. 3. Give up with all other lovers, and those that would rival it with Christ, such as sin, the world, and the law; self-righteousness must be renounced and parted with; you must break league with all Christ's enemies. 4. Accept of Jesus Christ as your husband, receive him in all his offices, rest and depend alone on him for righteousness, strength, and salvation. 5. Give away yourselves, soul and body to Christ: resign your will to his will, and surrender all you have to his disposal. 6. Resolve and vow in Christ's strength, to crucify sin, and walk with him in all the ways of new obedience. 7. Engage to be true and faithful to your Husband, and never to retract. 8. Keep up the remembrance of your Husband's coming at the last day to solemnize the marriage, and take you home to himself, and be always in readiness to go forth to meet him. The Bridegroom is ready long since, and will soon send those clouds to meet you in the air, and send his angels to bring you to him: "Therefore be ye also ready."

O why doth he delay his coming? What stops the wheels of his chariot? Surely it is not because he is unready, but because you are not ready. All the elect are not yet brought in to him, and he is determined not to want one of them. O then, be providing for the marriage day all proper furniture, robes, jewels, rings, and ornaments, against the time that Christ and you take up house together in heaven. Be sure to go to Christ for every bit of your plenshing, for righteousness, and for all the graces of the Spirit. In the mean time, take home with you the marriage-contract, the precious promises which Christ hath subscribed with his blood. Be often looking into it, and viewing your Bridegroom's hand-writing and engagement. His writing is fair and beautiful; let not Satan or unbelief cast blots on it to deface it; keep it fair and legible, and draw all your comforts from it, your Husband is faithful, and will keep his word.

ADVICE VII.—"BEHOLD AND SEE, THE LORD HATH AFFLICTED ME IN THE DAY OF HIS FIERCE ANGER," LAM. I. 22.

With far better ground may Christ make use of these words of his church, and call us to behold his sufferings for us under the fierce anger of God, in the day when "it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and put him to grief in our stead," Isa. liii. 10. Many things did he suffer from men and devils; but his afflictions and bruises from the immediate hand of God taking vengeance for the elect's sins, were far more heavy. His soul-sufferings were the most afflicting of all others. Let every communicant behold, see, and consider these with suitable affections.

Behold not only the buffetings, scourgings, woundings, and cruel mockings your lovely Jesus endured for men, the instruments of God's justice; but especially what he suffered in his soul by the desertion or dereliction of God the Father, whereby the gracious influences and comforts from the divine to the human nature of Christ were suspended for a time, and a black cloud of wrath overwhelmed him; so that no light appeared to him; which made him cry out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Nay, at this time he had a torrent of wrath flowing in upon his soul, and the most dreadful impressions of his Father's anger, and the law's curse, which fell upon him for man's sins, when he was made a curse for us, that it cast him into a fit of sore amazement, consternation, and terrible agony, and into a sweat of blood. The fire of wrath raging in his soul affected his body so, that it dried up his strength and moisture as a potsherd, and made his tongue cleave to his jaws. He held his peace under all his sufferings from men, and opened not his mouth; but when God's immediate wrath fell heavily on him, then he cried out: it is said, "He put up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears," Heb. v. 7. Yet God would not spare him, nor abate him one stripe or farthing of the debt; let him cry ever so loud, justice was inexorable; he must satisfy to the full.

O can you see the great Emmanuel substituted in your room and stead;—God acting against him as an inexorable Judge; Jehovah running upon him as a giant, not only withdrawing his countenance, and all feeling of his loving-kindness from him, but making him the mark of his envenomed arrows;—and not be filled with admiration at Christ's love, and sorrow for your sins, which brought such a storm of wrath upon him! O how sad were the bruises! how deep were the wounds! how wide the gashes! and how heavy the blows he got from the sword, for our sins! The sword was not dull nor sleepy, but furnished and awakened by justice to the execution. O how heavy were the blows our Surety got from this awakened sword in the garden of Gethsemane, which made his "soul exceeding sorrowful," and put him in a dreadful agony and bloody sweat! Behold and see how patiently he drank the bitter cup of God's wrath for you, "the poison whereof drank up his spirits," and made his blood to boil in his veins and burst through his body, clothes and all! He swate without any outward fire or heat, and bled without any external wound. Behold his garments dyed red, and the ground and grass where he lay all bedewed with his precious blood! Behold him broken with breach upon breach, till all the sea-billows of divine vengeance went over him; so that he fell to the ground, was covered with blood, and overwhelmed with wrath! Behold and see, if there be any sorrow like his sorrows!

It is said, Mark xiv. 33, "He began to be sore amazed and very heavy!" which shows what a load and pressure of wrath his soul lay under, that put him in an agony that still increased more and more, like the waters in Ezekiel's vision, still deeper and deeper, from the ankles to the knees, till they became waters to swim in, yea, swelled into an ocean, that would have overwhelmed the whole elect world. Into this ocean our blessed Jonah was willing to be thrown for our sake, and in it he continued to swim until he brought every elect soul safe ashore. It is recorded of Abraham, when offering his sacrifice, Gen. xv. 12, "That in the evening, lo! an horror of great darkness fell upon him."—This was verified much more of Christ in the evening before his passion, in the garden. There, a terrible horror of great darkness fell upon Christ's soul, which made him exceeding heavy, and sore amazed, at the prospect of the sea of wrath that was coming rolling upon him; while the Father was hiding his face from him. O how great was the anguish of Christ's mind at this time, when he found himself pressed and bruised between the millstone of God's justice and our sins! which pressure made him sweat without heat, and bleed without wounds! Ah! the fire, the heat, the wounds were inward, even in his soul! O communicants, behold and see Christ's sorrows for you; nothing can be more acceptable to Christ than often to meditate thereon with admiration and love. If any of you had lost a hand, or even a finger, in defending or rescuing your friend from an enemy, you would expect he would be ever mindful of the favour, and never forget you. But O what is that to the sufferings of the Son of God for you! He hath lost not a hand but his heart-blood, yea, the favour and countenance of God for you for a time. He left his glorious throne in heaven, and stooped to become a man, a poor man, a man of sorrows, a deserted man, and a dead man for you. Nay, he was willing to be made a curse for you, and to take on a dreadful load of wrath upon his innocent soul, yea, infinitely more than any damned soul in hell can bear; and to swim long in a sea of wrath to save you from perishing in it. Let the surprising love of Christ fill your soul with wonder, and kindle a flame of love in your soul to him.

Again, meditate on Christ's sorrows with deep sorrow for sin, the cause thereof: believe that amazing word, Isa. liii. 6, "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities." Let the sound of it never go out of your ears; say, O! my sins were the thorns which pierced his head, the nails which pierced his hands, and the spear that pierced his side. My cursed sins put the Lord of life to a cruel death, they wounded him more than all his other enemies. When my dear Lord was in the garden, no Judas, no Pilate, no Jew, nor Gentile was there, to cause his amazing horror of soul, and his fearful sweat of blood; but O, my unbelief, my pride, my carnality, my hypocrisy, and other sins, were there, and with their weight pressed him to the ground, and brought that agony and sweat upon him. O, that my head were waters, that I might weep a flood of tears for my sins!

Lastly, Abhor sin as the greatest evil, and never have slight thoughts of it any more; can you behold your agonizing Saviour under a burden of wrath, and hear him complaining of the burning heat and thirst which the fire of justice created within him? Can you see the great drops of blood standing above his garments! Can you hear his cries and roarings under the bruises and anguish of his soul, and not be convinced of the evil and demerit of sin! Can that sit light upon your soul which sat so heavy upon Christ's soul! O what desperate malignity must there be in that, which could not be expiated without such a costly sacrifice! Look on them as fools who make a sport of sin, which cost the Son of God so much soul-travail and inward horror: never yield any more to the temptations of sin, which cost so dear before it could be forgiven.

ADVICE VIII.—"THEY WERE EXCEEDINGLY SORROWFUL, AND BEGAN EVERY ONE TO SAY, LORD, IS IT I?"—MAT. XXVI. 22.

It was a commendable exercise of Christ's disciples, before partaking of the holy supper, to be searching themselves, and looking inward with a holy suspicion upon their own hearts, especially when Christ had told them that there was a traitor among them, and at the same time looking up to him that is omniscient to assist them in the search, saying, Lord, is it I? Am I the traitor! Will I betray my dear Lord and Saviour? Ah every one of us have within us traitorous hearts to Jesus Christ, and have reason to suspect ourselves as they did, and acknowledge we have many enemies of Christ, lodged in our bosoms, such as "unbelief, hypocrisy, pride, malice, envy, ambition, worldliness, atheism, wanderings from God, backwardness to duty," &c. by which we have betrayed Jesus Christ. And as the disciples, when searching themselves, "were exceeding sorrowful;" so ought we before we partake: and good reason have we for it, when we reflect upon our former guilt and treacherous dealing with God, and when we consider the present deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of our hearts, and that they are as ready to betray Christ as ever; yea, that there is hypocrisy and treachery in our hearts against Christ, which we have not yet discovered. Upon all which accounts, we have ground with the disciples to be "exceeding sorrowful."

Now is the time, O communicants, to search and examine yourselves, and to be exceeding sorrowful for the many traitorous wounds you have given Christ, by breaking both tables of the law, and every commandment thereof; by sinning against light and conscience, against mercies and judgments, warnings and reproofs, confessions and prayers. By unthankfulness for redeeming love, neglecting gospel offers, not loving and resting upon a crucified Jesus, not accounting all things loss and dung for him; not delighting in attending his ordinances, and in remembering his love in the holy supper, O how treacherous have your hearts been to Christ! How blood-thirsty have your sins been against him, in pressing him down in the garden, in nailing him to the cursed tree! How are you able to look to Gethsemane or Golgotha, with unconcerned hearts or dry eyes! Were not your sins the principal actors in that horrid tragedy? These, to be sure, were the traitors, which, by the hands of Judas, delivered up Jesus to be crucified: what were Pilate, the Jews, or Romans, but the executioners of your sins? Who put the sword in justice's hands? Who raised the tempest of wrath against your Surety? O! it was your sins. Blame none so much as them; they were the Judas that betrayed him, the Herod that mocked him, the Pilate that condemned him, and the soldier that pierced him; will you not then be "exceeding sorrowful" for your traitorous hearts and bloody sins? Could they ever have been guilty of a more horrid crime than murdering the Lord of glory? O shall the rocks about Jerusalem rend asunder, the earth tremble and shake, the sun veil its face, and the whole heavens put on a mourning habit, when Christ suffered for your sins? And shall you, the criminals, who deserved all this punishment, stand unaffected? O what stupid hearts must you have, if they do not mourn for your sins, which brought on such agonies upon the Son of God, before they could be expiated? Had you, in your passion, given a deadly wound to any poor innocent man, your hearts would have bled for it all your days; and will not your hearts much more relent for slaughtering the innocent Lamb of God! One that never wronged you, but was always interposing for you, and doing you good!

Remember what David said to the Lord, when he saw the people destroyed for his sin, 2 Sam. xxiv. 17, "Lo, I have sinned, and done wickedly; but as for these sheep, what have they done?" In like manner say you, Lord, I have sinned, I have done wickedly; but as for this spotless Lamb, what hath he done? I have "eaten the sour grapes," but "his teeth were set on edge." O when will your hearts melt, and your eyes weep, if not now? Never was there such a moving sight set before your eyes, as the Lord of glory pierced and slain by your sins. Now it is that "deep calleth unto deep," deep sufferings in Christ for deep sorrow in thee.

O, saith one, I desire to be grieved for my hypocrisy and treacherous dealing with Christ, and for sin that crucified him, but how shall I know if my sorrow be of the right sort? Ans. Examine it by such marks as these, 1. Godly sorrow is accompanied with some view of the mercy of God in Christ, which supports the soul, and keeps it from despair. Judas' sorrow, however deep it was, wanted this necessary ingredient.

2. If true, it will be universal, both for your own sins, and the sins of others; for the sins of the place where you live, and for those of the whole land. 3. If it be right sorrow, it will bring you to consider the aggravation and heinous circumstances of your sins, as being against light, against love, and against solemn engagements and professions of friendship; so as to mourn and cry, How traitorous hath my heart been to so kind a Master! 4. It will produce these seven happy effects mentioned, 2 Cor. vii. 11. There it is said godly sorrow for sins works, 1. "Carefulness;" that is, a care to recover peace with God for what is past, and to please God for the time to come, by amending what is amiss, and avoiding all temptations and occasions that lead to sin. 2. "Clearing of yourselves," by mourning over the sins of other men, dissenting from them, and showing your detestation of them. 3. "Indignation" against sin, as the abominable thing which God hates. The heart of a true penitent rises, swells, and boils against sin. Then it is you are angry and sin not, when you are angry at sin, and at yourselves for sin. 4. "Fear;" the true penitent fears to offend God as he hath done, and that he may not do it, he nourisheth a holy fear and awful impression of the holiness of God; and also a fear of holy "jealousy" and "watchfulness" over himself, lest sin surprise him at any time. 5. "Vehement desire;" to wit, after reconciliation with God through Christ, and after reformation of every thing amiss, and to be entirely rid of all sin. 6. "Godly sorrow" produceth "zeal," which is an affection or grace compounded of love and anger, to wit, love to God and duty, and anger against sin and every thing opposite to God. 7. "Revenge;" by seeking the utter extirpation of sin, by fasting, mortifying the flesh, and denying yourselves in some things lawful for a time. A good way to execute this revenge against sin is, for penitents to take frequent views of the deep and bloody wounds which sin hath given to your dear Redeemer. It is written of the emperor Julius Cæsar, that after he was murdered in the senate, they brought forth his robe all besmeared with his blood to the market-place, and exposed it to open view, in order to awaken his friends to take revenge on his enemies. This is surely one design of the holy sacrament, to awaken your zeal against sin, which murdered the Lord of glory. Lastly, "Godly sorrow" for sin will drive you to Christ for help against sin; it will make you flee to Christ for deliverance from an ill heart, as well as from the wrath that sin serveth; hence the apostle cried, "O! wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death!" Rom. vii. 24.

ADVICE IX.—"WHO HAVE FLED FOR REFUGE, TO LAY HOLD UPON THE HOPE SET BEFORE US," HEB. VI. 18.

We have here a two-fold description of true believers, which come to one: 1. They are such as have fled to Christ as the true city of refuge, to shelter them from avenging justice. They are such as have by faith laid hold on Christ set before them in the gospel-promise, as their only hope of salvation.

Christ is our refuge-city from the curses of the law which hang over us, from the avenger of blood, divine justice that pursues us, and from the devils which lie in wait for us.—The cities of refuge under the law were six, but under the gospel we have one better than them all. Theirs only protected the body from the wrath of man; but ours protects both soul and body from the wrath of an angry God.—The way to it is made plain and patent; pillars are set up, Christ's ministers, to direct sinners in the way to it. In this blessed city there is protection, instruction, provision, and fulness for all that flee to it. Here is all our hope of salvation, and it is in vain to hope for safety any where else.—Now, communicants, this blessed hope is set before you; come, lay hold of it, and cleave fast to it. Now the city is set on a hill, the way to it prepared, and the gates open: the gospel trumpet is sounded, and proclamation made, Whosoever flees to the city, be his case what it will, shall in no wise be cast out.

Under the law, he that saw his danger, and fled to the city of refuge, firmly believed there was safety and security for him by public authority in that privileged place, if he could but get into it in time before the avenger of blood overtook him: therefore he earnestly desired to be at once within the gates of it, and for that end put forth his utmost vigour in running. He did not linger, halt, nor sit down by the way; nor would he turn aside to any crooked by-path that might lead him about, but kept the straight and nearest way to the city, as the pillars set up directed him. No persuasion of any man could make him look or flee to any other city, castle, or hiding-place for safety, but to the city authorised by law. In like manner, let every convinced sinner learn from this, to flee to Jesus Christ, our safety from wrath, as the only refuge appointed by God for him. Look, desire, and pant earnestly to be within the gates. O sinner, run with speed, now the gates are wide open in the word and in the sacrament. Put forth your utmost vigour, and escape for your life. Do not linger nor delay, but flee as one that sees justice close at your heels. Avoid all other shelters and by-ways for relief; away with carnal company, sinful pleasures, worldly mirth or diversion; nay, take no shelter in your own duties and performances; believe that none of these can screen or protect you from the sword of justice, and that none else can, but he who is the "Lord our righteousness."

Of old, nothing could stop the man when flying to the city of refuge; had his wife and children hung about him, or his own heart suggested to him, Will you leave your house, your garden, lands, relations, and many accommodations, and go to a strange city and spend your days? he would have flung them all from him, and taken flight, saying to wife and children, Better part with all things, than part with my life: if you will not follow me, I must leave you all behind. So let awakened souls flee with speed and resolution to Jesus Christ, say to the world's profits, sin's pleasures, Satan's allurements, and whatever would tempt you to stay behind, "Get you hence;" away with every thing that would hinder me from Christ. My Saviour and my soul are more precious to me than all the world; take all things from me, and give me Christ. How great was Jerome's, one of the ancient fathers, love to Christ? How strong was his resolution when he said, "If my father were weeping on his knees before me, my mother hanging about my neck behind me, my brethren, sisters, and kinsfolk, howling on every side to retain me from Christ, I would cast my mother to the ground, run over my father, and despise all my kindred, tread all under my feet, and run to Christ."

O awakened soul, behold how Christ displays his love to thee in the sacrament; he opens his wounds to be a refuge and hiding-place to thee, and calls aloud to thee to come and flee in thither: "Turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die?" To whom will ye flee for help, when the avenger of blood is at your heels, if you flee not to Christ, the only refuge from wrath? Hills and mountains, seas and depths, heaven and earth, cannot hide thee from the storm, if Christ do it not. Now, you have a noble opportunity, while the clefts of Christ's wounds stand open, and the "blessed hope is set before you," in the sacrament, and Christ stretching out his hand, and waiting to see who will rise and flee to him! O to see souls rising in flocks, and flying as doves to their windows! What a pleasant sight would this be!

O, saith one, I cannot rise, my wings are clipped, my soul clogged, I cannot mount up. Ans. If you cannot mount up as with eagles' wings, see if you can run to Christ, and kneel before him like that young man, Mark x. 17.—Object. I find myself so burdened and heavy laden, that I cannot run.—Ans. Then show a willingness to run to Christ; and cry, “Draw me, and I will run after thee;” even a desire to run will be accepted, as of those in Neh. i. 11.—Object. But, saith one, My heart is so dead and sluggish, I have neither strength nor will to run to Christ.

—Ans. If you cannot run, then see if you can but go towards him; for we read in Jer. ii. 2, that those who went after him in the wilderness were accepted of him.—Object. Alas, saith one, I am so weak and feeble, I cannot go.—Ans. Then endeavour to creep and move towards him as you can.—Object. But I am so lame and impotent, both in hands and feet, that I cannot creep nor move.—Ans. If you cannot move to Christ, then “look to him,” as the Israelites did when stung with fiery serpents. Christ calls every feeble soul to do it, Isa. xlv. 22, “Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth;” and would you have Christ come any lower than a look? O look up to Jesus as lifted up upon the pole of the cross, for all nations to behold him.—Object. My eyes are dim, the cross far off; Jerusalem, where it was set up, is out of sight.—Ans. The pole of the gospel and of the sacrament, on which Christ is now lifted up, is near hand; look up to him thereon and be saved.—Object. Saith one, I am so burdened with guilt, I cannot lift up mine eyes.—Ans. Then lie low before him like the humble publican, who was so burdened that he was ashamed to lift up his eyes to heaven, and under a deep sense of his vileness, cried, “God be merciful to me a sinner,” and so doing, was accepted: in like manner, humble yourself before a merciful Redeemer, and plead his promise, Matt. xi. 28. Trust his word for ease and rest to your burdened soul.

ADVICE X.—“EVEN SO MUST THE SON OF MAN BE LIFTED UP,” JOHN III. 14.

The lifting up the “brazen serpent” upon a pole, to heal serpent-stung Israelites, was a type of the lifting up of Christ on the cross, to heal convinced sinners of their wounds by sin. As there was but one brazen serpent for healing the whole camp of Israel; so Christ crucified is the only remedy and Saviour for a lost world, “He must be lifted up;” his dying on the cross was necessary to fulfil his engagements from eternity to be our Surety; he must be offered up as a sacrifice to satisfy divine justice for the sins of men, seeing nothing else could do. Though Christ’s engagement to suffer for us was entirely voluntary at first; yet having once undertaken, it became necessary for him to be lifted up. And glory to him that would not go back from his word, however great his sufferings were.

Come, then, O communicants, behold and consider, with suitable thoughts and affections, your “lifted up Jesus” dying on the cross. After he had borne the heavy cross on his bleeding shoulders up mount Calvary, this cross must next bear him upon the top of the mount, being first nailed to it, and lifted up with it. Come, see how this was done; behold the cross-tree laid down upon the ground, and the Lord Jesus stripped naked, laid upon his back with his hands and feet stretched out upon the tree, that they might take the measure of his body, and mark the holes for the nails! And, lo! they take the measure longer than the truth, that they might both crucify and rack him at once, till his bones should go out of joint; so the cross was a rack as well as a death. Our first parents stretched forth their guilty hands to take the forbidden fruit from the tree; therefore our glorious Saviour did willingly stretch forth his innocent hands to be nailed to the tree, to satisfy for their guilt. Come, see four big nails driven into his hands and feet, the most sinewy and sensible parts of his body, and fastened to the tree; apply your ear, and hear the hideous sound of the hammer knocking in these nails! O, your sins were the hammers that did it, mourn for them.

Come next, and see the Lord of glory, when nailed first to the tree, lifted up with it on high, and made to stand upright to the view of all the world! and then the front of the tree let fall down with violence into the deep hole they had digged to fasten it, which fall did unspeakably increase his torments, and rend the four wounds made by the nails. Thus his own weight became his torture, still widening the wounds more and more, till all his precious blood streamed out at them. Behold your great Emmanuel lifted up on a cross between heaven and earth, as if he had been unworthy of a place in either, hanging betwixt two thieves, as if he had been the greatest malefactor of the three! O what a spectacle was your Redeemer to both heaven and earth, when thus lifted up! an astonishment to angels! a derision to the wicked! compunction to believers! but a sacrifice acceptable to the justice of his eternal Father.—Look on this moving spectacle with deep sorrow for sin, that fastened him to the tree, and made him hang on these tormenting nails for several hours without comfort, inward or outward! No way could he turn for ease, being fixed on the tree; if he stirred his blessed body at all, he was tormented afresh by the wounds of his hands and feet, on which the whole weight of his body did hang. If he moved his head, which had the crown of thorns on it, the thorns would but pierce into it the deeper; yet, for all this, he complained not; no groan or sigh was heard from him, but what he offered up to God for our sins!

When the Son of man was thus lifted up, observe how the streams of his precious blood ran down to the ground, and stood in a little pool at the foot of the cross, until the earth drank it up. Let this sight affect your hearts, and open all the springs of sorrow for sin that pierced him. Sit down at the foot of the cross, and receive this sacred blood, as it falls, upon your hard hearts; let it drop on them, until it make them as soft as the ground it fell on. Let it drop on all the sores and wounds of your souls, for it is the balm that must heal them. Observe also the great extent of Christ's sufferings at this time; they reached to all the parts of his body, and to all the powers of his soul. He suffered in all his senses; his seeing, with the scornful gestures of his enemies; his hearing, with their scoffs and blasphemies; his smell, with the noisome stench of Golgotha; his taste, with gall and vinegar; his feeling, with the piercing nails and thorns. Behold his hands, that were still bestowing blessings, now fixed with nails; his feet, that walked in God's ways, now digged through; his bowels, that yearned for sinners, now shrunk and dried up; his lips, that spoke as never man spoke, now swollen with blows. Now he suffered on the cross, till "his strength was dried up like a potsherd, and his tongue cleaved to his jaws." The fire of God's wrath scorched him inwardly, which made him cry out, "I thirst." His enemies mingled, at this time, a cup of vinegar and gall to him, which he refused; but glory to him, he refused not the cup which his Father mingled to him, though filled with wrath and curses. This he drank for us, though it filled his whole soul with anguish, and made him roar and complain of his Father's deserting him: "The arrows of the Almighty were within him, the poison whereof drank up his Spirit." Amidst these fearful sufferings, our lifted up Jesus expired, willingly offering up himself on the cross, a propitiatory sacrifice for us.

O believers, did Christ lift up himself as a willing sacrifice for you on the cross; see then to lift up the gates of your souls to receive in this Saviour; let him have a joyful welcome into your souls, and give him the best entertainment, the best affections, and the best service. Did he willingly stretch out his arms to be nailed to the cross for you? Then be not unwilling to stretch out the arms of faith to embrace him; but see to embrace him wholly in all his offices, of Prophet, Priest, and King. Be willing to be taught, saved, and ruled by him.

Was Christ lifted up on the cross, as the brazen serpent was lifted up in the wilderness, for healing all the stings and wounds given us by sin and Satan? O then look up to him with the eye of faith for healing. This is the great remedy of God's contriving and providing, put strong confidence in it, and look to it with hope and expectation. Never distrust the virtue of God's remedy, nor despair of healing from it, however deep your stings, or large your wounds be: for Christ was lifted up to be a remedy for the chief of sinners, 1 Tim. i. 15. and none ever perished that looked to him. Was Christ willing to be lifted up to suffer for you? Then let your hearts be lifted up to serve and obey him, like king Jehoshaphat, whose "heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord," 2 Chron. xvii. 6. Lift up your hearts with your voice in his praise; speak of the glorious honour of his Majesty, and make known his mighty acts. Obey his commands, and particularly his dying command; to remember him at his table with activity and delight. Go with lifted up hearts to a communion-table, to remember him that went so willingly to be lifted up on a bloody cross for you. The ancient exhortation to communicants was, "Lift up your hearts to meet with a lifted up Jesus."

ADVICE XI.—"SPEAK UNTO THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL THAT THEY GO FORWARD," EXOD. XIV. 15.

This is the answer of Moses's prayer for Israel, when in a great strait at the Red sea. It is said, he cried to God; yet we read not of one word he spake. He only lifted up his heart to God, who well understands the language of the heart. Moses's silent prayers of faith prevailed more with God than Israel's loud outcries of fear. A believing communicant may, in a strait, cry to God in prayer, without speaking a word, so did Moses for fainting Israel. When they came out of the land of bondage, and fled from Pharaoh's tyranny, the Lord ordered them to march towards the sea; but now, when they are near to it, and see Pharaoh's mighty army pursuing and close at their heels, they are in a great strait what course to take; they think certainly they must turn either to the right or left hand to make their escape from Pharaoh. No, saith God, speak to them to "go still forward," as straight toward the sea, as if they saw a fleet of transport ships there waiting to take them in. O might they think this is a hard command, "Go forward," when we see nothing but the deep devouring sea before us; as good go back to the Egyptians, or stand still until they come up and put us to the sword, as go forward into the sea and be drowned. Will the deep sea have any more mercy on us than the cruel Egyptians? But, saith the Lord, make no objections, ask no questions, let the people go forward, obey my command, and trust me with their lives.

Observe here, O timorous communicant, O doubting believer, when you are in fears and straits with respect to the management or success of your duty, you are to set yourselves to obey God's command, "go forward," in the use of means, with a sincere heart, and leave the event to God. You may possibly, at this time, be brought to the straitening case of the children of Israel, when at the Red sea, and their hearts in great perplexity, ready to sink within them for fear. Some may be saying within themselves, how shall such a vile, black, unworthy creature go forward, to the Red sea of Christ's blood, who have both spilt it and despised it? How shall I, after all, venture to go forward, to wash or bathe my unclean soul in it? Well, it is God's plain command to you to go forward to it, however heavily laden you may be with guilt, see 1 John iii. 23; Matt. xi. 28; John i. 29. Others as vile have obeyed his command, have gone forward to this Red sea, and been washed in it; see 1 Cor. vi. 9—11, yea we read, Acts ii. 36, of three thousand of those who actually imbrued their hands in this blood, who were washed by it. How wonderful is its virtue! it is able to take away the sins of a whole world, and much more the sins of a few; therefore do not, O sinner, rebel against God's command any longer.

Again, consider what is God's special command to thee at this time, namely, "Do this in remembrance of me;" his precept is plain and express to keep up the memory of his love to lost men. Can you think to look on his face with comfort at the last day, if you have no pleasure to remember him now. Surely his presence will be terrible then to those, to whom his memory is not delightful now. But you may have straits and difficulties about this duty. O saith one, "My strait is great, I know not what to do; whether to stay back from God's holy table, or go forward. If I stay back, I disobey my dying Saviour's command to show forth his death in this manner. If I go forward unworthily, I contract the guilt of his body and blood, eat and drink my own damnation. Alas, what shall I do? my need of Christ and his blood is so great, I cannot think of staying back; and yet my preparation is so little, I know not how to go forward. Ah! my unworthiness is great, how shall I go to the table of so great a King in the state and case I am in, so vile, so sinful, so indisposed, so hard-hearted? If the woman that had the bloody issue, feared so much to come and touch the hem of Christ's garment; how much more may I, who am full of the running issues of sin, fear to go forward to touch the sacred symbols of his body and blood, and put my hand into his wounds, and feel the print of the nails?" Come then, unworthy as you are, obey Christ's command, and venture your soul in his hand. Go forward with all the preparation you can attain to, deeply sensible of your own vileness, and humbled for your short-comings, trusting in the worthiness of the Lamb that was slain to answer for your unworthiness, in his blood to wash away pollution, and in his strength to help your weakness. Venture forward, saying like Jehoshaphat, "Lord, I have no ability, no might for this great ordinance, neither know I what to do; but my eyes are unto thee, it is in thy name, in thy strength, and at thy command, that I go forward to remember a dying Jesus at his holy table. Lord, put on me the wedding-garment, prepare, receive, and welcome me."

Object. Some may say, They are only the children of Israel, who, in the text, are bid go forward; and we are afraid we are none of these. —Ans. All are bidden, without exception, to come to Christ, yea, even the stout-hearted are called to go to him. Now, if you come to Christ, it will be a sure proof of your being Israel's children, and among those who are bid go forward. Ministers indeed have a special commission to speak to the children of Israel, that they go forward to this table; whoever stay back, they ought not.

Quest. Who are those that may be numbered among Israel's children, or the seed of Jacob?—

Ans. The children of Jacob or Israel, if they be of the true kind, will be like their father, particularly in these things: 1. Jacob was a great wrestler with God in prayer, and hence he got the name of Israel; he wept and made supplication at Bethel, and prevailed as a prince with God, which is the meaning of the name Israel. Now, if you be wrestlers with God, you are Israel's children, and called to go forward. 2. Jacob was a plain man; so he is called, Gen. xxv. 27. that is, a single-hearted man. It was by this character that Christ describes a true Israelite, John i. 47, "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile." Now, if you study godly sincerity, and plain dealing in your behaviour both to God and man, you are Israel's children, and called to go forward. 3. Jacob had faith in Christ, and believing views of him as the glorious Shiloh; he waited for his coming, drew his comfort from it, and rejoiced in the gathering of the people to him. If it be so with you, then we bid you go forward. 4. Israel and his children were God's covenanted people; they chose God for their God, and gave themselves up to him. If it be so with you, you are Israel's children, go forward. 5. Jacob was zealous for reformation, both with respect to himself and his family, and caused them to put away all their idols, cleanse themselves, and change their garments, when going to renew their covenant with God, Gen. xxxv. 2. Now, if you study sincerely to follow his example, you are among the children of Israel, to whom God warrants ministers to speak, and bid them go forward to his table. Now, if you have any of the foresaid five characters, in Christ's name we can promise you welcome to his table. Go forward to it then, with hearts burning with love to Christ and to his people; go with thankfulness and praise to God for providing such a Saviour, and spiritual feast for you; and go with hunger and thirst to partake of it. Go forward with humility and self-denial, renouncing all confidence in your preparations and performances, and depending only upon Christ's mediation for acceptance with God.

ADVICE XII.—“AND I, IF I BE LIFTED UP FROM THE EARTH, WILL DRAW ALL MEN UNTO ME,” JOHN XII. 32.

As the sacrifices under the law were heaved and lifted up before the Lord, so Christ the anti-type must be lifted up on the cross as the atoning sacrifice for our sins. The Jews were not more willing to lift him up, than he was to lift himself; he readily undertook to be lifted up. “Lo, I come,” said he, he willingly carried his cross to the place, that he might be lifted up on it. He dissuades the woman to weep for him. Why? because I am going to be lifted up a sacrifice to justice for your sins, and to draw your souls unto me.

Quest. But how doth he draw all men, when Satan keeps many still fast in his toils.—Ans. Christ was lifted up to obtain drawing offers and invitations to all men without exception, and accordingly gives drawing calls to all men in his word; and if they be not drawn to him it is their own fault. But though many be called, and multitudes flock to the word; yet there are none effectually drawn to Christ but the elect; and these may be called all men, as they are gathered out of all nations, kindreds, and languages, ages, sexes, and qualities. All men, Gentiles as well as Jews. All sorts of men, sinners of all sizes, greater as well as lesser. Quest. But how doth the lifting up of Christ draw sinners effectually to him? Ans. By the merit of his lifted up sacrifice, he obtained the removal of all hindrances of their coming to him, such as the guilt of their sins, the enmity of their natures, the power of their corruptions, their unbelief, hardness, blindness, and discouraging fears. And likewise by it he purchased all the means requisite for drawing men to him, such as the preaching of the gospel, sanctified rod, the grace of faith, and, above all, the powerful influences of the Holy Spirit. As Christ was lifted up on the cross, so he must also be lifted up on the pole of the gospel, for drawing sinners to him. Thus, the brazen serpent was lifted up in the wilderness, for drawing the stung Israelites about it, and it proved most effectual to that end; so a crucified Jesus held out and evidently set forth in the gospel, as he was lifted up on a bloody cross, with his pierced hands stretched out to embrace lost sinners, is surely the most attractive and drawing sight in the world. This wonderful Loadstone hath drawn thousands of hard “iron hearts” to it at once. A natural loadstone, though it draw iron to it; yet it may be drawn away from it again. But a crucified Christ draws the heart so powerfully and closely to him, that they can never be separated again. Never was there such a drawing engine in the world as this! A lifted up standard or ensign draws numbers of scattered soldiers unto it, but it is seen by few. But a crucified Jesus lifted up in the gospel, is an ensign to draw great multitudes in different nations under the banner of love, Isa. xi. 10. The first experiment that was made of its virtue in Jerusalem by the apostle Peter, three thousand souls were drawn to Christ at once, and after that many nations that knew him not did run unto him. Come then, O sinners, admire and experience the power of this lifted up Ensign; let your iron hearts be drawn by this Loadstone; it hath lost nothing of its virtue to this day. Thousands of hearts in other places still feel its power; we are sometimes refreshed with the welcome news of their being drawn off from the vanities of time, and the love of sin, to glorious Christ. Why then do not your hearts also yield to the power of this blessed Loadstone, Christ crucified lifted up in the word and sacrament? It hath the same virtue here as elsewhere, were but the eyes of faith opened to behold it, according to that alluring call, Isa. xiv. 22.

When Christ was lifted up on the cross, his face was turned to the Gentiles, for the Jews out of malice, as several write, would have him crucified with his face toward the west, as reckoning him unworthy to look to the temple and holy city that stood on the east side of mount Calvary; but Christ had a loving design in it to us Gentiles, and to accomplish that word, Psal. lxxvi. 7, “His eyes behold the nations.” Behold, O sinners, Christ turned his face to you on the cross to draw you unto him; there he turned his head toward you to draw you; there he opened a cleft in his side to draw you; there blood and water flowed from his heart to draw you to him! And now he hath sent his word and Spirit to draw you: now he displays his blood and wounds in the sacrament to draw you; now he is casting his cords of love about your hearts to draw you to him; now the devil is holding, and Christ drawing; Christ and the devil are now struggling for your hearts; the eyes of many are on you, the eyes of the glorious Trinity, the eyes of angels, the eyes of ministers and saints are on you, to see what the issue of the combat shall be, which of them shall gain the prize. Satan indeed is the strong man, but, glory to God, Christ is stronger than he. O that he may prevail, the heart is his by right, surrender it to him without delay. He will not enter without your consent; his people must all be "made willing in the day of his power." O, if the will were once conquered, the day were Christ's and the field were won for ever.

Would you then have Satan defeated, your biased will overcome, and your souls savingly brought to Christ, O look up and cry for a draught of Christ's power. You have neither strength nor will to come to a crucified Christ, unless he draw you. Ordinances or providences cannot draw you, the word or sacraments cannot draw you, judgments or mercies cannot do it; yea, neither ministers nor angels can draw your dead and heavy hearts. O then look beyond them all to a lifted-up Immanuel, "Draw me, Lord, and I will run after thee." The ordinance you have in view can never be a drawing ordinance, if Christ put not forth his virtue with it; the sacrament will be lifeless, and the administrator's lifeless, if Christ draw you not. The most powerful sermons, the most alluring calls, will all be lost, if he draw not. You will sit still in the Sodom of a natural and wrathful state, if he draw not; you will die in your sins, if he draw not; you will be eternally damned, if Christ draw you not to him. You can never overcome the strong and subtle temptations Satan casts in your way; you can never deny self, forsake beloved lusts, renounce justification by works, quit all confidence in your own doings, go naked and empty to Christ, be content to live wholly upon his righteousness, and receive grace, life, strength, and glory, as a free gift from Christ, without the drawing influence of a lifted-up Saviour. O, if you were once acquainted with this drawing power, you might go with comfort to his table, and feed upon his purchase.

QUEST. How shall I know, if I have yet been drawn effectually to a lifted-up Jesus?

ANS. Try it by these marks. Have you discovered his matchless excellency, so as to draw off your hearts from sin and the perishing things of the world? Have you felt the cords of his love about your heart and will, constraining you to yield yourself wholly to him? Is your heart drawn out in love and affection to a crucified Christ above all things, so that the desire of your soul is to him and the remembrance of his name? Are you growing still liker to him, more holy, more humble, meek, and heavenly-minded? Nearness will breed likeness. Are you troubled for distance from Christ, when at any time you are drawn off him by sin, Satan, or the world's allurements? Are you drawn to duty with a view of enjoying his presence therein? In the meantime, are you drawn off from resting on duties, or putting any attainments in Christ's room? Then you may conclude your heart is effectually drawn by a lifted-up Saviour; and so may, with holy confidence and joy, draw near to him in the sacramental meeting-place, and hold communion with him there.

ADVICE XVI.—"BEHOLD THE LAMB OF GOD."—"BEHOLD THE MAN," JOHN 1. 36; XIX. 5.

O communicants, both John and Pilate call you to behold Christ suffering and sacrificed for you, and, which is more, the Spirit of God calls you to this duty also. Let each one of you then say with Moses, Exod. iii. 3, "I will now turn aside, and see this great sight." A great sight indeed! For though he be called a Lamb, and a Man, he is also God, God in human nature, suffering, bleeding, and dying, a great and wonderful sight! all the Persons of the glorious Trinity call you to behold it, Isa. xlii. 1; xlv. 22; John i. 29. Draw then as near as possible, that you may get a good view of it; stand not at a distance like those who followed him from Galilee to the cross, of whom it is said, Luke xxii. 49, "They stood afar off beholding these things." Do not now stand afar off, nor take a far off look of a crucified Christ, but come close to him by faith, and take a near and saving look of him, as he calls you, Isa. xlv. 22, "Look unto me, and be saved; I am God, and there is no Saviour beside me." O then turn not your back or shoulder to him, look not askint to him, look not by him to other things; but look with a broad, straight, and steady look unto him. The Man Christ Jesus is the Lamb of God, appointed by him to be sacrificed to make atonement for our sins, and to purchase pardon, life, and salvation to us: and looking to him by faith, is the great mean of securing and applying the blessings of his purchase to us. And in a special manner he calls us to look unto him in his sufferings for us, "Behold me, behold me!"

Behold the suffering Man, a man of sorrow indeed! And particularly behold him entering upon that fearful scene in the garden of Gethsemane, when he began to fear, turn sorrowful, and very heavy: when he was sore amazed, fell into an agony and bloody sweat, and cried out, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death!" O what was it that made your Saviour so heavy, but the dead weight of the elect's sins, with the law's heavy curses annexed to them? O, your souls were exceeding guilty, which made his soul exceeding heavy. Behold and see your sorrowful Redcemer falling into a fearful agony, and, while in it, falling down sometimes on his knees, and sometimes on his face, praying once, praying again, and praying the third time, until he is quite overwhelmed with wrath, and covered with his own blood! Behold the sorrowful Man with the great drops of blood standing above his garments for your sins, and bedewing the ground! See Jehovah now acting against him, as an inexorable Judge, running on him as a giant, and making him the butt of his envenomed arrows! Behold him in his agony making his moan to his disciples, who could make no help to him; for neither they nor the angels in heaven durst touch his load, nor taste his cup: yea, he got not so much as sympathy from his disciples; they all fell asleep when he was at the worst, and left him in his agony to struggle and tread out the wine-press alone! O be not idle spectators of your Saviour's agony, but let your souls be exceedingly affected with Christ's soul-suffering for your soul's sins.

"Behold the Man Christ," betrayed and sold for a little money, apprehended and bound with cords like a thief, and bound fast, as Judas bade; yea, so fast (as some say), that the blood burst out of his tender hands! O can your heart or eyes hold to see those hands that made the heavens, wrung together and bruised with hard cords! To see him bound as a prisoner, that came to set the prisoners free! But had not the cords of your Redeemer's love held him faster than the cords of his enemies, though they had been cables or chains, they could not have kept him; but his love to you made him a willing prisoner! "Behold the Man," blind-folded, mocked, buffeted, and abused for you! Behold him stripped naked and scourged! Behold him that clothes the lilies of the field, that made coats of skin to clothe our first parents, now stripped and unclothed himself! He is stripped naked, that you might not be found naked at God's bar! He is stripped of his robes, that he might provide a robe of righteousness to cover your nakedness! "Behold the Man," scourged by Pilate, and that above measure, thinking thereby to save his life; but as the Jews were not satisfied therewith, so neither was infinite justice satisfied; so that his life must go, and the Man Christ is willing it should. Willingly did he give his back to the smiters, that you might be freed from the everlasting lashes of God's wrath in hell! Behold every part of his blessed body torn and wounded by scourgings, because every part of you was wounded by sin; and his stripes were the only cure for your wounds.

"Behold the Man," with a platted crown of thorns on his blessed head, with the sharp points turned inward, and these beat into his head with a staff, till all his head is but as one wound, from whence a new shower of blood ran down his neck for you! You may be ready to cry, Shame on the Jews, or, Shame on the soldiers that used our Saviour so; but rather cry, Shame on your sins that did worse to him, these platted the crown of thorns and crucified him too. Behold the Lamb of God, now willingly caught in the thickets, like the ram, to be sacrificed in your room, when you were bound like Isaac for that end. Behold him willing to wear a crown of pain and ignominy, that you might wear a crown of glory and renown: willing to be disgraced and affronted, that you might be honoured and exalted: willing to let a Barabbas, the vilest malefactor in all Jerusalem, be preferred before him, that you might be preferred to a room among God's children. "Behold the Man," after all these sufferings, put to bear the heavy cross on his sore wounded shoulders, a heavy load, indeed, with the elect's sins and law's curses fastened to it; yet he bears without complaint till his strength is spent, and he is ready to faint under the burden, so that another must help! Oh! it was not the weight of the tree that made him faint; he had a greater burden to bear than ten thousand worlds, even the infinite wrath of God due to the elect's sins? O can you behold this sight with dry eyes!

"Behold the Man," brought to Golgotha, nailed to the tree, lifted up, and drinking out the bitter dregs of the cup of wrath thereon, till at length he yielded himself prisoner to death, by bowing his head, giving death his orders to execute his commission, and carry him off the stage! Behold and wonder at the sight, the Lord of life taken death's prisoner? O man, canst thou stand and see the Lamb of God slain in thy room, and for thy sins, and not be affected! Write that man a beast, a stone, a lump of earth, that can be senseless, stupid, and unconcerned at such a sight! O blush and be ashamed, O man, at thy stupidity, when the dead earth and rocks about Jerusalem quaked and rent at the sufferings you now behold represented in the sacrament. O cursed sin, which many make light of, that could not be expiated by any other sacrifice than that of our Immanuel, the Lamb of God, the Man Christ Jesus? O behold the Man and tremble at sin, the accursed thing that murdered the Son of God, the Man that is God's Fellow, the Man that is infinitely preferable to a million of worlds full of men and angels too. O that men would always look on sin in the glass of the agonies and sufferings of the Man Christ, that they might be filled with horror at it, as at hell itself! Nay, in several respects sin is a greater evil than hell.

Let every communicant, every Christian, come and behold the glorious Son of God, with the greatest love and admiration, who for our sakes was willing to become a Man, and God's Lamb to be sacrificed for the sins of men. O let his name Jesus be always to you as precious ointment poured forth, and let the remembrance of his love inflame your souls with a vehement indignation against sin, and a burning affection to the Lamb of God, the Man Christ, that was willing to struggle in bloody agonies, and bleed to death on the cursed tree to deliver you from lying in hell for ever! O what can we render to him for his free love, amazing and unspeakable love! O that we could spend our whole lives in admiring his love and contemplating his beauty, and were thereby made meet, in some measure, for the exercise of the redeemed above. Amen.

ADVICE XIV.—“STAND STILL AND CONSIDER THE WONDROUS WORKS OF GOD,” JOB XXXVII. 14.

The works of God, being wondrous, do well deserve our most serious consideration; but so wavering are our minds, we cannot consider them aright, unless we stand still and compose ourselves for that end. This advice doth Elihu give to Job in the text, and Moses gives to the children of Israel, Exod. xiv. 13. All God's works are wondrous, and highly worthy of our observation, as his works of creation and providence; and more especially his works of redemption and of grace, as they are made known to us in the gospel-dispensation, and particularly in the sacrament of the Lord's supper. Here God calls you to stand still, and consider his wondrous works of redeeming wisdom and mercy, in saving fallen sinners. The work of creation is indeed most wonderful and stupendous; but his work of redemption is far more costly and surprising: the one cost him but a word of his power, but the other cost him the death of his Son: the one is but the work of his fingers, Psal. viii. 3, the other is the work of his arm, Luke i. 51. Much of the divine wisdom and power is displayed in making us men, but much more in making us saints; by the one we have but a short mortal life, but by the other, an eternal and immortal life. God's works of redemption and of grace will be the admiration of saints and angels to all eternity, Rev. v. 12; xv. 3.

Come, then, and behold these works of the Lord, as they are set forth before you in the word and sacrament? Come and see God, from all eternity, passing by angels, and pitching his love upon poor ruined sinners of Adam's family, and contriving their redemption by the incarnation and death of his dear Son, while he passed by the angels that fell. Come and see the glorious Son of God undertaking, in the council of peace, to become Surety to pay our debt, and satisfy justice for the injury our sins did to God's glory! Behold and consider the device of infinite wisdom for reconciling justice and mercy about guilty men, and satisfying the demands of them both, by punishing sin severely, and yet pardoning the persons guilty! “Stand still and see the wondrous work” of making the Word flesh to dwell among us; of the Creator's leaving his throne of glory to lodge in a virgin's womb, and a beast's manger; of the “Ancient of days” becoming “a child of a day old,” learning to speak and go, and subjecting himself to his own law in the room of rebel sinners! “Behold God's wondrous work,” in setting up a court and throne of grace among the prisoners of justice, and causing grace sit as a queen on the throne, with a sceptre of mercy in her hand, and thence to issue forth proclamations of grace to poor, wretched, blind, miserable, and naked sinners, proclaiming pardon to the condemned, liberty to the captives, and life to the dead; yea, see grace laying siege to the hearts of rebels, summoning them by the gospel-trumpet to surrender, and using the most prevailing arguments with them to do it, taken from the mediation, sufferings, blood, righteousness, and satisfaction of the Son of God.

“Behold and consider the wondrous work of God” in furnishing and fitting the Mediator for our miserable circumstances, joining the divine and human natures in one person for our relief! Observe how well he suits our exigencies; he is Man, that he might die for us; and God, that he might overcome death! Man, that he might combat the devil; and God, that he might vanquish him! Man, that he might take on our guilt and punishment; and God, that he might support under it! Man, that he might offer a sacrifice for us; and God, to make it infinitely meritorious! Man, that he might sympathise with us in trouble; and God, that he might deliver us!—a wondrous work indeed! Again, observe the Mediator's fulness, how exactly it suits our miseries and wants! In our wonderful Immanuel, there is life for our deadness, light for our darkness, beauty for our deformity, strength for our weakness, health for our sickness, balm for our wounds, raiment for our nakedness, riches for our poverty, merit for our guiltiness, righteousness for our justification, a fountain for our pollution, grace for sanctification, bread for our hunger, water for our thirst, and deep mercies for our deep miseries! a wonderful work, to make one depth so exactly to answer another depth! “This is the doing of the Lord, and wondrous in our eyes.”

“Stand still, and see God's wondrous work,” in sending our “Immanuel, the Prince of the kings of the earth,” to go up and down the wilderness seeking after the lost sheep, calling and inviting them in the most tender manner to come unto him for life and salvation, willingly submitting to be buffeted by Satan, contradicted by sinners, to suffer all manner of indignities, a cursed death, and the wrath of God, and all that he might be a sacrifice to satisfy justice for our sins. And after he had submitted to death and the grave for a time, he conquered them and rose again; and gave commission to his ambassadors to go through all the earth, and call perishing sinners to come unto him, and offer them salvation in his name; and having done so, he ascended into heaven to intercede for them. Now, it is incumbent upon all communicants to remember these amazing works of God, at his holy table, with wonder, thankfulness, and praise.

Come here and see the "fountain of the great depths" of infinite love broken up, and the streams of the water of life running freely therefrom to the sons of men. Come, see Jacob's ladder set up, that reaches from earth to heaven, and God the Father at the top of it, calling you to climb to heaven by the steps of it; viz. Christ's wounds, offices, and promises! Come, see the manna coming down in plentiful showers, and falling about your tents, and every man invited to gather. Come, see the Rock broached in the wilderness, to supply the necessities of your souls; see the Rock smitten by the rod of Moses, and bearing the curses of the law for you! Come, see the "City of refuge" opened for poor manslaughterers, that sinners, who have slain their souls by sin, may flee to it for shelter. O then flee for your lives, and do not linger by the way! Come, see God bringing his righteousness near you who are guilty criminals, and bidding you put it on for your safety in judgment; it is a robe that will fit every one of you. Come, see the "fruits and leaves" of the Tree of life shaken and scattered among starving wounded souls. Gather and feed on the fruits which he purchased for your nourishment; apply the leaves of his promises for your healing. Come, see "the Well of salvation" opened, bring the chain and bucket of faith and draw water. The great medicine-well is here, come with all your diseases and ailments to it, come with your hard hearts, blind eyes, weak hands, feeble knees, lame feet, and cold affections to get them healed. Come, see Christ's testament opened, and every man allowed to put in for a share of the legacies therein contained. This you are to do by believing, claiming, laying hold, and embracing the promises! Come, see straying prodigals returning to their Father's house, and see their Father embracing them, and the whole family rejoicing at their return: see their filthy rags taken off, and the white robe of the Son of God put on them, and the fatted calf killed for them. Come, see the King of glory entering in at the everlasting gates of men's souls, dethroning sin and self, taking possession of their hearts, and setting up his throne and kingdom in them. Come, see King Solomon both crowned and married in one day! An astonishing match concluded between the Prince of life and the heir of hell! All the daughters of Zion are called forth to behold this sight, Cant. iv. 11. All these are great and wondrous works of God to be seen in the word and sacrament, which all communicants ought to stand still and consider.

Consider these marvellous works so as to be suitably affected with them, make them the subject of your meditations; entertain high and admiring thoughts of God, and of his infinite love and wisdom manifested in them. Give firm credit to the record and testimony God hath given us of these wondrous works, and glorify the great Author of them with your hearts, tongues, and lives. Embrace the gospel-offer, and be afraid of offending that God who has humbled himself so low for our sakes, and has wrought such great and wondrous works for us. Be careful to serve him and please him in all things, and abhor sin his grand enemy.

ADVICE XV.—"IN MIDST OF THE STREET WAS THE TREE OF LIFE," REV. XXII. 2.

It was a sad day for mankind when God banished Adam from the earthly paradise, and from the tree of life that grew therein, and also shut the entry to it! But behold God, in his free mercy, is now opening an entry and inviting Adam's banished posterity back again to a better paradise, where there are purer delights, and neither sin nor Satan can enter; and where there is a Tree of life, Jesus Christ, infinitely preferable to that in Adam's paradise. This Tree of life far excels that in its leaves, shadow, fruit, and virtues; it animates, yea, restores, and preserves life for ever, neither is there any flaming sword to hinder our access to it. Adam's tree endured but a short time, but ours lasts for ever. Other trees decay, fade, and wither, but "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." O come, then, sit down under the shadow of this Tree, eat of its fruit, and live for ever. Though the Tree be now planted in the heavenly paradise, yet his branches, shadow, and fruit, extend to every believer on earth, as well as to the saints above. Thousands of communicants at the lower table have "sat under his shadow with great delight, and found his fruit sweet to their taste." Christ is a tree that bears fruit at all times, every month, and even in the sharpest winter months of sickness and death.

There are some very useful trees in the world, that afford all necessities to men, such as meat, drink, physic, and clothing. Behold, God hath provided such a tree for us. Jesus Christ affords us all these. 1. Meat: He tells us, that "his flesh is meat indeed;" that is, his flesh wounded and dying, yields strengthening food for the soul, in respect of its fruits and effects. It is food well prepared; the holy Trinity spent a whole eternity in preparing it. It is meat well-seasoned; it is seasoned with the love of God, sauced with the blood of Christ, and spiced with the graces of the Spirit.

2. Drink: Christ's blood is also drink indeed to the soul, in respect to its comfortable effects; such as pardon, peace, light, life, strength, &c. These streams from the Rock are most refreshing, cordial, and savoury drink; savoury to God, savoury to angels, and most savoury to every soul that hath tasted it. It is a sweet cup that is to be put into your hand, if you have faith, but it is poison to an unworthy communicant that wants faith. But, if you be worthy, the drink will poison sin, quicken grace, and refresh the soul. Fear not, O believer, to take a good draught, faith will make the cup medicinal and restorative to thy soul, and it will only kill and destroy thy lusts. 3. Physic: The leaves of this tree are for "the healing of the nations:" Christ hath many healing promises, which, when applied by faith, are most useful to purge out sin and corruption, and to heal all the soul's wounds and diseases. 4. This Tree affords clothing also. Poor fallen Adam, when naked, went to the fig-tree for its leaves to cover him; but O let his posterity go to the Tree of life, where they shall get infinitely better clothing, even Christ's perfect righteousness, which is spotless and law-binding. Behold a rich robe, set with the pearls and diamonds of heaven. A large robe, so broad as to cover a whole elect world. It also covers all the spots and infirmities of believers; so that not one of them is to be seen. This robe is as broad as the law, which, we are told, is exceeding broad. And it is just as beautiful as broad; for it makes every elect soul amiable and acceptable to God. Never then was there such a Tree, either in the earthly or the heavenly paradise, as our glorious Tree of life, Jesus Christ. O hungry souls, here is meat! O thirsty souls, here is drink! O diseased souls, here is medicine! O naked souls, here is clothing! O come then to this Tree of life, and you have all things necessary for you.

O communicants, you are called to take a view of this blessed Tree, as it was hewn, mangled, and cut down, by the axe of justice, when he died upon the cross for you. Even in this his mangled condition, he is a most beautiful and engaging sight to the eye of faith! O believer, behold your princely Jesus lifted up on a bloody cross, on the top of mount Calvary, for all nations to see him, and gather to him for food and healing. Since that mount was first created, it never produced such a tree, or such precious fruit, as the Lord of glory hanging on the tree of the cross, that was planted there some hours: Christ's hanging on it changed its nature from a cursed to a blessed tree, a Tree of life and salvation. This Tree of life made mount Calvary a sweet and lovely paradise that day (notwithstanding of all the malefactors' bones that lay scattered upon it), and the fruits growing on it that day hath enriched both heaven and earth, and will fill heaven with eternal songs of praise.

You are likewise called, at this time, to draw near a crucified Christ, the Tree of life, that is always laden with fruit. Come as near as possible you can win, shake the Tree by faith, and gather as much fruit as you can; eat, and lay up for after-times; yea, gather, and lay up for eternity. The fruits of this Tree are durable and lasting, plentiful and enriching, sweet and satisfying, manifold and various, Rev. xxii, "twelve manner of fruits every month," which is an hundred and forty-four crops in the year. Likewise, they are most suitable to the wants and necessities of your souls. What can be more suitable and desirable to the guilty than pardon? to the dead than life? to the hungry than bread? to the thirsty than drink? to the wounded than balm? to the blind than eye-salve? to the naked than clothing? to the impotent than strength? to the weary than rest? to the captive than liberty? to the disturbed than peace? to the bewildered than light? to the warrior than victory? Every one of these, and innumerable others, are the sweet and suitable fruits of the Tree of life.

O then, give all diligence to secure and clear up your interest in this blessed Tree of life and its fruits, which are now offered to you freely without money or price. Abandon and reject the sour and unsavoury fruits of sin, the world, and your own righteousness; and embrace the Tree of life in the arms of faith, and all its fruits are yours. —Come, "sit down under his shadow," at his table, and believingly receive and feed on these delicious fruits. O how delightful and refreshing is the shadow and shelter of Christ's righteousness, to the soul that hath been scorched with a sense of divine displeasure for sin. This shadow screens and protects him from the heat of God's wrath, from the curses of a fiery law, and from the slavish fears of death, and wrath-like dispensations. Then let every weary and scorched soul come at Christ's call, and sit down under his shadow. Give firm credit to the gospel report concerning Christ's suretyship, his sufficient righteousness, and free offers. Acquiesce heartily in this blessed contrivance of shelter and safety, and put all your trust and confidence in his righteousness alone; and abide contentedly under its shadow without wandering from it, or going from tree to tree, as many do, seeking rest or shelter. Surely all who leave Christ, and wander after the shadow of creature-comforts, or their own doings, for relief, will disquiet themselves in vain; for there is no rest or shelter any where, but under the shadow of the Tree of life. Here only you will find protection and provision. This made the spouse say, Cant. ii. 3, "I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste."

Let all those who have experienced the safety and sweetness of Christ's shadow and fruit, bless God, that gave them counsel, and drew them to this happiness. See that you abide close under this shadow, and make it your continual resort. Christ speaks to you, as David to Abiathar, when he fled to him from Saul's cruelty. "Abide thou with me, fear not, for he that seeketh my life seeketh thy life, but with me thou shalt be in safeguard." Likewise pity and pray for them who slight the tree of life, and are going through all the trees of the wood for rest and satisfaction, but cannot find it. O commend this blessed Tree to them, and invite them to come and sit down under the shadow of it, where they will find all things. Say to them, as Philip to Nathaniel, "Come and see." Be also looking out, and looking for the full enjoyment of the Tree of life in the paradise above, where you shall eternally sing among the branches of it, meet with all your friends, and eat the fruits with a far better appetite and relish than ever any did here below.

ADVICE XVI.—"A MAN SHALL BE A HIDING PLACE FROM THE WIND, AND A COVERT FROM THE TEMPEST," ISA. XXXII. 2.

Whatever storms or tempests believers are exposed to here, Christ is an excellent shelter and hiding-place from them. Before Adam's fall, when sin entered into the world, all was calm and serene; but since that, the world is become a weary wilderness, full of tempests; and as soon as one is laid another is ready to blow. There are storms of outward afflictions, sickness, losses and disappointments, and many wrath-like dispensations of providence; there are storms of temptations from Satan, challenges from conscience, thunderings from mount Sinai, desertions from God, reproaches and persecutions from the world. And yet all these storms here are but like drops before the shower, if compared with the terrible storm of wrath to come, which is abiding the ungodly and unbelieving. But glory to infinite wisdom and free love, for finding out a proper hiding-place for lost sinners amid these storms, to which we are called to turn, Zech. ix. 12, "Turn ye to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope." The man Christ is an excellent strong hold and hiding-place against all storms whatsoever; in him there is sufficient room and accommodation for us, his wounds are wide, his mercy large, his merits infinite, his offers free, his calls most gracious and extensive, Isa. xlv. 22, "Look to me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." The access is declared free, and the way patent, to all who turn to the strong hold for shelter, and never was any excluded that turned to it.

A crucified Jesus, O communicants, represented to you in the sacrament, is the strong hold and hiding-place to which you are called to turn by faith for shelter and safety, from the sword of justice. In him there are excellent clefts for shelter, Cant. ii. 14, and which you ought to be well acquainted with. There are the clefts of his wounds and merits, which all Christ's doves flee to when storms arise. There is also the clefts of his power, the clefts of his wisdom, the cleft of his love, and the cleft of his faithfulness; many a storm have they escaped in these clefts. In this hiding-place there are also chambers of safety, to which you may retire when the tempests blow, Isa. xxvi. 20. There are the chambers of Christ's offices and sweet relations, which he hath assumed for the safety and comfort of believers; in each of these many of them have found shelter when have storms blown. There is also the pleasant chamber of his covenant, with the closets of its promises, which afford sweet retiring places in tempestuous times. O study to be acquainted with them. David was well acquainted with the well-ordered covenant and its promises, and had his recourse thereto in troublous times, and particularly when he was threatened with the storm of death, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5, "Although my house be not so with God, yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure; this is all my salvation." And he pleads the promises of his covenant for his safety, Psal. cxix. 49, "Remember the word to thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope." Come, then, by the exercise of faith, and shut yourselves up in these sweet chambers at the Lord's table, and take complacency in viewing and walking through them.

Christ crucified is a covert and hiding-place to believers, and to every thing that belongs to them: he is even a covert to their bodies in time of danger; so was he to his disciples, when the storm was breaking upon himself, John xviii. 8, "If ye seek me, let these go their way." But more especially, he is a covert to their souls, these he accounts precious as his jewels; he hides them in his wounds, and "keeps them by his power through faith unto salvation." He is also a covert to their graces, and keeps them in life when ready to die, and saves them from being overwhelmed in the day of tempest. What had become of David and of Peter's grace, under violent storms of temptation, if he had not been a covert to them. Many a time hath he preserved the smoking flax and the bruised reed, under the most dangerous storms. Likewise Christ is a covert to their evidences and marks of grace; he preserves them, and keeps them legible, after many blots which sin and Satan cast upon them. He hath the blessed art of recovering and clearing up their evidences, when they are frequently given up for lost in the times of backsliding.

Let all consider how miserable they are who have no interest in this hiding-place; you, that are out of Christ have no covert from the tempest; you can neither have safety nor comfort in times of trouble. Nay, when any storm blows from without against you, a guilty conscience will be ready to raise the storm within; and also show you a more terrible storm gathering against you, even the wrath that is to come—wrath, still coming, but never all come—a storm that will still be blowing, but never will blow over. O what will become of you, if death come upon you in this shelterless state, while out of Christ, the only hiding-place?—to be sure, then, “hell will follow the pale horse.” To whom then will you flee for help or shelter? The rocks or hills will not be a hiding-place, if Christ do not hide you. No creature will screen or pity you, if Christ do it not. All the creatures will take part with their Creator against you; and, instead of hiding you, they will be ready to divulge and accuse you to the pursuer, the justice of God. If you cry to the heavens, O cannot the vast expanded heavens afford me a hiding-place from the tempest? No, will they say, there is no refuge, no entrance here for the slights of Christ; we will open only to rain fire, and brimstone, and furious storms upon their heads. If you look to the air, and say, Is there no hiding-place through the vast regions of the air for me? No, the air is transparent, and will discover the criminal, and will raise a whirlwind of wrath to blow you into hell. If you cry to the sea, Is there no hiding-place in the depths of the spacious sea to shelter me from the Lamb’s wrath? No, the sea will give up her dead to be judged, and will rage furiously against you. If you look to the earth, Is there no cave nor pit in all the earth to hide me from the dreadful storm? No, the earth, instead of hiding you, will open its mouth and let you go quick down to hell, for slighting the wounds of Christ that were opened to shelter you.

O let every sinner then flee now, while it is time, to these blessed wounds of Jesus for safety: “Be of good comfort, O sinner; rise, he calleth thee;” rise and come, for there is yet room; forsake all false shelter and lying refuges. Absolute mercy, a blameless walk, convictions, resolutions, prayers, tears, ordinances, ministers, will not be a hiding-place to you, if Christ be neglected. Nothing can satisfy justice, nor screen from wrath, but the wounds and blood of the Redeemer; therefore see to make these only your covert and hiding-place.

It concerns all to try if they have got into this hiding-place, and if they be among Christ’s hidden ones: so believers are called, Psal. lxxxiii. 3. If you be among these hidden ones, you will have a hidden life, and be acquainted with a life of secret prayer and correspondence with heaven, and a life of faith and leaning upon the Son of God; you will have hidden food, meat the world knows not of, the hidden manna of communion with God. You will have hidden clothing, and be acquainted with putting off your own rags, and putting on the hidden garments of Christ’s righteousness. You will have hidden strength, and be acquainted with borrowing strength from Christ, both for work and warfare. You will live upon hidden supports in dark and calamitous times, and draw comfort from the promises, and make these the ground of your hope. If you be in Christ as your hiding-place, you will be among Christ’s poor and needy ones, for it is to such he is a refuge, Isa. xxv. 4. Do you see your own emptiness, ill-deservings, and insufficiency, and depend upon free mercy for every crumb? Are you still begging at a throne of grace, and inclining to exalt free grace? saying, “Not unto us, but unto Christ be the glory;” he is “all our salvation and all our desire.” Happy are they who can lay claim to these marks.

ADVICE XVII.—“THE LORD SAID UNTO HIM, WHAT DOST THOU HERE, ELIJAH?” 1 KINGS XIX. 9.

In is the concern of every man to be always in case to give account to God of his errand and design in every piece of work he is employed in; and so ought communicants at the Lord’s table, when God or his ministers ask them, as the Lord did Elijah, “What dost thou here, communicant?” What is your business and errand at this table? Can you say, I have many errands here; I come upon my Saviour’s call, to celebrate the memorial of his dying love, that his name may be remembered to all generations! “And worthy is the Lamb that was slain,” to be admired, adored, and praised for ever. I come also to subscribe and seal a marriage-contract with him in the most solemn manner, before all the persons of the glorious Trinity, before the elect angels, and before all the congregation. Seeing Christ doth once more call me to it, after many a broken appointment, and hath put on his marriage robes, his dyed garments, to win and engage my heart, I come to join hands with him before God, angels, and men, and take them all witnesses to the bargain. Surely this is a good errand. O that the long spoken of match may now hold.

Can you say, I am come to a rich and liberal Saviour, to supply my needs out of his fulness? I come on a good day, when he uses to deal bountifully to the poor and needy, and to say to them, as the king to Esther, “What is thy petition? and what is thy request?” Well, is thy petition ready? Dost thou come with the publican's petition, "God, be merciful to me a sinner?" Or with David's petition, "Lord, be merciful to me; heal my soul, for I have sinned against thee?" Or with that petition, "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than the snow!" Or with that, "Let my soul live, and it shall praise thee!" Or, do you come with the spouse's petitions and requests? "Draw me, and we will run after thee. Awake, O north wind; and come thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out!" Surely these petitions are agreeable to your Redeemer; see that you insist upon them, and press for an answer. Study to have a lively feeling at this time of all your wants. Would you have them all supplied at once? Then come and embrace a crucified Jesus in the arms of faith, and he will fully answer them all. Would you have all your five senses satisfied at once? Behold Christ invites you to come to him to get it done. Would you have the sense of seeing satisfied? Then he says to you, "Look to me, and be ye saved. Behold me, behold me! Behold king Solomon with the crown on his head!" Would you have the sense of hearing satisfied? Then, saith he, "Incline thine ear; hearken to me; give ear to my voice." Would you have the sense of tasting satisfied? He saith, "O taste, and see that God is good." Would you have the sense of touching satisfied? He saith, "Reach hither thy hand, thrust it into thy side, feel the wounds made by the spear and the nails." Would you have the sense of smelling satisfied? Come then to Christ, whose "name is as ointment poured forth;" and whose "garments smell of aloes, myrrh, and cassia." Come here, and get all your spiritual senses satisfied at Christ's full feast.

Object. But I am afraid I am not among these invited guests that Christ will make welcome.—

Ans. Have you any of the scripture-characters of those that Christ invites? Are you among his friends? Do you wish well to his cause and interests? Then Christ saith to you, "Eat, O friends," Cant. v. 1. Is your heart open to Christ's offers, and willing to accept him in all his offices? Then he saith to such, he "will come in and sup with them," Rev. iii. 20. Doth your heart love him? Then he saith, he "will manifest himself" to such, John xiv. 21. Are you poor and needy? Then he saith, "The needy shall not be forgotten," Psal. ix. 18.—Do you see yourself a lost sinner? Then he saith, he is "come to seek and call such," Luke xix. 10; Matt. xix. 13. Do you feel sin to be a heavy burden? Then he bids the "heavy-laden come to him," Matt. ix. 28. Are you sick, and much distressed? Then Christ chooses to entertain and converse with such, Matt. ix. 12. Do you hunger and thirst for Christ? He saith, "he fills the hungry with good things," Luke i. 53. Are you sensible of backslidings? He invites such to come to him, Jer. iii. 14. Are you desirous to put on the wedding-garment of imputed righteousness? Then, to be sure, you shall neither be excluded nor neglected. Do you earnestly seek for his Holy Spirit? He assures you he is more willing to give the Spirit to them that ask it, than loving parents are to give bread to their hungry children. What is men's compassion to their children in comparison of Christ's to his? Well then, you may rest on Christ's word; for he is not more free in making promises, than faithful in making them good. He is a God that keeps covenant to a thousand generations. Venture then upon his word, and come to his table, with hope and expectation to get all your wants supplied.

Let me again ask you, as God did Elijah, What dost thou here, communicant? Can you say, that you are come to get a heart-affecting sight of the blood and wounds of the glorious Redeemer, so as you may love Christ, and hate sin more than ever! That is a good errand, and what God will surely approve. Come then, draw near, as it were, to the foot of the cross, and take a narrow and close view of his wounds, and of the blood that streams from them. Observe how fast the blood runs down from his hands to the ground—faster than ever tears ran down from your eyes for sin, that caused the shedding of his blood! Christ is not sparing of his blood for you, however sparing you be of your tears for him. Draw yet nearer, and lay your ear to his wounds, especially the wounds in his hands, feet, and side; which, like so many mouths, are wide open to speak to believing communicants. Listen and hear what they say. What is the language of the two wounds in his hands? "Come to me, and cast your guilty soul into my bleeding outstretched arms," and I will save you from the sword of justice. Lay your ear to the two wounds in his feet, and hear what they say, "Run to me, and cast yourself down at my feet," and I will protect you from the avenger of blood. Harken to the deep wound in his side, saying, "Flee to me, O trembling dove, and I will shelter thee in this cleft of the rock. Thou hast now free access to the Ark, behold the window opened in the side of it; look in at it, and see my heart burning with love. Yea, thrust in thy hand to my side, unbelieving Thomas, and feel my bleeding heart, how warm it is to you, and be no more faithless, but believing."

O communicant, can you come to the foot of Christ's cross, and see his wounds, and hear such language, and your hearts not be affected with love to Christ, and hatred to sin? Can you behold

Christ thus cruelly used, nailed to the tree, bleeding and dying in your room? Can you see the heavens turning black, the sun drawing in its head, the earth quaking, and the rocks rending at the sufferings of the Son of God, and your heart not quake for sin, that awakened the sword of justice against him as our Surety? O what cause have you to be ashamed at the hardness and unconcernedness of your heart at such a sight, and to cry to God that the heart of stone may be changed into an heart of flesh, and that the fire of Christ's love may descend, and kindle such a flame in your soul, as may melt your frozen affections, and consume the stubble of your lusts and corruptions. Of old, the Lord used to answer his people's prayers and sacrifices by fire from heaven. Pray that he may answer your's in like manner, by kindling a holy fire in your soul, as he did in the hearts of the two disciples going to Emmaus; even a two-fold fire, to wit, a fire of love to Christ, and a fire of indignation against sin. O love the Lord Jesus as your treasure and portion; let your thoughts be mainly upon him, and your souls breathing after him. Be much concerned for his interest and cause, and for the spreading of his kingdom and glory in the world. And be looking out, and longing for the full and perfect enjoyment of him. Likewise keep up a strong aversion to sin, and to what is opposite to Christ, and injurious to his interest and kingdom; look always upon sin as the grand enemy and murderer of Christ; and therefore do not spare it.

ADVICE XVIII.—“JESUS SAITH UNTO HIM, WILT THOU BE MADE WHOLE?” JOHN V. 6.

This miraculous healing-pool of Bethesda, at which the impotent man had lain thirty-eight years, was a type of the Messiah, and the fountain of his blood opened and set forth in gospel-ordinances, for healing all our spiritual diseases. And Christ's method of healing this man teaches us, that if we would be healed, we must be willing to wait at the pool of ordinances, till the Spirit come to stir the waters, apply the blood, and effect the cure. And, in the mean time, we must be sensible of our disease, and look up to Christ, our great Physician, with earnest desires for healing. This is imported in Christ's question, “Wilt thou be made whole?”

O communicants, you are diseased by sin, and the plagues of your hearts; these have blasted the primitive beauty of the soul, and brought on it a ghastly deformity, with much pain and weakness. Your diseases are manifold. Atheistical thoughts, misbelief, and ignorance of God's truths, are woeful plagues; hardness of heart, and earthly-mindedness, formality, and heart-wanderings in duty, trusting to your own righteousness, ingratitude, and backslidings from God; these are diseases you ought all to be sensible of. God would have “every man to know the plague of his own heart,” 1 Kings viii. 38, in order to his being made whole. These are the sick that Christ is ready to come to heal, Matt. ix. 12. Christ first makes men sick and sensible, before he makes them whole. Have you then any acquaintance with this healthful, preparatory sickness? Have you been made sensible of the dangerous nature of your disease, and thoughtful and solicitous about the issue of it? Have you been made to groan and moan under the burden of your disease, saying, “I am troubled and bowed down greatly, I go mourning all the day long?” Have you seen there is no healing in yourselves, or in your convictions, prayers, tears, or reformation? and that it is only in Christ, who hath an infinite fulness of merit and Spirit to suit your desperate malady? Are you willing to submit to the physician's prescriptions for healing? Be the pill or potion ever so bitter, you will swallow it. Is it your cry, “Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?” These are tokens of a right preparatory sickness, May the Holy Spirit work them in you.

The great meritorious means of your healing is the blood of Jesus Christ, which is set before you in the sacrament, for you to look to and apply by faith. As the Israelites were made sensible of their stings before they looked to the brazen serpent for healing; so must ye in order to your prizing of Christ, and looking to his blood for healing your spiritual plagues. Now the fountain is open, and the healing streams run freely on both sides of the table. Come then, with a feeling of your diseases, and bathe in them for curing your hard hearts, your blind eyes, your weak hands, your feeble knees, your lame feet, and cold affections. O impotent man, are you lying at the side of the pool while the waters are stirring? Have you no strength to move forward, and is there none to put you in! O then look up to Christ, that healed the impotent man after many years waiting; look to him by faith, as he calls you, Isa. xlv. 22, “Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth. As I offered myself to every diseased soul in particular, as well as to all in general; so let every soul embrace me as his Saviour, and apply my blood to his particular diseases.” Faith is a healing grace, not only its touches, but its very looks, are healing; hence Christ said to severals who were healed, “Thy faith hath made thee whole.” O see then if you have got this healing faith.

QUEST. How may I know if my faith be of this kind?

ANS. A healing faith will make the soul heartily approve the gospel method of salvation, embrace

God's testimony, and close with his gospel-offer in all respects. And it hath in it an appropriating trust and confidence in the merit and virtue of Christ's blood, offered to the sinner, in particular, for his pardon and healing; which makes him rest upon Christ as his Saviour, and venture his soul and salvation upon his merits and promise. In this healing faith of a diseased sinner, there is a particular acceptance of, and confidence in a crucified Christ, corresponding to that free gospel-offer which he makes of himself to the distressed soul. This faith brings him to a fixed resolution to lie at the Physician's door, and depend upon him alone for healing. And it makes him cast open all the doors and rooms of his soul, to receive and entertain this Physician. Now, O poor impotent soul, if there be such a faith as this wrought in thee, then thy faith in Christ makes thee whole. The healing balm is applied, the cure begun, and shall shortly be perfected. "Be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee; Jesus Christ maketh thee whole."

It concerns you also, to try if the happy fruits and effects of this healing faith appear in you, whereby you may conclude, that the strength of your disease is broken, by virtue of the blood of Christ; and that you have got it applied for curing your heart-atheism, hardness, unbelief, pride, carnality, and particularly your weakness of hands, and feebleness of knees: so that, though formerly they were so weak and feeble, that you could not lift up the one, nor bow down the other in prayer, with any fervency and liveliness; yet now it is otherwise: then this is a good token the strength of the disease is broken. Christ has taken you into his hospital, and has you under cure, by the daily application of his blood and Spirit, and you are on the way of recovery. Can you say further, that your drought is greatly abated, your thirst after sin and the world; and that your appetite for soul-food, communion with Christ in ordinances, is happily increased? Can you bear the light better than before? Do you love searching sermons? All these are good signs. Have you a high esteem of your Physician, and do you entertain him kindly when he visits you? Have you recovered more strength and willingness to serve him in the way of commanded duties? And have you a holy fear and jealousy of every thing that might bring on a relapse into your old distempers? Then there is "good hope, through grace," that your faith is a healing faith, the work of healing is begun, and so far carried on. Christ is our Rock, and his work is perfect.

O then study to be thankful to your great Physician, saying, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits towards me? Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits. Who forgiveth all thine iniquities, healeth all thy diseases, and redeemeth thy soul from destruction; who reneweth thy youth like the eagles, maketh thee run and not weary, walk and not faint. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again to a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead; to an inheritance, incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for us." Then the cure shall be fully perfected, and we shall dwell always beside our Physician, and enjoy perfect and uninterrupted health for ever and ever. Express your thankfulness while you are here, by being witnesses for Christ, shining as lights before others, commending Christ and his ways to them, hating all sin, abstaining from it; reproving sin in others, and testifying against it. Be meek and lowly in your carriage; deal uprightly with all men; love all that bear Christ's image; be zealous for family-religion, for sanctifying the sabbath, and attending God's ordinances. Pray earnestly for the coming of Christ's kingdom upon the earth, and do all you can to promote it.

Watch and pray against backslidings and relapses into old distempers, and for that end be humble and self-diffident, be denied to your own strength and conduct, and be always jealous of your corrupt and deceitful hearts. "Live by faith upon the Son of God, looking him both for righteousness and strength. And because you are environed with enemies, "put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." It is not the armour of your own resolutions, it is the armour of God, even the graces of the Spirit; it is not some graces, or parts of that armour, it is the whole armour, all the Christian graces. It is not enough to have the armour in the house, or grace in the habit; no, it must be put on, daily worn and exercised. God hath provided different pieces of armour for you, the sword of the Spirit, the shield of faith, the helmet of hope, the breast-plate of righteousness; but there is nothing for the back, for God disowns runaways, Heb. x. 38. "If any man draw back," &c.

ADVICE XIX.—"AND THIS DAY SHALL BE UNTO YOU FOR A MEMORIAL," EXOD. XII. 14.

As the passover-feast was a memorial both of the deliverance from Egypt, and the redemption by Christ; so a communion-sabbath is a memorial of sundry remarkable things, and ought to be held as a most memorable day by every believer; as it brings to our remembrance the greatest events and blessings.

1. A communion-sabbath is a lively memorial of Christ's death, for the sacrament administered that day, by breaking of bread and pouring out of wine, is a visible representation of Christ's death, by the breaking of Christ's body, and pouring forth his blood on the cross; an event which God will have remembered to the end of the world, and through all eternity. Why? because by it God's perfections are highly glorified, and the elect world redeemed from hell. Christ did institute the ordinance to be a standing monument of his death while the world stands, 1 Cor. xi. 26, "As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come." And a monument of the wonderful love of God in giving his Son, and of the Son in giving himself, to be a sacrifice for our sins, who were utterly unworthy of his love. By this memorial God would teach us the inestimable value of Christ's death, as the greatest obligation that ever he puts upon the world; and that we ought to declare our gratitude to God for the favour, in the most open and public manner; and rely upon Christ's death and sacrifice, as the foundation of all our hopes of pardon and salvation. The death of Jesus Christ is the most worthy subject of the discourse and praise both of the redeemed on earth, and the glorified in heaven, according to Rev. i. 5; v. 9, 12. Hence it was, that Moses and Elias, when they came from heaven to mount Taber, to wait upon their Lord when transfigured, they made choice of Christ's death for the subject of their conversation, Luke ix. 31, and good reason, for Christ's death was the spring and cause of all their glory in heaven; neither Moses nor Elias had shined there, if it had not been for Christ's death.

2. A communion-sabbath is a special memorial to us of Christ's resurrection from the grave, which was on the first day of the week, and hence called the Lord's day, it being the most honourable day to our Lord Redeemer, and the most joyful day to all the redeemed; as it gave a clear proof of the perfection of Christ's sacrifice he offered to divine justice, and that our Surety's satisfaction was accepted for our complete justification and absolution. Hereby it appeared that the elect's debt was discharged, their redemption finished, and their Cautioner liberated from prison. This day Christ was "declared to be the Son of God with power." As his death showed him to be truly man, so his resurrection manifested him to be truly God and the great Redeemer of the world. This was the day of Christ's victory and triumph, in which he solemnly appeared to be the Captain of our salvation, and obtained a glorious victory over all his and the church's enemies. This day he triumphed over the grave, death and hell, and over sin, Satan, and wicked men. Now death was unstinged, the grave lost its purchase, the serpent's head was bruised, the powers of hell vanquished, and they were all swallowed up in victory. Likewise Christ, by his resurrection, as the Head of the church, gave to all the members of his body a sure pledge and earnest of their resurrection from the grave at the last day, to immortality and eternal life. And on this day he rested from all his works of suffering and redemption, and rejoiced in the review of them with infinite delight and complacency. Now, a communion-sabbath is a bright memorial of this glorious day, which is to be had in everlasting remembrance. O believer, remember it with thankfulness and joy.

3. This day is a memorial of your spiritual resurrection and new birth, as it declares your reception into God's family, and seals your title to the privileges of his children, that you are born "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ," of the heavenly inheritance. And though the Lord's supper be not a converting ordinance in its own nature; yet the preaching of a crucified Christ this day has been the means of converting many thousands, and, in many others, of beginning the pangs and forerunners of the new birth, to wit, saving convictions of sin, and inquiries after Christ, and salvation through him, which have ended in their conversion. O pray that it may be such a day to you and many others.

4. This day is a memorial of your marriage-day; because on it you enter into or renew your marriage-covenant with Christ the Bridegroom of the church. Ministers, by the gospel-offers, court your souls to Christ, saying, as those did to Rebekah, Gen. xxiv. 58, "Will you go with the Man Christ?" On the communion-day, you solemnly give your answer, as she did, "We will go;" and at the Lord's table you seal your engagement to him. Likewise this day is a memorial of the consummation of your marriage with Christ at the great day, when he will come to receive home his espoused bride, and conduct her to the King's palace with joy and triumph. O prepare and long for that day.

5. The communion-sabbath is a memorial of your crucifying sin, which was the cause of your Redeemer's death. At this ordinance you draw virtue from the death of Christ, to kill sin and mortify strong lusts. Many wrestling believers have been enabled, at this occasion, to give a death's wound to those lusts and idols they had been long struggling against before. Resolve, then, in Christ's strength, that sin shall not outlive this day; it is most just to revenge the death of Christ upon it.

6. A communion-sabbath is a memorial of Christ's conquest and coronation. For on this day Christ frequently receives the fruit and reward of the travail of his soul and his bitter agonies, by overcoming hearts, deposing Satan from his throne, and delivering souls from his thralldom, and translating them into his own kingdom. And at this occasion, all worthy communicants, as it were, put a crown of glory and honour upon Christ's head, by renouncing sin, Satan, and all that had exercised dominion over them before, and giving their full and hearty consent that Christ alone shall reign over them for them. Christ is so delighted with this that he esteems it as his coronation-day, Cant. iii. 11. O come, then, and yield your hearts to Christ, and pray that the communion-day may be a day of his coronation and conquest, when sinners shall give their free and willing consent to the dethroning of Satan, and enthroning of King Jesus; come under Christ's sceptre and government, and abandon all his enemies; for he hath best right to the throne, and the justest title to reign over you.

7. A communion-sabbath is a lively memorial and emblem of the everlasting Sabbath above, and the heavenly feast there that shall never end, which Christ hath purchased and promised to his people. Why? because on a communion-Sabbath here, there is an assembling of God's people to give thanks for redeeming love, and to feed upon Christ and his purchase, with satisfaction and songs of praise. In like manner, in the heavenly Sabbath there will be a great gathering of all the saints through all the world, to admire and praise God for redeeming goodness, and to sit down and feast with Christ for ever upon the benefits of his purchase. O how great is the plenty, variety, the fulness of provision and satisfaction, which is at the upper table! there they feed upon eternal redemption from hell and wrath, perfect freedom from sin and Satan, and from all afflictions and complaints. They feed upon the glorious presence of God in human nature, the constant shinings of his face, and intimations of his love; the bright discoveries of the works of God in creation and providence, and especially in the redemption of men by Christ. And in this festival, they have perfect satisfaction, joined with eternal songs of praise. But O how far will the communion-sabbath above excel those we have here below! Here we are oft put to mix our praises with mourning and tears, because of sin prevailing, or the Spirit withdrawing. Here Judases, and unworthy guests, thrust in among the disciples; but at the higher table there is no such mixture, all is pure and holy, and there is nought to allay their joy. Here our communion-sabbaths are soon over, and have nights, week-days, and trials to succeed them; but the communion-sabbath above, the feast, music, and assembly, are everlasting, without interruption or uneasiness of any sort. O then improve these short sabbaths, as memorials and means to prepare you for this everlasting sabbath; and in all ordinances here, keep your eye upon the heavenly festival.

ADVICE XX.—“HOW SHALL I PUT THEE AMONG THE CHILDREN! THOU SHALT CALL ME, MY FATHER,” JER. III, 19.

Though there be great mountains of difficulties in the way of sinners' salvation, yet God, in his free mercy, hath found out an expedient to get over them; even by making choice of God as our God and Father in Christ. That you may admire his grace the more, take a view of the difficulties that lie in the way. God might say, “How shall I put thee among the children” of my family, who are the offspring of apostate and rebellious parents, who ungratefully departed from God without any provocation, sold themselves to the devil to do his drudgery, and rebelled against a most gracious God and loving Father? And how shall I put you, that have sinned after the similitude of Adam, among my children? How shall I be reconciled to such treacherous dealers? Again, he might say, “How shall I put you among my children,” who are condemned rebels in the hands of my infinite justice, and whom I am engaged by my truth to destroy, having said, “The soul that sinneth shall die?” Here is a burning mountain of justice in the way of your salvation; how shall mercy get over it to help you? “How shall I put you among my children,” whose hearts are full of enmity against me, and have all your days been plotting with the devil, and assisting him to fight against me, and pull the crown off my head? “How shall I put you among my children,” who are so deformed, polluted, and loathsome creatures, as black as hell can make you, who have all your days been wallowing in the mire, and drenched in the puddle of sin? “How shall I put you among my children,” who have been all your days Satan's vassals, drudging at his work, grinding in his prison, and serving divers lusts and pleasures? “How shall I put you among my children,” who are impotent and lame, cannot run my errands, nor move one step in my service, nor do any thing to please or glorify me? “How shall I put you among my children,” that hate my children's bread, and choose rather to feed on husks with the swine? “How shall I put you among my children,” who hate my children, and my image in them, and have preferred the devil's children to mine? “How shall I put you among my children,” that never liked my children's work, never loved prayer, praise, nor any spiritual employment? “How shall I put you among my children, who are sinners in Zion, have sitten many years under gospel-offers and calls to come to Christ, and have slighted them all, and bolted the door against my dear Son, and quenched the motions of my Spirit? "How shall I put you among my children," who have been so impenitent and hardhearted all your days, as never to drop one tear for any of the black and heinous sins you have committed against me? "How shall I put you among my children," who have never kept one word to me but have broken all your baptismal engagements, and gone over to the devil's camp, and harboured my enemies? O how is it that God can come over these mountains, to put such as you among the children, and allow you to sit down at the children's table, and eat of their bread? How is it consistent with the honour and holiness of God?

Blessed be God, who hath found out a way for his mercy to come over all these mountains, by providing a Mediator and Surety to satisfy justice for our sins, and proclaiming a new covenant, that whosoever accepts of the Mediator, and makes choice of God as his God and Father in him, shall be taken into God's family, and be numbered among his children, notwithstanding of all that you have done to provoke him to cast you off. "Thou shalt call me, my Father." Wonderful condescension, that he should allow such prodigals and runaways at all to speak to him, and far more that he should put words in their mouths, and such kindly words, as my Father! Amazing goodness!

If you will make this address aright, and take hold of his covenant, so as you may be taken in among the children of God, and allowed to come to his table and eat of their bread; you must be truly grieved for long rebellion against your heavenly Father, and slighting his offers of mercy and pardon through Christ; you must be deeply humbled before him, and fall in with the gospel-method of access to him by a Mediator; you must quit all dependence on your own righteousness, and break with all your Father's enemies; you must make a free and hearty choice of God, as your God and Father in Christ, resting wholly upon Christ's mediation and righteousness for acceptance with God; you must make a surrender of yourselves, and all you have, to him, and engage in Christ's strength to serve him as obedient children, desirous to please your Father in all things.

O come then, enter into covenant with God, and make choice of him as your Father in Christ; this is the only expedient for removing the difficulties in the way of your salvation, and for taking you into God's family, and numbering you among his children; unless you fall in with it, you can have no right to the children's bread, you will be unworthy communicants, and eat and drink judgment to yourselves.—O then, prevent it, by entering into covenant with God, that you may be taken in among the children. O young persons, let me put the matter home to you, as Joshua did to the Israelites, "Choose you this day whom you will serve!" Choose you whom you will take for your Father, whether God or the devil! Both are courting your hearts; which of them will you yield to? Is there any so foolish as to halt between two opinions in this case? Is there any so mad as to stand in doubt whether to dwell with Christ or the devil for ever? Now, Michael and his angels, and the dragon and his angels, are struggling for your hearts; a cunning devil is holding, and a dying Saviour is drawing; now cast the balance, and show which of them you incline to. The eyes of the glorious Trinity are on you, the eyes of angels and men are on you, to see what the issue will be. O then, be wise, and come presently, and make a surrender of your hearts to God in Christ. There is no music so melodious in God's ears, as the voice of young persons weeping and covenanting with God. The season of youth is the male in your flock, it belongs to God, let him have it; they are cursed who deny it him, and reserve the blind and lame to God, such as the dregs of old age, or sickness, Mal. i. 7.

O communicants, see always to bring Christ along with you in your covenanting with God; never think of covenanting with him but by sacrifice of Christ's death, to atone for the breach of the first covenant; and bring his Suretyship to answer for your faithfulness in the second, otherwise you can never call God your Father, nor be taken in among his children. Remember you are all engaged in this covenant by your parents undertaking for you in baptism; but as soon as you are capable, God will have you to renew it personally and explicitly, and to come sensible of your breaking this covenant, in running away from Christ's colours, and in going over to the devil's camp; and deeply sensible of your folly in delaying and standing out so long against Christ's gracious calls and free offers.—O come, as penitent prodigals, and mourning backsliders, with your faces Zion-ward, weeping as ye go, willing to enter into God's covenant, and give yourselves away unto the Lord, who is your rightful owner. Since Christ comes to you at this occasion, as in streams of blood, it is surely proper that you meet him with streams of tears for sin, that caused his blood to be poured forth as water; and that you come presently to an open rupture with all his enemies, and particularly with your unbelief, your pride, your passion, your hypocrisy, and other sins that have pierced him. Break with them all, and come to him with the appropriating acts of faith, saying, "My Father, my Lord, and my God."

ADVICE XXI.—“THEY GLORIFIED GOD, SAYING, WE HAVE SEEN STRANGE THINGS TO-DAY,” LUKE V. 26.

Those who have been attending ordinances, ought to recollect what they have been seeing, doing, and hearing, and to be suitably affected therewith. Self-examination is needful after communicating, as well as before it. Had you the eyes of faith open to see and observe the goings of our God and King in his Sanctuary; you may then say, on the evening of a communion-sabbath, “We have seen strange and marvellous things to-day.” You have seen the bloody tragedy of Christ’s sufferings represented and reacted; Christ with garments dipped in blood, fighting a bloody battle for us; in which the glory of the divine attributes are wonderfully displayed. Behold the free love and mercy of God, who was highly offended at us, yet contriving our redemption, and giving the Son of his love to die for us, who were his enemies; and for this end creating a new thing in the earth, the incarnation of an infinite person, making a woman, a virgin, to be mother of him that created her!—God incarnate is a world’s wonder, Jer. xxxi. 22. A strange thing! The Son of God consents thus to humble himself and die for condemned criminals; rather than he would see elect sinners plunged into the bottomless gulph of eternal misery, in his love and pity he would put himself into it to keep them out! Here infinite wisdom displayed in finding out a way to satisfy justice in punishing sin severely, and at the same time to gratify mercy in pardoning the sinner freely! A strange device! Justice and mercy are reconciled, and kiss one another in man’s redemption by Christ’s death, the demands of both are answered, and the glory of both equally discovered. Here is seen the severity of justice and fierceness of God’s wrath against sin, in not sparing his innocent Son when he became our Surety, nor abating him one farthing of the debt! Nay, he awaked the sword of justice against him, and poured out the vials of his wrath upon him, which kindled a fire in his soul, made him sweat and fall to the ground; and there he that made the heavens lay grovelling in the anguish of his Spirit, and sweating cloths of blood! O how heavy was the burden of guilt that pressed his soul at this time!

You have seen a strange thing, blood streaming forth of marvellous virtue, that can soften hearts, though harder than a stone; that can heal all the wounds given you by the old serpent; that can wash away the deepest stains of guilt, and make creatures black as hell, whiter than snow! And though many thousands have been cleansed by it, yet the stream is nowise defiled; but still is pure and clear as crystal! You have seen the amazing humiliation of the Son of God for vile worms! a strange thing! He was made a worm, a clod of dust; yea, made sin for us! strange, that he who thunders in the heavens, should be brought to lie in a manger, and cry in the cradle! That he who framed the heavens, should work with a carpenter in his trade! That the great judge of all the world, should be brought to the bar, accused as a malefactor, condemned and crucified between two thieves, that such criminals as you might have a room among the blessed! You have seen the Lord of life deprived of life, to purchase life for you! spotless Holiness made sin, and eternal Blessedness made a curse, to redeem you from sin, and the curse due to it! A strange thing! for the Holy one of God to make such an exchange with you, to take the curse, to give you the blessing! to take shame, to give you glory! to take death, to give you life! to take your sins, to give you his righteousness! A strange thing, to see the righteousness of one Man, a robe large enough and sufficient to cover many thousands, so as not one spot of guilt can be seen in them by the eye of infinite justice! A strange thing! to see Christ willing to have his side opened, to satisfy doubting souls of the reality of his love, that you might look into his heart, and see it panting with love to you, and hear him saying, as to Thomas, “be no more faithless, but believing!” Strange! to see him bowing his head on the cross, to whisper comfort into your ear, saying, Now “it is finished;” I have drunk the brook in the way, even the whole river of God’s wrath, so that there is not one drop left for you; every believer’s debt is paid! A strange thing! to behold the Father pleased to see the bruises, agonies, and sufferings of his dear Son, that his enemies might be eternally freed from them!

A strange thing! to see death conquering death; the death of Christ conquering all his and our enemies! If any had seen Christ entering the lists with death and hell, law and justice, he might have stood amazed, and said, O what will become of this Champion, that is engaged with such strong enemies? But stay a little, and you will see him lead captivity captive, triumphing over them all, and fetch all he came for, out of the hand of the devil! When Christ was brought to the cross, one might have thought that devils, wicked men, and death, were triumphing over him; but his word saith, that on “the cross he spoiled principalities and powers; and made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it.” A strange mystery! while enemies were scoffing and insulting him, Christ is triumphing over them! A glorious conquest Christ’s was; for he not only subdued his enemies but conquered them, so far as to make them useful and serviceable to him and his people! Let us admire the conquest and the Conqueror; though he was despised by men, yet, like David, he gloriously subdued Goliath, that defied the armies of the God of Israel. He crushed the head of the old serpent that had bruised his heel, and enslaved his elect; and he put all his other enemies to flight!

A strange sight! You have seen to-day, God coming over the greatest mountains of difficulties, to pardon and save sinners; taking rebels to be his children and favourites; and exalting them above angels that never sinned! You have seen the King of glory courting poor slaves, black Ethiopians, and inviting them with out-stretched arms to come and match with him, and sealing the marriage covenant with his blood! You have seen him make a rich feast to them, and welcome them to feed on a crucified Christ, and all his purchase! Behold the heavenly Pelican, that feeds his young ones with his blood! How amazing is the sight, that God should not only feast; but seal a marriage covenant with you, whose descent is base, whose person is ugly, whose portion is nothing but diseases and misery! O what strange sights you have seen to-day! you have seen the love of Christ, the worth of souls, the price of pardon, an emblem of the higher table, to which many of your friends and acquaintances are gone, where the feast will never end!

You have seen to-day, a strange act of mercy to guilty and ill-deserving creatures who have ate and drunk before the Lord, and yet on them he hath not laid his hand; he hath made no breach upon any as on Uzzah, Nadab, Abihu, or the men of Bethshemesh! He hath not struck any dead with the bread in their mouths, or cup in their hands, nor sent any from the table to hell, though you must acknowledge you deserved rather to have had a cup of wrath put into your hand, than a cup of blessing! A strange sight! that gospel-offers are yet continued to those who have abused many sacraments and sermons! that Christ should be stretching out the sceptre of grace, and offering pardon and mercy to those who have crucified him afresh, and trampled his blood under foot.

Have you seen evidences of gracious changes wrought on hearts and wills by the word, secure souls awakened, blind eyes opened, proud creatures humbled, careless sinners made to cry, "A way with the world, and give me Christ. None but Christ; I count all things but loss and dung in comparison of Christ and his righteousness." These are strange sights, with which you should be much affected, so as to hate sin, love Christ, bless God, and glorify him with your hearts, tongues, and lives. It is the end of all God's works that we should glorify him. Oh! the best have reason to lament that they are so little affected with the marvellous things set before them in the word and sacrament! Surely, when you compare the rock whence you are hewn, and that on which God sets you! and when you consider the low stoop Christ has made to purchase such clods of earth and sins with his blood, you have cause to be amazed at his love, and confounded at your own ingratitude, in being so little affected with his marvellous loving kindness, or melt for sin that was the cause of all his sufferings! O let the strange and wonderful tokens of Christ's love you have been seeing and sharing of in the sacrament, engage you to more thankfulness in heart and life. Have you been washing your robes white in blood of the Lamb? Be careful to keep them clean, and do not defile them again in the mire of sin; remember your vows, and keep your face towards your Father's house, which is a pure and undefiled dwelling; you cannot take filthy hands or feet thither, for no unclean thing enters there, Psal. xciii. 5, "Holiness becometh thine house, O Lord, for ever."

ADVICE XXII.—"BLESSED ARE YE THAT HUNGER NOW, FOR YE SHALL BE FILLED," LUKE VI. 21.

In scripture, hunger and thirst, when applied to scriptural things, imports the same thing, to wit, a strong desire after spiritual and heavenly good things; which desire implies spiritual life, a feeling sense of want, and a longing for food to the soul, together with the use of all proper means to obtain it. Now, the main object of this hunger or thirst is Jesus Christ, or God in Christ, 1st Psal. xlii. 1, 2; lxiii. 1. Now, there are many things in Christ which the hungry soul doth desire; as, 1. Christ's blood, as the soul's ransom and cleansing fountain. 2. Christ's Spirit, as the soul's quickener, comforter, and guide. 3. Christ's righteousness, as the soul's clothing and protection. 4. Christ's word, as the soul's daily food and cordials. 5. Christ's supper, as the soul's feast and pledge of heaven. 6. Christ's graces, as the soul's riches and ornaments. 7. Christ's way, or holiness in heart and life, as the soul's path to heaven. 8. Christ's day, as the soul's weekly market-day, for getting in provision necessary for working, journeying, and fighting, &c. 9. Christ's mansions above as the soul's dwelling-place for eternal communion with God and his saints. Now, if you would be truly blessed, you must hunger and thirst for these things, firmly believing that in these your true happiness doth lie, and not in the world or sensual things.

Again, see that your hunger be of the right kind, that it be insatiable, so that nothing can put it off or satisfy it but Christ; the truly hungry soul will not be pleased with the best duties, ordinances, ministers, sermons, sacraments, or any other thing without Christ. The hungry soul will adventure on the greatest difficulties for Christ, he will part with any thing for him: all the treasures, honours, music, or comforts of life, cannot satisfy him, none but Christ, the soul's food. True hunger will put him upon the use of all means, and make him content to take Christ upon any terms, and put a blank in his hand, and say, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? I'll subscribe to any thing, only give me Christ, give me food to my starving soul.

Such hungry souls are blessed, because he hath promised to satisfy and fill them. It is God that creates the appetite, and excites the hunger, and therefore he will satisfy it.—The hungry are the most earnest and importunate beggars at the throne of grace; and such he has promised to hear, Luke ii. 9. The hungry will wait at God's door for an alms, and he promises that those who "wait for him shall not be ashamed," Isa. xlix. 23. The proud, the rich, the full and self-righteous will go away, if the door be not presently opened; but the hungry will ask, seek, knock, and knock again, and wait till God think fit to open, and grant an alms. These God is bound by his word to satisfy. He is their Father, and hath the bowels of a Father to pity his children. He hears the ravens and young lions when they cry, and feeds them, and will he not hear his own children, and fill their hungry souls? Yes, he hath promised it.

Quest. But what is that fill he promises to the hungry? Ans. He fills them with divine discoveries, as with the knowledge of God's greatness and majesty, so as to make them sensible of their own nothingness, and with the knowledge of God's goodness and free love to sinners in Christ, so as to make them fall into raptures of admiration, and cry who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity? Micah vii. 18. He fills them with a discovery of the excellency of the gospel-remedy for perishing souls, so as to make them say, It is a device every way worthy of God; Christ's mediatory offices, his covenant, his righteousness, his blood, his purchase and fulness, do nobly answer all our soul's wants and necessities; they deliver us from sin and misery, and they bring us grace and glory. He fills his hungry people with gospel-promises, by letting them see their name in them, and giving them faith to take hold of them and apply them. Many a sweet fill do they get from such promises as these, Jer. xxxii. 40; Ezek. xxxvi. 26, 28; Jer. iii. 22; 1 John ii. 1; Rom. xvi. 20; Heb. xiii. 5. He fills them with the intimations of the pardon of their sins, and with peace and joy in believing, Rom. xv. 13. so as to banish their doubts and fears. What a sweet fill doth Christ's voice give them, such as that in Mat. ix. 2; Luke xxiv. 36, 38;

John xiv. 27; Rom. viii. 1. He fills them with resolution and strength to conquer sin, perform duties, resist temptations, and bear afflictions, when he speaks to them as to Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 9; or as in Isa. xli. 10; and xlii. 2. He fills them by giving them sweet returns of prayer, assurance of his love, and of his gracious presence with them. He fills them by making over Christ's fulness and purchase to them, and by giving them Pisgah views of the promised land, and will at last fill them with glory.

It is only the hungry that shall be filled, the needy, the humble, and self-denied, for "the rich are sent empty away," Luke i. 53; the rich, that is, those who are filled with a conceit of their own strength and sufficiency, their gifts and performances, and go about to establish a righteousness of their own, and see not their need of Christ; those shall go empty away, for they do not prize Christ, nor are willing to come up to his terms. They go away empty of Christ and his riches; but alas, they go away, filled with pride and self-conceit, filled with love to sin, love to the world, and love to their own righteousness. O, this is a miserable fill.

O hungry souls, bless God, that gives you this appetite, when others are rich and full in their own conceit, labour to preserve this appetite and wait about God's house and table, where soul-food is to be had; and bless him even for the smallest crumbs, as when he gives you a greater hatred of sin, a higher esteem of Christ, a greater desire after heart-holiness, a restlessness without Christ, a willingness to part with all for Christ, or stronger resolutions to cleave to Christ and duty. These crumbs are worthy of thanks, though ye be not filled with joy and peace in believing. Wait on the Lord, and wait on him in every ordinance and duty of his appointment, believing him to be faithful who hath said, "They shall not be ashamed who wait for me."

Object. Some may say, we have waited long, and have not got a crumb. Ans. Some eminent saints have been put to cry, "How long wilt thou forget me, Lord, shall it be for ever!" Psal. xlii. But they must wait in the use of means until God's time come, and adore the sovereignty of God in his dealings with them. His people have resigned themselves to the care and wisdom of God, who knows what is best for them; believing there is a time coming when God will make up all their losses. O believers, there is a fill remaining for you above, that will soon make you forget all your days of scarcity here below.

ADVICE XXIII.—“LET THE REDEEMED OF THE LORD SAY SO,” PSAL. CVII. 2.

What is it such persons should say? Let them both say and sing of God's goodness and mercy to them; for, (of all men) the redeemed of the Lord have most reason to be thankful for Christ's distinguishing mercy in freeing them from the law's curses and Satan's power, from the guilt, dominion, and punishment of sin; from the sting of death, and the wrath to come. Believers are redeemed both from sin and hell.

Quest. How may I know if I be among these happy ones, “the redeemed of the Lord?” Ans. Take these marks: did you ever see your slavery and bondage by nature, so that no less than an infinite price and power could ransom and liberate you? Was you so convinced and humbled with the sight of your misery, as to be content of freedom from it on any terms? Have you ventured your soul on Christ's merit and mercy, conformed to gospel-offers, being well pleased with the frame of the new covenant, and the self-denying way of saving souls by Christ's imputed righteousness? Are you content with Christ to be your King and Ruler, as well as your Priest and Saviour? Have you given up yourself to the Lord, to live for him, desirous that his love may always constrain you to do his will? O then, you may conclude you are among the “redeemed of the Lord,” and that his blessed body was broke, and his blood shed to ransom you.

Peculiar reasons have you to extol his goodness and mercy above others. Why? He hath opened your eyes to see the beauty of your Redeemer, and the ways of holiness, when others remain in blindness! He hath opened your ears to hear the joyful sound, and fall in with it, when others are deaf to it! He hath loosed your tongues to pray and praise, when others are dumb, and tongue-tied! He hath opened your hearts to entertain Christ crucified, when others shut him out! He hath brought you to a feeling of the evil and burden of sin, when others are without feeling! He hath given you appetites for spiritual food, when others relish nothing but things earthly! He hath given you the promise and hope of complete redemption from sin and misery above, when others live without Christ, and without hope! Let the “redeemed of the Lord” then sing and praise him above all others.

O believing communicants, “redeemed of the Lord,” give him thanks, and express your thankfulness by your thoughts and actions, as well as your words; namely, by your high esteem of your Redeemer, and of his blood and righteousness that purchased all for you. By avoiding every thing that dishonours him, and flying from the sins that are common and fashionable where you live. By commending your Redeemer to those who know him not. By standing up as witnesses for him, and for his truths and ways, in the midst of a Christ despising generation. By strictly observing the Lord's day, as being a weekly memorial of redeeming love. By longing for the enlarging of Christ's kingdom, and rejoicing at the news of it: and by putting honour on all the friends and lovers of the Redeemer.

Lastly, Show your thankfulness, by singing psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs, in praises of redeeming love, and of the Redeemer's person, offices and sufferings; a subject that can never be exhausted. Sing praises to the great God, that humbled himself to leave his high throne, that came down to dwell in flesh, and die for us; and to rise again, and ascend to heaven, to take possession of the inheritance, and make accommodations for us there. On this account, the Spirit calls us four times to sing praises in one breath, Psal. xlvii. 6, “God is gone up with a shout; sing praises to God, sing praises; sing praises unto our King, sing praises.” This singing is most acceptable to God, and profitable to ourselves. As God makes it the eternal work of heaven, so he would have us frequently employed in it on earth. But, O! how do we fail here! Reformed churches abroad do far exceed us in the frequency of this duty, as they do in the variety and sweetness of their tunes.

What is singing, but a kind of reading with meditation and deliberation, in order to give the more free vent to the thoughts and affections to breathe and ascend heavenwards. The wise God institutes singing in his praise, because the melody of the voice helps to affect the heart, and raise the thoughts; “for he knoweth our frame.” And indeed, it is only when the heart corresponds with the voice, that music is pleasant to God: to this purpose one saith well;

Sweet melody the hymn affords,
When with the lines the heart accords.

O let the redeemed sing praise, and give thanks to God for his unspeakable Gift, both now, and for evermore. Amen.

I shall add no more Sacramental Advices in the preceding method, but shall shut up all with a cluster of short Scripture Directions, proper not only for communicants, but for all Christians travelling heavenward.

A SHORT CHRISTIAN DIRECTORY; CONSISTING OF FORTY SCRIPTURE-DIRECTIONS.

It ought to be the great concern of all baptised persons to renew their baptismal covenant betimes, and, by a private transaction with God, to take the baptismal engagements upon themselves, and thereby become Christians by their own personal consent and surrender, as well as by their parents' dedication: and afterwards go and seal this transaction publicly, by partaking of the Lord's supper. Concerning this, I have given directions in "The Young Communicant's Catechism." Only, I would intreat all my readers, for Christ's sake, and their own soul's sake, to beware of going about this work in a superficial or formal manner, and of resting upon lip-labour, and the external part of the duty. O never be easy until you inwardly and heartily close with Christ, according to the gracious gospel-offer which God makes unto you. Take no rest till you get your souls united to Christ by a true faith, and savingly renewed and changed from nature to grace, by the efficacious working of the Holy Spirit in regeneration. And as you are to close with Christ by faith in your first conversion; so you must study to live all your days a life of faith on the Son of God, always making use of him, and leaning on him for righteousness and strength. I shall say no more by way of preface, but proceed to branch forth the Christian's work and exercise in this lower world, in the following Scripture-Directions.

DIRECT I.—Let never the world come in God's room.—Beware of the love of the world; often think upon that awakening word, 1 John ii. 15, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." O, this is the ruining sin of multitudes, their love to, and complacency in, the things of the world. Nay, the most part of men are damned for loving the world too much, and loving God too little.—Remember, the faster holds you take of the world, the looser are your holds of Christ; and the more you get of the world, you have the greater account to make to him that gives it, and has made you steward of it; therefore use your money and goods for his service and honour. You must answer for your riches, but your riches cannot answer for you.—Also, remember, if ye set your hearts on the world, it will be all that you will get; to have a competent portion of things earthly is a mercy, but to have earthly things for our only portion is a dreadful misery. Wherefore, while your hand is in this world, let your heart be in heaven. Let the business of your soul be the business of your life.

DIRECT. II.—Keep up the same opinion now of the things of the world, that you will have when you come to die.—You see what a low price men set upon the riches, pomp, and glory of the world when they are dying. Had you the same thoughts of these things now, I am sure you would not venture the loss of your souls, the loss of God's favour, the loss of a good conscience, and the loss of eternal glory, for a whole world; far less for a small trifle of it, as many now do. Think much upon that text, Matt. xvi. 26.

DIRECT. III.—Be not strangers to yourselves, but often commune with your own hearts; as directed Psal. iv. 4.—When others are censuring and backbiting their neighbours, be you searching and censuring yourselves. Self-examination is a most necessary duty. Examine yourselves after every ordinance, what good you have got by it, what entertainment you gave your Saviour. Ask how were your hearts affected by such a word, &c. Commune with your hearts about your title to heaven. Judge of your eternal state by your spiritual state, and judge of your spiritual state by the delightful and customary actions of your lives. Judge of it by your hatred of sin, and love to Christ, and by the conscience you make of secret prayer, and reading God's word. In communing with your hearts, among other things, ask yourselves, What are likeliest to be your death-bed thoughts and wishes? Will they not be such as these? O that I had loved Christ more, and the world less! O that I had improved gospel-opportunities better! O that I had accepted Christ's calls and offers more readily! O that I had spent more time in prayer and searching the scriptures! O that I had been more spiritual and fervent in every duty!—Ask yourselves, what are these sins or practices which will be most frightful to look back on, when you see yourselves just within a step of God's tribunal? Study always to keep up death-bed thoughts of things.—Commune with your hearts about these things upon your bed, and also before you go to bed. Let conscience bring in the accounts of every day before you lie down: mourn over the sins of every day, and apply the blood of Christ for washing them away. Thus keep short reckonings with God and conscience, that you may not have old sores to clear when you come to a death-bed. Likewise, at these communings, let every man ask himself, What is my present state and condition? Would I be willing to lie down and die in the frame and disposition I am in just now? And I know not but I may be as near death this moment, as if my friends were looking on me struggling with the pangs of death on my bed.

DIRECT. IV.—Begin early in the service of God, and give him the days of youth, Eccl. xii. 1.—Those who are young cannot begin their service to God too soon; God desires it, to show God's delight in early piety. We see the scripture commends young ones for it; it is recorded with honour, that the child Samuel ministered to the Lord, 1 Sam. ii. 18. Josiah is commended for his tender heart for God in his tender years, 2 Kings xxii. 19. Christ was well pleased with the hosannahs of the children that attended him, Matt. xxi. 15, 16. When Solomon in his youth sought God for wisdom, it is said, "The speech pleased the Lord," 1 Kings iii. 10. So Timothy is commended for his early piety, 2 Tim. iii. 15. And God says to Israel, "I remember the kindness of thy youth," Jer. ii. 2. And he recommends to every one to begin soon, Eccl. xii. 1. The young disciple was most beloved, and leaned on Christ's bosom.—Now is the proper time, O young people, for making your acquaintance with God, and for laying a good foundation for the time to come. Repentance is easiest in younger years; sin is then less rooted, Satan's hold less fastened, gospel-offers not so slighted, the Spirit is not so much quenched, the conscience not so hardened; the heart is then more easily melted and broken. God seeks the male of the flock, the best of your time, O then let him have it. If you forget God when young, it is just with God to forget and neglect you when old.

DIRECT. V.—Shun the company that shuns God, and keep the company that God keeps, Psal. cxix. 63, 115; Prov. xiii. 20. Look on the society of the carnal or profane as infectious; but reckon serious praying persons the excellent ones of the earth. Such will serve to quicken you when dead, and warm you when cold. Make the liveliest of God's people your greatest intimates; and see that their love and likeness to Christ be the great motive of your love to them, more than their love or likeness to you. It is not true Christian love but party love, to love only those who are of your sentiments in all things. Yea, though they should differ from you in some things, if you see God's image on them, and that they have fellowship with the Head, you ought to love them, and have fellowship with them. Keep up the communion of saints, for it is one of the articles of our creed. Christian conference and social prayer have been blessed of God to preserve the life of religion in many places, therefore let those who fear the Lord speak often to one another, Mal. iii. 16.

DIRECT. VI.—Put a high value upon precious time, and lose none of it by sloth, Eph. v. 16.—Esteem time as those do who are at the point of death; and always remember that it is impossible to call time again. Look upon the loss of time as a greater loss than the loss of your money, or any worldly thing; and therefore shun time-wasting games, unprofitable diversions, and idle talking.—Especially value the most precious part of your time, such as the morning of youth, the morning of every day, and particularly the precious time of the Lord's day. Look on the Lord's day as a meeting-day with heaven; lose not any part of it, but carefully improve it for God and the good of souls, both your own and others. It is want of thought, not want of work, that makes any say, they have time to spare.

DIRECT. VII.—Allow a little time every day to think upon eternity.—Consider the import of these words, "everlasting punishment, and life eternal, Matt. xxv. 46. O eternity, eternity, that is never nearer an end, but always, as it were, but beginning! One serious thought of eternity is enough to strike a careless soul to the heart. Why? he stands every hour at the door of eternity, and if he step in while out of Christ, he is eternally undone; eternally in despair.—O! the swift river time is carrying every one of us into an ocean of eternity, an ocean that hath neither bank nor bottom, and what each of us must soon launch forth into.—What an awful thought is this! every one of us is within a step of being eternally blessed, or eternally cursed! eternally saved, or eternally damned! O if every one would believe and consider this, and be wise, so to pray as for eternity, repent as for eternity, hear as for eternity, live as for eternity, obey and do every thing as for eternity.

DIRECT. VIII.—Throughout your whole life be mindful of the chief business of life, Phil. ii. 12. Now the business of life is to make it sure that Christ is your life; it is to think much on the end of your life, and provide for it; it is to lay hold on eternal life, and keep still sight of it: so that "when Christ who is your life shall appear, ye may also appear with him in glory," Col. iii. 4. Let not religion be your diversion, but your business; mind it as the one thing needful; give all diligence to make your calling and election sure. Make sure your calling, and thus you make sure your election. If you would make sure your calling, make sure that you are united to Christ by faith, and that Christ is the life of your souls. Do not rest in convictions, nor in tears, prayers, or duties, nor in any thing short of Christ. Press both for an interest in Christ, and for the assurance of it. Assurance is attainable, and actually attained by many; and it is most necessary for cheerful obedience, for bearing the cross, rejoicing in the Lord, giving thanks for redeeming love, and for performing many other duties of Christianity.

DIRECT. IX.—Let the rational soul govern, and the body be subservient to it, 1 Cor. ix. 27. Alas, many, on the contrary, make their souls drudges to their bodies, and employ their noble faculties, wholly in devising how to please the flesh. Ah, what fools are they who mind nothing but their bodies! Why? they are the greatest enemies to their bodies; for, by so doing, they forfeit the eternal happiness of their bodies, as well as of their souls. Whereas those who prefer their souls, and mind them chiefly, they consult the happiness of their bodies as well as of their souls; for the body is never so well as in heaven; when fashioned like Christ's glorious body, then it is in perfect and eternal health.

DIRECT. X.—Study both to live and die in the exercise of repentance and godly mourning for sin, Mat. v. 4. Some may think repentance a melancholy word, but it is one of the sweetest words in all the book of God: it is a gospel-duty, for the law or covenant of works admitted of no repentance; it is the effect of God's free love in and through Christ, to open the door of repentance to fallen sinners; it cost Christ his blood to obtain it for us, and it is his free gift to us, Acts v. 31. Surely it is good news to hear that our Sovereign bids poor condemned criminals, that were brought to the place of execution, repent, and throw themselves down at his feet, and they shall get pardon. It was the sum both of John's and Christ's preaching, "Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand." It was the saying of a godly minister, "That if he were to die in the pulpit, he would wish to die preaching repentance; and if out of the pulpit, he would wish to die practising repentance." Augustine saith, "Repentance is the fittest disposition both for dying Christians and ministers;" and it is written of himself, that he died with tears in his eyes, weeping for sin. This is a duty never out of season; therefore study daily to keep up a tender and mourning frame, maintain contrition of heart and abhorrence of sin, and for that end take every day a turn upon mount Calvary. Many think it a sad thing to be repenting on earth, but it is a sadder thing to be repenting in hell.—Seek repentance from God for Christ's sake; say with Ephraim, Jer. xxxi. 18, "Turn thou me, and I shall be turned, for thou art the Lord my God."

DIRECT. XI.—While you mind the necessary study of holiness, or inherent righteousness, let it never take the place of imputed righteousness,

Romans x. 3; Psal. lxxi. 16. Inherent righteousness indeed is to be loved, but imputed righteousness only is to be trusted; for though inherent righteousness or holiness be a necessary qualification for heaven and salvation, and our evidence for it, yet it is imputed righteousness only that is the foundation of it, and our title to it.—Let Christ's name be dear to you, "The Lord our Righteousness."

DIRECT. XII.—Employ Christ as your Surety in all cases, and in every strait go to him for relief, Psal. cxix. 122; Isa. xxxviii. 14. Study therefore to be well acquainted with your Surety, and live near him. When the law demands payment of debt, and threatens you with prison, look to Christ, and cry, "Lord, be Surety for me; Lord, undertake for me." When you are called to perform duties, bear affliction, resist temptation, struggle with corruptions, engage with enemies, &c. look still to Christ to be your Surety, and to undertake for you; plead with him to make out that promise to you, Deut. xxxiii. 25, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be."

DIRECT. XIII.—As you expect to live with Christ in heaven, study to live to Christ on earth, 2 Cor. v. 15; Philip. i. 21. If you would live to Christ here, then you must make Christ's honour and glory your ultimate end in all your designs and actions; and make your most valuable interests subservient to his interest and glory. Study an universal conformity to Christ's holy laws and precepts, and make it your great business to approve yourselves to Christ in all things: choose the things that please him, and carefully avoid every thing that is displeasing to him, Psal. cxix. 30; Isa. lvi. 4.

DIRECT. XIV.—Cleave fast to Christ, and the way of holiness, whatever it may cost you, Acts xi. 23; 2 Tim. iii. 12.—Think not the worse of Christ and his ways that they are persecuted or reproached, and that few do own them.—Christ foretold this, and saith, his way is a narrow way that few walk in. Join with the little flock to whom the kingdom is promised, which will abundantly compensate all your sufferings for Christ. Never follow a multitude to do evil, but cleave to Christ, however few join you.

DIRECT. XV.—Seek the approbation of God above that of men, 2 Cor. x. 18. What is the applause of worms to the smiles of the God of heaven? What would it avail us to have poor men like ourselves to commend us, when the great God that made us doth condemn us? No matter though men censure or condemn our actions, if God approve and commend them. "It is a very small thing to be judged of man's judgment, but he that judgeth us is the Lord," 1 Cor. iv. 3, 4.

DIRECT. XVI.—Be much employed in admir- ing God's redeeming love, and Christ's suretyship for us, 1 John iii. 1, 16. This is the employment of the redeemed to all eternity, Rev. v. 9. And all who go to heaven must be acquainted with their work while here, Rev. i. 5. O what matter of eternal wonder and praise is there in God's giving his dear Son to be our Surety and sacrifice, and in the Son's voluntarily undertaking it.

DIRECT. XVII.—Delight much in thinking and speaking of Christ, and particularly of his death and sufferings for us, Luke ix. 31; Rev. v. 9, 12. O, did he wade through a sea of wrath, a sea of blood, a sea of sorrows and sufferings, to bring redemption to us? And will we ever forget him? The great God takes great pleasure in the work of our redemption, and is well pleased with our Redeemer who undertook it.—God repented that he made man, but never repented his redeeming man. Now, what God delights in, we should delight in, especially since we reap the benefit. We see, from Luke ix. and Rev. v. that the subject of Christ's death is matter of discourse and praise to the glorified society above. When Moses and Elias came from heaven to mount Tabor, to wait upon their transfigured Lord, they chose Christ's death for the subject of their conversation: why? Christ's death was the spring and cause of all their glory in heaven; neither Moses nor Elias had shined there, had it not been for Christ's death. And shall not we, here below, delight in thinking, speaking, and singing of this noble subject, which is the ground of all happiness we either have, or hope for.

DIRECT. XVIII.—Treat objections raised against your closing with Christ, as suggestions of the enemy, that is seeking the ruin of your souls. Reject them, as Christ did Peter's counsel, Mat. xvi. 23, "Get thee behind me, Satan." As Satan would have hindered Christ's dying for us, so he would hinder us from relying on Christ's death. O, saith one, I am unworthy of any share in Christ's death. Ans. If you will have nothing but what you are worthy of, you must have nothing but hell. What was Abraham, Paul, Magdalene, the thief on the cross, the idolatrous Corinthians, worthy of, before the Lord called them! Whatever be your unworthiness, are you willing to apply Christ's blood? Then see what Christ saith to you, Rev. xxii. 17. "Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." O but, saith another, my sins are heinous. Ans. Canst thou be more guilty than Christ is gracious? Doth he not promise to wash away sins that are like scarlet and crimson, Isa. i. 18. and tells us, 1 John i. 7. that "his blood cleanseth us from all sin?" O bless him for that word all. Do not then believe Satan, who would tempt thee to think that God hath cast thee off; but, in spite of all he can say, still believe God's faithful word, that there is mercy enough in God, merit enough in Christ, power enough in the Spirit, and room enough in the gospel-offers and promises to you. Believe that word, Lam. iii. 25, "The Lord is good to them that wait for him, to the soul that seeketh him." Say to thy soul, "Can this word of God fail? Has God made thee willing to wait and seek for him, and is he not willing to be found of thee? O my soul, dost thou not see an infinite perfection in Christ's righteousness, in Christ's blood and merit!" We may see an end of all earthly perfection, but we can see no end of Christ's perfection, which is infinite.

DIRECT. XIX.—Study much these great gospel-lessons of denying yourselves, and exalting God's free grace, Mat. xvi. 24; 1 Cor. i. 31. The design of the gospel is to cast down self and all idols, that God alone may be exalted; it is to make self nothing, and God all, in point of wisdom, strength, righteousness, and glory; it is to take man wholly off himself, and cast him on Christ for the whole of his salvation.—It is a good sign of a saving change upon the heart, when a man is thus humbled, and cast into the gospel-mould, when self-loving is turned into self-loathing, self-admiring into self-abhorring, self-excusing into self-accusing, and self-seeking into self-denying.

DIRECT. XX.—Draw all your strength for work and warfare from Christ, and present all your duties to God in Christ's name, Isa. xlv. 24; Col. iii. 27. Christ himself tells us, that "without him we can do nothing," John xv. 5, that is, nothing aright, or nothing that is acceptable to God. All our duties, if acceptable, must be done in Christ's strength, and covered with his righteousness. The apostle owns, that "of himself he could not so much as think a good thought, 1 Cor. iii. 5, but he could do all things, through Christ that strengthened him," Philip. iv. 13. And hence he exhorts us to "be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might," Ephes. vi. 10. Let us think, before we go to duty, from whence our strength for it must come, and study to bring it in by faith, and believing ejaculations; and when we are assisted, let us ascribe the glory to Jesus. Be assured of this also, that your most costly sacrifices are unsavoury, if they be not perfumed with the fragrant incense of Christ's merits and intercession; and that your fairest "righteousness is but as filthy rags" in God's sight, if Christ's righteousness do not cover it. Let it therefore be your constant language, "In the Lord Jesus have I righteousness and strength," Isa. xlv. 24.

DIRECT. XXI.—In all the actions of your life, set the Lord still before you, Psal. xvi. 8;

xxv. 15. Acknowledge him in all your undertakings, and by faith and prayer commit your way to him, look to him for direction and success, and depend on him as the Father of your mercies, the sum of bliss, the strength of your life, the staff of your bread, the breath of your nostrils, and the length of your days. Set the Lord always before you as your Almighty Creator, your loving Redeemer, your rightful Owner, your careful Preserver, your all-sufficient Portion, your holy Pattern, your observing Witness, and your awful Judge. Undertake and perform all your actions under a sense of God's all-seeing eye, and of your being accountable to him for all you do.

DIRECT. XXII.—Whether ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God, 1 Cor. x. 31. We eat and drink to God's glory, when we do it for the end that our bodies may be fitted to serve our souls in honouring and serving God; and when we receive these mercies with thankfulness from the hand of God, and depend upon God's blessing to make them nourishing to us; and when we remember we are but stewards of what we possess, and are accountable to God the proprietor, how we improve these earthly blessings to his honour and service. You must also apply the business of your callings to God's glory, and this you do, when you depend on God to bless you in it, and to prosper the work of your hands, and to arm you against all the sins, snares, and temptations, which your business may give occasion to. You ought also to pay and receive visits, and attend company, with an eye to God's glory, by blessing God for giving you friends and earthly accommodations, and looking to God for wisdom to behave yourselves so, as ye may do no harm to those ye converse with, nor get any harm from them: but, on the contrary, may be helped to do them good, and get benefit from them. You are also to undertake journeys for God's glory, to look to him for protection by the way, and for direction, through-bearing, and success.

DIRECT. XXIII.—Spend as much time as possible in secret prayer and converse with God, 1 Thess. v. 17. And that ye may do this with delight, endeavour to keep your hearts always in a serious praying frame, with an abiding impression of God upon your spirits. There is a great difference betwixt a serious fit, and a serious frame. Ahab, Saul, Felix, and others had their serious fits, but religious persons only keep their souls in a serious frame, and study to be "in the fear of the Lord all the day long," as God enjoins, Prov. xxiii. 17. Prayer, that is acceptable to God, must be performed with faith, delight, and liveliness, and not with deadness and weariness, as if it were a task or burden. A life without prayer, or a prayer without life, are both hateful to the God of our life. He is the living God whom we worship, and hath no pleasure in dead performances. But they who delight themselves in duty, shall have the desires of their hearts granted them, Psal. xxxvii. 4. Surely, they who spend their days in faith and prayer, shall end their days in peace and comfort.

DIRECT. XXIV.—Make conscience of family religion, as well as of closet duties, Joshua xxiv. 15; 2 Sam. vi. 20. Neglect not family prayer nor praises, reading the word, catechising children and servants, sanctifying the sabbath, exhorting to duty, reproving and curbing sin. Religion and reformation must begin in families, if we would wish it to be national and universal. God is the author and founder of families, and therefore should have homage from families as such, by the morning and evening sacrifice of prayer and praise.—Go to him to bless family-mercies, supply family-wants, sanctify family-trials, and redress family-grievances. Early train up children in the way they should go, pray much for them, and for God's blessing on the means of their education.

DIRECT. XXV.—Begin and end every day with God, Psal. v. 3; iv. 8. Let prayer be the key to open the heart to God in the morning, and lock it against all his enemies at night. Let no Christian say, he cannot pray; for prayer is as necessary to him as breath, Lam. iii. 56. Let none say, they have not time for it; better take time from sleep, than want time for prayer. Think it not enough to say your prayers, but mind you must pray your prayers, pray with sincerity and fervour. Think with yourself, this morning may be my last morning, or this night my last night; for certainly that morning cometh of which you will never see the night; or the night in which you will never see the morning. Let the conclusion of every day put you in mind of the conclusion of all your days, by the long night of death, that will put an end to all your work, and bring you to count and reckon with your great Master about your work. O to lie down every night reconciled with him! O that we could lie down and leave our hearts with Christ, and compose our spirits so, as if we were not to awake till the heavens are no more.

DIRECT. XXVI.—Seeing none knoweth what a day may bring forth, spend every day as if it were to be your last, Prov. xxvii. 1.—Look on yourselves as standing every day at the door of eternity, and hundreds of diseases and accidents ready to open the door to let you in. No doubt you have sometimes apprehended yourselves nearer death than you think yourselves just now, yet it is certain that death was never so near you, nor judgment never so near you as they are at present. We, who stand every hour at the door of eternity, should spend our precious hours with the greatest frugality, seeing the work we have in hand is soul-work, and work on which eternity depends; and the time we have to work it in is very short, and cannot be recalled. This short life being only a passage to eternity, it should be spent as a continual preparation for eternity. Surely those who have immortal souls so near eternity, have other work to do than trifle away time in tippling, idle-talking, gaming, and such diversions.

DIRECT. XXVII.—Sojourn in this world as travellers, keeping so loose from the world, as to be able to pack up and be gone from it upon short warning, 1 Pet. i. 17; 1 Cor. vii. 29—31.—We have no continuing city or certain abode here; therefore, let us always be ready to rise and depart. And if we would be right travellers towards Zion above, we must have Christ in our hearts, heaven in your eye, and the world under our feet. We must take God's Spirit for our guide, God's word for our rule, God's glory for our end, God's fear for our guard, God's people for our companions, God's praise for our recreation, and God's promises for our cordials. We must make religion our business, prayer our delight, holiness our way, and heaven our home. O Zion's travellers, distinguish yourselves from the men that dwell upon the earth. Let Christ always be precious to you, the word sweet, sin bitter, the world a wilderness, and death welcome. Let Christ's will be your will, Christ's dishonour your affliction, Christ's cause your concern, Christ's success your joy, Christ's day your delight, Christ's cross your glory, Christ's sufferings your meditation, Christ's wounds your refuge, Christ's blood your balm, Christ's righteousness your clothing, and Christ's presence your heaven. While travelling here, let your hearts burn with love to Christ, love to think of Christ, love to hear of Christ, love to read of Christ, love to speak of Christ, love to speak for Christ, love to speak to Christ.

DIRECT. XXVIII.—Keep up a lively sense of sacramental vows and engagements, and walk answerably thereto, Psal. lvi. 12, 13.—You are under a sacramental oath to be true and faithful soldiers to the Captain of your salvation; see that you fight his battles against his and your enemies, the devil, the world, and the flesh. Remember what your Captain hath done and suffered for you; let his love, as well as our oath, constrain you to abide by his standard. Never go over to his enemies' camp, nor keep correspondence with them. Your glorious Captain gives you choice feasts at his table to strengthen and encourage you both for work and warfare; walk on in strength of these spiritual meals, and grow stronger in grace, and more lively in all spiritual duties, pray more fervently, hear more attentively, meditate more frequently, partake more believingly, keep sabbaths more delightfully, and walk worthy of the Lord unto all well-pleasing. Your spiritual meals are designed for your nourishment, strength, and growth. Therefore, grow in grace. O believers, if you would lay up a treasure of glory for yourselves hereafter, lay up a treasure of grace in your hearts just now; increase faith, love, heart-purity, and humility. Whoever is rich in grace now, will be rich in glory hereafter. For what is grace but glory begun, and what is glory but grace perfected? Who then would not love grace, seeing it is begun glory, and a certain pledge of complete glory?

DIRECT. XXIX.—Improve the talents God gives you for his service and glory, Luke xix. 13.—Remember you were not made for yourselves only, but for society and the benefit of others; therefore, employ your gifts, your substance, and whatever God has bestowed, for the good of others; teach the ignorant, relieve the poor, strengthen the weak, comfort those that are cast down, tell them your experiences, commend Christ as a choice Master and a lovely Saviour, and invite them to come, "taste and see that he is good;" pity those who are strangers to him, and pray for them. Be useful to others while you live, which will make your memory savoury when you die; many, alas, are so unprofitable in their lives, that when they come to die, neighbours scarce think their life worth a prayer, or their death worth a tear; but public-spirited and useful persons are much lamented. Let every one in their stations be active, and occupy their talents for God. Be assured, the more you do for God in this world, the more God will do for you in the world to come. If the saints were capable of grief in heaven, it would be for their doing so little for God on earth.

DIRECT. XXX.—Let all believers be thankful to God for his distinguishing favours and mercies to them, Psal. cxvi. 8, 12.—A life of praise doth highly become the proofs of God's love to you. Fall down humbly before God, and ascribe all to his free undeserved grace! for, "who is it that maketh thee to differ from another? What hast thou, but what thou hast received in a way of free gift?" O wonder at his free love, that has distinguished you from others! has done that for you that he has not done for thousands, for myriads, for millions! nor for those who sit in the same assembly, or dwell in the same house with you! O bless God who sent his dear Son to ransom you, and bring you out of prison, when others are left in bondage! Who sent his Holy Spirit to open your eyes, when others are left blind; to open your ears, when others are left deaf; to open your hearts, when others are left shut; to open your mouths to praise free distinguishing love, when others are left dumb. Employ your tongues then to commend his love, and sing his praise.

DIRECT. XXXI.—Since God distinguishes you from others, in his mercies to you, see that you distinguish yourselves from others, in your service to him, Matt. v. 47.—Are you Christians indeed? You are under stronger obligations to live and act for Christ than others. Why? You have both your new name and your new nature from Christ, which others have not; you are more nearly related to Christ than others; you are engaged to act for him, by more frequent and solemn vows than others; you have greater mercies bestowed on you than others; others have but common mercies, but you have covenant mercies, mercies that accompany salvation. You have spiritual life within you, and divine influences which others want; not only the world, but Christ himself expects more from you than others; all which are powerful engagements on you, to do more for God than others. You know more of the things of God than others; you talk more of them, you profess more, you promise and engage to do more than others; yea, God has done unspeakably more for you than others; and he may justly expect more from you than others; and put that question to you, “What do ye for me more than others?” Mat v. 47.

Quest. Wherein should believers distinguish themselves, and do more for God than others?—

Ans. You should be witnesses for God, and testify against what is dishonouring to him, by abstaining from all known sin, and from these sins which are common and fashionable, and little thought of by others. By reproving sin in others, and endeavouring to pluck them out of the fire. By keeping up family-religion even in the midst of business, and banishing all known vice from your dwellings, even minced oaths, rash using of God's name, idle walking or talking on the Lord's day, backbitings, evil-wishes, revengeful actions, unnecessary drinking or tippling, lottery-games, or pastimes of bad report, &c. Be zealous for sabbath-holiness. Be meek and lowly in your carriage; commend Christ to others; speak for the honour of religion before those who disregard it; show special regard to those who are stamped with God's image, though mean or despised; be ready to forgive wrongs, and render good for evil; deal honestly and justly with all men; be sober and temperate in eating, drinking, sleep, apparel, &c. Guard against pride, passion, hasty and unguarded words; put great respect upon God's word and ordinances; be concerned for the enlarging of Christ's kingdom; never venture upon any known sin for the sake of worldly gain; make conscience of relative and stational duties, as to be good husbands, good wives, good parents, good children, good masters, good servants, good neighbours, &c. In such things as these, you are to do more for God than others.

DIRECT. XXXII.—Be not content with a fair profession of religion, or with a form of godliness, and a name to live among men, Tit. i. 16; 2 Tim. iii. 5. But endeavour to know and feel the power of godliness in your hearts, and to have your practice in all respects corresponding to your profession.—If your practice be not answerable to what you profess, you sin against great light, you discredit religion, and tempt men to think it all hypocrisy. If a man live and die a mere professor, it had been better for him he had lived and died a mere heathen.

DIRECT. XXXIII.—Keep always a watch upon the door of your lips, Psal. cxli. 3. “seeing the tongue hath a world of iniquity in it,” James iii. 6.—“Keep it as with a bridle,” Psal. xxxix. 1, and beg the Lord's help to keep it, and that he himself may set a watch upon your mouths, as the Psalmist prays, Psal. cxli. as knowing that no watchfulness or resolution of our own is sufficient for the governing of our tongues, without God's special grace; without this, the most wakeful watchman watcheth in vain. Earnestly seek, for Christ's sake, God's special grace to govern this unruly member, that it may not be suffered to utter words which may tend to the dishonour of God, or to the hurt of men. Study to govern your tongues, by using God's name with reverence, speaking always what is truth and what is seasonable, useful, and edifying, guarding carefully against lying, evil-speaking, passionate, proud, and self-exalting words, and against all rash censures. You have need of great caution in speaking, and to take heed either how ye commend yourselves, or condemn others.

DIRECT. XXXIV.—Walk cheerfully and contentedly in every condition, Acts viii. 39; Phil. iv. 11.—Such a walk as this doth bring great credit to religion and the service of our Redeemer. What though a believer be fed with the bread and water of affliction the most of his life, he hath other bread and another cup to sweeten both; the forgiveness of sin is a reviving cordial in every case. Have no will of your own, distinct from God's will, but be resigned to God's disposing will in every thing, and let God's will and choice be always yours. If you cannot bring your condition to your mind, then you must labour to bring your mind to your condition, believing that the will of your heavenly Father is always best for you. Still remember that he hath engaged himself to be with you in all states and conditions, and to order all things for your advantage. Be sure, then he cannot deny himself; all his words are oaths for their certainty, and all his promises are the sure mercies of David. Be content in every case; for since Christ is yours, "all things are yours." Well, then, let your covenanted God choose out your lot for you; for you may trust that it shall be done with more wisdom, and with more affection, than you can choose for yourself.

DIRECT. XXXV.—If ye would manifest yourselves to be truly religious both before God and man, keep always the first and second table of the law joined together, and make conscience of both, Mat. xxii. 37, &c. Love both God and your neighbour, be just and upright in all your dealings with men, acting always under a sense of the all-seeing eye of your heavenly Father, who enjoins you to do the same to others, as ye would have them doing to you. Let a moral man try his religion by the duties of the first table of the law, and a professor his by the duties of the second table of the law. See that ye love God above all things, and prefer his worship and service to every thing. Love God for himself, and love men principally for what is God-like in them.

DIRECT. XXXVI.—Carefully guard against apostacy and backsliding from God and his ways, Heb. x. 38, 39. Be always jealous of your deceitful and treacherous hearts, knowing that they are bent to backsliding. A holy fear of departing from God, is a good means to keep us from departing from God. Therefore, endeavour to preserve always a watchful and tender frame of heart, and be afraid of falling away, according to that word, Heb. iv. 1. If ye would preserve yourselves from total apostacy, rise speedily after every fall by sound repentance, and have recourse to the blood of Christ. Lie not one day in any sin, but rise out of the puddle immediately, and get to the cleansing Fountain, and renew your covenant with God, and beg more strength, and faith to derive continual supplies from Christ your Head. Be often calling your souls to account, and asking your hearts, what is become of the good frames, the melting sense of sin, the hungering desires, the delightful taste, the heavenly longings, the warm affections to Christ, that they sometimes had. When ye attain to these, or to any of them, see that ye commit them to Christ's keeping, saying with the Psalmist, "Lord, be surety for thy servant for good." Lastly, Consider the dreadful case of an apostate, as described by our Lord and his apostle, Mat. xii. 43, 44; 2 Pet. ii. 20, 21. That man's case becomes far more miserable than it was at first. What a sad case is it for a soul to fall back into hell, after it had climbed near the gates of heaven? None fall so deeply into hell as those who fall backward into it.

tional sin, the sin that most easily besets you, Psal. xviii. 23; Heb. xii. 1. Our adversary the devil, well knows this sin, and on what side we may be attacked with the greatest success; and to be sure, he will bring his strongest temptations thither, and employ his most subtle wiles and devices, that way to ensnare us. It were happy for us if we were still watching against him, and could say with the apostle, "We are not ignorant of his devices." You are likewise to watch against all sin whatsoever, sins of omission as well as of commission. Gross outbreaks make conscience to start at their appearance, but it is not so alarmed with the neglect of duties. But if conscience be awakened, sins of omission will lie heavy as well as sins of commission. Some eminent Christians, who have lived the most circum-spect lives, when they have come to die and reflect on their by-past time, they have been put to cry, "Lord, in special forgive my sins of omission." Venture not to live in any frame, course, or practice, that you would not adventure to die in, seeing you know not but your next step may be into the grave. Guard against all these sins and evils now in the time of your health, that may put thorns in your pillow when sickness and the harbingers of death approach, such as "mis-spending of precious time, neglect of prayer, or reading of the Scriptures, formality and lukewarmness in religion, earthly-mindedness, unthankfulness for mercies, and miscarrying after them. Neglect of improving Christ, quenching the Spirit, neglect of convictions, breaking of vows, falling from your first love, returning to old sins you had mourned over, sinning against light, and after afflictions," &c.

DIRECT. XXXVIII.—Be heartily concerned for the coming and enlarging of Christ's kingdom in the world, Mat. vi. 10; Psal. lxxii. 19. Bewail it that his flock is so little, his subjects so few, when Satan's are so numerous. Bewail the unsuccessfulness of the gospel, the restraint of the Spirit, the divisions among Christians, and the many hindrances of the progress of Christianity. Lament the wrongs and dishonours done to God by others; cry and wrestle for the out-pouring of the Spirit, both at home and abroad; pray for the revival of God's work in these lands, amidst these declining years; and in inquiring after public news have a view to this, be concerned for the interest and welfare of Christ's kingdom through the world, for the accomplishment of God's promises concerning the destruction of Antichrist, Babylon's downfall, the inbringing of the Jews, and the subduing of the nations. And when you hear of any appearance of God's arising to countenance his word, and conquer sinners to himself, whether at home or abroad, rejoice at the news, reckon them good tidings of great joy, and bless the Lord for them with all your hearts. It is most pleasing and acceptable to God, to see his people heartily concerned for the prosperity of Jerusalem.

DIRECT. XXXIX.—Be busy laying up a stock for a sick-bed or death-bed, when all the comforts of life will be tasteless to you, 1 Tim. vi. 19.—Lay up a stock of faith and patience, a stock of evidence or divine love, and of your interest in Christ; a stock of divine promises and experiences of God's loving kindness, which may be supporting to you in the day of sharp trials. When mariners go to sea, they victual the ship, and provide for a storm. And ought not we to foresee the storms of affliction, of sickness and of death, and provide and lay up for them? It will be sad, if, when the Bridegroom is come, we have then our oil to buy, when the market is over. Now is the time for providing oil; now is the market of grace; now is the acceptable time; now is the day of salvation.

DIRECT XL.—Be looking and longing for the eternal supper of the Lamb, Phil. i. 23; Rev. xix. 9. Hungry souls, who have tasted the love of Jesus, long for the Lamb's supper below, that they may enjoy communion with him here, and this makes them cry, When shall the opportunity return? When shall I come and appear before God? When shall I again see his power and glory in the sanctuary? When shall I again taste his love and goodness in the sacrament? And yet these are but small foretastes of the Lamb's supper above. What is our drinking of the fruit of the vine here, to our drinking it now with Christ in his Father's kingdom? Therefore, look out, and long for the time when the day shall break, and the shadows flee away, and the marriage of the Lamb shall be triumphantly solemnized and completed with the church his espoused bride, whom he will then lead into the King's palace, where their transient glances shall be changed into immediate vision, and their short tastes into everlasting feasting and fulness. "O blessed are they for ever, who are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." These are true sayings of God. I believe, Lord, help my unbelief. Amen.

THE BALM OF GILEAD.

FOR HEALING A DISEASED LAND.

PREFACE.

ALTHOUGH these sermons were preached in Scotland, and have some reference to the case of that church and land under her present divisions and backslidings; yet, they are composed in such a strain as to be useful and applicable to any church under the like distempers, which, alas! is the case of the most part. What remedies can be so effectual to cure them of these evils as those proposed in the following Discourses, to wit, the excellent Balm of Gilead, and the glorious ministration of the Spirit? If it were the gracious will of God to dispose all the bishops and ministers of Britain and Ireland, to make it their business to open up and recommend these noble remedies to their people, it would contribute greatly to heal their maladies, and increase the kingdom of Christ in these lands. I cannot help thinking, but those who are consecrated to spiritual offices would be more suitably and profitably employed in this work than in attending courts, and pursuing secular designs.

Seeing now the arm of the Lord is beginning to awake, and many are excited to run to and fro for increasing gospel-knowledge, and labour to propagate the doctrine of salvation through the imputed righteousness of the slain Lamb of God: and, seeing the Lord is pleased, in sundry parts of the world, to give countenance to these endeavours by the out-pouring of his Spirit, for awakening many souls to an inquiry and search after true happiness through the blessed Jesus.—It doth highly concern all gospel-ministers and preachers to concur in helping forward the Lord's work, by proclaiming the saving doctrine and offers of free grace to the world, and to exert themselves for removing out of the way all lets and hinderances of the kingdom of Christ, that so his dominion may spread from sea to sea, through all nations of the earth.

In the following sermons I have made some inquiry into the times and seasons of the increase of Christ's kingdom; and because this is greatly connected with the destruction of antichrist, I have mentioned some conjectures and calculations about the time of his fall; though I think none should be too bold or peremptory in fixing the precise time, but all ought to wait patiently until God's set time shall come. All may now perceive antichrist visibly risen and discovered. Nay, we have seen him arrived at his pomp and height about 1500 years after Christ. Since that time the Lord hath begun to waste and consume him, by the revival of religion and learning in the world. As his rise was gradual, so shall his consumption be. He hath now been labouring under a deadly consumption above these 200 years past. The wound given him is deep and mortal; so whatever pains be taken sometimes to heal it, all shall be in vain: for, as Christ must increase, so antichrist must decrease, and be quite ruined at length, as is showed in the following Discourses. May all the lovers of Christ pray fervently, and look out for that blessed and joyful time.

Dundee, Jan. 20, 1742.

SERMON I.—“THE HARVEST IS PAST, THE SUMMER IS ENDED, AND WE ARE NOT SAVED. FOR THE HURT OF THE DAUGHTER OF MY PEOPLE AM I HURT; I AM BLACK; ASTONISHMENT HATH TAKEN HOLD OF ME. IS THERE NO BALM IN GILEAD? IS THERE NO PHYSICIAN THERE? WHY THEN IS NOT THE HEALTH OF THE DAUGHTER OF MY PEOPLE RECOVERED?”
JER. VIII. 20, 21, 22.

In the preceding part of this chapter there is represented a great destruction that God was about to bring upon a sinful people, and the consternation the whole land should be in upon the alarm thereof. The sins of Judah were come to a great height, whereby God was provoked to let loose the Chaldeans against them. The prophet was himself an eye witness of the oppression and desolation of his country and the church of God by the Chaldean army; and he foresaw still greater judgments and calamities coming upon them, whereby both he and the serious people of the land were greatly affected, and put to lament their case before the Lord. Among other things, they lament the disappointment of their expectation of healing and deliverance from distress, ver. 15, "We looked for peace, but no good came, and for a time of health, and beheld trouble." They sometimes had hopeful and promising seasons, when they expected relief; but, after all their waiting they were disappointed; these likely times of healing were lost. Hence they are put to say, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." Summer and harvest are proper seasons of action, opportunities for armies to take the field, to subdue enemies, and bring about deliverance for an oppressed people: the winter that follows is not a fit season for action. It is sad when likely seasons for saving a people from temporal enemies and grievances are lost; but it is yet sadder for them to lose hopeful and promising seasons for saving of their souls. The loss of such harvest or summer days for our souls is the greatest ground of lamentation. The prophet being deeply sensible of his people's loss and calamitous condition, he is grievously distressed for them, ver. 21, "For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt, I am black," &c. "The daughter of my people" is a common Hebraism used in scripture, and it signifies the body of the people of Judah, which was God's visible church upon earth; their hurt and distress affected the holy man in the most tender manner, and drew forth his sympathy with them. Upon this account, saith he, "I am black," I have lost my wonted colour, my face is turned blackish, or I go in black, as mourners do. I am astonished and troubled the more that I see no appearance of relief for them in their distress, their case seems to be hopeless and incurable. Upon which he puts the question, ver. 22, "Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then," &c. Is there no balm for the distressed church, no physician for a diseased land? It is generally thought the question doth not import any despair or denial of help, but rather the contrary; as if he had said, Is there no balm? Is there not a Physician? Yes, there is. The incurableness of their disease is not owing to the want of balm, or of a Physician in the land, but to themselves and their unbelief. There was a sufficient remedy in God, and in the Messiah, for all their grievances, had they accepted and applied the same. Hence he adds that pertinent question, "Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?" q. d. What is the cause then, or to whom is it to be imputed, that the church or people of Judah still lie in a dying case? surely not to the balm, nor to the physician, but to their own folly and obstinacy.

QUEST. What is here meant by the balm of Gilead?

ANS. The land of Gilead, on the other side of Jordan, was a part of the country of Israel, where that plant grew, which afforded a most precious balm for healing, when it was pierced; which was a rare and valuable commodity that other countries did traffic for with the land of Israel, Jer. xlv. 11; Ezek. xxvii. 17. And we see in Genesis xxxvii. 25, the Ishmaelites that bought Joseph carried balm from Gilead into Egypt. Naturalists say, this balm was a juice or oil that run from a certain low shrub, when its bark was cut, that grew especially about Jericho, in the land of Gilead, and was of great value as having a sovereign virtue to cleanse foul sores, heal deep wounds, help the eye-sight, cure the stings of serpents, yea, it was a sort of catholicon, that cured almost all diseases. This balm we may look upon as a fit type to represent Christ's blood, which is an excellent balm and catholicon for all diseases of the soul: for God's dispensations to the Israelites were generally designed as types and signs of spiritual things under the New Testament times, according to 1 Cor. x. 11, "All these things happened unto them for ensamples," Orig. τύποι, for types. And, among the rest, this balm of Gilead was typical and instructive to the virtue of the Messiah's blood; for seeing God vouchsafed this balm to Israel only, and made other nations beholden to them for it, it teacheth us that the balm for healing souls is only in the church of God, and Christ is the true antitype of this balm; for in Judah's land only was Christ known, there they had his blood daily typified to them in the sacrifices, and its virtue set forth.

Again, the Physician of Gilead is next mentioned, because physicians use to abound where there is plenty of good medicines. The Balm and Physicians in Gilead are figuratively brought in here to point out the plenty of good means of health that were still in Israel, for recovering them from their languishing consumption, if they had made a right use of them. As they had God himself, and the Messiah and his Spirit, which he had promised to them, to look to for relief; so they had plenty of under means and physicians appointed them. They had God's law, the temple, the ordinances, the altar, and sacrifices. They had also the princes, the priests, and prophets, whose business it was to redress grievances, reform the nation, and apply to heaven for help. So that if the health of the church and nation was not restored, it was not for want of balm, or a physician; nay, God had plentifully provided excellent means and remedies for their cure: and if their disease be deadly, or their wound incurable, it must be owing to themselves, and to their desperate wilfulness or incorrigibleness in sin, and to their refusing to submit to the Physician's directions and method of cure.

The words being thus opened up, give ground for the following heads of doctrine:—

1st. The case of those is very lamentable, who lose their harvest and summer days of grace.

2d. Every gracious spirit is a public spirit, and will lay to heart the calamitous case of the church or country whereof he is a member.

3d. However desperate the diseases of those within the church may seem to be, yet if they die of them, it will be owing to themselves, seeing they have such an able Physician, and excellent balm to look to for healing.

It is the last of these doctrines I mainly intend to handle and insist upon; wherefore I shall the more briefly touch the two first as introductory to it.

I. Doct. The case of those is very lamentable who lose their harvest and summer days of grace; or their most hopeful and likely seasons of salvation.

I shall discourse this point in the following method

I. Mention some of these likely seasons, which should be carefully improved.

II. Who may be said to have lost their summer days.

III. Inquire into the causes of men's losing these hopeful seasons.

IV. Show the great evil and danger of losing them; if the time allow.

V. Make application.

As to the first, I shall instance some of the summer days or hopeful seasons which we should carefully improve for saving of our souls, and not suffer them to be lost. Such as,

1. The summer days of youth. O that is a hopeful season, when the heart is most tender and tractable, and most easily melted into tears for sin, and kindled into a flame of love to Christ who died for our sins. God loves the first ripe fruits, young tears and prayers, young faith and love, and hence he makes the time of youth the usual season of converting and espousing sinners to himself. O young folks, suffer not the summer days to pass away in vain; but begin in this season to be religious, and to remember God and eternity, Eccl. xii. 1.

2. It is a promising season, when persons enjoy lively means and ordinances, whereby Christ crucified is evidently set forth before their eyes, as the only remedy for their perishing souls, and they earnestly called and pressed to come and close with him as such. "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." O let not this summer day of grace go over without closing with Christ in the offers of the gospel.

3. It is a likely season, when there is a noise and shaking among the dry bones, by the motions and strivings of the Spirit in and with the word, as when the Spirit brings the word close home to the soul's case, finding and singling it out, as Nathan did David, saying, "Thou art the man;" thou art the child of wrath, the enemy of God, the unregenerate sinner, against whom the sword of justice and curses of the law are levelled. Or when the Spirit so fastens the arrows of conviction on the conscience, as to bring the man to a restless thoughtfulness about the guilt of his sins, and his eternal state, and to cry, "What shall I do to be saved?" And to make him satisfied with all his earthly comforts, and say, "All these avail me nothing," while I go Christless. O this is a harvest-day of salvation, every minute of it is precious, and should be carefully improved for the soul.

4. The time of Satan's restraint is a season not to be lost. Sometimes the devil is so bound up, that he cannot disturb the church by bloody persecutions, or by errors and schisms, as at other times; that is a fair summer day of grace, which should be well improved. Though we cannot say that Satan at this time is altogether bound up; nay, he is wofully let loose in respect of error and division: but, blessed be God, he is restrained with respect to persecution; so that, my brethren, he cannot presently drive your teachers into corners, nor put you to seek your spiritual bread with the peril of your lives, because of the sword, in the wilderness, as sometimes hath been the case in our land. O then, do not sin away this calm summer-day, but, with earnest attention and care, hearken to the sweet voice of the turtle, which is still to be heard through all corners of the land.

5. The time when God is visiting a land with wakening and alarming dispensations of providence, is a season to be carefully improved for saving of the soul. When God doth premonish us that either a storm is coming on the church and land in general, or that death approaches us in particular, we should take warning, like Noah, while the evils are at a distance, "be moved with fear, and provide an ark for the saving of our souls," before the flood of wrath come upon us. Nay, my friends, you have God to bless, that the ark is already prepared to your hand, and a window opened in the side of it for your entrance. May you be so wise as to take warning in time, get faith's wings, and flee into the ark Christ, before the flood arise, and before death come. You have had a long harvest-day of grace in the land, and now have shrewd tokens of night approaching. You may look for the night of death, or the winter of desolation, strokes, persecution, and darkness. Wherefore, as Christ saith, "Work, while it is day: yet a little while is the light with you, walk while you have the light, lest darkness come upon you. "The night cometh," saith he, "when no man can work." Surely it draws towards the even-tide, and the night of death. Yea, a fearful night both of spiritual and temporal judgments seems to be drawing on; and should not the remaining light or day be well employed? There are several signs of an approaching night.

(1.) When the force and heat of the sun abate, it draws towards night; so when the gospel-sun, or preaching of the word, hath little heat or effect upon sinners' cold hearts, it betokens night coming on. (2.) When the shadows of the evening are stretched out and grow long, it is a sign of approaching night. And O how long are the shadows stretched out beyond the substance! How much doth the profession of religion exceed the power of it at this day! (3.) When the labourers go home from their work, it is a sign the night comes on. Ah! how many of our choice and faithful labourers do we see going home, without others to fill their room! (4.) When the evening wolves and beasts of prey creep out of their holes, it is a token of night. And surely there have been evening wolves seen among us, who have intruded upon a vineyard, spoiled the vines, and miserably scattered the flock of Christ. (5.) Growing darkness is a forerunner of the night. Ah! how much doth darkness prevail among us at this time, yea, so much, that several of the sharpest-sighted are reeling and mistaking their way, not being able to discern between sin and duty in divers cases. Alas! many are wandering and losing their way. Surely then it is our wisdom and duty to improve the light that remains, in seeking converting grace to ourselves, and an assured interest in precious Christ, before the darkness of the night overtake us; and also to pray for pity to the land, that "at evening it may be light."

In the last place, Notwithstanding of these dismal tokens, it makes the season somewhat promising, that we hear of Christ's goings as a conqueror in other parts of the world, and many bowing down at his feet. Now if the King of Zion be rising up to make his circuit through his churches, to display his glorious power and grace among them; may it not raise our hopes, and encourage us to look out for his marching towards us, to make good that word, Zech. xiv. 7, "It shall come to pass that at evening time it shall be light;" that is, when it was not expected. And O what a pleasant surprise would this appearance be to all the lovers of Zion!

II. The second head is to inquire who may be said to have lost their summer-days, or their likely seasons of grace. Though we cannot be peremptory about any, while life remains, yet of some there may be sad grounds of fear, that the text is too applicable to them, "Their harvest is past, their summer is ended, and they are not saved;" such as, 1. Those who have had the Spirit long striving with them, and they have resisted all his motions and operations, so that he is quite withdrawn from them. The case of such is very hopeless, according to Ezek. xxiv. 13. 2. Those who persist in sinful courses, and harden their necks against all challenges and reproofs for the same, we see what is said of them, Prov. xxix. 1. 3. Those who come the length to sin presumptuously; that is, venture upon sin against light, in hopes of repentance and pardon; their case is dismal, according to Num. xv. 30. 4. Those who provoke God, by their bentness on sin, to cease to be a reprove to them, to strike both conscience and ministers dumb, that they may challenge them no more, Ezek. iii. 27; Hos. iv. 17. 5. Those who deliberately relapse into sin, after rods, convictions, resolutions and vows, Isa. i. 5. 6. Those who give themselves up to commit sin with greediness, and glory in it, Eph. iv. 19; Phil. iii. 19. 7. Those who despise all gospel-offers, and mock the messengers who bring them, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16. Alas! such have reason to fear "their harvest is past," &c. Their case is very hopeless, though none can say it is past the reach of sovereign grace.

III. The third head is, to inquire into the causes of men's losing their hopeful seasons. 1. It proceeds from their unbelief and doubting of the certainty of gospel-truths. This keeps many hovering so long between heaven and hell, death and life, Christ and the world, that their summer and harvest-days are gone before they come to a resolution. Did men believe the certainty of wrath to come, and that they are born heirs of that wrath, they would think no motion swift enough in fleeing to Christ, and closing with him, in order to escape it.

2. Many trifle away their summer-days and seasons of action, because they look on death and eternity at many years distance, and that they will have time enough, before these expire, to mind salvation-work. By this delusion, Satan cheats many out of their most hopeful seasons. Did men look on death as within a step of them, and having no more but a single thread to cut, so that within a few days they shall either be singing with the saints in heaven, or roaring with the damned in hell, they would not let their summer-days pass so idly.

3. Promising summer-days are lost through indulging of sloth. Many, before they will be at some pains now in prayer and secret duties, will venture upon endless pains in hell hereafter. O! prodigious folly! What pains was Christ at to save you, and will you be at none to save yourselves? Hath not God an eternity of rest and pleasure to recompence your small toil and pains in improving your summer-days?

4. Love of sensual delights and carnal company proves a snare to many. They are hereby drawn into idleness, games, pastimes, tippling, foolish talking, and jesting, and other sinful pleasures; whereby their summer-days are trifled away and misspent. Even those diversions which are judged the most innocent, ought to be used with fear and caution, lest they steal away our heart and thoughts from our chief concerns; which, if they do, they are not innocent but hurtful. O they are sad diversions that would divert us from Christ and heaven. It is unbecoming a Christian that looks for eternal delights in another world, and pleasures of a higher nature, to have his heart set upon the pitiful delights of this earth, which fly away as a dream, and leave nothing behind them, unless it be a sting in the conscience for spending days of grace so unprofitably. One hour's enjoyment of Christ's presence and favour hath far more pleasure in it, than many years of sensual delights.

But for shortening this discourse, I must pass several things I had in view, and proceed to

THE APPLICATION.

Inference 1. Doth God in his mercy afford men hopeful seasons for saving their souls; summer-days of youth; harvest-days of gospel-grace? O how lamentable must it be to see men wasting away these seasons by delays, putting off conversion-work and closing with Christ, from day to day, till both their summer and harvest are past. When conscience or God's Spirit presses them, they answer, with Felix, "Go thy way for this time, and when I have a convenient season, I will hear thee;" meaning nothing but to put off the present conviction. O, sirs! the work is so weighty and necessary, you cannot make too much haste to expedite it; it is work for your immortal souls, and work for eternity. How careful would a man be to improve a day, if his natural life depended upon it? If a condemned man had an hour allowed him to beg his life from his prince, would he think he might delay till some minutes of it were past? No: he would apply at the very first, and use the most moving words and arguments he could devise to obtain it, and leave nothing un essayed during that hour. But O, is there not much more at stake here? When the salvation of the precious soul through all eternity depends upon the improvement of the present summer-day of grace, it is your wisdom to take the morning rather than the evening of it. The morning is fittest for beginning a journey; you would call him a foolish traveller that would set out only when the sun is setting.

2. How much are they to be blamed, who waste away their precious seasons of grace, in pursuing foolish lusts and pleasures, who take God's time and their soul's seasons too, to do the devil's work in. O sirs! doth God create pleasant summer and harvest-days for you to serve the devil, his grand enemy? Wretched ingratitude! Or, do you think that God should wait till the devil, the world, and the flesh, have done with you, and then be content to take their leavings? Be ashamed of so requiting the Lord, and dealing so with your Maker, O foolish people and unwise!

3. Surely gospel-slighters, and neglectors of the seasons of grace, must have an uncomfortable death-bed, seeing the mournful ditty of my text belongs to them, "Our harvest is past, our summer is ended, and we are not saved." O! how cutting must the review of wasted summer-days be to you when death calls upon you! It will be so far from yielding you any comfort at that time, to call to mind your carnal company and converse, your jests and sports, your games and pastimes, your tippling and idle talking, that the very remembrance of these will increase your sorrow.

4. We may hence justly conclude gospel-slighters to be men beside themselves, and without the free use of their reason, seeing they act a part below the very brutes and insects. These observe the proper seasons in providing for winter; but ah! you neglect yours in providing for eternity. "The stork in the heavens knows her appointed times; the turtle, the crane, and the swallow observe the time of their coming," Jer. viii. 7, "The ant provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest, and all to lay up for winter," Prov. vi. 8. But ah! you let your soul's summer and harvest-days pass over without minding the winter of death, or providing for them when dislodged of the body. It must surely be the height of madness to trifle away the season which is given you for saving your souls through all eternity. If sin had not wofully bemisted your eyes, you would have been ready to have looked upon him as a monster or madman, that had but a few days to win or lose his soul for ever, and yet would be playing these away at cards and dice, or trifling them away in jests and diversions, tippling and idleness, and never once minding the saving of his soul! And yet how many of all ranks may I apply to, and say, "Thou art the man!"

5. If gospel-seasons be the summer and harvest for our souls, it must be our unquestionable duty and interest to improve them with the greatest care, by complying with the Spirit's motions, and the gospel-offers, by closing with Christ, and "giving all diligence to make our calling and election sure;" for, if the proper season for these be lost, the work cannot be done at all. You are all careful to observe the season for your secular profits. The husbandman his season for ploughing, sowing, and reaping; the merchant his time for attending fairs and markets; the mariner his time when the wind is fair for sailing. And ought not you much more to be observant of your summer and harvest seasons of grace? Remember and believe it, O trifler, the time is at hand, when you will be put to cry, "O for one of those summer days again! O for one of those sabbaths or communion-seasons, wherein I had the offers of a crucified Christ! O how would I prize it; but alas! a thousand worlds, had I them to give, cannot recal one of them to me." It was a vain wish of that poor woman when dying, O call time again, call time again. No, no, a summer day or a harvest day cannot be recalled; therefore be wise to spend them with fear and care, while you enjoy them.

May the Lord bless gospel-seasons to us. Amen.

OF A PUBLIC SPIRIT.

SERMON II.—"FOR THE HURT OF THE DAUGHTER OF MY PEOPLE AM I HURT," &c. JER. VIII. 21.

THE doctrine which now falls to be handled, is, Doct. II.—That every gracious spirit is a public spirit, and will lay to heart the calamitous case of the church or country of which he is a member.

So did Jeremiah here, and in several other parts of his writings, as in Jer. ix. 1; xiii. 17. and in his book of Lamentations. Such public-spirited persons also were Moses, Samuel, David, Isaiah, Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, Paul, and other scripture-saints.

The method of handling this doctrine may be,

1st. To inquire into the nature and evidences of a truly public spirit.

2d. To show the reasonableness and necessity of a public spirit.

3d. Make the application.

I. As to the first, to wit, the nature of this public spirit which is in gracious persons, especially as it is evidenced by their holy zeal, and concern for the church under distress; it implies several things:

1. A sincere love to Christ, and concern for his glory, which prompts us to prefer the things of Christ to our own things. If we love not Christ the head, we cannot have a true love to his body the church, nor a concern for its welfare. It is this love that makes gracious souls "prefer Jerusalem above their chief joy," Psal. cxxxvii. 6.

2. There is in it a sympathy and fellow-feeling with the church in distress, as being members of the same body. We see every living member of the body feels the injuries which are done to it, or to any of its fellow-members, and is ready to act for their relief. So the eyes and hands are ready to help the leg or foot when hurt, as feeling the smart of it.—In like manner, the members of Christ's body-mystical have a fellow-feeling together, and are ready to act for the relief of each other in distress.

3. It imports not only a deep concern and sorrow for the church in trouble, but also a disposition to express and evidence this concern, by using all the means in our power to help and relieve her; such as fasting, mourning, and weeping, for all the sins, whether of ourselves or others, which draw down wrath and calamities upon the church; and wrestling with God, by earnest prayer, for her relief, looking to Christ and his blood for pardoning and removing those sins which have raised the storm against her. In this manner did Nehemiah, Daniel, Ezra, David, Jeremiah, and others.

II. The second head is to show the reasonableness and necessity of this public spirit, and zealous concern for the church in distress. Now this will appear from several grounds and considerations; such as,

1. The near relation to, and interest which Christ hath in his church. The church is his building, his household, his peculiar treasure, his jewels, and dear purchase; yea, she is Christ's body, of which he is the Head. Now, if you have any love to Christ himself, you cannot be unconcerned for the church, which is so nearly related to him, when she is in trouble. If you love the Head, you cannot but love the body also. Again, as Christ's relation to the church is near, so his love to her is proportionable; he compares his love to that of a tender mother's to her sucking child, which she cannot forget: and therefore, "he engraves Zion upon the palms of his hands, and hath her walls continually before him," Isa. xlix. 15, 16. In that expression, he alludes to the practice of the Jews, in showing their concern for Jerusalem in ruins, during the Babylonish captivity. They engraved the effigies of Jerusalem upon their rings, to keep her in perpetual remembrance. In like manner, saith the Lord, I have the church engraven upon the palms of my hands, so that I can never open my hand to bestow a blessing upon any, but the church's case presents to my eye. Now, if God so loves the church, and is concerned for her welfare, it becomes us also to be concerned and affected for her.

2. This affectionate concern is reasonable and necessary, because it is your interest. Every one of you is nearly connected with that of the church, as being members of the same mystical body, who must suffer one with another; so that in seeking the public good of the church, you consult your own private interest also; for your own prosperity is bound up in her welfare. You are like passengers in a ship, that have your persons and all your effects along with you there; so that, if the ship be prosperous, you are well, but if she sink, you lose all. Your precious souls, in particular, must suffer when the church suffers: they cannot but be reduced to a melancholy situation, when the church is distressed with spiritual judgments; such as the plague of dry breasts, and the withdrawing of the Spirit of God from ordinances. If the mother be sickly, the sucking child must languish.

3. To be public-spirited makes a man a public blessing, and an instrument of much good to others, which is a man's greatest honour. This would make you resemble your heavenly Father, who doth good to all, by making his sun to rise and his rain to fall upon them. And also like your Saviour, who was a public blessing, while on earth, for he still "went about doing good," Acts x. 38. And like Abraham, who was a "blessing to the nations," Gen. xii. 2. Job was a man of a noble public spirit, upon which account he was had in the greatest love and esteem, respect and reverence, by all ranks; when the ear heard him, or the eye saw him, they blessed him; why? because, saith he, "I delivered the poor that cried; I was eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame," &c. Job xxix. 11, 12, &c.

4. Because God's glory suffers when the church suffers, "for Zion is the seat of his glory," Psal. lxxvi. 1, 2. It is the church that displays and shows it forth. God's revenue of honour and praise in the world would come to little, if God had not a church therein to pay him his rent; hence he calls his church "the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified," Isaiah lx. 21. The rest of the world embezzle their talents, but God's church and people improve theirs for God's glory. Now when these are suppressed and sunk, they are disabled for showing forth his glory. Nay, then the enemy is ready to insult them, and to reproach both them and their God. Hence king Hezekiah called the time of Jerusalem's distress, "a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and of blasphemy," Isa. xxxvii. 3.

5. Because God is highly pleased with a public spirit, and with those who interpose for his church in trouble; he represents himself in scripture as seeking carefully for those, to put marks of honour and respect upon them, Jer. v. 1; Ezek. xxii. 30. Also we see what singular honour God put upon Moses and Phineas upon that account, Exod. xxxii. 11, 14; Num. xxv. 10, 11; Psal. cvi. 23, 30, 31. Also he promises prosperity to all such, and familiarity with himself, Psal. cxxii. 6; Isa. xlv. 11.

6. Because, on the other hand, God is much displeased with those who are unconcerned about his church, when in distress; yea, he denounces a "woe against them who are at ease in Zion, and are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph," Amos vi. 1, 6. And we see what wrath was threatened against Esther, if she should be easy or silent when the church was in danger, Esth. iv. 14, "For if thou altogether hold thy peace at this time, then shall enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed."

THE APPLICATION.

Inference 1. If God be well pleased with those who are sensibly affected with the church's case when in distress, how flaming must his wrath be against those who are the instruments of her distress, and, instead of sympathizing with her in it, rejoice in her trouble: O that such would know, that they are not only the enemies of the church, but they are the enemies of God, and the very butt of his anger, every day, Psal. vii. 11. How dreadful is their case, who have the poisoned arrows of God's wrath levelled against them!

3. We may take up a lamentation for the want of a public-spirited and generous concern for the church of God among us, which is this day in great danger and distress, by errors, divisions, and decay of piety: and yet, how few are laying it to heart! Ah! whence doth this indifference proceed? Surely from want of love to Christ, the church's Head, or from excessive love to the world and carnal pleasures. When men "lie upon beds of ivory, chant to the sound of the viol, and drink wine in bowls, they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph," Amos vi. 4—6. Again this indifferency about Christ's matters proceeds from that cursed root of self-love, and self-seeking, which is in all men by nature; though, in the mean time, sin and Satan have blinded their eyes, that they know not their true interest: they know not what it is rightly to seek themselves; if they seek the good of their bodies with the neglect of their souls, they think to seek themselves best this way: but O if their eyes were opened, they would see that this self-seeking is nothing but self-hating and self-destroying. The rich glutton fancied he was seeking himself and his own happiness, when he clothed himself in purple, and fared deliciously every day; but afterwards, when he lifted up his eyes, he saw his self-seeking was really self-destroying; for by pampering his body a little time, he damned his soul for ever. So that those who serve God best, by seeking his glory and his church's good, before their worldly interest, really seek themselves most; for they hereby secure the happiness of both soul and body through all eternity.

4. It may be needful here to give some caution against the wrong use of this doctrine, which some may be in hazard to make, by spending their zeal and concern about the public ease of the church, to the neglect of their own personal case. O sirs, beware of this extreme, and suspect this zeal not to be of the right sort; for where there is a sincere regard to God's glory, it will show itself, in the first place, in seeking to have matters right at home, to have your own soul's case put in good order, to have a true faith in Christ, the nature renewed, and corruptions subdued, without which you can never glorify God, or do any thing to please him: likewise, it will show itself in esteeming and preferring the great and essential truths of the gospel, and desiring to hear of the excellency and usefulness of a crucified Jesus, and of the Holy Spirit's dealing with souls in beginning and carrying on a work of grace. Now when these sweet truths are not so much relished, as to hear reflections and censures upon the management of public affairs, you have ground to be jealous that your deceitful hearts are carrying you to an extreme, and to a zeal for the church, which is not right.—True zeal for God will make you careful to be acquainted with your own hearts, to have matters right in the first place between God and your own souls, to have humility, truth, and sincerity in the inward parts, without which God will not dwell, nor hold communion with you, nor can you claim God's promises of guiding and direction in dark and dividing times; for it is not the proud or self-conceited Christian that hath the promise, but the humble and self-denied, Psal. xxv. 9, "The meek will he guide in judgment, and the meek will he teach his way." Study always then to be meek and humble, and in order thereto, be acquainted with your own deceitful hearts, which will be fair to deceive you, if you be not on your guard. Watch then, and never let your concern for the public draw you off from private duties, nor from secret and heart-work; for some may make very splendid appearance for public things, and yet prove nothing at last but cast-aways, for want of personal godliness.—But by telling you this, let none think I encourage any to turn Gallios, with respect to the matters of God and the interest and welfare of his church, as, alas! the generality are; no, I teach and press the contrary.

5. Let all, therefore, be exhorted to be public-spirited, and suitably concerned for the church in distress. O lay to heart her calamity, and show your concern for her relief, by mourning for sin which brings on wrath, and praying earnestly for deliverance from it, saying with David, "Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion, build thou the walls of Jerusalem."

Motives to it: 1. From the pattern of our blessed Lord and Head, whose example we should copy after in his sympathy with, and concern for, the church in trouble. "His soul was grieved for their misery: in all their afflictions he was afflicted." When they are persecuted he feels himself injured, and this sympathy sets him on work to intercede for them, as he did for Jerusalem under the Babylonish captivity, Zech. i. 12, "O Lord of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem, and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years." Let all the members then follow the example of their Head.

2. Public-spirited persons are the pillars of societies, and bear off wrath and judgments from them. Hence we see the flood could not rise to destroy the old world till Noah was shut up in the ark; nor could the fire be rained from heaven upon Sodom, till Lot was housed in Zoar; and both Noah and Lot were public-spirited men, and therefore great blessings and pillars to the world. O sirs, this public-spirited disposition would make you blessings to the church and to the island: it would make you live desired, and die lamented. Men would reckon your lives worthy of many prayers, and your deaths of many tears. Elijah was of this disposition, and we see how Elisha bewailed his departure, 2 Kings ii. 12, "And Elisha saw it, and he cried, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof:" meaning that Elijah was the safety and strength of Israel, by his prevalency with God; and a better defence to them than chariots and horsemen.

3. This disposition is a good evidence both of love to God, and of love to the souls of men: for it is of the nature of true love to be concerned for the good of those whom we love, to mourn when they suffer, and rejoice when they prosper. If we love God, we will lament the dishonours which are done to him. If we love the souls of men, we will pray for their conversion, and bewail their sins which bring destruction upon them.

4. It would be a good means to save you from the guilt of other men's sins, and secure you from the wrath which they bring on. For they who sigh and cry for all the abominations that are done in the midst of Jerusalem, have a mark set upon them for their preservation, Ezek. ix. 4. God looks upon our mourning for the sins of others, as an entering of our dissent against them, and so will not charge them upon us.

Quest. How shall we attain to this public spirit and zealous concern for the church in distress?

Ans. Take the following directions:

1. Beg for the Spirit of God that dwells, breathes, and acts in all the members of Christ's mystical body. He surely is the public Spirit that inclines all the members to take the same care one for another, and to seek the good of the whole body, Rom. viii. 14.

2. Let the grace of love abound in your hearts, love to God and to all his people; and see to keep this holy fire always burning. Love makes the wants and sufferings of others to be our own, and prompts us to lay out ourselves for them.

3. Love the society of the public-spirited and zealous ones of the land, and particularly those who study to manage their zeal and piety with prudence; for as iron sharpens iron, so the conversation of such may be the means of enlivening you.

4. Beware of carnal company, which often proves a dangerous quench-coal to zeal and activity for God. Peter found this by going into the society of the high priest's servants; for though he got his hands warmed amongst them, he got his heart miserably cooled to Christ and his people.

5. When you attain to any measure of zeal and public-spiritedness, endeavour to manage it with holy wisdom and caution, so as you may recommend this grace to others, and not stumble them at it through your mismanagement. There is much need for this caution, especially in reeling and dividing times; wherefore take these advices;

(1.) See that you act from a principle of true love to God, which will engage you to love all who bear his stamp and image.

(2.) See that your ends be pure and sincere, not to gain esteem or applause, or increase a party; but that God may be glorified, and Christ's kingdom advanced in the world.

(3.) Watch carefully that your zeal do not mix itself with your own passion and bitterness of spirit, which we are always in hazard of. The apostle James nobly cautions us against this evil, James iii. 14. to the end. A cause sometimes may be good and just, and yet managed with too much heat and animosity against our godly brethren. Job's friends were good men, and expressed much zeal for God and religion in their speeches, but yet God was displeased with them for mixing their zeal with so much bitterness and rash censures against his upright servant Job. Wherefore, if conscience oblige you at any time to oppose them who are godly, see that you do it with much calmness, tenderness, and caution; and take care that your zeal do not degenerate into passion, bitterness, or hatred against any of them. Mind what the centurion said to the chief captain, when going to scourge Paul, Acts xxii. 26, "Take heed what thou dost, for this man is a Roman." So say I, take heed what you do to any man that is a member of Christ.

Object. Are we not called to contend with earnestness when matters of faith are at the stake, according to Jude, ver. 2? Ans. 1. All points of truth are not of equal weight and importance, and therefore not to be contended for with equal zeal and concern. 2. Zeal and meekness are very consistent, and not opposite; so that there may be zealous and earnest contending for truth without wrath and passion. 3. Be persuaded, that the wrath of man never worketh the righteousness of God; yea, wrath and passion is the worst thing that can be brought into a religious controversy, for as a bad cause is never made better, so a good cause is always made worse by it. The glory of God doth not need such rotten pillars to support it as our wrath and passion, or our bitter and angry words. Alas! it is the rash using of the tongue that greatly influences our differences, namely, by personal reflections, rigid censures, uncharitable constructions, evil surmises, aggravating the mistakes of others, &c. This the wise man observed of old, Prov. xv. 1, 18. Surely the tongue is an unruly member, and full of deadly poison. May God, of his infinite mercy, give us grace to govern it aright, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

THE DISEASES OF SOULS.

SERMON III.—"IS THERE NO BALM IN GILEAD? IS THERE NO PHYSICIAN THERE? WHY THEN IS NOT THE HEALTH OF THE DAUGHTER OF MY PEOPLE RECOVERED?" JER. VIII. 22.

THE words being before explained, and the doctrines raised, I proceed to Doct. III. viz. However desperate the diseases of those within the church may seem to be, yet if they die of them, it will be owing to themselves, seeing they have an able physician, an excellent balm to look to for healing.

This being the doctrine which I chiefly intend to insist upon, I propose to do it at some length in the following method:

I. I will inquire into those dangerous diseases for which there is balm in Gilead, and a physician there.

II. Take notice of some of those dangerous symptoms which make our diseases appear desperate and incurable, for which there is yet balm in Gilead.

III. Speak of the physician there, who hath the balm, and applies it for curing the diseased.

IV. Inquire into the nature of the balm, and means which the physician makes use of for healing.

V. Touch at the physician's method of applying the balm, and performing the cure.

VI. Make application of the whole.

I. The first head is, to inquire into the dangerous diseases of those within the church for which the balm is provided. And for the better understanding hercof, I shall premise some things.

1. When I speak of the church, I mean the church visible, which includes hypocrites as well as true believers.

2. Though the strength and power of the soul's diseases be broken in believers, by renewing grace, yet there is no disease in the unrenewed but believers are in part liable to it, and have the relics of it to groan under, while they are here below.

3. I am not to speak of the diseases of the body natural, which is the province of physicians; nor of the body politic, or civil society, which is the business of politicians and statesmen: though in the meantime the abounding of these at this day is so visible to all, that we have ground to bewail and mourn over them before the Lord. Ah! the diseases of our body, both civil and ecclesiastic, are so great and lamentable, that we may justly apply that word to ourselves, which we have in Isa. i. 5, 6, "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint; from the sole of the foot even unto the head, there is no soundness in it, but wounds, bruises, and putrifying sores." Such a case, indeed, is mournful, yet, blessed be God, it is not desperate. There is balm in Gilead for the state as well as the church, and we should plead with the great physician in Israel to pity both, and heal their respective diseases. Thanks be to God that he is both able and willing, and that he gives us such promises to plead with him, as these following, in Isa. i. 25, 26, "And I will turn my hand upon thee, and purely purge away thy dross, and take away all thy tin. And I will restore thy judges as at the first, and thy counselors as at the beginning; afterwards thou shalt be called the city of righteousness," &c. And that in Isa. xlix. 22, 23, "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people; and they shall bring thy sons in their arms and thy daughters shall be carried on their shoulders; and kings shall be thy nursing-fathers, and their queens thy nursing-mothers," &c. And that promise in Isa. lx. 17, 18, "I will make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness; violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls salvation, and thy gates praise." Now it is surely the duty of all the members of both church and state, to plead these promises with God, and to wait his time for accomplishing them to us. O what is there so hard, but the outpouring of his Spirit can do?

4. The diseases which I propose to speak of in this place, are the sins of spiritual plagues and distempers of men's souls, which are very dangerous and deadly. These we ought all to know, with their symptoms and effects, that we may seek after the balm in Gilead, which is mercifully provided of God for our healing. God would have every man to know the plague of his own heart, 1 Kings viii. 38. This every man should know and be acquainted with in the first place, in order to healing; though yet we are not wholly to confine our thoughts and care about those diseases which are private and personal, but show our concern also about those which are public and national; of which more afterwards.

5. These soul distempers are called in scripture, diseases, wounds, and sickness, Psal. xxxviii. 5; ciii. 3; cxlvii. 3; Ezek. xxxiv. 4; Matt. ix. 12. because they produce effects in the soul like to those which diseases produce in the body; such as, (1.) As diseases waste the beauty of the body, and produce uncomeliness and deformity in it, Psal. xxxix. 11. As they make the eyes sink and turn dull, the skin shrink up and gather blackness, the flesh melt away, and bones stick out, and the most beautiful person to look pale and ghastly; so our sins and spiritual distempers destroy the comeliness of the soul, deprive it of its primitive beauty, the image of God, and bring upon it a most ghastly deformity, and make it resemble both brutes and devils, the one in sensuality and lust, the other in pride and malice. (2.) As diseases weaken the body, and make it unfit for spiritual work and exercises, as prayer, hearing, meditating, &c. so that duty becomes a burden to it. (3.) As the diseases deprive men of their appetite for food, and of their digestion; so sin takes away the soul's appetite and digestion, that it hath no hunger for the bread of life, for communion with God, and the influences of his Spirit; and though the man attends ordinances, he doth not digest what he hears, nor is nourished by it. (4.) Diseases occasion pain in the body that it cannot rest; so sin brings anguish and torture into the soul. Hence David complains of his bones being vexed, and his soul being sore vexed, Psal. vi. 2, 3. These things being premised, I shall mention some of those dangerous diseases of the soul for which we need the balm in Gilead.

Atheism. Infidelity, or misbelief of divine truths, revealed to us, is a deadly disease, for it hinders the success of the gospel, and the saving of souls. What is it that keeps many halting so long between two opinions, and hovering betwixt Christ and the devil, but their not believing firmly the Bible to be God's word, and the gospel tidings to be certain truth; namely, that God sent Jesus Christ, his eternal Son, into the world, to assume our nature, and die for sin in our stead; and their not giving firm credit to the being of a God, the immortality of the soul, and the life to come. Though many will not openly question any of these truths, yet the wavering thoughts they have about them hinder them from falling in with the gospel-method of salvation which God hath established. Ah! this is a deadly disease! Also, there is much practical atheism among us; many profess to own God, and yet live as if they believed there was no God that made the world, and no providence that governs it: they pay God no homage nor respect; they put the creature, or self, in God's room; they ascribe their mercies to fortune, or to their own wisdom or industry, rather than to God. A woful disease! God's children indeed are cured of prevailing atheism, yet the dregs of the disease remain; and sometimes atheistical thoughts come to a great height in them, as in Asaph, though afterwards he was heartily grieved and ashamed for entertaining them, and calls himself both a fool and a beast for it, Psal. lxxiii. 21, 22. And no wonder he did so, for atheism and infidelity, though it abound in the church, yet there is no such disease in hell, no such madness there, for the devils believe and tremble, James ii. 19. But though the disease be grievous, yet Christ hath balm for it, and to him we must go both to help our unbelief and increase our faith.

Ignorance of God, and of gospel truths, is a mortal disease, and destroys many, even of those who profess to know him, according to Hos. iv. 6. There are multitudes living in the midst of gospel light, who yet continue in gross darkness. They are ignorant of the infinite justice and holy nature of God; and of the misery of man in his fallen estate, of the evil of sin, and the ransom necessary for it. They are ignorant of Jesus Christ and his mediatory offices, and of the nature and necessity of Christ's righteousness, and of faith which applies it to us. They know nothing of the Spirit's office in our redemption, nor of his work in regeneration; yea, they do not so much as know if there be a Holy Ghost. Alas! that this disease of ignorance should still prevail, notwithstanding all the means of knowledge we enjoy. I grant believers are spiritually illuminated, and get the strength of this disease broken at their first conversion, yet still much blindness remains with them; and frequently clouds of darkness so overshadow them, that they have but faint views of divine mysteries. This is a sad disease, but yet there is balm in Gilead, and eye-salve in Israel for it, Rev. iii. 17, 18; Jer. xxiv. 7.

Hardness of heart is a most ruining disease to multitudes. Oh! it is this that makes them sit under the ministry of the word, and hear the most terrible threatenings and curses denounced against their sins, and yet be no more moved than the seats they sit on, or the dead that lie under their feet; so hard is the stone in the heart, that the hammer of the word in the hand of man makes no impression upon it; promises draw not, and threatenings drive not; mercies do not allure, and judgments do not alarm; this is a prevailing plague among the generality of gospel-hearers. And though believers, at conversion, have the heart of stone taken away, and a heart of flesh given, yet they are much plagued with recurring hardness, that often makes them complain of being little affected either with ordinances or providences; and though the fire burn round about them, that they lay it not to heart. This is an evil disease, yet there is balm in Israel, and help in the promises for it, Ezek. xxxvi. 26; Psal. i. 6.

Earthly-mindedness is a woful disease; it clogs the mind, and unfits the soul for spiritual work. The thoughts of the world shut out the thoughts of God and eternity; they tempt many poor souls, like Martha, to be carefully troubled about many things, even things which will not avail them at a dying hour, while the one thing necessary is quite neglected and forgot. Ah! what numbers are there dying of this disease? When other plagues kill their thousands, this slays its ten thousands. O what havoc doth it daily make among professed Christians? Pharaoh's words concerning the Israelites may well be applied to many of them, Exod. xiv. 3, "They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in." So hot are they in pursuing the world, so busied in providing for their families, in paying their debts, in making bargains, purchases, and in courting the favour of men, that they can find no time in their lives, nor room in their hearts for precious Christ, and the concerns of their souls. O sinners! this disease of earthly-mindedness quite defeats the design of the gospel, and mars your profiting by sabbaths and sermons; it turns the house of God into a place of merchandize, by your thoughtfulness in it about worldly gain and profit. What a fearful distemper is this, that turns a man's head and heart where his feet should be! that makes him bestow his soul and all its noble faculties upon a little white and yellow clay! and so all his days dig for dross and dung with mattocks of gold! Nothing can cure this disease but the balm of Gilead. The prevailing power of it is indeed broken in believers at conversion, the world is then put down from the throne and chief place in the soul; yet afterwards it doth rally its broken forces, and struggles hard to recover the throne again; and this proves very troublesome even to the best. It distracts their thoughts, molests them in holy duties, and steals away their affections from Christ and heaven. This is a sore plague, yet there is balm in Israel and help in God's word and promise for it; Cant. iv. 8; Jer. xxxii. 4; Col. iii. 1, 2.

Aversion to spiritual duties is a sore disease, when the heart becomes backward to pay God a visit in secret, and the man unwilling to go to his closet to converse with his Maker. Ah! this is the case with many, who would rather toil their bodies a whole day, than spend a quarter of an hour upon their knees with God in secret. Their animal spirits are vigorous and lively in pursuing their worldly business, or even their diversions; but they are low and faint in soul-work and spiritual exercises. We see many who do not weary to spend whole days, yea, and nights too, in drinking, dancing, gaming, and serving their lusts; but they grudge to give God so much as one day, or any part even of his own day. They say of Sabbaths and sermons, "What a weariness hath it? When will the Sabbath be gone?" This is a prevailing disease, and how strong are the dregs of it even in believers! For though, at conversion, their hearts are reconciled to God and his ways, yet, at times, they feel much of a recurring backwardness for spiritual work, so that when they would do good, evil is present with them. But yet there is balm for this disease, in the physician of Israel, and his gracious promises, Psal. cx. 3; Isa. xl. 31; Ezek. xxxvi. 27.

Indwelling corruption, prevailing and venting itself various ways, is a sad disease. Sometimes it rises like a flood, swells high, and carries all before it, like the current of a tide that cannot be withstood. So it is with those in whom the strength of corruption was never subdued by converting grace. And though the tide be turned with renewed persons, yet upon some occasions we find them making great complaints of the prevalency of indwelling sin, through the power of temptation, as Paul, Rom. vii. and David, Psal. lxxv, "Iniquities prevail against me;" and Isa. lxiv. 6, "Our iniquities like the wind have taken us away." This is a most humbling disease; yet the physician of Israel hath provided balm for it in his word, Psal. lxxv. 3; Mic. vii. 19; Rom. vii. 24, 25.

Hypocrisy and formality in God's service is a woful disease. When men draw near to God with their lips only, and give him no more but bodily service, which is no better than that of a statue on a tomb, with eyes and hands lift up, only it wants a voice. And how unpleasant is a voice to God without the heart and affections? He heavily complains of it, Isa. xxix. 13. Among the unrenewed, hypocrisy is a deadly and reigning disease. And though the converted be delivered from its reigning power, yet they are sadly distressed with its remains, and often put to complain that they give God more of the body than of the heart in duty; and that their prayers are little better than lip labour. But the physician of Israel hath promised balm for this disease, Jer. xxxi. 33; Prov. iv. 18; 2 Cor. iv. 16.

Inconstancy and wandering of heart in duty is a very prevailing disease. Alas! for the unfixedness of the heart, that goeth out in many vain excursions towards the world and its trifles, and even in time of the most solemn approaches unto God! Hereby our religious performances are wofully marred, and God provoked to loathe and abhor them. There is a voluntary and habitual wandering of heart that is the reigning plague of the unregenerate: and there is an involuntary wandering that is the disease of God's people, which they bemoan and lament before the Lord. But there is balm in Gilead for it in all shapes; Jer. xxxii. 29; Ezek. xi. 19.

Backslidings from the Lord, or a spiritual consumption, is the common disease of God's people. They are liable to backslide from the power and life of godliness, and to lose their former spirituality and liveliness in serving God in their closets, families, and public assemblies; so that sometimes, their religious duties are like to wither and dwindle away into a dead form, and "the things that remain are ready to die," as it was with the church of Sardis, Rev. iii. 2. This decay comes upon them when known sin or sloth are indulged by them. Then it is that spiritual exercises become a weariness, and aversion grows to heart-work and secret duties, such as prayer, reading the Bible, meditation, and communing with their own hearts: then the graces languish, the faith of divine revelation becomes weak, the truths which God reveals concerning his glorious perfections, the excellencies of Christ, and concerning sin and duty, heaven and hell, make but small impression on the mind. Then repentance is restrained, and the soul is little affected with God and its evil; then love turns cool to Christ and his image, it doth not constrain to duty, nor to hate and mortify sin as before; then hope becomes faint and languid, and hath not such desirous expectations of the eternal world, and things unseen, as to fortify the soul against the allurements of the devil, the world, and the flesh. This spiritual consumption is a mournful disease, and calls us speedily to apply to the Physician of Israel for the balm he hath promised for it, Deut. xxx. 6; Hos. xiv. 4—6; Psal. lxxix. 32; John xiv. 19; Gal. ii. 20.

Discouragement and downeasting of soul is one of God's people's diseases that requires this balm. They are often cast down by outward afflictions, and especially by the prevalency of sin and Satan's temptations, by the hidings of God's face, the shutting out of their prayers, the darkening of their evidences, the revival of former guilt, and the renewing of mount Sinai's thunderings against them. Under these trials, they are apt to think that God holds them for his enemies, and writes bitter things against them, and hence are put to cry with the psalmist, "Hath God forgotten to be gracious? Is his mercy clean gone for ever? And will he be favourable no more? This is a disease which sadly enfeebles their hearts and weakens their hands; yet the great Physician of the church hath provided balm for it, Psal. xlii. 5, &c.; Isa. xli. 10, 17, 18; liv. 7, &c.; lvii. 16, &c.; Jer. xxxi. 25; Heb. xiii. 5, 6.

Ingratitude to God for his mercies is a common disease. Alas! we turn unthankful both for common and special mercies, and for the unspeakable gift of Jesus Christ to Adam's fallen race. What bad requitals do we make to God for his goodness! There are many who make use of God's mercies as darts to shoot at heaven, and weapons to fight against God himself. The more he gives them of health and money, they turn the more profane and debauched; so that instead of serving God with his benefits, they make a sacrifice of them to the devil, Hos. ii. 8. I fear such will be found guilty of this evil, who bestow their time and money upon games and pastimes, balls and assemblies, plays and comedies, and such vanities that prove nurseries of sin, and serve greatly to debauch the minds and morals of men and women. O let us not ungratefully requite the Lord our gracious benefactor. Ah! how much of this disease remains even with the best! Even Hezekiah rendered not again according to the benefit done unto him, 2 Chron. xxxii. 25. Great need have we all of the balm of Gilead to cure us of this plague.

Trusting to our own righteousness is a disease which all are liable to. The unbeliever goes about to build an imaginary tower of his own righteousness, and will not submit to the righteousness of Christ the glorious Surety, who hath brought in an everlasting and law-biding righteousness for sinners to fly to. Nay, believers who have actually fled to it, still groan under the remains of this woeful disease within them.

They have still a hankering after some dependence upon their duties and performances, although they cannot but own that their best duties need the blood of Christ, as well as their worst sins; and if they be not washen from the sins that cleave to them, they would damn them. O! then, what need have we all of the balm in Gilead, and the Physician there, for these deadly diseases which cleave to us?

Time would fail me to mention and insist upon many other grievous diseases which abound among us; such as pride, self-conceit, and lifting up of ourselves, because of some attainments, above others; discontentment with our lot and condition in the world; impatience under crosses, sinful self-love, intemperance, covetousness, envy, rash anger, malice, revenge, and many other deadly plagues. However light some may make of these distempers, yet there is none of them but what will prove deadly, if the balm of Gilead, and Physician there, be not applied to for cure. But, blessed be the God of Israel, that this balm is a universal medicine, a catholicon for all manner of soul-diseases, if sinners would but seek to it, and submit to the application of it in the Physician's own way. May we all be brought to see and feel our diseases in time, that we may hasten to the great Physician of the church, while his balm and power are present to heal us. May God of his infinite mercy determine us to it, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

SERMON IV.—"IS THERE NO BALM IN GILEAD! IS THERE NO PHYSICIAN THERE?" &c. JER. viii. 22.

In the preceding sermon I mentioned many soul-diseases, which are more secret and invisible, prevailing among us. In this I shall speak of some other diseases of a more public nature, which affect not only the particular members, but, in some respects, threaten the whole body of the church, and the several congregations thereof; and upon which account, our poor diseased church and land greatly need the balm of Gilead, and Physician there, at this day.

Heresy and error is a disease which spreads like a gangrene, and very much threatens our church and land at this day; when doctrines are vented, and books dispersed in favour of Deism, Socinianism, Arianism, Arminianism, and other errors: when principles are espoused and spread which tend to weaken divine revelation; to advance corrupt reason and self-love as the spring and standard of religion; to exalt our moral performances more than imputed righteousness; to reproach the operations of the holy Spirit upon souls with enthusiasm; and ascribe our good actions more to the power of corrupt nature than to efficacious free grace. Now, when such errors as these, besides many Popish tenets and superstitions, are propagated among us, there is ground to say we have a sick and diseased land that needs balm.

Schism and division among the ministers and members of the church is a grievous malady that we at present labour under. Surely it is a most unnatural distemper that causes the sheep of Christ to bite and devour one another, and the members of Christ to separate as aliens; yea, not only break up Christian communion, but break out in uncharitable reflections, bitterness, wrath, clamour, and evil-speaking, one against another. A strange distemper! that puts those who will delightfully worship God together through a whole eternity, in such a case, that they cannot keep fellowship together here! A distemper that makes men renounce communion with those they once delighted in, and with whom the glorious Head still holds communion; that takes many off from the vitals and essentials of religion, and employs their time in public controversies about party opinions, the grounds of separation, the characters of preachers, and things which rather tend to beget alienation of affections, and angry quarrels, than to promote saving knowledge, faith, love, and godly edifying. Oh! how wrath-like a judgment is that spirit of strife and division which God hath poured out upon this land for our former misimprovement of the gospel, and contempt of glorious Christ! Ah, what a flood-gate doth it open to many evils and calamities! That is a true word of the apostle, Jam. iii. 16, "Where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work." What a plague must that be that produces every evil work! What a sad disease is it that turns Christian converse into vain janglings, that hinders social prayers, that mars the success of the gospel, weakens the interest of religion, propagates all kind of evil, and exposes the church to the scorn and derision of her enemies! How applicable is that word to us, Lam. ii. 13, "Thy breach is great like the sea, who can heal thee?" Surely none but he that hath the balm of Gilead.

Giddiness and unsettledness in religion is a disease that sadly prevails among us. Many are now "reeling to and fro like drunken men," as the prophet speaks, Isa. xxiv. 20. They do not, like sober men, keep the highway in a straight course; but, like drunkards, stagger and reel from one side of the way to another. Alas, the most part are reeling either to one extreme or another, and very few are going on in a straight and steady course. Many are reeling towards defection from our reformation principles and attainments, which our worthy ancestors valiantly contended and suffered for; particularly in encouraging and drawing on the yoke of patronage upon the church without necessity. Yea, pleading for it as lawful and harmless, though our reformers declared it to be contrary to the word of God and the practice of the apostolical and primitive church. Likewise, in compliance with that yoke, many are voluntarily falling in with courses for wreathing it upon the church's neck, and departing from several parts of our established government and discipline to which they stand solemnly engaged, such as our approved rules and practice with respect to the moderation of calls, the election and ordination of pastors; and, in consequence thereof, obtruding ministers into congregations against their will, whereby the church is spoiled of her right of calling her own pastors, the flock of Christ is scattered, the edification of souls hindered, the great ends of a gospel-ministry defeated, and the work of the gospel greatly obstructed. Many also are swerving from our old covenant-engagements, and openly denying the lawfulness of national covenanting, and the binding obligation thereof upon posterity; and forming to themselves schemes of government which would open a door to anarchy and licentiousness. Again, many are reeling towards Erastianism, and injurious infringements upon the church's intrinsic power, and upon Christ's immediate headship and supremacy over her; falling in with acts and practices which tend to take the keys of church power and government out of the hands of Christ and church officers of his appointment, and put them into the hands of the magistrate. Also, many are reeling from the ancient use of creeds and confessions of faith, towards a boundless toleration of all sorts of error and heresies, asserting that neither the church nor the magistrate have any power to restrain them. Many are reeling towards the exalting of self, even putting it in the room of God, saying it is in the power of a man's free will and natural abilities to repent and convert himself, and that there is a necessary connection between a man's moral seriousness and his obtaining of saving grace. Yea, many are warping towards popery and old superstitions, pleading for a middle state, for prayers for the dead, and for the Eucharist being a proper sacrifice for sin; for the necessity of a priest's absolution in order to the forgiveness of sin, and of bowing to the altar, and at the name of Jesus, of observing uninstituted festivals, of using the cross in baptism, kneeling at the sacrament, the organ in praise, and other inventions of men in God's worship. Nay, many are reeling from the very fundamentals of Christianity, and the doctrine of the glorious Trinity, Christ's deity and satisfaction, the necessity of supernatural revelation, and of the imputation of Christ's righteousness, and the operations of the Holy Spirit; and instead of these precious doctrines, offering the sufficiency of reason, or nature's light, to conduct men in the way to happiness. And these Socinian and Deistical tenets are not a little encouraged by the preachers of a rational or natural religion; I mean those dry moral preachers, who are more earnest in recommending a sort of pagan morality to the world, than in showing the excellency and usefulness of Christ for perishing sinners, and the nature and necessity of the work of his Spirit in applying his purchase, and of gospel-holiness to make them meet for heaven: who prefer a good saying, or moral precept, in some ancient philosopher, to the counsels of Jesus Christ, or the dictates of his apostles; vainly opposing the dim candle of man's reason to the sunshine of gospel light displayed in the holy scriptures. All which show how sadly the distemper of giddiness and unsettledness in religion prevails in our land, and how greatly we need the balm of Gilead to cure us of it. If it should be asked, What is it that makes the land reel so? We have the answer in the forecited text, Isa. xxiv. 20, "Because the transgression thereof is heavy upon it;" both the transgressions of the former and present age. Alas! there are many old sins little minded by us, old perjuries and treacherous dealings with God; old defection and backsliding, old persecutions and bloodshed. We have ground to fear that these old transgressions, together with those of a latter date, lie so heavy upon the land, that it is made to reel and stagger with the weight of them. O when shall we be disburdened of that load?

Barrenness and unfruitfulness with respect to conversion work, and the bringing forth of children to God, is a grievous malady which the church's womb seems to be smitten with at this day. Ah! how little is the doctrine of regeneration and the new birth known and experienced among us! How rare is conversion work now, in respect of former times! Our ears have heard, and our fathers have told us, what days of the Son of man have been seen in our land, when the Captain of our salvation took to himself his great power, and mounted his white horse of a triumphant gospel, and rode through our cities and congregations, with his crown on his head, his bow in his hand, and his sword girt on his thigh, going forth conquering and to conquer. When the arm of the Lord did thus awake and put on strength, how glorious were the effects! the preacher's tongue was loosed, the hearers' hearts were melted; the word of the Lord did run, and the gospel had free course. The enemies of the power of godliness were filled with confusion and astonishment, and made to acknowledge that God was among his people of a truth. Mockers and curious persons were caught by the word, and hundreds have been wrought upon by one sermon, and made to date their conversion from it. The angel came down and troubled the waters, and multitudes of diseased souls stepped in at once, and the power of the Lord was present to heal them. Such pleasant seasons have been of late in some parts of New England, and in others of the plantations: may the Lord continue them there, and cause them to spread through all our colonies in America. May he send them also to Britain and Ireland, and to the poor land where he hath had his dwelling in times past, that so "the wilderness and solitary place may be glad for them, and the desert may rejoice and blossom as the rose; the glory of Lebanon may be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon." Then should our land sing as in the days of old.

QUEST. O what may be the reason of the unfruitfulness of a preached gospel in the land where Christ hath had his glorious marchings in times past?

Ans. Surely we must justify the Lord, and leave our complaints upon ourselves. A holy God is provoked to withdraw his Spirit from the assemblies of professed Christians, because of their formality and hypocrisy, their divisions and contentions, their satisfying themselves with bare ordinances without the God of ordinances, without communion-occasions, without communion with God. The Holy Spirit and his gracious workings are so far from being sought after, that they are scarcely credited or believed; nay, by many they are reproached with the odious name of enthusiasm, whimsical notions, and melancholy imaginations. And may not God, in his righteous judgment, make ordinances a miscarrying womb and dry breasts to them?

Again, God, by our sins and backslidings, is provoked to call off the stage a godly and faithful set of ministers and Christians, who stood in the gap, and wrestled for God's presence and Spirit to ordinances, without sending others to fill their room; nay, instead of that, to suffer the church to be plagued with a set of earthly-minded preachers and students, who give sad discoveries of their carnal motives and ends in pursuing after the priest's office, that it is more to win stipends than to win souls, to get bread to themselves, than to get glory to God. Which surely is a fearful judgment and token of wrath against a poor sinful land.

Likewise, God is provoked to leave ministers, and deny them success, because of their defection from the uprightness, piety, and zeal of our godly ancestors, from their humility and self-denial, from their single aims at God's glory and the salvation of souls, from their dependence upon God, in the exercise of faith and prayer, for his presence and blessing upon their labours, and from their travailing in birth till Christ was formed in their people's souls. And finally, no doubt, many ministers are unsuccessful, by reason of the grudges and prejudices which they beget in their people's breasts against themselves, for swerving from reformation-principles, and concurring in violent settlements and intrusions upon parishes, whereby people are tempted to abhor the offerings of the Lord; and ignorance, error, profanation of the Lord's day, immoralities and disorders, are greatly encouraged. From whence it is too evident, that ministers are to be blamed as well as people for the present barrenness under the means of grace. O! that both they and we were helped to see the cause, and to cry for the balm of Gilead to cure us of it.

I proceed to the second head, in the method I laid down, to wit, to take notice of some of those dangerous symptoms which make our diseases seem incurable and desperate; for which there is yet balm in Gilead, and a physician there.

1. It is a dangerous symptom, when the body is universally distressed, and when there is a complication of diseases on it, and some of these of contrary natures. Then the patient's case is very hopeless, and the cure much despaired of, because what is good for one disease is bad for another. Thus, alas! it is with the body of Christ in our land. The church is sick not in one part, but over all, as it was in the prophet's time, Isa. i. 5, 6, "There is no soundness in it, nothing but wounds and diseases" of divers sorts. In some parts of the house a dangerous fire is kindled, in other parts deadly diseases, as tympanies, fevers, dropsies, and lethargies, prevail. One part is blown up with pride, another is in a fever of strife; another part is drowned in sensuality, and another deadened with a lethargy and spirit of slumber. And these diseases are of so contrary natures, that what is physic for the one, is death for the other. We may say with the psalmist, Psal. lxi. 12, "We go through fire and through water:" two contrary elements; what expels the one, cherisheth the other. Now, when our case is so desperate, is there any remedy for us? Yes, the balm of Gilead is a medicine that suits the most complex and dangerous case: see what David says of it, Psal. xxxiv. 19, "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." This he also found to his own sweet experience, Psal. xlii. 7, 8, "Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy water-spouts; all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me; yet the Lord will command his loving-kindness in the day-time, and in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life." David was like a shipwrecked man, almost swallowed up with the sea-billows from beneath, and at the same time near drowned with spouts of rain from above. Not only the powers of hell and earth were against him, but heaven seemed angry with him too. But praises be to our glorious Physician, who hath balm to answer the greatest varieties and contrarieties of our distempers. David blesseth him for it, Psal. ciii. 2, 3, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, who healeth all thy diseases."

2. It is a deadly symptom, when the body is in a violent hot fever, attended with great inflammations. This is very much our case; our distemper is hot and violent, and our wounds much inflamed with the old serpent's poison, and the rage and passions of men; yet the balm of Gilead can cure the most deadly wounds and inflammations; it can take out of them, not only the venom of the serpent's sting, and the heat of man's rage; but also the inflammation of God's wrath, which is worse than either.

3. When diseases are of long continuance, and rooted in the body, the cure is hard, Dent. xxviii. 59. Such are our maladies, which make us ready to say, there is no hope. Yet the balm of Gilead can cure the oldest and most rooted distemper. It can heal those who have been distressed for many years, as soon as those who have been ill but a few days. The Physician of Israel can as easily raise up his people when their bones are dry, as when just new dead, Ezek. xxxvii.

4. When all about the diseased look on their case as desperate, we lose hope. This is our case; all who view the church, look on her as sinking; and even those of the most faith are putting the question, "Can these dry bones live?" And we are apt to say of ourselves, with the poor captives, Ezek. xxxvii. 11, "Behold our bones are dried, our hope is lost, and we are cut off for our part." Yet even when all give up the case as desperate, the balm and physician in Gilead can effect a cure. We have an astonishing promise to the church in such a case, Jer. xxx. 17, "For I will restore health unto thee, I will heal thee of thy wounds," saith the Lord, "because they call thee an outcast, saying, this is Zion, whom no man seeketh after." Her case was hopeless, and therefore neglected by all, but even in that case the balm of Gilead can "bring health and cure," Jer. xxxiii. 6.

5. A disease is the more dangerous, when its threatening symptoms are not observed, so as to provide timely remedies. Ah! this is very much our case, we observe not our dangerous symptoms; though "the fire be kindled round about us, we lay it not to heart:" the impending clouds of wrath and judgments do not alarm us, so as to make us search and try our ways, and "turn again unto the Lord." The present calamities we groan under, as scarcity and decay of trade, war and bloodshed, losses and disappointments, the grievances of church and state, do not make us see the Lord's hand in them, nor hear his voice by them, so as to humble ourselves under his mighty hand, and turn to him with mourning and supplication, as he calls us. But we will still go on in our old courses without relenting. Our case is not unlike that of God's professing people of old, Isa. lvii. 17, "For the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him, I hid me, and was wroth." And yet, after all these tokens of God's anger, it is added, "He went on frowardly in the way of his heart." Now, can there be any remedy for him in such a case? Yes, the Lord saith there is even balm in Gilead for such a desperate condition, and which is most surprising, that the Physician himself will come and apply it, as he adds in ver. 18, "I have seen his ways and will heal him." In these hopeless circumstances I will step in myself, with the balm in my hand, which will heal him of his frowardness and preverseness, when nothing else can. Now who could have expected such a word in such a desperate-like case, and that there could be balm for such a froward distemper of heart! One might have thought God would have added, "I have seen his ways, and will damn him." But instead of that he says, "I have seen his ways, and will heal him." O! the condescending goodness and mercy of God to the chief of sinners.

6. A disease is judged desperate and incurable, when the patient loses his senses, or turns lethargic, that he cannot be awakened. Ah! we are become lethargic under our maladies, we have lost our spiritual senses in a great measure. Our hearing is gone, we hear not the voice of rods, nor the voice of mercies, the voice of conscience, nor the voice of God's word, nor do we set about the duties they loudly call us to. Our sight is departed from us, we see not the Lord's hand in his dispensations; when mercies come, we receive them like brutes, without seeing the hand that gives them, or rendering thanks to the giver. When afflictions come, and the Lord's hand is most visible in them, yet we see it not, like those, Isa. xxvi. 11, we see not the Achan, the sin which is clearly pointed at by the rod. Why? because a spirit of slumber and of deep sleep, hath fallen down upon ministers and professors, which have closed their eyes, according to Isa. xxix. 10. Our feeling is almost gone, we feel not the weight of sin, nor the stings and upbraidings of conscience for it, we groan not under the burden. We smell not the sweet savour of Christ's name, nor the precious ointments of his graces and comforts which draw souls unto him, Cant. i. 3, 4. We taste not the sweetness that is in his promises, and in the fruits of the blessed apple-tree. Alas! sabbaths and fast-days, ser-

WHO IS THE PHYSICIAN?

SERMON V.—"IS THERE NO BALM," &c. JER. viii. 22.

I PROPOSED, in the third place, to speak of the Physician who hath this balm for us. God himself is our physician. He is "Jehovah that healeth us," Exod. xv. 26. Our cure is the work of the whole Trinity, but especially of Jesus Christ, God incarnate, who came to the world with a commission to heal souls. This commission he opened and read at the beginning of his ministry, Luke iv. 18, and still after owned it to be his business to heal souls, Matt. ix. 12, 13. In this office of healer, he was held forth and typified of old by the "brazen serpent" that healed the stung Israelites, John iii. 14, and by the "Sun of righteousness" that riseth to us with healing under the wings, Mal. iv. 2, and by the "tree of life" whose leaves were for the healing of the nations, Rev. xxii. 2.

The Lord Jesus Christ being God-man, is nobly qualified to be our soul-physician; for, 1. He hath infinite knowledge and skill for taking up all diseases, with their causes, and the proper remedies for them, so that he can never mistake the case of the afflicted, nor make wrong applications for their cure. 2. He hath sovereign authority and almighty power, whereby he can command diseases to come and go at his pleasure. 3. He hath infinite pity and readiness to help the distressed: as he hath in him the compassion of a God, so he hath also the bowels of a man, which endows him with a peculiar tenderness of heart towards us, as being touched with the feeling of our infirmities; and hence he is inclined many times to come to the sick without being sent for, to the poor who have nothing to give him, and to be found of them who never sought him. On this account Christ is represented by the good Samaritan that came to the wounded man that fell among thieves, and was lying by the wayside, in a helpless case; the distressed man sent not for him, but he came of himself, he pitied him and took him up, and poured wine and oil into his wounds. (4.) He hath wonderful patience towards the distressed, he doth not leave them for their unthankful carriage, and the abuses he gets from them, but bears with them all, and resolutely goes on with his designed applications, till the cure be perfected. He knows if he should cast them off, none else could take them in hand, and death would infallibly be the issue.

That the Lord Jesus might convince us the more of his compassion and readiness to heal diseased souls, he readily cured men's bodies when he was on earth, and put none away that came to him. His design in this was to encourage us to come to him with our soul-maladies, and to afford us a strong prop to our faith, and an argument to plead with him, and say, "Lord, thou didst show compassion to diseased bodies that must rot in the earth, and wilt thou not be moved with pity to precious souls that will live for ever? Did the diseases of bodies draw out thy bowels, and shall not the wounds of souls affect thee much more? Was it not thy main errand to heal souls, O reject not those which are laid down at thy feet."

The fourth head. I proposed, in the fourth place, to inquire into the nature of the balm, and means of healing, which the Physician makes use of.

In the first place, the blood of Christ may justly be called the balm of Gilead, that heals souls, for it is the meritorious cause of our health and cure, and purchases all under-means of healing to us. This is evident from Isa. liii. 5, "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." Our glorious Physician saw that no less than his blood and stripes, his suffering and dying in our room, could satisfy justice, and obtain pardon to take away the guilt and punishment of sin, and procure the graces of the Spirit to remove the power and pollution of sin, and therefore he willingly sheds all his blood for curing us of the diseases of sin. This blood then is our healing balm. Though the scripture speaks of other means of healing, which our Physician makes use of, yet we are to understand that all these are used in subserviency to Christ's blood, which is the blessed meritorious mean of our cure, the only balm that procures all the other means of healing to us; some of which I shall mention; as,

I. The Spirit of God, with his saving operations in souls, is the great mean of healing, which our bleeding Saviour procured for us. He sends the Spirit to intinate the pardon of sin to the wounded conscience, and thereby cures the soul of its fears of wrath. And for curing the power and pollution of sin, he sends the Spirit to heal and change the nature, to subdue sin, infuse grace, and incline the soul to holiness. And to render the cure universal through all the faculties of the soul, he enlightens the understanding, renews the will, softens the heart, sanctifies the memory, makes the conscience tender and lively, and sets the affections upon right objects. Now, all these operations of the Spirit are the purchase of Christ's blood, as is clear from Gal. iii. 13, 14, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us, that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith." May the Lord fulfil that promise to us, for healing our sick souls and our sick land.

II. The word and ordinances of Christ are another mean he makes use of for healing our spiritual diseases. These are the leaves of the tree of life, which are for healing of the nations. As the word is a mean in the hand of Christ, and his Spirit for breaking and wounding the hard heart, and therefore called a hammer and a sharp sword; so it is also a mean of healing the wounded soul, by bringing healing promises to it, and prescribing remedies against sin, according to Psal. cvii. 20, "He sent his word and healed them, and delivered them from their destruction." The sacraments also are means of healing, as they seal the pardon of our sins, and bring cordials to our fainting hearts.

III. Afflictions are means of healing, made use of by our Physician. He sends crosses and losses to make us feel how bitter sin is, to cause us to search our wounds, to mourn over them, and resolve against sin for the future. Sanctified rods are the purchase of Christ's blood to his patients; they are his physic to purge away their sins, Isa. xxvii. 9, "By this shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit to take away their sin. So that believers, instead of murmuring, ought to bless God for their afflictions, seeing they are Christ's physic which he hath purchased for them at a dear rate.

IV. Stupendous providences are sometimes made use of by Christ as balm for his church's diseases, when he doth terrible things which they looked not for, as in Isa. lxi. 3. Thus he healed the fears of Israel, by opening a way for them in the Red sea. He healed their murmurings in the wilderness, by giving them waters out of the rock. So the Lord, by stupendous dispensations and revolutions, hath often brought relief and healing to his distressed church in our land, as in the years 1560, 1638, 1688, 1714, and at other times. O let us still remember the years of the right hand of the most High.

V. Faithful ministers are appointed as balm and means of healing to diseased souls. The great Physician sends them to dispense sound and wholesome doctrines for that end, 1 Tim. vi. 3; Tit. ii. 1. They are his apothecaries to weigh out, mix, qualify and prepare the medicines according to his prescriptions: this the apostle points at by a minister's "rightly dividing the word of truth," 2 Tim. ii. 15; and Christ himself means it by the "steward's giving his household their portion of meat in due season," Luke xii. 42. It is happy for a diseased church, when God gives them understanding of the times (like the men of Issachar) to know what Israel ought to do in difficult cases. And it is as unhappy for her, when they are left to mistake the proper means, and sometimes to inflame her wounds, instead of healing them. It is the Lord that must give ministers understanding in all things, 2 Tim. ii. 7. May they be helped always to depend upon him for it.

VI. Reforming magistrates have been made use of as balm for the church's distempers, when the Lord stirs them up to restore her liberties, redress her grievances, and to use their authority to curb error and vice, idolatry and superstition, to call synods, to consult about reformation, and excite ministers to their duty. Such balm were David, Solomon, Jehoshaphat, Joash, Hezekiah, Josiah, and Nehemiah, to the church of God in their times. And so also were Ahasuerus, Cyrus, Darius, Artaxerxes, and other heathen magistrates, by the Lord's turning their hearts to favour his church in their dominions. And when the Lord's time of fulfilling his promises to her doth come, he can still make strangers to build up her walls, and their kings to minister to her: and kings to prove her nursing-fathers, and queens her nursing-mothers, according to Isa. lx. 10; and Isa. xlix. 23.

VII. Godly praying persons in every station are as balm to a diseased land, and the poorest of them may help to heal it by their prayers; even as a little child may bring physic, and present it to its sick mother. O that all the children of Zion were thus employed at present, when there is such need for it. The Lord encourages them to it, by promising that the prayer of faith shall save the sick, James v. 15, and contribute to heal the whole land. 2 Chron. vii. 17, "If my people, who are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land." Wherefore, as long as God is pleased to preserve a praying remnant in the land, however deadly our diseases be, there is hope in Israel concerning it; seeing there is still good balm in the land. May poor Scotland never be without it!

The fifth head. I proposed, in the next place, to inquire into the physician's method of applying the balm, and performing the cure of the diseased.

Our blessed Physician first makes sinners sick before he makes us whole; that is, he makes sinners sensible of their disease, by convincing them of sin and misery, and humbling them under the view of it, that so they may prize Christ and his healing balm; such are said to be sick, Mat. ix. 12. Now this preparatory sickness hath several things in it; as,

1. A discovery of the dangerous nature of our disease, sin, that is the root of all the other plagues and miseries which we complain of; that it draws down the wrath and curse of God upon us, and puts us in a state of damnation.

2. A solicitous care and thoughtfulness about our disease, as being of a deadly nature; which makes us restless and inquisitive about it, like the jailor, to say, "What shall we do to be saved?" What shall we do to be healed? To get our sins pardoned, and our natures changed? Is there any balm or physician for us?

3. There is in it a dissatisfaction with all earthly comforts and enjoyments, as helpless things to us under our disease. The sick man can take no pleasure in eating and drinking, sleeping, or any worldly thing, while his disease continues; bring gold, silver, honours, pleasures, or friends to him, he answers, like Haman, "All these things avail me nothing," while I want Christ's healing balm to my soul, which is every hour in hazard of the second death.

4. The sick man groans under the burden of his disease, he hath grief and sorrow of heart for sin, like the Psalmist, Psal. xxxviii. 6, 18, "I go mourning all the day long, I will be sorry for my sin." Why? it is a disease of my own bringing on, I have given the wounds to myself, and made my soul loathsome to God. O what a fool and beast have I been!

5. The sick man is brought to despair of all healing and cure in his own doings or contrivances: all his former refuges and confidences are dashed in pieces, and he joins with penitent Israel, Hos. xiv. 3, "Ashur shall not save us, we will not ride upon horses, neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods." We will not any more make balm of our prayers, of our tears, or resolutions, we must seek it from another quarter.

6. The sick man sees his absolute need of a physician, and of one that is skilful, and hath balm of infinite virtue, even of Christ, who is able to save to the uttermost, and can cure the deepest and deadliest wounds. It is he, and he only, saith he, who hath an infinite fulness of merit and spirit that can suit my desperate malady. None but the eternal Son of God can be my

Physician: "O that I knew where to find him!"

7. The diseased man is brought to a willingness to submit to the physician's method and prescriptions, and to say with Paul, Acts ix. 6, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Let him cut me, lance me, blood me, purge me. Let him put me to what pain he pleaseth, let him lay me never so low, I will submit. Let him prescribe a potion never so bitter, I will drink it. Let Christ do with me what he will, if he cure my disease, all is well. I will not haggle with him for a right eye, or a right hand, or any darling sin, or any thing dear to me in the world; no, every thing shall be parted with at his command. Thus the sinner, by the great Physician's power and skill, is made sick and sensible, humble and willing, in order to prepare him for the healing balm.

Another step which the Physician takes to cure the diseased man. He by his Spirit works faith in his soul; that is, he powerfully persuades and enables him to embrace Christ as his Saviour, and apply the balm of his blood and merits unto his wounds, for removing guilt, pardoning sin, and reconciling God to his soul. Now, when this is done, the danger of death is over, John v. 24, "He that believeth shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death to life." Faith is a healing grace, for it is the instrument which applies the healing balm of Christ's blood to the diseased soul. Every touch of faith's hand brings healing, nay, every one of its looks are healing, Isa. xlv. 22, "Look unto me, and be saved." Thus a look of a stung Israelite brought healing to his wound. So Peter's look to Christ healed him of apostacy. Hence Christ said to several diseased persons, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." So here, when once faith applies Christ's blood, the guilt of sin is cured, its reigning power subdued, and the strength of the disease is broken, it will not prove mortal.

QUEST. How shall I know whether I have got this healing faith, faith which hath made me whole?

Ans. See whether it hath the evidence of a healing faith. 1. Hath thy faith brought thee to a peremptory resolution to lie at the Physician's door, and look to him alone for healing, saying, If I die, it shall be at Christ's door, for there is no other name given under heaven, nor among men, whereby I can be healed. 2. Hath thy faith made thee fall heartily in with the gospel-method of healing, and to approve it as a beautiful contrivance, and say, "God's covenant of grace is well-ordered in all things, and suitable to all my maladies; Christ the Mediator of it is a noble Physician, and complete Saviour, and therefore I choose him in all his offices, and accept of all his prescriptions for my diseased soul: I accept of his blood to wash me, his righteousness to cover me, his Spirit to sanctify me, his word to direct me, and his laws to govern me."

3. See whether thy faith hath determined thee to open frankly to thy Physician, and entertain him in the best rooms of thy soul. When Christ knocked by his Spirit, did thy faith make thee willing to yield and surrender all thy powers and faculties to him? Didst thou bring the keys of all the rooms of thy soul to Christ, and particularly of thy will, saying, "Lord, come, choose where thou wilt lodge, where thou wilt lie, and what thou wilt have, for all I have is devoted to thee, and at thy command." Now, O man, if thou hast got such a faith as this, then thy faith hath made thee whole, the healing balm is applied, the cure begun, and shall assuredly be perfected at length.

Another step of the soul's cure is by the renewing and sanctifying work of the Spirit. As soon as the Physician gives faith to apply the balm, he takes the soul into his hospital, places him among his patients, whose disease is broken, and who are on the way of recovery. He takes every believing soul under his special care, he kindly visits and attends them, and carries on their cure by his Spirit's renewing and sanctifying work. And this he doth by degrees, for the wounds which sin hath given our natures are so deep, that they take long time to heal; nay, it will take all our days before the cure be finished. But though the cure be slow, it is sure.

QUEST. By what steps or degrees doth the Physician carry on the cure in believers?

Ans. 1. By his Spirit in regeneration; he cures the mind of its blindness, the heart of its hardness, the nature of its perverseness, the will of its backwardness, the memory of its slipperiness, the conscience of its benumbedness, and the affections of their disorder; all this according to his gracious promise, Ezek. xxvi. 26, 27, "I will take away the stony heart, and give you an heart of flesh; and I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes." It is by his Spirit within us that the cure is carried on.

2. He heals his people by intimating peace and comfort to their disquieted souls, and assuring them that God's anger is turned away from them. As the grant of pardon cures the guilt of sin, so the Spirit's intimation of it pacifies the troubled conscience, and brings healing to the bones which were broken by sin. The believer's sore still runs in the night until this comes. Now when the Physician is pleased to quiet his people's minds, comfort their drooping spirits, and deliver them from the apprehensions of God's wrath, he remarkably advances his healing work in them, according to Psal. xxx. 2, 3, &c.; vi. 2; Hos. xiv. 4.

3. He carries on the cure of his people, by sanctifying their natures, infusing grace and holiness into all the faculties of their souls, and adding new measures and degrees thereof from time to time. Increase of grace, and progress in sanctification, is a continual healing of the disease of sin, according to Mal. iv. 2, "The Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings, and ye shall grow up as calves in the stall." Healing and growing are there joined together. The more we grow in sanctification, the more our cure advances. This growth indeed is often insensible in believers, yea, sometimes they will be seized with new distempers, and be getting new wounds, so that the work will seem to go back; yet, notwithstanding, the virtue of Gilead's balm will infallibly prevail in order to the perfecting of the soul's cure.

4. He carries on his healing work by cherishing weak grace in his people, and blessing the means of grace, for strengthening and increasing it; and so he makes good his gracious promise and character, Matt. xii. 20, "A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench." We have an instance of this in the case of Thomas. How tenderly did he blow on his smoking flax, and cherish his weak faith! John xx. 17, "Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands: and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side, and be not faithless but believing."

He advances the cure by weakening indwelling sin and corruption, and removing those distempers which hinder the growth of grace; he looses their bonds, and frees them from their fetters and strainings in duty, and sets them at liberty to "walk before the Lord in the land of the living," and even to "sing in the ways of the Lord," Psal. cxxxviii. 5.

6. He causes his "north and south wind," with their healing influences, to "blow upon their gardens and spices," and so puts life in their graces, and draws them forth to exercise in performing of duty. Thus he quickens faith to embrace and rest on a crucified Jesus, and kindles love to entertain him; and he sharpens the soul's appetite after its food.

7. He carries on the cure in his people, by giving them new discoveries of Christ, and of his fulness and suitableness to their needs, to draw out their faith and love to him. This was one great design in sending the Spirit into the world, John xvi. 14, "He shall glorify me, for he shall receive of mine and show it unto you." Now, how doth he glorify Christ, but by showing them his fulness and excellency, and making them willing to part with all things for Christ and his righteousness, and content to borrow all they want out of Christ's fulness, and to make Christ their all, in justification, and in sanctification, and in glorification. The more the soul makes use of Christ, and lives near him, it is still so much the nearer to perfect health.

8. The Spirit carries on the cure in his people by causing them to breathe after a full conformity to Christ and his image, that their sanctification may be completed, and they freed of all complaints of indwelling-sin and imperfect services. Hence they are made to cry with David, Psal. cxix. 5, "O that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes!" And with Paul, Rom. vii. 25, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" The stronger the soul's breathings are of this kind, the nearer it is to perfect health and cure.

The last and finishing step of the diseased soul's cure is at death; it is only then that the soul is made perfectly whole. Then it is that our great Physician, by his Spirit, pulls up all the roots and seeds of the disease, and makes the soul perfect in holiness, and meet for entering into heaven, where only a state of perfect health is enjoyed. It is in heaven only that sin and misery, diseases and complaints, can find no place, and all pain, sorrow, and crying, shall pass away. There, all Christ's recovered patients shall have perfect and uninterrupted health through all the ages of eternity. May we then have grace to be always looking out and longing for that happy state and healthful place, where the inhabitants shall never say they are sick, being all forgiven and healed of their sin and iniquity! May our blessed Physician fit us for that place, by beginning, carrying on, and completing our cure from the disease of sin, by all those ways and means of healing which he hath appointed, that to his name may be ascribed glory in the highest, through endless ages. Amen.

SERMON VI.—IS THERE NO BALM, ETC. JER. VIII. 22.

I now proceed to the last thing proposed in the method I laid down, viz.

THE APPLICATION.

I. This doctrine serves to inform us of the amazing riches of divine love in providing a Physician for our diseased souls, and such a Physician as Jesus Christ the eternal Son of God! One that hath infinitely more knowledge and skill than all the angels in heaven. One that hath infinite compassions wrapt up in human bowels. One that hath both a tender heart and a tender hand, Psal. cxlvii. 3. One that suffered his side to be opened, and his heart to be pierced, that his blood might become balm for our wounds. Behold an astonishing cure! a matchless Physician! Other physicians are prodigal of their patient's blood, but sparing of their own; but our glorious Physician saves his patient's blood, and pours out his own: and of it he makes an incomparable balm for our wounds.

Again, we may see what cause we have to bless God for his distinguishing goodness to Adam's diseased family in general, and to our diseased land in particular. The angels that sinned had no physician sent to them, but we have a matchless one sent to us the sons of men. There are many opulent nations in the world who never heard the news of this Physician, and his healing balm! but they are proclaimed in all corners in Scotland. These have the gold and riches of the Indies, but want the balm of Gilead, which is of infinite more value than all they have.

II. We may improve this doctrine in a use of lamentation for the sick and distressed case of our land, and multitudes of souls therein dying of their wounds, notwithstanding the gospel-offers of the glorious Physician, and his excellent balm, which they have in plenty. Need I to say any thing to instruct our distressed and mournful condition? Surely, if the abounding of infidelity and immorality, excess, and extravagance, error and schism, divisions and breaches, jealousies and animosities, complaints and grievances; if divided minds and disjointed hearts; if reelings and staggerings, if altar against altar, if doctrine against doctrine, if worship against worship, if post by post, and threshold by threshold, be symptoms of a diseased land and church that needs the balm of Gilead; then may we conclude our case is bad, and our need great. Ah, now it is a sickly time with the land, and multitudes are so distressed, every corner is like an hospital or infirmary, and few of them are cured. How many are languishing and dying around us, of one disease or another, either of the plague of unbelief, the stone of the heart, the giddiness of the head, the gangrene of error, the falling sickness of apostacy, the palsy of unsteadiness, the lethargy of security, the tympany of pride, the frenzy of passion, the cancer of envy, the leprosy of vice, the dropsy of drunkenness, the fever of lust, the running ulcer of out-breakings, inward decays, consumption of spiritual strength, or some other spiritual distemper! Ah, our diseases are past reckoning. What numbers about us are seized with feebleness of knees, and weakness of hands, so that they can neither bow down the one nor lift up the other in prayer to their Maker, and yet never are sensible of their misery, nor inquire for the balm of Gilead, or the Physician there.

We may take up a lamentation over the sick and dying among us, as the prophet did over the Jews, in the verses following my text, Jer. ix. i, "O that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughters of my people." Oh! what slaughter doth the plague of sin make in houses and families both in city and country! There is reason for a greater cry among us, than that in Egypt, when their first-born were slain: of which it is said, Exod. xii. 30, "And there was a great cry in Egypt, for there was not a house where there was not one dead." But ah! our case is worse, for we have many houses where there is not one alive, but all dead spiritually, and ready to die eternally. This, alas! is the case of this poor land, notwithstanding the sovereign balm that abounds in it.

QUEST. Whence is it that so few are healed, when the balm and Physician are so near?

ANS. The cause is surely in us: For, 1. Many are not sensible of their diseases, nor feel their wounds: they want a principle of spiritual life, and have no sense of pain; and hence they complain of their inward plagues or ill hearts. The dead have no feeling, no cure, no fear. And therefore many ignorant people say they have good hearts to God, and thank God for it. Alas! the most part are dead, see no need of this balm, and will not apply it.

2. Many are in love with their disease, more than with the Physician. They may perhaps speak against sin, and even pray against it, but in their hearts they desire not that God should hear them. God may say to them as in Psal. lii. 3, "Thou lovest evil more than good." And how can such expect to be healed?

3. Many neglect the season of healing, and do not seek after the Physician and his balm in due time. They slight Christ and his gospel-offers, in the days of youth and health, and never begin to inquire for him till it be too late.

4. Many will not trust Christ wholly for healing, but have a squint eye to other physicians, as to their duties, prayers, tears, &c. But, my friends, either Christ must have the sole honour of your cure, or he will not be your Physician.

5. Many will not submit to Christ's prescription for healing; they will not take the bitter portion of self-searching, or repentance, or contrition, or godly sorrow; nor swallow the pill of mortification, or self-denial: and therefore they remain unhealed. O that we could lament over them, and bewail their ease before the Lord.

III. A third use of this doctrine may be of consolation: and surely the news it brings of the incomparable balm of Gilead, and the Physician there, may afford comfort to the sick church and land wherein we dwell, however distressed her case be. Though it is our duty to bewail it, yet we are not to mourn as those who have no hope. Her wounds indeed are deep, and her breaches wide, yet her case is not desperate while there is balm in Gilead, and a physician there. Surely the balm hath not lost its virtue, nor the Physician his compassion towards us; nay, we still have pregnant instances of his mercy and pity, amidst the wrath-like dispensations towards Scotland, which are signs that our good Samaritan hath not passed by us on the other side, like the Levite, but keeps in the way where we are, and looks with pity on our wounds, willing to apply his balm to them. Yea, his bowels still yearn to us, as of old to Ephraim, and make him say, "How shall I give thee up, O Scotland? How shall I deliver thee? My heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together."

OBJECT. Seeing it is notorious that the Physician hath given up many famous churches, when their diseases were desperate; what ground have we under such dangerous symptoms to expect he will pity us, and apply his balm for our recovery?

ANS. We have still several grounds of hope; such as,

1. Seeing the Lord hath begun to pour out his vials upon antichrist, we may conclude he will not cease till they be all poured out; and seeing thereby antichrist hath been in a deadly consumption these 200 years past, he must surely expire at length. And though sometimes he may seem to recover a little, yet the Lord assures us, that he will at length "consume him with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy him with the brightness of his coming," 2 Thes. ii. 8. By which he means his coming in the brightness of gospel-light, attended with the down-pouring of his Spirit. Now, when we hear of the Lord's causing his gospel sun-shine to arise and spread in any place, with the out-pouring of his blessed Spirit, for convincing and converting of souls, the Lord encourages us to look out for the coming of his kingdom, and the downfall of antichrist.

2. We have encouragement to hope from that prophecy in Rev. xvii. 16, which foretels that the ten horns or kingdoms which formerly supported antichrist, shall be instruments of his destruction: it is said, "They shall hate the whore, and make her desolate." Now, the Lord hath made Britain one of those ten kingdoms that hate her, and therefore he will still preserve (as formerly he hath done in the most perilous times) a goodly remnant that shall be the prevailing party there, to accomplish that grand design. And seeing the Lord is raised up out of his holy habitation, and hath already begun the work, he will surely carry it on, finish it at last, however it be interrupted, and things appear unlikely for a time.

3. We may draw hope from the second psalm, and other scripture-texts, in which God the Father promiseth to "give his Son the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession, and that the isles shall see his salvation, and wait for his law," which places take in Scotland, a nation, (though remote and despised) to which the Lord hath showed a distinguishing respect, by sending the gospel early to it, advancing reformation to a great pitch in it, pouring out his Spirit remarkably on it, taking it solemnly into covenant with himself, appearing often for the interest of religion, when almost sunk in it, and raising up deliverers for it when oppressed by enemies. Now, these signal proofs of our Redeemer's kindness, give us ground to hope he will not give up the land that from eternity was given him by his glorious Father, and that in time was so solemnly surrendered to him by our fathers, who are now at their rest.

4. There is a mourning and praying remnant in the land, who are greatly affected with the want of God's Spirit and presence in ordinances, who desire to lament after the Lord, and to sigh and cry for all the abominations found among us. And though the glory of the Lord be gone up from the cherub, yet it seems still to hover and stand over the threshold of the door, and many are pleading and protesting against his departure: and God hath a regard to the prayers and tears of a faithful remnant, Psal. xii. 5; cii. 13, 14.

5. It is a hopeful token for the land, when there is a stir and noise among the dry bones of the young generation, when these are awakened, and brought under convictions, and persuaded to turn from their old customs and companions, and to look towards Christ and heaven. Blessed be God for what is to be seen of this in some places: O that it were general, and over all! This would be a pledge of God's continuing his abode with us; for he will not forsake the work of his own hands, nor abandon the pledges of his grace. Wherefore, let us earnestly wish and pray to see more of the Spirit's work among the young in our day.

6. Many of God's worthies, who are now in glory, have gone off the stage in the belief and persuasion, that God would yet arise and have mercy on his Zion in this land; that he would signally build her up, and appear in his glory; yea, that there would be more glorious gospel-days seen in Scotland than they or their fathers had beheld; and we are encouraged to hope that God will not let the words of his dying saints fall to the ground.

7. The accounts we have lately got of the effusions of God's Spirit, and the displays of sovereign grace in the conversion of souls, through the English plantations in America, and other parts of the world, give us ground to hope that God is about to accomplish his promises to his church in the latter days, when the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord. Now, if the King of Zion hath already begun his circuit, as if he designed to ride in triumph through his churches, can we think he will pass by Scotland, where he hath a waiting and wrestling remnant, looking out, and ready to stop him with their cry, and even to cast forth a flood of tears in his way? Oh! will not ancient kindness then revive, and his heart warm to his covenanted land, where his dwelling hath been, and his goings seen in the times of old! Oh! may not poor Scotland also plead for a visit, according to the multitude of his tender mercies? Indeed, the divisions of Reuben, and our long degeneracy, may occasion great thoughts and searchings of heart about our case: yet the foregoing considerations may encourage us to wait and pray in hope, however dark and cloudy the day be, especially seeing our blessed Physician hath not taken away his healing balm from us, but still upholds and preserves it pure in the land.

QUEST. Seeing there is balm in the land, and the Physician willing to apply it, why is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered? How is it that Scotland's wounds are so long of healing?

ANS. 1. God in his wisdom may order it so, that our wounds may be more laid open, and the corruption thereof better discovered, for our deeper humiliation. So God kept Israel wandering "forty years in the wilderness, to humble them and prove them, and to know what was in their heart:" Deut. viii. 2. The continuance of wounds and grievances is needful for the trial and discovery of many; for thereby such who were under covert are made known, and the corrupt distinguished from the sincere: the falseness and rottenness of many had not been made evident, if wounds had not been so long kept open, and grievances continued.

2. The cure may be postponed to take our hearts wholly off from the creatures, and to convince us of the insufficiency of all other physicians beside the Physician in Israel. We do not naturally come to God, until we see there is help for us no where else: while there is any view of relief from creatures, we go first to them; so we find, when "Ephraim saw his sickness, and Judah his wound," the first physicians they sought to were the Assyrians and king Jarib, who could not heal them, Hos. v. 13. Upon which account we see the judgment is not only continued, but increased; for the Lord saith in the following verses, that he "will not tear, but go away" from them; and his design therein is to make them turn to himself as their only Physician, which at length they are brought to; for, Hos. vi. 1, they say, "Come, and let us return to the Lord: for he hath torn, and he will heal us, he hath smitten, and he will bind us up." It would be a happy effect, if our disappointments from the creatures would humble us for our sin and folly, and bring us off all things, to look to God himself only for healing.

3. Diseases continue unhealed when the causes thereof are secret and undiscovered. We see Israel continued in a distressed case, as long as Achan's accursed thing lay hid in his tent. All the humiliation and prayers of Joshua and the elders of Israel, Josh. vii. could not heal them, till the accursed thing was laid open and discovered. And this should put us on to try and search more narrowly, if there be not some secret sin of this land undiscovered, some Achan in the camp, some Jonah hid under deck, which makes the sea to work, and grow more tempestuous; so that, let mariners row as they will, there is no getting into the harbour of peace. Surely some accursed thing is overlooked by us, such as our old covenant-breaking, persecution, bloodshed, our contempt of the Lord Jesus, our giving the world his room, &c. May these hid evils be discovered; which continue our storm, and perpetuate our diseases, so that there is no healing for us.

4. Our wounds are so long of healing, because we do not submit to the Physician's directions; we will not abstain from things which inflame our wounds, such as the invading of the rights of Christ and his church; nor humble ourselves for old and late sins; we will not put honour upon free grace, nor make use of the balm of our Physician's blood: we decline to set about extraordinary fasting, humiliation, and prayer, and say, What a weariness is it! We do not cry and wrestle for the down-pouring of the Spirit, that only can apply the balm, and heal our land, but look to other medicines. Many, alas! though they complain of their disease, are not willing to part with it, but have a secret liking to it. Were we once brought to see our disease, to value our Physician, to be wholly resigned to his will, and to say with Paul, "Lord, what would thou have us to do?" there would be hope in Israel concerning us.

IV. A fourth use of this doctrine may be of examination. And I would exhort every one to try if they have yet come to Christ, and got his healing balm applied to them. For though believers are not perfectly cured in this life, yet when they come to Christ by faith, they share of the healing virtue of his blood, and are put in the way of healing. The force of their disease is broken, and the Spirit takes them under cure. Examine yourselves, then, if the healing work be begun in you. I offer you some remarks of it, see if you can apply them to yourselves.

1. Were you ever brought the length to have such a sense of your sores, and such a feeling of your wounds, as to be content to give all the world for the balm of Gilead to them? Such a lively feeling, where it is, is a hopeful token; whereas those who are still easy about sin, never saw it so as to hate it, or make serious inquiry for the Physician, their wound is unhealed.

2. Is your drought abated, I mean, your thirst after sin and the world; are you now out of love with them? this saith, the strength of your disease is broken. But if you be still in love with the world, or any predominant sin, or go in sin without remorse, your disease continues.

3. Have you a better appetite for your food than formerly? do you relish the ordinances and means of communion with God more than before? it is a good sign. But if you have no liking to these, your distemper remains.

4. Have you got a high esteem of your Physician, and a heart-affection to him: it is a good token: for it is natural for people to esteem and love those who have cured their diseases, and saved their lives; so was it with the blind man, John ix. that was cured by Christ: he had a great esteem of him, and all the reproaches cast upon him by his enemies could by no means alter his thoughts of him.

5. It is a good sign if you make your Physician kindly welcome to your heart and house; if you give him the best entertainment you have, and guard against every thing that would offend him. But those who shut their doors against the Physician, and refuse access to precious Christ, they are still under their disease.

6. Can you abide the light better than before? Are you brought the length to love searching sermons, and those ministers that would search to the bottom of your wounds, in order to a more thorough cure? Are you more desirous than ever to have sin discovered? Then it is a good sign. But if you shun the light, and desire, like sick persons, to have the curtains drawn upon you; or if you love those prophets best who would heal your wounds slightly, and only skin them over to you, saying, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace; as those in Jer. vi. 14, then your disease remains.

7. Do you now see more and more of the vanity of all other medicines besides the balm of Gilead? If you now see the utter insufficiency of the balm of your convictions, resolutions, prayers, tears, reformatiions, duties, &c. to heal your wounds, it is a good token; but if you are still trusting to any of these, you remain unhealed.

8. Have you attained to the frame of the thankful leper, who, when he was healed, turned back, fell down at Christ's feet, glorified God, and gave him thanks? as in Luke xvii. 15, 16. Have you got humble and thankful hearts? Do you desire with the psalmist to bless the Lord with your souls, and all that is within you to bless his holy name, for healing your wounds and diseases, as in Psal. ciii. 1, 3, then it is a good sign.

9. Are you more able for labour and service than formerly? Do you find more strength and willingness to run on God's errands, fight his battles, and perform commanded duties? It is a sign of recovery: for we see what is foretold concerning the happy effects of this balm of Gilead in gospel times, Isa. xxxiv. 5, 6, "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the lame man shall leap as an hart."

10. Have you a holy jealousy and fear of every thing that might entangle you or draw you into sin? That is surely a good sign. We see what Christ said to the impotent man whom he had healed, John v. 14, "Behold thou art made whole, sin no more." As it is the duty, so it will be the inclination of every healed soul to guard against wounding itself any more. It will be the earnest desire of that soul that it may not go back to the house of Jonathan, and its former distressed condition again. Now, if you can apply one or more of these marks to yourselves, then you may conclude that Christ hath taken you under cure: his balm is applied to you, and the work of healing is begun. May we all feel this in ourselves, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

EXHORTATION TO COME TO CHRIST FOR HEALING.

SERMON VII.—"IS THERE NO BALM IN GILEAD?" JER. viii. 22.

V. HAVING improved the doctrine in several uses, I proceed to a fifth use, namely of exhortation. And here, in the name of the Lord, I exhort and beseech all poor diseased souls to come to the blessed Physician Jesus Christ, who hath excellent balm for healing all their wounds and diseases, be they ever so desperate. O sick souls, why are you so unwilling to come and be healed? If your bodies be sick, and a famous Physician near, there is no small stir in riding and travelling to him for help. But though your soul be deadly sick, and in immediate hazard of eternal death, and the great Healer just at hand; how little motion is there amongst you towards him! How amazing is the stupidity of the world, which is no better than a common hospital! Though every man in it be like the man that fell among thieves, Luke x. 37, robbed and deadly wounded; yet very few are groaning for this good Samaritan to come and bind up their wounds. How desirable would it be to see diseased sinners come flocking to Christ with their soul-maladies, like the inhabitants of Gennesareth with their bodily ailments, when Christ landed among them, Mark vi. 55, 56, there it is said, "They ran through that whole region round about, and began to carry about in beds those that were sick, where they heard he was. And whithersoever he entered into villages, or cities, or country, they laid the sick in the streets, and besought him that they might touch if it were but the border of his garment; and as many as touched him were made whole." Well, did Christ refuse liberty to any of those sick persons to touch him? No, they were all welcome, whatever their sickness was, be it ever so deadly or desperate. And this our blessed Jesus caused to be recorded here for your encouragement to come to him with your soul-distresses. O to see such a stir among you about your souls, as was among that people about their bodies! Where else can you go with them but to Jesus Christ, the only Physician of souls? If you go to the other physicians, it will just befall you as it did that poor woman which had an issue of blood twelve years, Mark v. 26, 27. She went to many physicians, and spent all that she had, and was nothing better, but grew worse, till at last she came to Christ, who cured her for nothing.

In prosecuting this exhortation, I shall address myself to several sorts of diseased souls. 1. The insensible and secure. 2. The sensible and feeling. 3. Those who are in the way of healing and recovery.

I. I begin with the insensible, those who know not their diseases, nor feel their wounds, and therefore see no need of the balm of Gilead, or the Physician there. As there are multitudes killed by ignorance, so great numbers are undone by self-flattery. Many apprehend themselves to be sound and whole, who in the mean time are mortally sick and dying. Solomon saith there is a generation of such self-conceited persons, Prov. xxx. 12. In such a case was the church of Laodicea, Rev. iii. 17. How foolishly did that proud Pharisee flatter himself? Luke xviii. 11, 12. He thought himself perfectly well, sound, and whole, when his soul was deadly sick, and ready to drop into hell. In like manner do many deceive themselves. Ah! they never communed with their own hearts, never took their souls aside to inquire if they be yet under the mortal disease wherewith they were born; or if they have gone to the soul-physician for his healing balm. In order to awaken such secure thoughtless souls, consider these few things:

1. While you are insensible of your disease, your case is highly dangerous and miserable. Why? (1.) You are unconverted, unsanctified, and dying in your sins, John viii. 24. To die in your sins is infinitely worse than to die in a dungeon among serpents; for these cursed serpents, your sins, will go to the grave with you as your companions, and to the tribunal with you as your accusers, and to hell with you as your tormentors.

(2.) Your souls, while diseased, are most loathsome to God; for you are not only without the image and Spirit of God, but you are swarming with the vermin of sin and filthy lusts. (3.) You are slaves to the devil, drudging night and day at his work, grinding at his mill, and feeding on his husks; he hath you in fetters, but you are insensible of it: Satan deals with you as the Philistines with Samson, puts out your eyes that you may not see your chains. (4.) Your whole actions, natural, civil, and religious, are all an abomination to God. Not only your eating and drinking, buying and selling; but also your praying and communicating, are abhorred, as being without faith in Jesus Christ. Besides, the leprosy of sin which overspreads you, defiles all your best performances. (5.) Your disease is still the more dangerous, that you are not sensible of it; for while it is so, you are out of the way of healing, according to Matt. ix. 12. The whole see no need of a physician. Awake, therefore, O secure soul, consider thy case, and flee to the great Physician for help; until you see your misery, you will not prize the remedy.

2. Consider, though you be most miserable and distressed by sin, yet you have the balm of Gilead freely offered to you in the gospel, that can heal and save the most diseased soul; Isa. xlv. 22, "Look unto me," saith Christ, "and be ye saved." And though you have been stout-hearted against God, yet, saith he, "Hearken unto me, I bring near my righteousness to you," Isa. xlv. 12, 13.

It is a pleasure to him to bring this balm near to you, and to see poor sinners willing to make use of it; for, saith he, Ezek. xviii. 32, "I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye." See also, Ezek. xxxiii. 2.

3. Consider how long you have slighted this balm already; wherefore, if you neglect it any longer, your day of grace may come to an end, and your healing-time go over; so that, when you would be healed, the balm may be far from you. Wherefore improve your day, like that people in Capernaum, Luke iv. 40, "Now when the sun was setting, all they who had any sick with divers diseases, brought them unto him, and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them." Go you, O diseased souls, and do likewise. Many of you have delayed till the sun is at the setting, the sun of the gospel, the sun of your life, the sun of your health and strength. O then, make haste before the sun set, to bring your sick souls to Christ to be cured. For "now is the accepted time," 2 Cor. vi. 2. Now is your healing day. And if you should lose this day of your healing, to-morrow may be the day of your eternal wounding.

QUEST. But what shall we do to attain to a sense and feeling of our wounds, in order to healing?

Ans. Take this advice:

1. Be diligent in the use of all outward means: read the scriptures, and get the knowledge of your lost state in Adam, and the way of salvation through a surety's righteousness. Attend the preaching of the word, which is the usual means of conversion: be not absent from the ordinary occasions of it, lest you miss that sermon that was most suitable to your case, and might have been the means of saving your souls. The devil is at pains to keep you from some sermons, for he may know what ministers are preparing beforehand, and when he sees anything coming that is likely to touch you, he will contrive some temptation to keep you back from hearing it.

2. Study to affect your hearts with what you hear of your moral disease, the sinful natures you brought into the world, their pollution, rebellion, and enmity against God. Think upon the many acts of rebellion you have broke out against heaven. Think also how near you are, while unhealed, to everlasting burning, yea, every moment on the brink of the fiery furnace, and kept out of it only by the thread of life, which may be broke by any bit of bread you eat, by slipping of a foot, by stumbling of a horse, and by hundreds of distempers, which, like so many lighted candles, are ready to burn the thread, and let your diseased souls drop into the pit for ever.

3. When God shoots the arrow of conviction into the conscience, do not seek to shake it out till it reach the end for which it was sent. Be not like those who go to their callings to work it out, or to their cups to drink it out, or to their beds to sleep it out, or to their games to divert it out. But go rather to your knees, and pray that the wound may be medicinal and saving, that it may be as deep as needful, and the power of the Lord may be present to heal you. Apply to Jesus your Physician, that he may take out the arrow with his own hand, and bring the balm of Gilead to the wound.

4. Apply to the Holy Spirit, who is the author of saving convictions, and implore his gracious influences; for the dry bones stir not till he breathe upon them. It is the office of the Holy Ghost to apply Christ's purchase to you, and saving convictions are the first part of that purchase he makes you partake of. Plead then with him, "Lord, come and do thine office; art thou not as willing to apply as Christ was to purchase? Is not the Spirit the applier as freely offered as Christ the Physician? Is not that a free promise, Ezek. xxxvi, "I will put my Spirit within you?"

It depends upon no condition in us, only it is said, ver. 37, "I will be inquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them." And now, Lord, I am inquiring for it as I can, O do it for me.

II. I come next to address those diseased souls who are sensible and feeling, sick sinners, who are convinced of their distressed case by nature, and their need of the physician; you are the proper objects of his care, Matt. ix. 12, 13; xviii. 11; Luke xviii. 13, 14. I exhort all such to come and employ Christ the only Physician of Israel, to heal your wounded souls. Delay not; for your disease is mortal; your wound is deep; the sooner you come, the better. Lose not the season when Christ is dealing with you by his Spirit; but when the waters are stirred, see that you presently step in, that you may be made whole.

QUEST. How shall we improve the season, so as to be cured of our disease?

Ans. Observe these directions:

1. As you ought to be concerned about your disease, see that your trouble and concern be of the right kind. Be grieved for it, not only because it brings ruin upon yourselves, but mainly because it unfits you for glorifying God, and enjoying communion with him. Be troubled both for the general corruption of your natures, and for the particular plagues of your own hearts; point out those to your Physician which are most grievous to you, whether it be hardness, blindness, unbelief, backsliding, pride, earthly-mindedness, &c. Every man that would have access to God, must "know the plague of his own heart," 1 Kings viii. 38. Christ would have every man to point forth his ailment to him, with the blind man, Luke xviii. 41, "What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee?" Let your answer be ready like his, "Lord, that I may receive my sight." Lord, that my unbelief may be removed, that my hardness may be cured, my backsliding healed, &c. Lay open all your sores, and hide nothing from your Physician.

2. Come to Christ with a firm belief and persuasion of his power and ability to heal you. This is the thing he demands of every sick soul, as of those two blind men that followed him crying for help, Matt. ix. 28, "Believe ye that I am able to do this?" Believe ye that I have all fullness in me to answer all your wants, to cure all your diseases, and suit all your cases? O for a strong faith in Christ's power! This doth greatly glorify him.

3. Plead importunately with your Physician for a cure; he allows you to do it, and to fill your mouths with arguments for that end.

(1.) Plead the sovereign efficacy of his blood, that it is a remedy of infinite virtue, and can heal the most desperate disease; say with the leper,

Matt. viii. 2, "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean;" as if he had said, Thou mayest do with me as thou wilt, but one thing I am sure of, thou canst heal me. So say you, Lord, I am sure thy blood can cure and cleanse me, though I were as vile with sin as the leper was with his disease, so that, if I die in my sins, it will not be for want of virtue in Christ's blood, the balm of Gilead is all-sufficient. As the leper's argument prevailed with Christ to cure him so a strong faith, and persuasion of the virtue of Christ's blood, will engage him to heal you.

(2.) Plead the freeness of his balm to all diseased souls, that the fountain of his blood runs freely to the worst of lepers, that he shuts out none from it, but invites all to come; that those who had the deepest wounds and most dangerous diseases, have come upon the invitation, and been made whole, as Manassch, the woman of Samaria, Mary Magdalene, the penitent thief, Paul, the Corinthians, &c. Say, Lord, I come with the rest upon thy call, O do not shut me out.

(3.) Plead your inability to do any thing for your own healing, as the impotent man did with Christ at the pool of Bethesda, John v. 6, 7. In like manner say, "Lord, I have been many years at the side of the pool, near the healing balm, but I am impotent, and unable of myself to move one step towards it, far less to apply it: no man or angel can cure my lameness; Lord, if thou do not pity and help me, I must even die and perish within view of the balm."

(4.) Plead with Jesus Christ, that he alone is the only qualified person in heaven or earth to be your Physician. "Lord, thou hast infinite knowledge and skill to discern my disease, with its symptoms and causes, and to prescribe the proper remedies. Thou hast infinite compassions to pity me, and infinite power to relieve me, when I cry for help. Yea, thou hast human bowels and tenderness of heart also to sympathize with me in distress. Nay, thou hast a commission from heaven to heal such diseased souls as mine, which thou didst cheerfully accept. And thou hast come a long journey from heaven to earth to visit the sick, and proclaim thy commission to them. Thou hast assumed my nature, and taken a human body, that it might be pierced to send forth a precious balm for my wounds; and hast graciously promised to apply this balm to all who come to thee, Hos. xiv. 1, 4; John vi. 3; Rev. xxii. 17. Yea, thou hast come to those who never sought thee for healing, Isa. lxi. 1, 4; Luke x. 33, 34. And shall not I get healing when I am earnestly seeking it?"

(5.) Plead the glory of his name, and the credit of his blood: say, "Lord, both these will suffer, if a poor wounded creature, that relies upon the faith of thy word, and the virtue of thy blood, should be disappointed and perish." This was Moses's argument with God for pity to the Israelites, Num. xiv. 15, 16, "The nations will speak, saying, Because the Lord was not able to bring this people into the land, which he swore unto them, therefore he hath slain them in the wilderness." So do you plead, "Lord, what will the devils and atheists say?" Will they not blaspheme thy name, and reproach thy blood, and say, Because thy power and blood were not able to heal these diseased souls, thou lettest them perish?

(6.) Plead the mercifulness of his nature, with David, Psal. xli. 4, "Lord, be merciful to me; heal my soul, for I have sinned against thee." Thou art a merciful as well as a skilful Physician. O let not a poor sick soul, that depends on the mercy of thy nature, and merit of thy blood, for healing, go away disappointed.

But poor sensible sinners have many objections against themselves.

Object. 1. I know, saith one, Christ is a great Physician, but I am not worthy that he should come under my roof to heal such a one as me.

Ans. 1. There was never one healed because of his worthiness, for it is only the unworthy that Christ came to heal and save, 1 Tim. i. 15; Rev. iii. 17, 18; Matt. ix. 12, 13. 2. The more sensible a soul is of unworthiness, and humbled for it, the more welcome he is to that Physician, Psal. x. 17; Isa. lxvi. 2; Matt. v. 3; Luke xviii. 14. 3. If you come not to be healed till you be worthy, you will never come, for where can a poor worthless sinner get any worthy or desirable qualification but from Christ only? You must come to Christ for every thing that is valuable. 4. Seeing Christ doth expressly call the most unworthy to come to him for healing, Rev. iii. 17, 18; 1 John iii. 23, this should encourage you to do it. It was his call that encouraged the blind man to come to him, Mark x. 47, "Be of good comfort; rise, he calleth thee." Christ calls, and his commands should be obeyed by the unworthy as well as others.

Object. 2. But I fear, saith another, I am not within Christ's commission, and how then can I expect healing from him?

Ans. It is high presumption for any man to intrude into God's secret decrees, which no angel dare do. This suggestion then is not from God, but from the devil, to drive sinners into despair, or to keep them away from Christ. For the Spirit of Christ tells us that "secret things belong unto God, and the things which are revealed belong unto us," Deut. xxix. 29. Now, seeing it is revealed to you that Christ was sent to save and heal the lost and sick, the bruised and broken-hearted, the halt and maimed, the wretched and miserable, the poor and blind, and calls such to come to him for healing, Matt. xviii.

11; Luke iv. 18; xiv. 21; Rev. ii. 17, 18. And seeing you cannot but own that some of these characters belong to you; this should encourage you to come to Christ with expectation.

Object. 3. But my wounds are very deep, my disease is of a desperate nature.

Ans. All these diseases are alike to Christ's blood; it can as easily cure the greatest as the smallest, 1 John i. 7. What disease more deadly than that of the three thousand who imbrued their hands in Christ's blood? Acts ii. and yet they were all healed by it.

Object. 4. But I am sick of many diseases at once.

Ans. The balm of Christ's blood can as soon cure many diseases as one.

Object. 5. But my diseases are old and inveterate, and my sores have run many years.

Ans. Christ hath cured many such; the thief on the cross had an old festering disease, and so had Zacheus, for he had wronged many, yet this mighty Physician cured them both. He cured many old distempers in men's bodies, to assure us of the virtue of his blood to cure old diseases in our souls. Therefore he cured the woman's issue of blood that had run twelve years. He loosed a woman that Satan had kept bound eighteen years. He cured the impotent man at Bethesda that had an infirmity thirty-eight years. All which is recorded for our encouragement to come to Christ with our old sores.

Object. 6. I have relapsed into the same disease, and can I expect healing?

Ans. Relapses indeed are most dangerous, yet Christ undertakes to heal those who relapse, Hos. xiv. 2, and he actually healed Peter, though he relapsed into the same sin.

Object. 7. But I fear I have no right to Christ's blood.

Ans. Seeing all the ends of the earth are bid to look to it for healing, and Christ hath appointed his gospel to be preached, and his balm to be offered to every creature, you have a full and sufficient warrant to come and make use of it.

Object. 8. But I have long slighted the offers of this balm.

Ans. The more heinous thy sin, or deep thy wound be, thou hast the greater need of this sovereign medicine: and go not to make thy wound deeper by a new refusal.

Object. 9. I have essayed to go and apply this balm, but find I have no strength to do it.

Ans. If you have sincere desires to accept and use it, you have some beginnings of faith; and therefore improve these desires by making frequent essays to receive Christ and apply his blood. Believing is a duty you should be often essaying and aiming at, even before you find God's Spirit effectually concurring. This you do in other duties; for though you cannot pray or praise, communicate, meditate, or sanctify the sabbath aright without the Spirit, yet forbear you not to aim at these duties, even when you find not the Spirit at work; and neither should you in this case. Though you have no power to believe savingly, yet still be aiming at it, and believe as you can. The Spirit will pity your weakness, when you are making honest attempts to do his will; therefore be aiming to approve the device of redeeming love, to part with your own righteousness, to say Amen to the well-ordered covenant, to take a crucified Christ for your all, and venture your all in his hand. And though you often fail in your attempts, yet still try it again, and at length the Spirit will help you to stretch out faith's hand, and fasten it on Christ and his wounds to your comfort.

Object. 10. But I am afraid Christ is not willing to apply his blood to heal me.

Ans. What more evidences of willingness can you ask from Christ? You have both the word and writ of him that is faithful and true, and his oath also, John vi. 37; Ezek. xxxiii. 11. And to all these he adds outward signs and seals which are visible to your bodily eyes in the sacrament, to assure you of his willingness. Also his frankness to heal all the bodies of men that came to him while on earth, is given you as a pledge of his willingness to cure your souls; for you cannot imagine he would be more compassionate to men's bodies than to their souls, seeing it was his great errand to seek and heal souls, and to shed his blood for that end. May we all have faith in that blood, for Christ's sake. Amen.

ADVICES TO THOSE WHO ARE RECOVERING.

SERMON VIII.—“IS THERE NO BALM,” ETC. JER. VIII. 22.

III. In prosecuting my exhortation from this doctrine, there is a third sort I proposed to address; namely, Those who are already in the way of healing and recovery, through the Physician's applying the balm of his blood to them for removing the guilt of sin, and renewing of their natures, whereby the force of their disease is broken, and they in the way of recovery. To these I offer some advices:

1. Thankfully admire the generous kindness and free love of your Physician, in distinguishing you from the rest of the world. He hath done that for you which he hath not done for thousands, nay, for millions of your fellow-creatures, and even for many in those very families and congregations where you dwell. He hath healed your natures when they were sick unto death; he hath pardoned your sins, when they were sinking under guilt. O bless and praise him with David, Psal. ciii. 1, 2, &c. Christ expects a tribute of praise from healed souls, and observes how they pay it, as in the case of the lepers, Luke xvii. 18, "Were there not ten cleansed," saith he, "but where are the nine?" There he counted their number, and found nine healed who returned him no thanks. And this he censures as base ingratitude to God.

2. Be earnest with God for thorough and perfect healing, that the disease of sin may be wholly subdued. Let the work of sanctification be still carried on; for this is a continued healing of your nature, till at last the cure be completed at death.

3. Pity your relations and neighbours, who are still sick unto death, and do what you can for their cure. Especially pity and pray for your children who are sick of the plague you conveyed to them. Recommend to them the balm of Gilead, and the Physician there. Tell them your experience of the Physician's skill and tenderness, and the virtue of his balm. "O come and see; he hath cured me of a deep wound, an old disease of a hard heart, of dreadful atheism, unbelief, blindness, earthliness, pride, passion," &c.

4. Take proper means to preserve health when restored; such as, (1.) Live in a good and wholesome air, that is, in the society of God's people. (2.) Keep good hours, and a wholesome diet, that is, stated times every day for the soul's refreshment, by reading, meditation, and prayer. (3.) Use proper exercises, such as the exercise of faith, prayer, hearing, communicating, and Christian converse; for spiritual sloth and idleness greatly prejudice the soul's health.

5. Beware of whatever may occasion a relapse into your disease, such as the temptations and snares which Satan will lay in your way to draw you into sin; carefully avoid them, and pray for strength against them. And particularly beware of unnecessary going into infected company, lest you catch the disease from them, for sin is most contagious.

6. Let all those be the objects of your special love, who have got their natures healed, and the image of God restored to them. Love them, though they be poor and low in the world, and even though they differ in several things from you; for if you love them only who are of your way of thinking in all things, that is liker a sectarian or party-love than a true Christian love. For it would say, you love saints more for their likeness to you, than for their likeness and relation to Christ. Now, the true motive of Christian love is a manliness and love to Christ more than to you. And surely, all these being members of the same body, and children of the same family, who will spend a whole eternity together in admiring and praising the Lamb, should love one another while sojourning in the wilderness below. Christ gives this as a mark of his disciples, and those who are healed by him.

7. Rejoice and bless God when you hear of many sick souls flocking to the balm of Gilead and the Physician there, and when there are hopeful signs of their healing and recovery. Look upon these as the most refreshing news that can be brought to your ears.

8. Learn patience under the distress of your bodies, seeing you have got healing to your souls. Do not murmur at it, seeing God sees it needful for your soul's health.

Lastly, Be concerned for the diseased land wherein you live. If you have got healing to yourselves, you ought to have public spirits to be affected with the case of a sick land and church, especially at a time when it may be said of her, as of Judah, Isa. i. 5, 6, "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart is faint; from the sole of the foot even unto the head, there is no soundness in it, but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores: they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment." So, alas! it may be said of our land, the whole body politic and ecclesiastic is sadly diseased; our kings and princes, nobility, gentry, magistrates, ministers, burgesses, commons, and all ranks, are full of wounds and sores.

Quest. How is it we are to show our concern for the land in such distress?

Ans. Two ways: I. By earnest prayer for it. II. By using the means in our power to heal it.

I. Spread out the case of the land in prayer before the great Physician of Israel, and plead that he may look on it with an eye of compassion; yea, humbly expostulate with God about the church's case, like Jeremiah, Jer. xiv. 9, "Hast thou utterly rejected Judah? hath thy soul loathed Zion? Why hast thou smitten us, and there is no healing for us?" Alas, no physician nor balm on earth can heal us; no ordinances, sermons, nor sacraments, can cure us. All the warnings, reproofs, and judgments in the world cannot heal our wounds. O, if Israel's Physician would come and do it himself! The Lord hath justly smitten us for our sins, and is threatening to smite us more. Now what can we do in that case but look to him for pity, and plead that the hand which hath smitten us may also heal us; for nothing will heal us till he come with the balm of Gilead, his blood and Spirit, to our wounds. This balm can heal nations and churches, as well as single persons. O then look earnestly to that blood that quencheth the fire of wrath for us, and purchaseth every thing that is good to us; and plead, for the sake of that blood, that God would revive his work in the land, breathe upon the dry bones, and make a stir amongst them; pour out a spirit of conversion and of reformation upon men of all stations, magistrates, ministers, elders, parents, and teachers of youth, as well as the young generation, that they may turn to the Lord, and exert themselves for bearing down vice, and promoting Christian knowledge and piety in the land. Let all cry to God to rebuke the winds of error and division, that truth may triumph, and breaches may be healed; that ministers and people may have one heart and one mind, to "serve the Lord with one consent." And thus would the health of the church and nation be recovered. I might adduce many motives to press you to plead for repentance and healing to the whole land; I shall mention a few.

1. This has been the commendable practice of God's people in all ages, as of Moses, David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, &c., as in Exod. xxxii. 11, 12; Psal. li. 18; Isa. lxii. 1; Jer. ix. 1; Dan. ix. 17. And this is what the Lord requires of every one, Psal. cxxii. 6; Jeel ii. 17.

2. Prayers put up for a sick church or nation are most agreeable to God, and have a sort of commanding power with him, Isaiah xlv. 2. He puts great honour upon such prayers, and makes them means of producing marvellous effects and deliverances, as in Exod. xvii. 11, 13; xxxii. 14. And we read of the Lord's seeking out such wrestlers that he may honour them, Ezek. xxii. 30, "And I sought for a man among them that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it." These are the men that God delights to honour.

3. The consideration of the hand you have had, by your sins, in bringing on diseases upon the church and land, should excite you to wrestle and plead for healing to her. The laws of common humanity should even oblige you to this duty.

4. They who pray most for Zion in her distressed and wounded case, shall be the largest sharers in her comforts when God brings healing to her. These shall reap most plentifully of her joys when the harvest comes, who now sow most of the seed of tears for her in her trouble.

II. In the second place, I said every one should use all the means in their power for healing the church and land. God has appointed men in different stations and capacities to be as under-physicians to bring a kind of balm to a diseased land; such as magistrates, ministers, elders, &c. These, by wholesome laws, instructions, and examples, may contribute very much, through the divine blessing, to the healing of our disease. Nay, private Christians, who are in the meanest stations, if they do what is incumbent upon them, may have some share in this blessed work of healing a sick land. As sometimes we have heard of great cures effectuated by mean and obscure persons, when learned physicians had given over the case as desperate; so private Christians may be instrumental in bringing about our cure, when those of greater power and skill look on our case as hopeless. They may be of great use to recommend religion to the world by conforming their practice to its rules, and adorning their profession with shining holiness and Christian virtues, and also by avoiding all dishonesty and injustice, pride and passion, malice and revenge, bitterness and evil-speaking, and every thing that may beget prejudice in the carnal world against Christianity, who are too ready to impute the faults of its professors to the religion itself. Private Christians also may bring their healing prayers and tears, and pour them out before the Lord in behalf of the diseased land. They may act faith on the blood of Christ, our sovereign balm, and plead it with God, "Lord, was not this blood shed for the wounds of the church, as well as of particular believers! Is it not by Christ's stripes the church must be healed, as well as every individual member? Lord, thou hast a tender sympathy with every member in distress, and wilt thou not much more regard the whole body! Lord, she whom thou lovest is sick, and nothing can save her life but the balm of Gilead: this, thou alone hast, and none else can apply it. Make haste unto her, O God of Zion, thou art her help and deliverer: O Lord, make no delay, let thy power be present to heal her." Thus we see men of all ranks may be useful as under-physicians for healing a sick land.

OBJECT. But, say some, the case of the church and land seems desperate, and her wounds incurable, and what then can be done by us for her?

Ans. However dangerous her case may be, yet it is not quite so desperate as to make us give over all hopes and endeavours. I showed before what grounds of hope we have yet left us. And though the case were more desperate than it is, we ought still to be in the use of appointed means, and never distrust God in any strait whatsoever. We ought always to look to him who is "wise in heart, and mighty in strength," Job ix.

4. And remember the Lord's question to Abraham in a desperate case, Gen. xviii. 14, "Is any thing too hard for the Lord!" Unbelief stumblcth at God's power, when it seeth no visible means or instruments for bringing events about, not considering how easy it is for God, when he doth not find means, to create them; and, when he pleaseth, even to work without them. It is the property of true faith not to make haste, or prescribe to God as to means or times of working, but to wait his leisure, and depend upon him in the greatest extremities.

It puts honour upon God to trust him when our case seems most hopeless, and even to make the desperateness of our case an argument in prayer to God, and a ground for faith to fasten upon, so as to plead with him the more earnestly and confidently for help, and to say, "Lord, it will be the more for thy honour and glory to undertake the cure of our disease, when matters are come to this extremity, that all besides are giving over our case as hopeless and desperate." The news of the balm of Gilead, and the Physician there, should strengthen our faith, and support our hopes under the most deadly disease, and make us lift up our head, and look out for him. As old Jacob, when he was just a-dying, yet, at the news of his son Joseph being near, he strengthened himself, and sat up on his bed expecting him; so should we, when ready to faint on the bed of our languishing case, endeavour to lift up our hearts at the good news of the balm and Physician of Israel, and say, Is not Jesus Christ the great Physician commissioned by the Father to heal a poor wounded church and land? This is the time of her need and great strait, and a proper season for him to step in for help. Both in scripture and experience we find the time of the church's extremity is God's usual opportunity of working and appearing for her, as in the case of Isaac, when at the point of being sacrificed, and also in the case of the Jews, when ready to be cut off by Haman's bloody plot. When there was but an hair's breadth betwixt them and destruction, God stepped in and saved them. It is in the mount that the Lord will be seen; so the text may be rendered, Gen. xxii. 14.

QUEST. Why doth God let the distress of his church and people come to such extremity, before he interpose for them?

Ans. He doth it for glorious and wise ends:

1. To glorify his wisdom in finding out a remedy, when we can see no appearance of it. The Physician's skill is most discovered in mastering a dis-temper, when it is become most inveterate and hopeless.

2. To show his pity and compassion to his people, when their condition is most destitute. David depended upon God's pity in such a case, Psal. xxvii. 10, "When my father and mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up." So when enemies think God hath forgotten his church, and men have cast her off, and they begin to scoff at Zion, and call her an outcast, then God seeth meet to show his pity, and take her under his care, and heal her wounds, Jer. xxx. 16, 17.

3. To excite the spirit of prayer in his people. It was for that end the Lord suffered his people to be brought to great extremity at the Red sea, Exod. xiv. 10, "The children of Israel lifted up their eyes, and behold, the Egyptians marched after them; and they were sore afraid; and cried unto the Lord." When they were in great distress they cried to the Lord, but not before. So Christ slept in the ship, and let the tempest rise to a great height, to bring his disciples to their knees, Mat. viii. 24, 25, "They came and awoke him, saying, Lord, save us, we perish." At such a time their prayers are doubled, and most fervent, as in Psal. cxxiii. 3, "Have mercy upon us, O Lord, have mercy upon us, for we are exceedingly filled with contempt." And it is to be observed, when such a spirit of fervent prayer is poured out upon the church, it is a sure presage of her adversaries' ruin; so we see it was in Zech. xii. 9, 10, "I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem; and I will pour upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem the spirit of grace and of supplications." If this spirit were poured out upon the inhabitants of Scotland, it would be a good presage of the Lord's appearing for her.

4. God puts off to extremity, to draw out his people's faith and dependance wholly upon himself. He cuts off the branches of earthly supports, to make them clasp to the body of the tree, even to him who is the everlasting God; and to bring them to reflect upon what he hath done for them in former extremities, and to act faith upon his power and pity, which he exerted for them in days of old. Thus did Jehoshaphat in his great strait, 2 Chron. xx. 7, 12, "Art thou not our God, who didst drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people? We have no might against this great company that cometh against us, neither know we what to do, but our eyes are upon thee." God would have the deliverances he hath given us in former straits to draw out our faith upon him in new trials, and hence he says to Israel, when under fears of the Canaanites, Deut. vii. 18, "Thou shalt not be afraid of them, but shalt well remember what the Lord thy God did unto Pharaoh and all Egypt."

5. To humble his people, and bring down the pride of their hearts. God brought his people to great extremities in the wilderness, and his great design therein was to humble them, as he tells them, Deut. viii. 2. There is a woful root of pride in men's hearts that must be broken and subdued, before they can be meet for heaven. This root is often breaking out in discontent, murmuring, quarrelling, bitterness, passion, and backwardness to submit to God's will. Now it costs much labour and pains to bring down such proud hearts to the will of God; they must even be reduced to great extremities, before they be sufficiently humbled, and brought calmly to submit, without any rising of heart against God. Hence it is said, Psal. cvii. 12, "He brought down their heart with labour." And indeed it is a happy presage and forerunner of God's gracious appearing for his people, when the proud swellings of their hearts are quelled, and they are brought to a silent submission under his hand, Psal. lvi. 10, "Be still and know that I am God, I will be exalted among the heathen," &c.

6. To take his people off from all creature-confidences and lying refuges, which they are prone to look to in straits and difficulties. Great extremities drive men from trusting in the arm of flesh, and cause them to flee to the arm of Jehovah, with whom is everlasting strength. In such cases they are made to cry, as in Psal. lx. 11, "O God, give us help from trouble, for vain is the help of man." Then it is we are best qualified to receive help from God, when we are brought to own the insufficiency of creatures to relieve us, and supply our needs. The man that had the lunatic child in sad distress, was in a fair way of getting a cure to him from Christ, when he came to be humbled by his disappointments, to have his eyes turned away from all human help, and was glad to apply to Christ as his last refuge, Matt. xvii. 14, 15, &c. There we see he came and humbly kneeled down before him, saying, "Lord, have mercy upon my son, for he is lunatic, and sore vexed," &c. "And I brought him to thy disciples, and they could not cure him." As if he had said, "Lord, the case is desperate and incurable as to human help, and therefore I must look to thee alone for a cure: I have now none else to go to but thyself." Well, then, said our Lord, since that is the case with thee, "Bring him hither to me," verse 17, and he presently cured him. O that every one would bring their desperate diseases, in like manner, straight to Christ, with hearts humbled by disappointments, weaned from creature-confidences, and depending on Christ as their only Physician, and all-sufficient help. Were we once brought to his frame, Christ would in mercy step in and say, "Bring the disease hither to me." It is surely owing to our not coming off from ourselves, and from all creature-help, and to our not bringing our cases to Christ immediately, that our diseases are so long continued.

From all which the wisdom of God doth manifestly appear, in letting his church and people be brought to great extremities, before he interpose for their help and relief. But seeing these extremities are Christ's opportunities for manifesting forth his glory, we ought not to despair in the darkest case, but always "to look to and wait upon him that bideth himself from the house of Jacob." Nay, we should do it, even then when we see every man with his hands on his loins in the utmost anguish and agony, as women in travail, like those in Jer. xxx. 6, 7, where we see a most surprising instance of God's mercy to Jacob, even then when his trouble comes to that extremity, that nothing in the world could match it, he pities him, and subjoins that merciful word, "But he shall be saved out of it."

And it should encourage us the more to look to and wait upon God, in this dark day, when we hear of his mercy and goodness in pitying other nations and countries, when in melancholy circumstances, by granting a down-pouring of his Spirit on them for reviving his decayed work, and for convincing and converting multitudes of perishing souls by the preaching of the gospel, making them cry, "What shall we do to be saved?" and giving them no rest till they close with Christ their Surety, and become new creatures. And it is to be remarked that God has been graciously pleased to begin this work in New England, and other parts of America, at a time when they abounded with complaints of darkness and deadness, decay of religion, backsliding, woful errors, and divisions, as it is in Scotland at this day. These late surprising and well-attested instances of God's mercy and sovereign grace, show us how easy it is for God to bring his balm to a diseased land, when in the most hopeless case; and to qualify and raise up instruments to preach his gospel with such energy and power, as to rouse multitudes of secure souls, and make them "fly to Christ in clouds, and like flocks of doves to their windows." He can take away the "sins of a land in one day, and make a nation to be born at once. He can show wonders to the dead, and make the dead arise and praise him." So that none should distrust him in the most desperate condition.

Well, then, seeing Christ, is a Physician, so full of power, and also full of compassion, whence is it that our diseased land is unhealed, and multitudes are daily dying of their wounds? Surely the blame is not to be laid upon Christ, but upon ourselves, and our unwillingness to come to him, Ah! we choose death rather than healing from Christ. He may take up that complaint against us, as he did against the Jews in the days of his flesh, "Ye will not come to me that ye might get healing, and live. How often would I have gathered you to be healed, but ye would not?" And thus he complained of their fathers also, Psal. lxxxi. "My people would not hearken to my voice; Israel would have none of me!" Oh! my dear friends, are you to follow their cursed example, to reject your healer? Or what are you resolving to do? What think ye of Christ the Physician? Do you believe our report of him, or no? The people of other nations are giving ear, and believing our report of him, and flocking to him to be healed, and why do you sit still? Are they yielding and submitting to Christ as their Saviour and Lord? Are they putting the crown on his head, and doing him honour? Why then should you be the last to bring back the King to his house? Will you be the last that will do him honour as a King, or give him employment as a Physician? Have you not as much need of him, and as many wounds and diseases as others? O come then also, take the gospel balm, and glorify the Physician of Israel. Amen.

THE GLORY OF THE MINISTRATION OF THE GOSPEL.

SERMON IX.—“HOW SHALL NOT THE MINISTRATION OF THE SPIRIT BE RATHER GLORIOUS?” 2 COR. III. 8.

IN this chapter the apostle runs a comparison between the Old testament and the New, the law of Moses and the gospel of Christ, and shows the excellency of the latter above the former. He calls the Old Testament dispensation, or law of Moses, the “ministration of death and condemnation;” because it discovered sin, and denounced curses against it; and the law was given with thunder, lightning, and much terror. Yet, at the same time, he says, this dispensation was in some respects glorious, ver. 7. Why? It was glorious in the minister of it, Moses, who had a shining glory in his face when he brought the tables down from the mount. Glorious, in regard of the glorious manifestation of God at the giving of the law. Glorious, in respect of the gospel discoveries which were made by the types and sacrifices of the Old Testament. But then, the apostle shows, that the gospel dispensation did far excel it in glory, and on that account calls it the “ministration of life,” because it pointed out the way to life and salvation in a plainer manner. And the “ministration of righteousness,” because it discovered a perfect righteousness for sinners to rest upon. Also he calls it in the text the “ministration of the Spirit,” because of the great effusion of the Spirit that attended the gospel-dispensation, especially in the first ages. The Holy Spirit did then remarkably “bear testimony to the word of his grace,” by his inward operations upon the hearers of it. And this was it that made the ministration of the gospel far more glorious than that of the law; for under the law there was but little of the Spirit let out for the conversion of souls, in respect of what was given under the gospel. The out-letting of the Spirit in such an abundant manner made the gospel dispensation far more glorious than that of the legal; which gives ground for the following observation:

Doctrine, The effusion of the Spirit with a preached gospel makes a very glorious dispensation. Which I shall handle in the following method:

I. Premise some things concerning the nature and office of the Holy Spirit.

II. Show when the gospel may be said to be a ministration of the Spirit to the hearers of it.

III. That there are some remarkable seasons when a preached gospel may be called the ministration of the Spirit in an eminent way.

IV. Inquire in what respects the ministration of the Spirit is a glorious dispensation.

V. Make application.

I. The first thing proposed is, to premise some things concerning the nature and office of the Holy Spirit. And, 1. The word Spirit, in the Hebrew ruach, in the Greek pneuma, signifies wind, air, or breathing. It is sometimes used to point forth the nature and essence of God abstractly, as in John iv. 24, “God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.” But most commonly it signifies, as in the text, the third person of the holy Trinity. And sometimes he is called the Spirit of the Father, and sometimes the Spirit of the Son, which shows their oneness, and that he proceeds from both.

2. Our Lord Jesus Christ, by his undertaking in the covenant of redemption, and his sacrifice on the cross, obtained the ministration of the Holy Spirit to an elect world. This great gift and blessing, which is of inestimable value, is our dear Lord's purchase and legacy to his people, which he designed to supply his bodily absence from them when he went to heaven, John xvi. 7, 8, “If I depart I will send him unto you, and when he is come, he will reprove,” &c. The Spirit, being Christ's legacy and donation, should much endear the gift to us. Some would rejoice to possess a relic or any thing that belonged to our Saviour in the days of his flesh. The Papists boast of some bits of the tree whereon he suffered, though Christ left no such things for our use or devotion. But here is a precious relic and legacy, which Christ, in love to his people, left them when going away, even his Holy Spirit, as his resident, to abide with them for ever.

3. The church, under the Old Testament, had a certain measure of the Spirit given her upon Christ's account. But the great effusion of the Spirit was reserved to the New Testament times; and given after Christ's ascension, according to his blessed compact with the Father, Acts ii. 33. This promise of the Holy Ghost is called the promise, by way of eminency, as including all the rest. And this effusion was frequently foretold as the great privilege of gospel-times, Isa. xxxv. 6, 7; xlv. 3; Ezek. xi. 9; xxxvi. 27; Joel ii. 28, 29. So that, let men reproach the Holy Spirit with his influences and operations as they will, he was prophesied of and expected of old, as the great blessing under the gospel. And men's despising him now as they do, is but a fulfilling of Christ's word, John xiv. 17, "Yet the world cannot receive him, because it neither seeth nor knoweth him;" that is, they have no experience of his work in them. But for us not to own and avow the Spirit of God in his work and operations, is in effect to be ashamed of Christ's precious promise and legacy which he left us, and to be guilty of the basest ingratitude to our dear Redeemer.

4. The great office of the Holy Spirit, in elect souls, is to be the applier of Christ's purchase to them, which he doth by "teaching them and guiding them into all truth," John xiv. 26; xvi. 13, "By convincing and reproving them of sin," John xvi. 7, "By renewing and sanctifying their souls," Titus iii. 5; 1 Peter i. 2, "By mortifying and subduing sin in them," Rom. viii. 13, "By helping their infirmities in prayer, and interceding for them," Rom. viii. 26. By comforting them, and witnessing to their adoption, John xiv. 16; Rom. viii. 16. Wherefore, seeing the Holy Ghost is the applier of Christ's purchase, and is promised by Christ to supply his absence to us, he ought to be received and valued as the great blessing of the gospel-church.

5. Christ hath taught us to make the giving of his Holy Spirit the chief petition and principal blessing we should ask of God, Luke xi. 9, 10; ii. 12, 13. There he enjoins us to be importunate for this blessing, to ask, to seek, to knock; and for our encouragement, he promises, ver. 13, that "our heavenly Father shall give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." So the apostle Paul prays for the inward operations of the Spirit to the Ephesians, as the greatest blessing he can seek for them, Eph. iii. 16. For it is he that works faith, love, joy, peace, meekness, and all other graces in us, Gal. v. 22.

II. The second thing in the method is, to show when the gospel may be said to be the ministration of the Spirit to the hearers of it. And it is so when the Holy Spirit concurs with the preaching of the word, for making saving impressions upon men's hearts and consciences, and gracious changes in their lives and conversations. As, for instance,

1. When he is pleased to make close and particular application of the reproofs and threatenings of the word to the sinner's conscience, saying, as Nathan to David, "Thou art the man," thou art the guilty sinner that is threatened, cursed, and condemned by the law. Thy life is unholy, thy nature is polluted, thy heart is full of plagues; yea, thy soul is black with sin, and hateful in the sight of a holy God! And what wilt thou do to be saved?

2. When the arrows of conviction are so fastened in the conscience that the man cannot shake them out; he hath got such discoveries of sin's evil and the soul's danger, that his mind cannot be easy: no earthly comfort or enjoyment can satisfy him while he is within the flood-mark of wrath. He becomes anxious and inquisitive after the way of salvation, as those, Acts ii. 37; xvi. 30. His questions are not, What shall I do for health to a sickly body? or for bread to a pinched family? But, What shall I do to be saved from the wrath that is to come?

3. The gospel is the ministration of the Spirit to the hearers, when they are brought to despair of help and deliverance by any course or contrivance of their own; and are driven from all other refuges besides Christ. When they are made to see that no ordinance, no duties nor performances, no frames, no righteousness, nor attainments of their own, can screen from wrath, nor yield any rest to the sole of their foot. When they are convinced they are in a shipwrecked perishing state in the first Adam, and that they have no other plank of salvation to trust to but Jesus Christ, the second Adam. When they see themselves sinking upon the broken bottom of the old covenant, and that there is no way to be saved but to leap from it to the rock of salvation, Christ, and only to trust to and hang by the clefts of that rock.

4. The Spirit concurs when the flinty rock is turned into a water-pool, as in Psal. cxiv. 8, that is, when the hard heart is softened and melted down into streams of penitential tears for sin, both original and actual; and particularly for wounding and piercing of Christ by sin, and for long slighting him and keeping him at the door of the heart: and when the soul is brought to be deeply humbled for misspent time, misimproved sabbaths, offers of free grace, days of health, and precious opportunities of salvation.

5. The gospel is the ministration of the Spirit when thereby light shines into the understanding, discovering the excellency of the remedy provided for lost sinners, the ability and fulness of Christ, the sufficiency of his righteousness, and the suitableness of his offices and covenant for all our wants and miseries. And when the soul's desires are excited after Christ, and salvation through him, and made to cry, "O that I knew where to find him! O saw ye him whom my soul loveth?" And when the soul is brought to strong purposes and resolutions to venture to Christ, and cast itself at his feet, saying, "I will go unto the King; if I perish, I perish."

6. When convinced sinners are determined to fall in with the gospel-device of salvation through Christ, heartily to approve of it, renounce their own righteousness for a Surety's righteousness, accept of Christ in all his offices, and surrender themselves unto the Lord. And when they are brought to hate sin, as the enemy and murderer of Christ, and to be willing to cut off a right hand, and pluck out a right eye for Christ, and to say with Ephraim, "What have I to do any more with idols?" and with David, "Depart from me, ye evil-doers, I will keep the commandments of my God."

7. The gospel is the ministration of the Spirit when the hearts of hearers are loosed from the world and carnal things, and brought to some measure of spirituality and fixedness in God's service, and to find more delight and satisfaction therein than in all temporal enjoyments, and to say, "A day in God's courts is better to us than a thousand elsewhere. Blessed are they that dwell in thy house."

8. When they find life and vigour put in all their graces, their faith strengthened, and their love warmed to Christ above all things; the wind blows on their gardens, and the spices flow out. They have sensible liberty and loosing of bonds in their approaches to God; their clogs and straitenings are removed, and they are raised above their ordinary frame in prayer. Their hearts indite good matter, their tongue is like the pen of a ready writer concerning the King; their own hearts melt into tears of love and affection to Christ, and their words reach others about them with a pleasant perfume, and warm their hearts too.

9. When gospel-hearers find the ordinances blessed means of communion and intercourse with God, so that they get sweet discoveries of the beauty of Christ and holiness, they are enabled to plead and feed upon the promises, they have peace and joy in believing, their doubts are removed, and they approach to the assurance of God's favour, of pardon of sin, and future glory. They breathe after a full conformity to Christ and his image, that holiness may be perfected in them, and the top-stone put upon the work of grace. That they may have no more complaints of indwelling sin and imperfect services. And under a sense of God's love in Christ, they endeavour to walk tenderly and circumspectly, to make their light shine before men, and to glorify God upon the earth. Then it is, and in the other cases above-mentioned, that the gospel may be said to be the ministration of the Spirit to the hearers of it. And surely such a concurrence and effusion of the Spirit, with the preached word, would make it a very glorious dispensation. O to see such remarkable seasons of grace!

III. The third head proposed, was to mention some of those seasons when the preaching of the gospel hath in an eminent way been the ministration of the Spirit. Of which take these instances:

1. In the apostles' times, after Christ's ascension, there was a wonderful effusion of the Spirit with the gospel for the first planting of Christianity in the world, according to Christ's promise, Luke xxiv. 49; Acts i. 8. Then the gospel was a glorious ministration of the Spirit, when poor illiterate men were helped to preach with such powerful convincing energy, that their words pierced the consciences, and changed the minds and lives of thousands of their hearers at once. And though their doctrine was levelled against the pride and corruption of men's hearts, and tended to abolish the pagan idolatry, as well as the Jewish sacrifices and ceremonies; and though it was derided by the learned men of that age, and opposed by the civil powers with the greatest violence; yet, under all these disadvantages, it spread with amazing success, so that in twenty or thirty years' time, and before the apostles died, the gospel made its way through Judea, Syria, Greece, Asia, Egypt, Europe, and the whole vast Roman empire; so that every province in it had plenty of its professors. It was the Holy Spirit that directed the arrows of the word into the consciences of men, with clear and convincing evidences of the truth thereof, and confirmed them so in the belief of it, that no trial nor temptation could shake them. It was the effusion of the Spirit with the gospel that gave the apostles and first preachers such extraordinary resolution, courage, and hardiness, to encounter all difficulties, to bear up under the greatest miseries of life, and joyfully to sacrifice their all for Christ. and seal their doctrine with their blood.

2. The gospel was a glorious ministration of the Spirit at our reformation from Popery above two hundred years ago, whereby our reformers were assisted and carried through the greatest difficulties and opposition as in the apostles' days. It was a small mean that God made the rise of his great work; to wit, Luther's appearing against Tetzel for preaching up and selling his indulgences. Yet from this spark, such a fire kindled that set all Europe in a flame, and enlightened many nations, that were covered with the thick darkness of idolatry and superstition, in the knowledge of the truth. Such were the outpouring and efficacy of the Spirit at that time, that the gospel made a swift progress in a short space by very mean instruments. The preachers employed were none of those who were famed in the world in that age for learning, honour, power, or greatness, but men that had lived in obscurity, and were loaded with reproach by their adversaries; such as Luther, Zwingli, Melancthon, Bucer, Calvin, Knox, Wishart, &c., yet these mean men went forth to confront those powers, which then made the earth to tremble; to wit, the Pope and his conclave (whose power was then most formidable), with the emperor of Germany, and the rest of the kings of Europe, who then gave their power to the beast. These instruments had no outward encouragement at first, none to support them, but all the world seemed to combine against them; yet, in spite of all opposition, the light of reformation brake up more and more; the gospel was preached with such power, that it prevailed against all the powers of the earth, and spread from city to city, so that in a few years many cities, states, and countries became subject to the truth, and that notwithstanding the bloody sword and flames of martyrdom which raged against those who owned it. O what a ministration of the Spirit did at that time attend Mr. George Wishart, when he preached in the town of Dundee, and through Angus, Lothian, and several places of the west of Scotland! how wonderfully were the spirits of men then raised and affected with the word of God!

3. In the church of Scotland, not only at her reformation from Popery, but also frequently since, there have been solemn times of the outpouring of the Spirit upon the land, and several places thereof, as in the year 1596, when the General Assembly renewed the national covenant in the little kirk at Edinburgh, and synods and presbyteries did the same after their example. Calderwood tells us how this practice was countenanced by God's Spirit, and attended with a general melting of heart and many tears. About the year 1625, in the west of Scotland, where the persecution, from prelates and their agents, was hottest for non-compliance with Perth articles, &c. God was pleased to countenance and support them with an extraordinary out-letting of his Spirit. This began in the parish of Stewarton, and hence was called by the profane of that time, the Stewarton sickness; but afterwards it spread through that country, and was very remarkable at Irvine under the ministry of Mr. David Dickson, which was accompanied with many convincing proofs of God's power, and many conversions. We have a famous instance of that power, in the solemn communion that was at the kirk of Shots, on the 20th of June 1630, when there was an extraordinary down-pouring of the Spirit attending the work; and especially the sermon on the Monday, 21st of June, by Mr. John Livingston, that made a great and unusual motion among the hearers, (who were then convened in great numbers of divers ranks,) so that near five hundred had a discernible change wrought upon them, and most of them proved lively Christians afterwards. Again, in the year 1638, God gave a general effusion of the Spirit, which roused up all ranks from their secure backslidden state, and made them agree to renew the national covenant. Then the spirits of men were greatly raised and wrought upon by the word, the ordinances were lively and longed after, both personal and national reformation were seriously set about. And this for several years was followed with a large harvest of souls brought in to Christ; many thousands flocked to him, like doves to their windows. Likewise, in the late persecuting times under King Charles II., there were many gracious effusions with the preaching of the gospel in the fields.—Also at and after the late happy Revolution, the gospel was remarkably the ministration of the Spirit in many places of Scotland. Now, surely, when we consider the days of old, and the years of ancient times, we should excite ourselves to thankfulness for mercies past, and set our hope in God for mercies future; and likewise humble ourselves deeply before the Lord for those sins which have long made our heavens as brass, and withheld those blessed showers which were wont to fall upon our land.

4. We have very late and well-attested accounts of glorious effusions of the Spirit in several parts of America, and particularly New England; and some of them I have seen dated within these few months, bearing, "That their land, which was formerly dry and parched, is now like a watered garden; that Christ is riding in triumph by a preached gospel, and the inhabitants, by thousands, are submitting to him; that converts are numerous like the drops of dew from the womb of the morning. Yea, (say some letters) the work is so inexpressibly glorious, that it is impossible, by words, to make one, who is not an eye-witness, have just conceptions thereof." The reverend Messrs. Edwards, Whitefield, and Tennent, have been honoured to have been very instrumental, by their labours, under God, to give a beginning to this blessed work, which I hope will continue and spread, to the praise and glory of free grace. And seeing God sent one of these instruments lately to Scotland, may his labours in it be followed with the same blessed effects. These showers of the Spirit, which are falling just now on several places, encourage many to hope they are forerunners of God's giving a general revival to his work, and of his bringing about the glory of the latter days, which he hath promised to his church, when he will make his gospel every-where a glorious ministration of the Spirit. Let us all cry for it, and for poor Scotland, that it may not be past by when other places are watered. May the Lord bless his word. Amen.

IN WHAT RESPECTS THIS MINISTRATION IS GLORIOUS.

SERMON X.—“HOW SHALL NOT THE MINISTRATION OF THE SPIRIT BE RATHER GLORIOUS?” 2 COR. III. 8.

IV. In the method I laid down for handling this subject, the fourth head was, to show in what respect the ministration of the Spirit is a glorious dispensation. By “the ministration of the Spirit,” we are to understand his gracious influences upon the hearers of the gospel, or his special operations and workings in their souls, together with the word, for their conversion and salvation. Now, these are glorious in several respects:

1. They come from a glorious Author, namely, the Holy Ghost, the third person of the glorious Trinity, eternally proceeding from the Father and the Son, and who, with them, is the only true God, being the same in nature and essence, and equal in power and glory.

2. They cost a glorious price. However the influences and operations of the Spirit be slighted and reproached by men, they are the dear purchase of our glorious Redeemer’s blood.

3. They are promised and bestowed to supply the room and absence of a glorious person: even the room of our Emmanuel, while the heavens receive him, and keep him from his people’s view.

4. The ministration of the Spirit is glorious, in regard it is granted to believers as the earnest and pledge of a glorious inheritance, Eph. i. 13, 14. And also for qualifying and making them meet to dwell in the same for ever.

5. In regard it is necessary to display to us the glory and excellency of the person and offices of Christ, and his infinite fulness: and also doth open our eyes to discern all the glorious perfections of God in him.

6. The Spirit’s ministration gives a glorious lustre to the souls of believers, and makes them shine with true beauty and splendour. Hence the King’s daughter is said in the xlv. Psalm to be “all-glorious within, and her beauty to be as the olive-tree,” &c.

7. The ministration of the Spirit with a preached gospel makes a glorious dispensation: chiefly upon the account of the glorious and surprising changes which it makes upon the hearts and lives of men at their conversion. How marvellous were these changes upon the first pouring out of the Spirit after our Lord’s ascension! Those first-fruits of his purchase and promise were indeed very glorious. Then the ministration of the Spirit, like a mighty current, carried all before it, and conquered thousands at one sermon; yea, it made the most obstinate and inveterate enemies to stoop before the word, though preached by poor despised men. This made the world to wonder, as if some universal enchantment had fallen upon men; and the more they sought to suppress and bear it down, the more it increased and spread. It made the rich choose poverty, the sensual quit their pleasures, those who dwelt in fine houses, to betake themselves with cheerfulness to dens and caves of the earth; yea, and sometimes those, who were violent persecutors of Christians one day, become joyful martyrs with them the next. But not only at that time, but many times since, the ministration of the Spirit with the gospel hath produced wonderful changes on its hearers.

As, 1. When thereby the dead in sins and trespasses have been raised from the grave of corruption, and made alive to God: those who were profane and vicious have changed the whole course of their lives, and turned as remarkable for good as before they were for ill. The leopard hath changed his spots, and the Ethiopian his colour, and such who were accustomed to do evil, have learned to do well. And all these changes have been occasioned by the foolishness of preaching, and sometimes by one word in a plain gospel-sermon; which could not be brought about by twenty years’ moral discourses, and the most sublime strains of human eloquence. And sometimes weak gifts have been owned and blest, when the greatest gifts have been unsuccessful.

2. Hereby such particular application of the word hath been made to the conscience, as hath filled the secure soul with terror, and humbled the proud man to the dust, and made him cry, “Woe is me, I am undone, I abhor myself in dust and ashes!” Those who before were puffed up with pride and a conceit of themselves, have been soon laid low under a sense of their guilt, and ill-deservings before God. Those who have been mounted upon an imaginary throne of their own righteousness, and have been at great pains to prop and support it, have of a sudden come down from it, tumbled it to the ground, and submitted humbly to a borrowed righteousness, saying, Away with all my own filthy rags; give me Christ, who is the “Lord our righteousness.” None but Christ.

3. It is a wonderful change to see men’s natures quite altered; to see those who were like ravening wolves become like meek lambs; those who were formerly actuated by hatred and envy, malice and revenge against enemies, brought to love all men, even their greatest enemies, with a love of benevolence, to avoid revenge, to forgive them, to pray for them, and to do them good, when in their power. Again, to see covetous men, that were great lovers of the world, and hugged it as their beloved idol, abandon it with disdain, "seek those things which are above," and delight in converse about them; to see them made willing to forsake all the world, as loss and dung, for Christ and things above, is a change above the power of nature, and is an evident proof of the glorious ministration of the Spirit.

4. By the Spirit's ministration, those who hated serious godliness, derided it as a fancy, mocked and reproached godly persons, have been made to own there is a reality in religion, and to love and commend that which they hated and cried down, and to honour religious persons as the excellent ones of the earth, and to delight more in their society than ever they did in their old companions in sin. This surely is the finger of God.

5. Hereby those who have been violent adversaries of the truth, have become eminent instruments to maintain and promote that which they once destroyed, and more zealous to promote and advance God's glory and kingdom in the world, than ever they were to oppose it. Yea, those who have been very active in persecuting the professors of religion, both with tongue and hand, have so far changed their course, as to join themselves to those whom they persecuted, and voluntarily choose to suffer reproach and affliction with the people of God, rather than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season.

6. Hereby those, who formerly were wandering after the riches, honours, preferments, and vanities of the world, and placed all their happiness in them, and spent all their cares and thoughts about them, have been brought to be mainly taken up in wondering at the love of God in sending Christ into the world to satisfy justice for our sins, and bear that wrath and curse we should have borne; and have been made to take more pleasure in thinking and speaking of Christ, and in spiritual exercises, than ever they had in all their worldly enjoyments; and willingly to resign all these to God's disposal, saying, If my main portion be secured to me, let God do with these external things as he pleaseth. These surely are glorious changes.

7. The Spirit's ministration appears the more glorious in this, that sometimes these changes are made on those who had not the benefit of good example or education, but were brought up in families where they neither saw nor heard any thing to the advantage of religion, but, on the contrary, much to fear and discourage them from it; such as bitter invectives against it, and cruel mockings and scoffs at those who owned it; and yet, in the face of all discouragement, danger, and persecution, they have been brought to embrace religion, to take up the cross, and follow Christ.

8. By the Spirit's ministration, many weak and feeble souls have been wonderfully strengthened and encouraged, power hath been given to the faint, and strength increased to them who had no might. The feeble have been made like David, and all their discouragements and complaints removed. They who could perform no duty, bear no burden, encounter no danger, have been wonderfully strengthened both for work and warfare, duty, and difficulty; and fortified against all fears, corruptions, temptations, afflictions, and persecutions, and made to say with David, Psal. xxviii. 3. "Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear; though thousands rise up against me, I will not be dismayed. And with Paul, Phil. iv. 13, "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me." Hereby those who have been oppressed with doubtings and waverings about the truths of God, have been confirmed and established, and made to say with Nathaniel, John i. 49, "Rabbi, thou art the King of Israel, thou art the Son of God." And with unbelieving Thomas, John xx. 28, "My Lord, and my God." And like the Israelites in Elijah's time, when the Lord manifested himself by fire, an usual emblem of the Spirit, 1 Kings xviii. 39, they were made to fall on their faces and cry out, "The Lord he is God, the Lord he is God."

Lastly, The ministration of the Spirit is glorious, in regard of the glorious intercourse and communion with God, which souls thereby attain to in the ordinances. Then he makes good that word to them, Jer. xxxi. 25, "I have satiated every weary soul, and replenished every sorrowful soul." Then he puts more gladness in their hearts than when corn, wine, and oil abound. Then he makes their doubts and unbelief to vanish, and all their clouds and darkness, fears and jealousies, to flee away. Now, they attain to this blessed intercourse, when he gives them such discoveries of a crucified Jesus, and his infiniteness and suitableness to their case, as fills them with joy and peace in believing, and in laying the stress of their souls, and burden of their guilt upon him. He helps them to embrace and apply the promises of the covenant, and to lay claim to them as their own, and say, "This and that promise is mine:" and plead with David, Psal. exix. 49, "Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope." And the pleading and feeding on a promise doth afford much inward sweetness and satisfaction to the soul. He also affords them such delight in God's work, such strength in performing of duty, that it is their meat and drink to do his will, and they reckon a day in his courts better than a thousand elsewhere. So that, though sometimes they have come to duties with deadness and straitenings of spirit, yet they have got such relief, that with Hannah they have been helped to pour out their hearts to God in prayer, and have gone away with their countenances no more sad. He gives them such discoveries of God's love to their souls through Christ, as fills them with inward hope and consolation; yea, sometimes such a strong assurance of God's favour, and of the pardon of their sins, and of the glory to be revealed, that their souls are made to overflow with joy. This communion and fellowship with God, by the ministration of the Spirit, God's people in all ages have found, and they declare it to be the greatest reality, when stepping over the threshold of time into eternity, and they have died with the high praises of God in their mouths for it.

APPLICATION.

1. See hence what thanks and praise we owe to the Lord Jesus Christ, who purchased the ministration of the Spirit to us by his blood. Hence, days of the Spirit's influences are called "days of the Son of man," Luke xvii. 22. All our nearness and intercourse with God is by the blood of Jesus, Eph. ii. 13. So that it is with a great sum we obtain this freedom.

2. See then from whence it is that gospel-ordinances have their glory, even from the ministration of the Spirit. Without this, ordinances are dead and lifeless, and dead things have no beauty. We must look to the Holy Spirit, then, to put life in ordinances, and make gospel-days glorious. Also, it is to be regretted, that so many look to the language and outward ornaments of sermons, more than to the ministration of the Spirit for their beauty and excellency.

3. How dreadful a crime must it be for any to ridicule or mock at the ministration of the Spirit, or to call it all fancy, whim, or enthusiasm! O, what is this but to reproach and do despite to the Spirit of grace! How provoking must it be for men to scoff at that which is the glory of ordinances, and the glory of any land! Surely they are real objects of pity, and exposed to great judgments, who are so far left and given up, as to glory in their shame, be ashamed of their glory, and mock at that which is the greatest blessing of heaven! O if they would stand in awe of this sin, and remember that word, Isa. xxviii. 22, "Now therefore, be not mockers, lest your hands be made strong."

II. A second use of this doctrine, may be of exhortation, and here let me exhort all the hearers of the gospel to pray earnestly to God, that he may be pleased to make the gospel the ministration of the Spirit to them, as it hath been to our ancestors in this land in former days, and as it is this day in other countries. Let us cry with the church, Lam. v. 21, "Renew our days as of old." And with David Psal. lxxiii. 2, "Let us see thy power and glory in the sanctuary, as in former times." And with Isaiah, Isa. li. 9, "Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord: awake as in the ancient days, in the generations of old." Let us plead with the church, Psal. xlv. 1, 23, 26, "We have heard with our ears, O God; our fathers have told us what works thou didst in their days, in the times of old. Awake, why sleepest thou? Arise for our help, and redeem us for thy mercies' sake." So let the people of Scotland say: "Lord, our fathers have told us what glorious gospel-days they had, by the ministration of the Spirit, when the Captain of our salvation took to him his great power, and rode in triumph in the chariot of salvation; his arrows were sharp in the hearts of his enemies, and hundreds dated their conversion from one sermon. Ah! we have sinned away Christ and his Spirit from the land." Or if all ranks would join to pray him back again, and cry, "Arise, O Lord, and have mercy upon Zion; let the time to favour her, yea, the set time, be now come." It is commonly observed, when the set time for favouring Zion with the glorious ministration of the Spirit is at hand, God useth to pour out a spirit of prayer upon his people; for he loves to bring about his glorious designs by means of their prayers, that he may put honour upon them. I might add many motives to frequency and fervency in such prayers.

As, 1. Consider the excellency and usefulness of the ministration of the Spirit. It would beautify the church and her assemblies, make her beautiful as Tirzah, comely as Jerusalem, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners. It would make both ministers and people to shine, our congregations to look with another face, and ordinances to have a new lustre. It would put life and strength in the members of the church, give life to their bones, vigour to their withered graces, and strengthen them to run on God's errands, and fight his battles. It would enable them to trample on Satan, and triumph over sin, wax valiant in battle, and put to flight the armies of the aliens. It would be as wind to the sails, oil to the wheels, and make souls to run the ways of God's commands without fainting or wearying. It would loose bonds, enlarge hearts, and give freedom from Satan's temptations, and strong lusts. It would revive drooping souls, turn their water into wine, their sorrow into joy, their fears into holy confidence, their doubts into godly assurance, their complaints into praises, and make them to sing in the ways of the Lord. It would satisfy their souls, and all their faculties, as with marrow and fatness, bring light to the mind, freedom to the will, strength to the memory, peace to the conscience, and life to all graces

Yea, it would make the soul to grow in grace, and ripen apace for heaven. It would make professors of religion grow more sincere in duties, more fervent in prayer, more attentive in hearing, more frequent in meditation, more practical in knowledge, more edifying in converse, more humble for defects, and more thankful for mercies.

2. Consider the melancholy case of the church, for want of the ministration of the Spirit. Her beauty is quite marred, her gold becomes dim, and her most fine gold is changed. Her womb is barren, her breasts dry, and her ordinances dead and lifeless. Satan reigns and prevails, and precious souls are an easy prey to his teeth. And believers themselves fall under sad languishings and decays. Whereas the Spirit's ministration would soon change the face of affairs, and roll away the reproach of barrenness under gospel-means wherewith enemies are apt to upbraid us, saying, "Where is your God?" Where is the fruit of your many sermons, fasts, and prayers, and solemn communions? This was like a sword in David's bones, Psal. xliii. 10, when they said unto him, "Where is thy God?"

3. Take a view of the largeness of Satan's kingdom in the world. How great is the number of his subjects! And will not every loyal subject of Christ be concerned and troubled to see the devil possessing such large territories, when their Redeemer has but a little flock? O! can you see your King's country overspread with enemies as thick as grasshoppers, when Christ's army are pitched before them like two little flocks of kids, and not be affected and grieved for it? Now the only remedy for it is to pray for the glorious ministration of the Spirit. This would soon make a mutiny and desertion in Satan's camp, diminish his followers, and increase the army and kingdom of our dear Jesus. But to sum up all:

4. A day of the ministration of the Spirit would bring many rare and rich blessings along with it; such as discoveries of the Redeemer's glory, convictions of the evil and vileness of sin, many crowns of victory and triumph to Christ, great additions to his friends and followers. Then gospel-light would shine clear, saving knowledge increase, ignorance and error vanish, riches of free grace would be displayed, and Satan be bound up. Then ministers and ordinances would be lively, secure sinners would be awakened, dead souls would live, hard hearts would be melted, strong lusts subdued, and many sons and daughters born to God. Such a day would heal divisions, cement breaches, make us all of one heart and mind, and bring down heaven to earth. This would redress our grievances, remove our complaints, and unite Christ's scattered flock. It would make true religion and holy persons to be in esteem, vice to be in disgrace, and iniquity as ashamed to hide its face. Then sabbaths and communions would be days of heaven. Prayer and praise, spiritual converse, talking of Christ and redeeming love, would be our chiefest delight. O then, pray for such a time.

QUEST. What shall we do that our prayers may be prevalent for the glorious ministration of the Spirit to the church and land?

ANS. Take these directions:

1. Let us lament after a departed God, as the penitent Israelites did, 1 Sam. vii. 2, "All Israel lamented after the Lord." They were sensible of their loss, confessed they had sinned him away, and wrestled for his return.

2. Search out the Achan in the camp, old or late sins, which may provoke God to withhold his Spirit from us. Mourn bitterly for it; apply to the blood of Jesus for pardon; abhor and put it away.

3. Be thankful for the least droppings of the Spirit, entertain them kindly, and plead that they may be the forerunners of a greater shower.

4. Use arguments in prayer for the ministration of the Spirit. Plead the multitude of dry bones which are scattered up and down the valley of vision. How general is the deadness both among ministers and people! And nothing can revive them but the breath of the Lord. Cry with the prophet, Ezek. xxxvii. 9, "Come from the four winds, O Breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live." Plead your inability to do any spiritual good without the Spirit; Lord, we can neither pray, praise, mourn, believe, repent, meditate, read, hear, or communicate, without the ministration of the Spirit; we can do nothing spiritually; all we do is in a natural, carnal way, which cannot be pleasing to thee. Plead also the promises of the new covenant, which are free and absolute concerning the giving of the Holy Spirit; such as these in Isa. xlii. 3; Ezek. xxxvi. 27. God would have us to turn these his promises into prayers, if we would share in them; for he saith, after making them, that he will be "inquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them," Ezek. xxxvi. 37.

OBJECT. But, say some discouraged souls, we have so grieved and vexed the Holy Spirit, when dealing with us, that we fear he will return to us no more.

ANS. 1. Many of God's people have grieved him, and yet he did not leave them finally. 2. Have you a sense of guilt in this matter? Is it the grief and trouble of your heart that you have so grieved the Holy Spirit? Are the breathings of your souls after his return? then surely he is not wholly withdrawn; for if he were, you would be without sense and feeling. 3. Remember that Christ still invites you to come to him for every thing, and for the Spirit among the rest. He hath purchased the Spirit for all that come to him; and those who come to him for the Spirit, he will in no wise cast out. May we all have grace to depend upon his word, and both to live and die by faith upon it, that his name may have the glory for ever. Amen.

A PROPHECY OF THE INCREASE OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM.

SERMON XI.—“HE MUST INCREASE.” JOHN III. 30.

THESE are the words of John Baptist concerning Jesus Christ, upon the occasion of his disciples complaining of Christ's baptizing, which drew great multitudes to him, whereby they feared their master might come to be darkened or deserted. But the humble man, instead of resenting it, as his disciples did, falls a commending Christ, and abasing himself; yea, he professeth the greatest satisfaction in the advancement of Christ and his interest in the world, and compareth himself to a friend of the Bridegroom, ver. 29, that rejoiceth in the success of the match which he had been labouring to promote: it being honour enough for the most eminent minister of Christ, to be an instrument to recommend his glorious Master, and to court and make ready a bride for him.

In ver. 30, where my text is, 1. John foretells the increase of Christ's kingdom and glory, as a thing highly just and equitable in itself, and most agreeable and satisfying to him, and all other friends of the Bridegroom, “He must increase;” that is, his interest shall grow in the world, his name shall spread, his throne be raised, his crown shall flourish, his dominions be enlarged, and his subjects multiplied. You think he hath gained a great deal already, but that is nothing to what he will gain: and all this in consequence of the decree of God, and the prophecies recorded concerning the Messiah in Psal. ii. and lxxii. &c. so that there is a necessity for it, “He must decrease.”

2. John foretells the consequent of this increase to himself, “I must decrease;” that is, I must be darkened and disappear. He is not at all displeased to see himself obscured and outshone by the blessed Messiah, whose servant and forerunner he owned he was. No, no, says he, Let him shine forth as the “rising sun,” and let me disappear like the “morning-star:” let his name be raised, and mine depressed, I cheerfully submit to it, I am contented to be any thing, or to be nothing, so that Christ may be all.

Doct. The increase of Christ's kingdom and glory in the world is absolutely certain and necessary. It must infallibly be, for God hath said it, Jer. xxiii. 5, “A king shall reign and prosper in the earth.” Psal. lxxii. 8, “He shall have dominion from sea to sea;” cxvii. 18, “Upon himself shall his crown flourish.”

In discoursing from this subject, I shall,

I. Inquire what is the increase of Christ's kingdom and glory which we may warrantably look for.

II. What are the times and seasons of this increase.

III. What are the reasons why Christ must thus increase.

IV. Make application.

I. As to the first, What is the increase here meant?

Negatively, it is not to be understood,

1. Of any increase of Christ's essential glory as God; for this is impossible, he being infinite, and therefore the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever, without any variableness or shadow of turning.

2. It is not meant that Christ's kingdom shall increase or flourish in outward splendour and greatness, like one of the kingdoms of this world. No, Christ's kingdom being not of this world, its glory is of a spiritual and heavenly nature, and peculiar to itself alone.

3. Neither is it to be thought that the increase of Christ's kingdom is to be constant or alike at all times, or without decay or diminution at any time. No, no, for sometimes it seems to be brought very low, yea, so low was it brought under the antichristian apostacy, that it was scarcely visible.

Positively, the increase spoken of in the text is to be understood of the flourishing of Christ's mediatory kingdom, and of the spreading of his manifestative glory in the world, which consists chiefly in these things:

1. In the increase and spreading of gospel-light through the world, so that the dark places of the earth shall be enlightened with the knowledge of Christ; and those places which had but twilight discoveries of him shall attain to brighter views of his excellency and usefulness, and to a clearer insight into the gospel-mysteries, and the way of salvation through Christ and his righteousness imputed to the sons of Adam. Then the Sun of righteousness shall arise with more powerful beams of light and heat upon his churches than before, and at length with such clearness and efficacy as to scatter antichristian darkness, error, idolatry, superstition, dead forms and ceremonies of man's invention. For how is it else that the man of sin shall be consumed by the Spirit of Christ's mouth, and destroyed by the brightness of his coming, 2 Thess. ii. 8, but by the outpouring of his Spirit with his word preached, and by the bright and convincing appearances of the Redeemer in the glory of gospel-light? Then is it that Christ shall increase, and his kingdom be enlarged, when "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea," according to the prophecy of Habakkuk, Hab. ii. 14.

2. This increase takes in the Lord's furnishing his church with many "burning and shining lights, able ministers of the New Testament," to be eminent instruments of displaying his glory in the world. When he is signally to increase his kingdom, he will raise up and qualify ministers for the work; who shall be men of large hearts, fluent tongues, and public spirits; shining holiness and piety; undaunted courage and zeal for God; inspired with a burning love to Christ and the souls of men; inclined to prefer the good of Jerusalem to their chiefest joy; and willing to run all hazards by sea and land; to venture all that is dear to them in the world, their reputation, life, and all the comforts of it, for Jesus Christ; and cheerfully content to spend and to be spent for the increase of his kingdom and glory, and the gathering of souls to him. And particularly, it is a pledge and forerunner of this happy increase, when the Lord sends down his Spirit upon students and expectants of the ministry; graciously touches their hearts, and works an inward change upon their souls; animates them with sincere principles and ends, and gives them such impressions of the weight of the pastoral office and the charge of souls, that they will not run thereto unsent, nor have an active hand in thrusting themselves into it, or do any thing to beget prejudices, to mar their success; but will wait patiently upon the Lord, till he shall open the door, and clear their call to enter into his vineyard.

3. It imports the increase of the number of Christ's subjects and followers, "As the king's honour is in the multitude of his people," Prov. xiv. 28, so Christ is glorified in the multitude of his subjects. Thus shall Christ's kingdom and glory increase in the latter days, when the kingdoms of the earth shall become the kingdoms of the Lord; then the Jews themselves shall gather to Christ's standard lifted up in the gospel, together with the fullness of the Gentiles; they shall fly to it in clouds, like doves to their windows, according to these promises, Isaiah ii. 2; Micah iv. 1, 2; Isaiah lx. 8; Rev. ii. 15; Rom. xi. 25, 26; Psal. cii. 15, 16, 22. Now, what is it that will bring about this glorious increase, but the ministration of the Spirit with the gospel? It is this that opens a great and effectual door, 1 Cor. xvi. 9, a door of utterance in ministers' mouths, and a door of entrance in hearers' hearts. Then ministers' spirits shall be enlarged, and their tongues loosed in preaching; and hearers' appetites will be sharpened, and their hearts melted in hearing. When the Lord comes with his Spirit, and gives testimony to the word of his grace, then the arrows of the word shall pierce the conscience; the wounded shall cry, What shall we do to be saved? And multitudes shall fall under Zion's King, Psal. xiv. 5.

4. Then Christ's kingdom increases, when truth triumphs over error, and pure doctrine and worship prevail against superstition and delusion. These are happy seasons when the Lord magnifies his power in binding up the winds of heresy and false doctrine, and making pure scripture-truths to be relished and preferred to the vain opinions and false reasonings of men. Then he causes Infidelity, Deism, Socinianism, Arianism, Popery, and Arminianism, to be rejected and abhorred: and makes men willing to subject their own reason to divine revelation, and to fall in with the plain truths of the word, and the gospel-scheme of saving lost sinners by the righteousness of Jesus Christ, and through his death and purchase only. Then he brings men to see their own natural impotency and inability to do any thing for their own recovery and happiness: so that, instead of ascribing their good actions and attainments to the good use of their own natural powers, they are willing to acknowledge God in every thing that is good in them, and to ascribe all to the praise and glory of his free grace, who, for Christ's sake, works in them both to will and to do. O that Christ and his truth may thus increase in the world!

5. This blessed increase of Christ's kingdom, includes the downfall of its enemies, and especially the overthrow of Mahomet and antichrist, the ruin of Babylon, and the binding up of Satan, that grand enemy which excites all the rest. This is foretold, Rev. xx. 2. Now when once that time comes, that Satan shall be restrained and bound up from influencing rulers to persecute or oppress the church; from instigating seducers to propagate errors; and from exciting schismatical and seditious persons to sow dissension among the followers of Jesus; then the kingdom of Christ will greatly increase in the world.

6. It imports the increase of true piety and holiness among the subjects of Christ's kingdom; when they shall study a universal conformity to their holy Lord and Master, and, like him, make it their meat and drink to serve God, and do his will: when their minds and affections shall be greatly disengaged from the world, and the strain of their conversations shall be spiritual and heavenly: their lives shall shine in holiness and good works; and their great study shall be to have their spirits and tempers, their walk and carriage, in all respects such as becomes the gospel of Christ: when they shall be just, righteous, and true, in all their dealings, words, and actions; when they shall be meek and lowly, sober and temperate, patient and peaceable, loving and forgiving, harmless and inoffensive, in all the parts of their conversation: and at the same time shall abhor and depart from all lying and dissembling, injustice and intemperance, pride and ambition, slandering and backbiting, malice and revenge, discord and strife, and whatever else is contrary to true godliness, and the pattern of the holy Jesus: then it is that Christ's kingdom shall greatly increase.

7. There is in it the increase of zeal and public-spiritedness for promoting true religion, and of Christian courage and magnanimity in owning and avowing of Christ and his cause before the world. When Christians shall not be ashamed of a crucified Jesus, or of his truths, ordinances, or people, but shall openly profess him, glory in him, and whatever belongs to him; and also bear testimony against every thing that he hates or forbids; and when a spirit of reformation shall be poured upon all ranks and degrees of men; so as every one in their several stations and capacities shall do their utmost to suppress sin, and recommend Christ and his ways to all around them: then it is that Christ's kingdom and glory will increase in the world.

II. I proposed next to inquire into the times and seasons of this glorious increase. God hath his set times for Zion's increase and glory, which none can stop, Psal. cii. 13. The apostolic age was the most remarkable set time for it that ever was, when every sermon made new conquests and additions to the church, till every city and corner of the vast Roman empire was stored with Christians. But, besides this, we have promises of a more full and ample increase of Christ's kingdom in the latter days, or towards the end of the world; of which Daniel speaks in his prophecy, Dan. ii. 28, 44; vii. 27. There he tells us, that in these latter days God will set up a great, large, and flourishing kingdom, which will break all others in pieces, and stand for ever. That he means the flourishing state and glorious increase of Christ's kingdom towards the end of the world, is clear from this, that he makes the latter days he speaks of, to be the days of the kings which should divide the fourth monarchy, or Roman empire, among them. This empire was to be divided into ten kingdoms, called in the Revelation ten horns, and represented in Dan. ii. 41, by the ten toes of the feet of the image. Now, the stone cut out of the mount, which is the kingdom of Christ, is said to smite the image upon its feet, and break them in pieces, verse 35, which signifies Christ's conquering the Roman empire, when divided into ten kings, or kingdoms, called ten horns, Rev. xvii. which division hath happened in the latter days. And these horns, or kings and kingdoms, being joined together in giving their power to the beast, or Roman antichrist, as their head, do preserve some shadow of the ancient Roman empire or monarchy, seeing antichrist's power is almost as extensive as the emperor's once was. Hence antichrist is sometimes called the image of the beast, and is said to exercise the power of the first beast, Rev. xiii. 12, 14, as being set up at Rome in place of the Roman empire in the west, and as bearing the likeness of the then emperor that reigned there. For at the time the said empire lay dead and wounded by the sword, or invasion of the Goths and Vandals, and in effect was not, the Pope got up and mounted the beast, which the emperor had rode upon before him, namely, the Roman state, for that is the body of the beast, and so set up a new image of the old heathen empire at Rome. The papal power may be well called its image, as being like it in largeness of dominion, in form of government, and in tyranny and idolatry.

When Christ's kingdom was first set up in the apostles' time, the Roman empire was on its iron legs, as represented in Nebuchadnezzar's image, that is, it was in its greatest strength. But in the latter days, which Daniel speaks of, Dan. ii. 28, 44, when Christ's kingdom is wonderfully increased, the empire is in its feet and toes, that is, in ten kingdoms subject to the beast, as they are explained, Rev. xvii. 12, 13, 17, 18. Now, as Daniel tells us, it is upon these that the stone smites, and so it is among them that Christ will make his glorious conquests in the latter days. For it is said, these kings shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them, not only their power and armies, but he shall at length overcome their hearts, so that they shall be brought to hate the whore, and make her desolate, Rev. xvii. 14, 16, which time is yet to come.

Then it is that Christ's kingdom will receive a glorious increase, and the kingdoms of this world become his, as in Rev. ii. 15. Then the great river Euphrates will be dried up, for preparing the way of the kings of the east, Rev. xvi. 12. Then the blindness of the Jews shall be removed, and the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in, Rom. xi. 1, 25, 26. These, and many other famous prophecies about the increase of Christ's kingdom and glory, remain to be accomplished in the latter days; at least in the extent such as those that foretell that every thing in Jerusalem shall be holy: the people shall be all righteous: the sanctuary shall be cleansed, and purity be both in the worship and worshippers in the temple, and no more a Canaanite in the house of the Lord: all nations shall be gathered to see his glory: there shall be no more war betwixt nations; the Jews shall be gathered out of all the countries where they are dispersed, and brought to their own land: they shall be no more separate kingdoms, &c. For which see Isa. ii. 2, 3, 4; xxvi. 2; lii. 1; lx. 5, 10, 12, 13, 21; Ezek. xxvi. 24, 28; xxxv. 21—28; Dan. viii. 14; Zech. xiv. 21; Rev. xi. 1, &c. Now, what a glorious increase must it bring to the Mediator's kingdom and glory, when all these prophecies and promises shall be fulfilled concerning the overthrow of Babylon and antichrist, the destruction of the Turkish empire, the in-bringing of the Jews, with the fulness of the Gentiles?

In regard the fall and destruction of antichrist, or the papal power, is the great mercy promised to the church in the latter days, and with which all the other blessings promised are connected; and that the scripture is more particular about the time of its being fulfilled, than any other; it is fit to inquire what is there said about it. And, first, let us view the foregoing signs and forerunners of antichrist's fall, and of Christ's coming to deliver his people from his tyranny, which point out the times as near; such as,

First, previous thereto, there will be a great defection among all the churches of Christ. Among God's people deadness and formality shall so increase, that all the virgins shall seem to fall asleep. Errors and false doctrines shall greatly abound, the luminaries shall be darkened and the stars shall withdraw their shining. Many ministers shall suck in corrupt principles about the glorious doctrines of the gospel, particularly that of justification; by which means the earth shall be turned into blood and slaughter. Yea, in these last days, there shall be false teachers, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them. There shall be many infidels and profane scoffers, who shall make a mock of serious godliness, and the Holy Spirit's operations; and scoff at the gospel revelation, and the way of saving sinners by Christ and his righteousness imputed to us. Also they will deride the promises of his coming to destroy antichrist, to deliver his people, and to judge the world, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming? for all things continue as they were from the beginning." Of these things the apostle Peter speaks in the second and third chapters of his second epistle. Nay, so general shall the defection and infidelity of the world at that time be, that our Lord himself tells us, that when he cometh, he shall scarce find faith upon the earth, Luke xviii. 8, that is, he will find few that have the firm belief of the gospel truths, and few that have faith concerning Christ's coming. So great have been the reelings of the world, so long the delays of Christ's coming, and so frequent their mistakes who have prefixed times for it, that there will remain but little faith in any about his glorious appearance for his church, when behold he is just at the door. As Atheists, Deists, and adversaries of the truth have been much hardened in their infidelity, by the mistakes of those who have been too particular and peremptory in timing future events: so the godly themselves may be sadly shaken, and tempted to despair of Christ's coming, when he so long passeth their reckoning. Therefore, said he, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" But glory to his name, "He is faithful and true," and will come at the appointed time, and the unbelief of man shall not make the promise of God of none effect.

2. There shall be great troubles in the world, and very great fear and distress in the church, before help arise to her, Dan. xii. 1. Daniel is certified, that when Christ is to stand up for the church, "there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time, and at that time thy people shall be delivered." So in Matt. xxiv., Luke xxi., Christ saith, that before his coming, there shall be strange signs in the heavens, and in the earth, earthquakes, wars, and rumours of wars, the rushing of nations one against another, and such universal distress, that men's hearts will be failing them for fear; and even then shall deliverance be at hand.

3. Christ will appear when his church's enemies are most confident and secure; and particularly, when the Romish harlot is lifted up with pride by her success in this or that kingdom, and begins to say "I sit as a queen, and shall see no sorrow." But then it is that her plagues shall come as in one day, Rev. xvii. 7, 8. How confident was the cruel persecutor Dioclesian, of his success against the church, when he erected pillars with this inscription, Deleta Superstitione Christiana? Then he thought he had got Christianity extirpated, and the church ruined; when, behold, her glorious deliverance under Constantine the Great was just at hand.

4. Before antichrist's fall, one of the ten kingdoms which supported the beast shall undergo a marvellous revolution, Rev. xi. 13, "The same hour there was a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell." By which tenth part is to be understood one of the ten kingdoms into which the great city Romish Babylon was divided: this many take to be the kingdom of France; it being the tenth and last of the kingdoms as to the time of its rise, and that which gave Rome the denomination of the beast with ten horns; and also, it being the only one of the ten that was never conquered since its rise.

However unlikely this and other prophesied events may appear at the time, yet the almighty hand of the only wise God can soon bring them about when least expected. Though the church should be wrapt about with the blackest clouds and thickest darkness, for a time, that will be no stop to God's great designs. As a little before the break of day is the darkest time of all the night; so usually it is a dark hour before the day-break of the church's deliverance. Let us not then be shaken in our minds, whatever storm blow, but firmly believe the word of a true and faithful God, that all his promises to his church shall be exactly accomplished: that he will rise in due time and scatter all his enemies; and that the set time to favour Zion will certainly come. May we then be helped to look to heaven, and cry for a steady, fixed, and persevering faith, that we may never be shaken, nor carried away by the prevailing torrent of infidelity, but may still be established upon the firm rock of truth, for Christ's sake! Amen.

OF THE INCREASE OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM.

SERMON XII.—“HE MUST INCREASE.” JOHN III. 30.

IN the preceding discourse, I was speaking of the times and seasons of the increase of Christ's kingdom and glory; and seeing this increase in the latter days is very much connected with antichrist's fall, I was inquiring a little into the time of that fall, and mentioning some forerunners of it. But to get a more certain view of it, it is fit to inquire into the scripture account of the time and length of antichrist's reign; which, according to Rev. xi. 2, 3; xii. 6, 14; xiii. 5, doth amount to 1260 years, as is generally agreed to. Now, if we could hit upon the time when these years began, we should certainly know when his reign would end. But God, for our trial and exercise, hath left us much in the dark when to begin them. Thus also dealt God with his people in ancient times; for though he told them their bondage in Egypt would be 400 years, their captivity in Babylon would be 70 years; and from the commandment to rebuild the temple to the Messiah's death, there would be 70 weeks of years, or 490 years: yet still the precise time when to begin these computations was much questioned among them. So that they never were perfectly certain about the exact times of the church's deliverance, until the glorious events happened; and then every one saw clearly when they should have dated the beginning of these predicted years. Now the same is the case with respect to antichrist's reign and down-fall. Though now we be not certain when to begin the 1260 years, which is the duration of antichrist's reign; yet, after the event of his fall, the time of its commencement will be so plain, that after ages will be apt to wonder that we fell into such mistakes about it. Some in their calculations have begun antichrist's reign too early: others again, perhaps, begin it too late. Some of which I shall mention, with the grounds of their opinion.

1. Because antichrist is called the beast with ten horns, Rev. xiii. 1, and the ten horns or kings receive their power one hour with the beast, and give their power and kingdom to the beast, Rev. xvii. 12—17. Many therefore did begin antichrist's reign, as soon as the Roman empire was broken, and divided into ten different kingdoms; to wit, when the tenth or last horn appeared, which was the kingdom of the Franks, now called the French, under Childericus their king, in the year of our Lord 456; to which, if we add 1260 years, the time of antichrist's reign, the end of it was to have been in the year 1716, and accordingly many did expect it that year. But the event hath showed that they began antichrist's reign too soon. And, indeed, the scripture doth not say that his reign, though contemporary with the ten horns, should begin as soon as the last of them appeared; and in the year 456, antichrist was scarcely discernible in the church. But yet, in the year 1716, antichrist got a severe blow, when the Lord broke his interest in Britain, by defeating the rebellion there in his favour, and securing the Protestant succession to the crown in the house of Hanover.

2. Others did begin antichrist's reign twenty years after, viz. in the year 476; because till then some shadow of the old Roman empire remained. For it was not entirely dissolved, nor did the ten horns appear formally in its room, till the deposition of Augustulus, who was the last of the Roman emperors that reigned over both east and west. Now he was deposed in the year 476, after which time the very name of the Roman empire in the west became extinct. Those of this way of thinking did also strengthen their opinion from that text in 2 Thess. ii. 7, 8, “He who now letteth, will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that wicked one be revealed;” that is, antichrist, who then was working under ground, would not formally appear until the removal of the Roman emperor, whose power in the west did greatly hinder the papal tyranny and grandeur. Now, according to this opinion, antichrist's reign should have ended in the year 1736, but the event also hath discovered they began it too soon. For though the bishops of Rome, upon the fall of the empire, made great progress in their projected usurpation, yet antichrist was not formally revealed so soon as 476. Neither did the scripture say that he would be immediately revealed, and begin his reign upon the removing of the Roman emperor. But though the Lord did not overturn antichrist in the year 1736, as some expected, yet I hope he hath taken a remarkable step towards it, and for the increase of his own kingdom in or about that year, by raising up eminent instruments for spreading his glorious gospel through the world, such as the Moravian brethren, and Oxford Methodists; and particularly by sending forth the Rev. Mr. Whitefield that very year to preach the everlasting gospel with wonderful success. And now, both he and others whom God hath excited, have, since that time, made a noble progress in this work, both in Europe and America, by preaching in the demonstration of the Spirit, and with power, the doctrine of free grace, of original sin, of regeneration by the Holy Spirit, and of justification by Christ's righteousness alone; which doctrine had been sadly buried before. And I verily believe, that it is by the effusion of the Spirit with the gospel, and the bright convincing appearances of Christ, and free grace in the glory of gospel-light, that Antichrist will be consumed and destroyed, and Christ's kingdom increased and enlarged.

3. Some there are who are very late in beginning Antichrist's reign, not before the bishops of Rome turned grossly idolatrous, and set up for the worship of images, and for excommunicating and deposing the emperors of Constantinople, their civil rulers, because they opposed them in their idolatry. This was first attempted by pope Constantine against the emperor Philippicus, in the year 713; and afterwards practised with great boldness and success by pope Gregory II. against the emperor Leo, in the year 726. According to this opinion, Antichrist's reign will not end before the year 1973.

4. But the most probable time for commencing Antichrist's reign seems to be when Boniface III. got himself declared universal bishop and head of the church, and assumed the title of pope, which was in the year 606. And in this usurped supremacy, he was then owned and submitted to by the ten horns or kings, who gave their power to him. Then it was the pope became Christ's declared opposite, by usurping his peculiar offices and titles, and so appeared formally to be Antichrist. Now if we add to 606 the time of Antichrist's reign, 1260 years, his dominion will not end till the year 1866, which is 124 years hence. Though none now living will see this, yet we may comfort ourselves, as once a godly man did: "I have had a longing desire," said he, "to see or hear of the fall of Antichrist: but I check myself; I shall go to heaven, and there the news of it shall quickly arrive, for both angels and saints will rejoice at it," Rev. xviii. 20. Why, that will be the happy time of the increase of Christ's kingdom and glory. May God hasten it for Christ's sake.

III. I propose next to give some reasons why Christ must increase as above:

1. Because of the decree and promise of God, which cannot fail. He hath promised this not only to the church, Jer. xxiii. 5, but also to Christ himself, Psal. ii. 8; ex. 1, 2. And surely "he will not alter the thing that is gone out of his lips, he will not lie unto David," Psal. lxxxix. 34, 35.

2. Because it is for the sake of the kingdom of Christ, and its increase, that God hath made the world, and hath given the administration of the kingdom of providence to Christ himself, in order to secure the accomplishment of all the glorious promises made to him, the reins of government are put in his own hand, Matt. xxviii. 18; Eph. i. 22. And to be sure, the great Mediator will see to his own interest.

3. Because Christ is the darling of heaven, dearly beloved of God for undertaking the redemption of a lost world, a work whereby God is highly glorified. In this transaction he cheerfully complied with the divine will, became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, and therefore his name must be exalted above every name, and every knee must bow before him, Phil. ii. 8—10.

APPLICATION.

I. Use may be of information:

1. We here see what encouragement we have to pray as we are taught, "Thy kingdom come," and that it may be increased and enlarged; seeing we pray for what God hath decreed, promised, and foretold, and must certainly come to pass.

2. It must then be great folly to oppose the flourishing of Christ's kingdom; they who do it have a strong party to fight against, even the omnipotent God, who hath said of Christ and his kingdom, "He must increase."

II. Use may be of reproof and warning to all who would hinder the increase of Christ's kingdom and glory in the world; such as,

1. Those who persecute and oppress his people.

2. Those who promote the violent settlement of ministers contrary to the will of congregations, and thereby put a stop to the conversion and edification of souls.

3. Those who promote infidelity, error, or any doctrine in the church, contrary to the simplicity and purity of the gospel, and the scripture-scheme of salvation by Christ and his suretyrighteousness, whereby free grace is exalted and self-debased.

4. Those who refuse to subject themselves to the laws of his kingdom, and will rather obey their own passions and lusts, saying in their hearts, "We will not have this man to reign over us;" if Christ be a King, let him be a King without a kingdom, subjects, or laws; if we could, he should have none. O sinners, take heed what you are doing; you directly oppose the will of that God who saith, "He must increase."

III. Use of lamentation. We may here take occasion to bewail the state of Christ's kingdom in divers places, in which it once flourished and increased, but now, alas! decreaseth; as in France, Germany, Poland, Bohemia, Hungary, Piedmont, and other foreign parts, and likewise in Britain and Ireland, and particularly in our mother church of Scotland. O! what a dreadful flood of infidelity, atheism, irreligion, damnable heresies, looseness of principle and of practice, contempt of God and religion, scoffings at the truths of God and serious godliness, hath broke out in this age, and swelled to a greater height than at any time since our blessed reformation. Our holy Christian religion, in its firm foundations and infallible proofs, hath been openly attacked and ridiculed by professed infidels and pretenders to reason amongst us, and that notwithstanding the strong obligations they lie under by their baptism and education to adhere to it. And many pretended friends have been undermining and destroying it, by promoting opinions and practices inconsistent with its purity and interest. Yea, all ranks of us, whether magistrates, ministers, nobility, gentry, citizens, and commons, are sadly chargeable with the prevailing defections and declensions of the age. Alas, we have left our first love, and have wofully degenerated from our ancestors' piety, zeal, and solemn engagements to the Lord! How lamentable is our neglect of family-worship, secret prayer, sabbath-sanctification, and gospel-holiness! As also, our losing our former liveliness and spirituality in God's worship and service, and letting our devotion dwindle away into a dead formality, and mere bodily service! And finally, how strong is the propensity of the present generation to vanity, lightness, plays, comedies, romances, idle diversions, contempt of ordinances, lying, cheating, perjury, and all sorts of immoral practices.

Upon account whereof God is provoked to forsake his ordinances, and smite our church with sore judgments, such as a spirit of division, a miscarrying womb, and dry breasts, impenitency and hardness of heart, suspending the Spirit's influences, so as hearts are not melted by the word. The angel descends not to trouble the waters, and the diseased step not in to be healed as in former days. Our hearts do not burn while Christ is talking with us; the times of refreshing come not from the presence of the Lord. And, alas! we who are in the ministry want not reason to fear that we have a hand in bringing on the judgments, by our undertaking the ministry for carnal ends, and without experimental knowledge of the Spirit's work in regeneration; helping in lax men to the ministry, and discouraging the more serious; little reading and studying the scriptures; want of zeal and concern for the conversion and edification of souls: seeking ourselves in our public appearances more than the glory of our blessed Master; not looking to him for furniture, and depending on his presence and Spirit for success: not labouring more earnestly, and preaching more rousingly for awakening and convincing of souls: laying stumbling-blocks before hearers, by sinful strifes, untender walking, and wrong steps, whereby they are tempted to abhor the offerings of the Lord, not acting as faithful stewards, by rightly dividing the word of truth, and speaking to the different cases of the converted and unconverted, saints and sinners; and not making it the great end of our sermons to convince lost sinners of their misery, to exalt a crucified Christ as their only remedy, and to lead poor souls to him. O that all ranks were brought to acknowledge their guilt, and to lament the hand they have had in increasing guilt, and crime, and misery, and in stopping the increase of Christ's kingdom!

IV. Use may be of consolation to all the friends of Christ. Though you have cause of fear and trembling, because of the melancholy view you have of the church's case at present, her groans and grievances, defections, and backslidings, and the power and success of enemies; yet rejoice in the tidings my text brings, "Christ must increase." The church shall arise and shine, her light shall come, and the glory of the Lord shall rise upon her. It shall not be in the power of all her enemies, though hell and Rome be joined with them, to hinder this increase. Antichrist must fall: he hath been in a deadly consumption these 200 years, and will expire at length. Whatever be the opposition, Christ must overcome, triumph, and increase at last. His church will certainly outlive all her enemies. And though sometimes she may decrease in some places, yet we should mind that Christ's kingdom is like the sea, what it loseth in one place it gaineth in another. If it lose in Europe, and gain in America, Christ loseth nothing. And though his church in our land be brought low, yet her Head and King lives, and many of his worthies have lived and died in the faith of it, that he would not leave her, but return and revive his work in her, with a powerful arm, and spreading glory.

V. Use of exhortation. And here I exhort and obtest all ranks, high and low, to do what they can in their stations, by their prayers and endeavours, for the coming and increase of Christ's kingdom, as Christ directs, Matt. vi. 10. O how concerned was David this way! Psal. xxv. 22; li. 18. And so were Asaph, Isaiah, Daniel, Nehemiah, Paul, &c. Psal. lxx. 14; Isa. lxii. 1; Dan. ix. 16, &c; Neh. ii. 3; Rom. x. i. Consider also the woes and judgments denounced against those who are unconcerned for the interest of Christ's kingdom, Amos vi. 1, 6; Esther iv. 14. Likewise take a view of the blessings which would attend the increase of it. The Redeemer's glory would be magnified, the church would become a fruitful mother of many children, and many sons and daughters would be born to God. Then light would spread, knowledge be increased, ignorance vanish, error be abhorred, Satan restrained, vice forsaken, virtue esteemed, love and peace cultivated. Then the lives of Christians would shine, sabbaths would be days of heaven, sermons and sacraments would be longed for, the friends of Christ valued as the excellent ones of the earth, and all wisdom's ways would be pleasant and delightful. And what happy times would these be?

QUEST. What are those means and endeavours we should use for the increase of Christ's kingdom and glory in the world, according to our several stations and capacities?

ANS. 1. Let magistrates contribute to this noble end, both by their authority and example, discountenancing the immoral and vicious, and putting respect upon the virtuous and godly. Let them with zeal and impartiality execute our good laws for suppressing open vice, such as drunkenness, uncleanness, profaning of the Lord's name, and of the Lord's day, &c. Let them in their own lives be patterns to others in justice, sobriety, family-religion, and attending upon public ordinances: and no doubt their good examples would have great influence upon these around them.

2. Let ministers especially lay out themselves for this increase, by making it the great scope and end of their sermons to awaken secure sinners, and lead them to Christ; by diligent catechizing of them, and dealing particularly with young persons in private about their souls, and taking great pains with them at their first admission to the Lord's table. Let them be careful to keep back the ignorant and ungodly from that holy ordinance; and depend on the ministration of the Spirit for all the success of their endeavours. Let them beware of licensing or ordaining any to sacred functions, who are not of good report for true piety and soundness; and of imposing pastors upon congregations without their consent or good liking. Let them preach to their flocks by their good lives, as well as their lips; and in all things behave as true friends of the Bridegroom, desiring (like John Baptist) that their blessed Master may increase, though they should decrease; that his name may be great, though theirs should sink to nothing.

3. Let elders in their sphere contribute all they can to the flourishing of Christ's kingdom, by their fervent prayers for it, and studying to be exemplary in family-religion, sobriety and holiness of life: by reproving and admonishing of those who walk disorderly, informing ministers about them, and faithfully assisting them in the exercise of discipline, and in ruling and governing of the church.

4. Let teachers of youth assist in this work, by labouring to instil the knowledge of God, and the way of salvation through Christ, very early into their scholars' minds; and to persuade men of the necessity and advantage of prayer, a new heart, godliness, meekness, chastity, sobriety, and justice. And likewise to train them up in the abhorrence of vice in all its kinds, and of every thing that may prove an inlet or encouragement to it.

5. Let parents and heads of families do what they can to set up and increase Christ's kingdom in their families, by maintaining the worship of God in them; sanctifying the sabbath in all their dwellings; catechizing and instructing children and servants, and requiring an account of the sermons they hear; reproving and erubing sin wherever it appears; and earnestly recommending Christ and the new birth, prayer, reading of the Bible, and holy living, to all within their gates; and especially to children, when their hearts are young and tender; for these are the hope and seed of the next generation. Let us follow the example of the Jews in Nehemiah's time, who repaired the walls of Jerusalem, every one against their own houses, Neh. iii. 10, &c. If every one would sweep before their own door, it would soon make a clean street. And if all, whether in public or private stations, would diligently apply themselves to that part of reformation-work that lies nearest to them, and within their reach, there would soon be a happy change among us.

6. Let those whom God hath blessed with worldly substance, employ part of it for the increase and enlargement of Christ's kingdom, by supporting charity-schools, and encouraging ministers, preachers, and catechists, to travel in dark places of the world, both at home and abroad, for propagating Christian knowledge, and bringing precious souls to Jesus Christ: surely, there is no better use that money can be put to; many of our fellow Christians have done worthily this way before us, and the good effects thereof are notorious; which should excite others to the like acts of charity and beneficence, which have such an evident tendency to save perishing souls, and increase our dear Redeemer's kingdom and glory.

OBJECT. But, say some, we are poor and in low stations, what can we do for Christ's kingdom?

ANS. There are several things incumbent on you for this noble end, be what you will.

1. Let every man, whatever his station be, receive the gospel revelation with a firm unshaken faith, as the very truth of God, and the way of bringing men to eternal life, which God himself hath devised. Abhor the impious cavils of infidels against it, and receive gospel-truths with warm love and affection. Love and bless God, who, in his infinite love and wisdom, contrived this scheme of salvation, and Jesus Christ that executed it, by shedding his blood on the cross. Let each one by faith put his finger in the print of the nails, and cry with Thomas, "He is my Lord, and my God."

2. Let every man study to recommend this excellent religion to the world, by conforming his practice to its rules, and adorning his life with shining holiness and virtue; and by guarding against all injustice and dishonesty, pride, passion, revenge, evil-speaking, and every thing that may stumble and beget prejudices in men against Christianity, who are too apt to impute the faults of its professors to the religion itself. If every professed Christian would contribute, by personal reformation, to mend one, then we should all be mended, and the increase of Christ's kingdom would be glorious.

3. Let every one be searching diligently into the time prefixed for the church's being in sackcloth; viz. the 1260 years. And when, like Daniel, we understand by books that the time of finishing them is near, let us with him, Dan. ix. 2, 3, set our faces unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, that he may remove all hindrances, and hasten the time of the church's liberty and increase. If you can do no more for it, pour out earnest prayers to God for fulfilling his promises of the downfall of antichrist and Mahomet, the in-bringing of the Jews, with the fulness of the Gentiles: and that he would pour out a Spirit of mourning and repentance upon the church of Scotland, and other reformed churches, for their decays and backslidings, put a stop to infidelity and error, maintain purity of doctrine and worship, remove the causes of division and contention, heal breaches and restore peace: and that God may grant a spirit of reformation, and of zeal for Christ's kingdom, to all men of power and influence, that they may exert themselves for the enlargement of Christ's dominions, and the diminishing of Satan's: and that he would send a large effusion of his Holy Spirit to qualify instruments for spreading his gospel throughout the world.

We are apt to be discouraged when we see not likely instruments to carry on the Lord's work, and bring about the glorious things he hath promised; and to cry, "By whom shall Jacob arise?" Not minding that God can raise up children from stones, and instruments to serve him where they were not expected. Though we be often at our wit's end, we should never be at our faith's end. God can never be at a loss to carry on his work, while he hath enough of clay and spirit to form instruments for his purpose. When the arm of the Lord once awakens for his church, no impediment can stop him; he makes out that pleasant word in Psal. lxxviii. 11, "The Lord gave the word, great was the company of those that published it." The pouring out of God's Spirit from on high, answers all objections, overcomes difficulties, provides supplies, and affords remedies in the most desperate cases.

O how desperate like was Luther's attempt in the year 1517, when he, a poor monk, set himself against the torrent of idolatry and corruption that prevailed under antichrist at that time! It seemed as ridiculous, as if a man had set his his shoulder to a great mountain on purpose to remove it. And so it was in the reckoning of the wisest of that age; and hence, when Luther opened his designs to a great doctor, who disapproved of the Romish corruptions as well as he, he bade Luther retire to his cell, and pray, "Lord have mercy on us;" as if there was no remedy. Yet how wonderfully did the purity of doctrine and worship break forth and prevail to amazement, among sundry nations, so as to shake the foundations of antichrist's throne, and give him a deadly wound, under which he hath been languishing ever since! There had been several attempts for reformation made by others long before Luther, as by Wickliff, Huss, and Jerome of Prague; but all were ineffectual, because God's time of reformation was not then come. But we see when once that time cometh, no man is able to hinder it, more than stop the sun from breaking out under a cloud. It becomes, then, all the Lord's servants and people to keep in the way of duty, and wait patiently till his set time to favour Zion comes.

How patiently did Joshua and the priests wait for the downfall of Jericho! Amidst the insults of enemies, they continued in their dutiful obedience to God, encompassing the city every day, and blowing with trumpets of rams' horns, carrying the ark still alongst with them. This they did six days, once every day; and seven times upon the seventh day. All the six days the walls stood firm, and not a stone moved, nor a pinning in it loosed; nor was there any alteration for the most part of the seventh day, until the evening, when God's set time was come; and then without difficulty, all came tumbling down at once. In like manner, let us persevere with patience in the way of duty, looking to God, and blowing with the gospel-trumpet, which by many is despised as the sound of a ram's horn: but if we hold on, carrying Christ, the blest antitype of the ark, along with us, we shall come off with triumph at last. One thing is sure, antichrist must decrease, and Christ must increase. Jericho must fall, and Zion must be built up. And however dark and cloudy the present time be, we are well assured from Psal. cii. 16, "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." The Lord in mercy hasten that time in Scotland, and in all parts of the earth, for Christ's sake. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, on thy chariot wheels of truth, mercy, and victory. Amen and Amen.

A SACRAMENTAL CATECHISM.

PREFACE.

ALTHOUGH it cannot be denied, that there are many excellent books written, and sermons delivered, concerning the Lord's supper; yet it is sadly to be regretted, that there remains still a lamentable ignorance among many, of the nature of this holy ordinance, and the principal acts required in communicating. Which consideration chiefly hath moved me to handle this subject (of which too much cannot be written or preached, seeing it is the epitome of the whole Christian religion, both as to doctrine and practice), in a plain catechetical method, and have studied the easiest words and expressions that I could devise, to make the nature of the covenant of grace, and the seals thereof, plain and intelligible to every vulgar capacity.

As I do not know much that is written upon this subject, in this method, so I have observed, in treatises of the Lord's supper, that generally there is but little said of the nature of the covenant of works with the first Adam, or of the covenant of redemption with the second Adam, or of the covenant of grace with the elect, to which this sacrament is annexed as a seal: and that yet less is said of the sacrament of baptism, the first seal of the covenant; which certainly should, in the first place, be considered and understood by every man, before he adventure to partake of the second seal of the covenant, which bears a special relation to the first. Wherefore I have thought fit, in this catechism (for the better understanding the nature of this sacrament) to give a succinct view of the gospel scheme, and method of man's salvation, by opening up the nature of the fore-said divine covenant, and of the sacrament of baptism, before I come to treat particularly of the Lord's supper.

All Christians should study to have distinct uptakings of the gospel-covenant, and of this ordinance, which is the compend and seal of it: and, in a special manner, young persons, before their first admission to it, when they are hereby, in a solemn and explicit manner, to renew their baptismal bonds, and give their voluntary consent to the covenant. O young people, take heed to your first communicating, for very much depends upon it; you are, as it were, about laying the foundation-stone of your salvation-work, which ought to be done with much spiritual skill and knowledge, if you would have a sure building; if you approach to this holy table in ignorance, you stumble in the threshold; nay, you will surely be unworthy communicants, and so may provoke God to smite you with the plagues of judicial blindness, heart-hardness, and formality, which may cleave to you all your lives, and so you are undone for ever. Wherefore, as you regard your immortal souls, pray for knowledge and spiritual illumination; apply to your great prophet Jesus Christ for it; improve the means and helps which he affords you, and seriously peruse this catechism, before you first communicate; that so you may have some right uptakings of the nature of the covenant of grace, and seals thereof; and particularly, of the obligations you already lie under by the first seal; that you may with knowledge, seriousness, and solemnity, go and personally renew your baptismal covenant with God, and get it ratified, by receiving of the second seal thereof. For this cause it is, that our General Assembly, by their act, Assemb. 1706, ses. 12, recommend to all ministers, "diligently to instruct persons, especially before their admission to the Lord's supper, particularly as to the covenant of grace, and the nature and end of this ordinance as a seal thereof; and charge, upon their consciences, the obligations they lie under from their baptismal covenant, and seriously to exhort them to renew the same." And accordingly, I have known some ministers at very much pains with young persons, before their first communicating, instructing them as above directed, telling them, that they were now to enter into the state of adult church-membership, to be taken into Christ's family, and share of the children's privileges, sealed to them in baptism; that therefore they must now make a choice for themselves, ratify their parents' deed, and become Christians by their own voluntary consent, as well as by their parents' dedication, and renew their baptismal covenant, with judgment and understanding. And after much pains taken upon them in private, they have called their young communicants together in a public manner, catechising them, and opening up the nature of the gospel-covenant, and their baptismal engagement to them: and, with some solemnity, asking each of them their consent thereunto, and taking them engaged personally to renew covenant with God in secret, and make choice of God for their God, and Christ for their Saviour and husband, before they should approach to his table; and upon these terms giving them their tokens. Unto all which they joined suitable directions and encouragements, concluding all, by giving up and recommending these young communicants to God in solemn and fervent prayer. Which method I have known accompanied with great tenderness, and many tears, among the young people; one of them helping to affect another, yea, and make very moving impressions upon the whole audience; and I doubt not, but such occasions have been, to some, the time of their espousals to the Lord Jesus Christ, which they are to remember with thankfulness and praise.

Moreover, I entreat young communicants to beware of contenting themselves with a literal knowledge of the doctrine of the covenants, and of the sacraments; but O press and pray hard for the inward teaching of God's Spirit, that light in your heads may be joined with heat in your hearts. And pray for the firm and solid belief and sincere love of all these truths which you know; and that your knowledge may be a sanctified and practical knowledge, and increasing like the morning light.

Again, I beseech you to beware of resting upon your purposes, prayers, or tears, your personal covenanting, or any performance of yours whatsoever; let none of these come in Christ's room; be not satisfied with a form of godliness, without seeking after the life and power thereof. Be never easy till you get your hearts opened to close with Jesus Christ in the gospel-offers, and get an inward change wrought upon your souls, by the regenerating grace and Spirit of God, and grace excited in you to a lively exercise; and then you may approach with holy confidence to your Redeemer's table, and expect welcome.

Sacrament days in Scotland have been solemn and sealing days, yea, days of heaven to many; at such occasions many have had their Bethel meetings with God, which they will never forget. O let us all then beware of formality creeping in among us in our preparation for and partaking of this solemn ordinance; for then God will withdraw himself from our assemblies, and our solemn feasts will be melancholy and heartless. How sad will our case be, if communicants and professors of religion, turn easy about this matter, and be satisfied with the shadow without the substance; with pure ordinances and sacraments, without Christ's presence in them; with communion days, without communion with Christ the master and maker of the feast. O communicants, however frequently you approach to the Lord's table, yet still make conscience of secret, serious, and solemn preparation for it: press always for a token of Christ's love at his table. There is nothing so supporting to poor believers, in this wilderness, yea, and when under the greatest trials and difficulties, than the believing views they have sometimes got of a well-ordered covenant of grace, made over and sealed to them by this sacrament: these have been the cordials of many, when they have been stepping in over the threshold of eternity. Let us then be providing such cordials against that critical time.

At first, when I began to compose this book, I thought to contain it in a small compass; but having a design to instruct, direct, and confirm some; confute, reprove, and reform others; the book swelled to this bulk, before I could in any measure reach my end.

1. My design is, to instruct the ignorant, in the knowledge of the gospel way and method of salvation, through the mediation and suretyship of Jesus Christ; and therefore I was obliged to give as clear a view as I could of the covenants of works, of redemption, and of grace, with the seals thereof.

2. I intend to direct and assist all sincere young communicants, that desire to be rightly guided in this weighty work, so as they may not wound Christ nor their own souls, but please God, and get a gracious meeting with their Saviour; and, for their sakes, I have fully displayed the nature, parts, ends, and uses of the Lord's supper, showed what is required of them before they come, what is incumbent on them when they come, and what is incumbent on them when they go from the Lord's table; and also have subjoined to this book some suitable materials for meditation and prayer, both before and after partaking.

3. My end is to support and encourage those troubled and exercised souls, who dare not neglect this ordinance, and who make conscience of attending it, and preparing for it, but are often filled with doubts and fears, lest they be unworthy communicants, apprehending they have no right to Christ's table, in regard they do not perceive any sure marks of grace in their hearts, nor find any sensible benefit by the ordinance: wherefore I have, for the sake of such, laid down many marks for examining their state, their graces, their frame, and profiting by this ordinance: and also have intermixed the book with a great variety of cases of conscience, which I have handled and resolved for the relief and support of such serious souls.

4. I design to confute those who corrupt this holy ordinance, or in any measure deviate from Christ's institution; and therefore I have gone through the several parts of the institution, shown the usefulness and significance thereof, and have fairly proposed the matters in controversy, with the adversaries' objections, and answered them.

5. I am to reprove and reform those who rush upon this ordinance in an ignorant or careless manner, without due preparation; by showing who only have a right to this table, what is the nature and importance of the work of communicating, with the sin and danger of doing it unworthily.

6. I intend likewise to reprove those who live in the habitual neglect of this ordinance; by laying open the necessity and advantages of worthy communicating, and the guilt and hazard of neglecting Christ's institution and dying command.

7. To reprove those who satisfy themselves with the communicating once in a year or two years, as they have the occasion only in their own parish churches, and no oftener; by showing the obligations that lie on all Christ's disciples to partake often. And I shall add in this place, that there is ground to fear that the unfrequent celebration and participation of this blessed feast, which Christ hath prepared for us, is an evil that many in this church are chargeable with, and for which the Lord may plead a controversy with us. How can we expect but he will depart from us, when we stand at such a distance from him, and come so seldom near him in the method he hath appointed? Can we look for the smiles of Christ's countenance, when we live so much in the neglect of his dying words? Is it any wonder our hearts are so hard, when we are so seldom applying the blood of Christ for softening them? Or that our graces be so weak and withered, when we so little use the means for strengthening and cherishing them? Is not the frequent use of this ordinance, in the way Christ hath appointed, an excellent help to soften our hearts, renew our repentance, strengthen our faith, inflame our love, increase our thankfulness, animate our resolutions against sin, and encourage us to holy duties, and shall we willingly neglect it? It is no wonder that we complain we miss what we aim at and expect in this ordinance, when we are so little sensible of former neglects. It is a sad sign our receiving of this sacrament is not right, when it leaves not in us earnest breathings for the like opportunity: is it possible for us to meet with Christ, and taste of his sweetness and fullness in this ordinance, and not long for another meeting?

Let none think that the frequency of the administration would expose to contempt; for I am sure no worthy communicant will undervalue this ordinance, because of a frequent repetition, but rather prize it the more. Did the primitive Christians bring it to contempt by partaking every Lord's day? Nay, was not their esteem of it much higher than those who dispense, or receive it only once in two years? I wish the words of our dying Saviour, and the acts of our General Assembly, relative to this matter, were more adverted to, by one and all of us.

The mind of our church, with respect to this point, is well known: for our directory for public worship declares, "That the Lord's supper is frequently to be celebrated." Our reformers appointed it to be administered in parishes three or four times in the year, and that ministers who were slothful in the administration of it should be censured, as appears from the acts of Assemb. 1562 and 1596; which are also approved by Assemb. 1638, who further appoint, "That some course be taken for furnishing of the elements, where the minister of the parish hath allowance only for once in the year;" that so the want of a fund for communion-elements might not hinder the frequent administration of this ordinance. Again, lest the multiplicity of preaching, or ministers assisting at it, should hinder its frequency, the General Assembly, anno 1645, appointed, "That ministers should have at this work but two assistants, who were to provide their own parishes at home with preaching; and that there be but one preparation-sermon on the Saturday, only one sermon on the Sabbath-morning before serving of the tables, and one thanksgiving-sermon after the communion."

And that the church, since the Revolution, continues to be of the same mind with our predecessors, concerning the frequency of celebrating this ordinance, appears from the late acts of the General Assembly thereanent; particularly the 9th act of Assemb. 1701; where it is recommended to presbyteries, "To take care that the sacrament of the Lord's supper be more frequently administered in their bounds; and that the number of ministers to serve thereat be restricted, so that neighbouring churches be not thereby cast desolate on the Lord's day." But the act which is most plain and particular on this head is the 11th act of Assemb. 1712, entitled, "Act, appointing the more frequent celebration of the Lord's supper." And it runs thus: "The General Assembly considering that the assemblies of the national church, having, by several acts, appointed the frequent celebration of the holy sacrament of the Lord's supper, in all the congregations of this church: and judging that the due observation of these acts will greatly tend to the glory of God, and the edification of souls; therefore, they do hereby enjoin all presbyteries to inquire if these acts be duly observed by all the brethren; and in case any minister shall neglect to celebrate the sacrament of the Lord's supper in his parish for a whole year, the assembly appoints the presbytery, in which the said parish lies, to call for an account of the reasons of his omission of that great and solemn ordinance, and to approve or disapprove the same, as they shall see cause, and to record their diligence in this matter. And for making this effectual, the General Assembly enjoins the synods, at their several meetings, to inquire at the presbyteries within their bounds, what care they have taken to execute the said act," &c. And further, that the Lord's people may have opportunity of frequent communicating, the General Assembly, by the 6th act, Assemb. 1711, "Do recommend to presbyteries to do what they can, to get it so ordered that the sacrament of the Lord's supper may be administered in their bounds through the several months of the year. And this they enacted, for redressing the practices that are too common in most places, of crowding the whole communions of the bounds, in the space of a few sabbaths, in the summer season; whereby ministers, who are called to assist at these occasions, are exceedingly hurried and straitened; and serious exercised persons are deprived of the benefit of that holy ordinance during the rest of the year, which is certainly a very great loss; and also many parishes, by this method, are allowed the sacrament no oftener than once in two years: which practices are still continued, notwithstanding of all the excellent acts to the contrary. However, I am glad to hear that in some parishes ministers have begun to celebrate this ordinance twice in the year: I heartily wish this practice was general among us, and people had a lively appetite after this quickening feast.

I confess, there is one thing among us, which is a great obstruction to the frequent celebration of this ordinance, viz. The great number of ministers and preachings now used on such occasions, which truly makes that solemn work a business of such outward toil and labour to the administrators, as discourages them frequently to undertake it. So that, till some regulation be made in the foresaid respect, I despair of seeing this holy ordinance dispensed so frequently among us as it ought to be.

In the days of old, there was less preaching at communions, but much power and life in them; but in our days, there is much preaching, but little power. Not that I am against much preaching at these occasions, where there is an appetite among the hearers, and where plenty of ministers may be had, without laying the neighbouring congregations desolate, or proving any hindrance to the frequency of this ordinance; but to make it a standing order, that there shall be so many preachings, whether there be an appetite or no, or whatever inconveniences should follow, I apprehend, cannot be so easily justified. I acknowledge, about the time of our late happy revolution, when so much preachings at communions began to be a settled practice, there were such vehement desires among the people after the ordinance, and lively preaching of the word, that had been so scarce for so many years before, that it was necessary to gratify them with much preaching at these solemn occasions; but it is not to be expected that these longings should always continue. In those primitive times of Christianity, when the disciples' hearts flamed with love to their lately crucified and ascended Redeemer, they had such burning desires after the ordinances and preaching of the gospel, that the apostle Paul, at the celebration of the Lord's supper, Acts xx. 7, was encouraged to continue preaching to the people till midnight; yet none ever pleaded that the apostle's practice on that occasion should be a standing rule for the church in all time coming.

But that I be not too tedious in this preface, I shall only acquaint my reader, that I have chosen to handle this excellent subject in a catechetical method, as being the most easy and familiar way of instructing the ignorant, and most easy for the memory to retain. The work of catechising has been signally blessed of God for instructing people in the principles of Christianity: and where this is neglected or contemned, people understand little of the most excellent sermons they hear, and are little edified by them. Proper food must be provided for children, as well as meat for strong men. And hence it is, that the chief Shepherd enjoins his servants to feed his lambs as well as his sheep.

I know the church of Scotland is already provided with excellent Catechisms, both Shorter and Larger, and with a choice explanation of the Shorter by Mr. Vincent, all which I earnestly recommend to the reader's diligent perusal; and especially our Larger Catechism, as containing a noble system of divinity; it would be to the advantage of all the members of this church to be at more pains in reading, considering, and laying it up in their memories, than generally they are. The approbation of the Larger Catechism, by the General Assembly, 1648, scss. 10. should not be forgotten; in which we find, that, after the most exact trial and examination, both by the respective presbyteries of this church, and by the assembly itself, they declare this Catechism to be most agreeable to the word of God, and the received doctrine of this church; and that it is a rich treasure for increasing knowledge among the people of God; where also they bless God that so excellent a Catechism is prepared, with whom I heartily join issue. But, seeing it cannot be expected that any Catechism of its bulk, which is of an universal nature, treating on all the heads of divinity, should be so full and copious about the sacraments, and particularly the Lord's supper, as the necessity of some require; I have adventured to compose this Sacramental Catechism, for the benefit of young communicants, and others weak in knowledge; and have studied to contract as much of the doctrine of the covenants, and of the sacraments, as possibly I could, into so small bounds. And, in doing this, I frankly acknowledge I have borrowed many things from others that have written upon the subject, and especially from our excellent Larger Catechism.

And in the whole composition, I have copied, as closely as I could, after the approved form of sound words, expressed in the word of God, and agreeably thereto, in the Confession of Faith, and Larger and Shorter Catechism of this church, which are justly to be accounted most valuable pieces of our Reformation.

And truly I esteem it a singular mercy to this church, in these shaking and fluctuating times, when new thoughts and expressions in matters of faith are vented, which are not agreeable to the form of sound words formerly used in this church, that we have such an approved standard of doctrine to look to, as is laid down in our excellent Confession of Faith and Catechisms, plainly founded on the scriptures of truth; and which all the members of this church are strictly bound to maintain, both by solemn national vows, and private engagements at baptism; not to mention the particular obligation which all the office-bearers of the church come under, both by word and writ thereunto, at their respective ordinations and admissions to their functions. Only I pray the Lord may give us grace, constantly to maintain and keep up the due and suitable impressions of these engagements on our spirits; which, if we have, there is no doubt but we will carefully avoid every appearance of error; nay, even be afraid to disuse the former modes of speaking and expressing gospel truths used in the church, or adopt new phrases and expressions in their stead; seeing such a practice hath often introduced new errors into the church. It cannot but be thought strange, that any lovers of our Zion, for the sake of some fond new thoughts and peculiar expressions, which perhaps their hearers cannot comprehend so well as themselves, but are apt rather to construct to a wrong sense, should choose to recede from the old approved ways of speaking, or find fault with those that retain them, whereby their people are brought to stumble at worthy gospel ministers that have not learned their new phrases, and pass harsh censures on them; which not only tends to mar people's edification, but also to endanger the peace of our mother church, and the purity of her doctrine. For, by such courses, the seeds may be sown that may spring up, if God prevent it not, into the noxious weeds of schism or error, when we of this generation are rotting in the dust. I cannot yet be persuaded but Rutherford, Gillespie, Durham, Guthrie, and other such eminent lights in this church, that were blessed with such large measures of the Spirit of God, had as clear discoveries of the gospel-mysteries and doctrine of grace; were as spiritual and evangelical in their preaching, frame, and conversation; and also honoured by their Master to bring in as many souls to him, as any in our day; notwithstanding that they taught, "The covenant of grace its being mutual, faith being its condition; the necessity of personal covenanting with God, of leaving sin in order to come to Christ; of closing with him upon the terms of the gospel; of obeying gospel-precepts, making vows at the sacrament," &c. Though perhaps, in some places, those who would adventure to speak in the style of the forsoaid worthies, may lay their account with being censured as legal preachers.

I pray the Lord may give us one heart and one way, that we may all think and speak the same things; and that he may always preserve this church from the infection of error of one sort or another, whether Arminian or Antinomian; and that no opinion or expression be vented among us that either tends to the discouragement of free grace, by ascribing too much to the power of corrupt nature in the business of man's salvation; or that, under the pretext of advancing free grace, weakens the people's obligation to holy duties.

But, reader, I shall not any longer detain thee from perusing this Catechism; if thou findest in it any thing profitable or edifying to thy soul, then give God all the glory; and if any thing in it show the author's weakness, I beg you may not rashly censure, but pray for him, who would willingly contribute his mite for the advantage of the weak and ignorant.

A SACRAMENTAL CATECHISM.

QUESTION. For what end hath the Lord appointed sacraments in his church?

ANSWER. To be visible signs and seals of his gracious covenant with man, in order to represent and apply Christ and his benefits to his covenanted people; to strengthen their faith in his promises, and solemnly to engage them to his service.

Q. Why hath the infinitely glorious God chosen to carry on the business of man's salvation, in the way and method of a covenant, or gracious paction with him?

A. For these reasons: 1. To display the mildness of his nature, and moderation of his government; for, though he be the absolute emperor of the world, and may make of his creatures what he pleases, yet he sweetly tempers his supremacy with goodness, seeking, as it were, to reign with his subjects' consent.

2. To show his marvellous goodness, and condescension to the sons of men; in that he humbled himself to treat familiarly with them, make promises, and come under obligations to make them happy and glorious, "Lord what is man, that thou art mindful of him; and the son of man, that thou thus visitest him?"

3. God deals thus with men, that he might have reasonable service from a willing people, and their voluntary consent to his good laws. For though he might prescribe to man what condition of happiness he pleased, yet he would require nothing of him but what he should be obliged to judge a just and easy yoke.

4. That his people might serve and obey him, with the greater delight, having such gracious covenant-promises for their encouragement.

Q. How many covenants hath God made with man, concerning life and salvation?

A. Two; the first being called the covenant of works; the second, the covenant of grace.

Q. What is the covenant of works?

A. It is a gracious agreement, which the great Creator made with our first parents, Adam and Eve, in their state of innocence; and in them, with all their children descending from them, by ordinary generation: wherein God promised them life and happiness, upon their perfect obedience to his holy will and law; and threatened them with death and misery in case of disobedience; and withal, giving them, for the trial of their obedience, a particular command, that they should not eat of the "tree of knowledge of good and evil," Gen. ii. 17; Gal. iii. 10, 12.

Q. How doth it appear that God made such a covenant with our first parents?

A. Because in this affair, the scripture lays down the essential part of a covenant: we have two distinct parties contracting, God on the one part, and man on the other. We have God requiring something of man, viz. obedience to his will; and we have this requisition, attended with a promise of life upon obedience; and a threatening of death upon disobedience. And, lastly, we have Adam submitting or consenting to all this, for seeing he was made after the image of God, perfectly holy, he behoved certainly to consent to God's holy will, when at first laid before him, and that immediately by God himself, his gracious and bountiful Creator. And this also is confirmed by several places of scripture, Hos. vi. 7; Rom. ii. 27; vi. 14; Gal. iv. 24.

Q. Why is this covenant, by the compilers of our Confession of Faith, called sometimes a covenant of works, and sometimes a covenant of life?

A. Because works, or perfect obedience, was the condition of this covenant, on man's part; and life, or perfect happiness, was the reward promised on God's part.

Q. Was there no grace manifested in the first covenant?

A. Yes, in several things: 1. In that the glorious Creator was pleased to descend, as it were, to a level, and transact a covenant with his own creature, and thereby come under bonds and obligations to him, Psal. cxiii. 5, 6; Rom. xi. 35.

2. In taking such pains to help the mutability of man's state and free-will, by hedging in his way with promises and threatenings; and thereby graciously fortifying and arming him against all temptations to sin, by furnishing him with arguments, both from the promise of reward in case of obedience, and the threatening of punishment in case of transgression.

3. In that he was pleased to promise a reward so great and glorious as eternal life, to man's obedience, when he was sufficiently obliged to it by the law of his creation, though nothing had been promised for it.

4. In that he created Adam with sufficiency of power and grace to enable him to perform God's whole will; gave him all the creatures to obey him, and allowed him intimate communion with himself.

Q. What law or rule had our first parents given them for their obedience, in the estate of innocency?

A. They had both the moral law, and a positive law; both a general commandment, "Do this and live," and a special commandment, "not to eat of the tree of knowledge."

Q. How were these laws given and promulgated to our first parents?

A. By their creation in a perfect state, they had the moral law written and engraved in their hearts. But the positive law was given them by external revelation, Eccl. vii. 29; Rom. ii. 14, 15; Gen. ii. 17.

Q. Why is that special command called a positive law, and distinguished from the moral law?

A. In regard it is of the nature of a positive law, to command or prohibit things that before were indifferent, and only become good or evil by virtue of the command, and not of their own nature; so the eating of the tree of knowledge was neither good nor evil, but as commanded or forbidden by God. That law was not founded on the light or dictates of nature, as all the moral precepts are; which therefore are a standing and unalterable rule of righteousness.

Q. Why did God strictly forbid the eating of that tree?

A. 1. To let Adam know that he was not absolute owner of what he possessed, but only a servant; and that God was the supreme Master and Lord of all.

2. To keep him in mind, that his happiness did not lie in time's things, but in the pleasing of God, and enjoying his favour.

3. To try his obedience and regard to the divine authority; and to render him for ever inexcusable, if he should disobey God in so easy a command, when he had such helps and encouragements to keep it.

Q. Did our first parents keep their covenant with God?

A. No; for though they had sufficient strength given them for keeping it perfectly, yet being left to the freedom of their own will, they did so mismanage the same, that they misbelieved God, hearkened to the devil, and complied with his temptation to eat the forbidden fruit: whereby they sinned against the clearest light, and were guilty of the most cursed ingratitude and rebellion against God.

Q. What state did the breach of the covenant of works bring man into?

A. Into a most wretched and miserable condition, having thereby lost God's image, his favour, and all communion with him, plunged himself into a fearful gulf of sin; and fallen under the sentence of death, and all sorts of miseries, temporal, spiritual, and eternal.

Q. Was the whole posterity of Adam brought into this woeful state by Adam's sin?

A. Yes; all of them who descended from him, by ordinary generation: so that never any, but the man Christ, was excepted.

Q. How can we be charged with Adam's guilt, seeing we were not existent when he sinned?

A. Because when the covenant was made with Adam, he acted as a public person, representing his whole posterity who were then in his loins; and thus the covenant being made with them in him, they sinned in him, and fell with him, Rom. v. 12, 18, 19; 1 Cor. xv. 21, 22.

Q. Was there no remedy provided for Adam in the first covenant in case of a breach?

A. No; for it threatened death for the least transgression, and left the transgressor hopeless under the curse, without a promise of pardon upon repentance, or of new strength upon losing what he had, or of a surety to answer for him, Gen. ii. 17; Gal. iii. 10.

Q. Was it possible for fallen man to find out a remedy for himself?

A. No; for he lost all power to do any thing that was good; and his misery called for a ransom of infinite value; which none but God could provide, Rom. vii. 18; Psal. xlix. 7, 8; Mic. vi. 6, 7; Hos. xiii. 9.

Q. Is the covenant of works now disannulled, so as it hath no power over any man?

A. No; for every natural man and unbeliever, is as much under the power and obligation of this covenant as ever Adam was; it still stands in full force against all such; they are obliged to perform its condition, viz. perfect obedience, and also to undergo the penalty for breaking it, for they lie still under its sentence, according to John iii. 18, "He that believeth not is condemned already," i. e. by virtue of the covenant of works, which they have violated. And Eph. ii. 3. it is said, "We are all by nature the children of wrath," i. e. we are doomed to wrath and destruction by the broken covenant of works, and still lie under the sentence, while we are in the state of nature.

Q. Is any man now able to answer the demands of the covenant of works?

A. No; for, as we have lost our strength to perform its condition, so it is impossible for any created power to pay its penalty, or give satisfaction to infinite justice for the offence of sin.

Q. But how is it consistent with justice to require that from us, which we are utterly unable to perform?

A. Though we by our own fault have lost our strength to obey, yet God doth not thereby lose his just right to demand what belongs to him. A creditor loseth not his right to crave a just debt, because the debtor has squandered away his stock, and is turned bankrupt; nay, he is still liable and his children too. So in this case our being unable to pay, will not absolve us from our debts; especially seeing the inability is brought on by ourselves.

Q. Is there any way for such bankrupts as we are, to be discharged of that debt, and loosed from the bond of the first covenant?

A. There is no way, but by taking hold of the new covenant, and flying to its Mediator and Surety for the payment of our debt.

Q. Are believers in Christ wholly absolved from the obligation of the covenant of works?

A. They are wholly loosed from this covenant, as to its power of justification and condemnation. It can neither justify nor condemn them, since God hath entered into a new covenant with them for their justification. But though it be no ways binding upon believers, as a covenant, yet still it binds them as a law, or rule, for regulating their hearts and lives: for the law being of universal moral equity, it remains a perpetual rule of righteousness to believers as well as others, and it is impossible that a rational creature can at any time be loosed from its obligation as a holy and just law; though believers are freed from its condemnation as a covenant. As the law or covenant of works is—in respect of its threats and whips—a schoolmaster to drive us unto Christ for righteousness and justification; so Christ graciously frees his people from the rigour and condemning power of this schoolmaster; but refers them back to him as a guide and director of their walk and behaviour, Gal. iii. 13, 24; 1 Cor. ix. 21; Rom. vi. 14; vii. 16, 22, 25.

Q. Is it simply impossible for any man now to enter heaven by the way of a covenant of works?

A. Yes, certainly, for that way was eternally blocked up by Adam's fall; so that there is no passage by it ever since, Rom. iii. 20; viii. 3; Gal. ii. 21.

Q. If there be no salvation by that covenant, why doth the Lord now require sinners to perform the condition of it, viz. perfect obedience; as he did the Israelites of old, and that young man, Mat. xix. 17, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments?"

A. The Lord insists on the terms of the first covenant with all sinners in a natural state, not to show that life is attainable that way, but for these reasons.

1. To show the equity of the terms of the first covenant, the justice of its sentence, and his right to demand obedience, and satisfaction thereto.

2. To humble proud self-conceited sinners under a sense of guilt, and convince them of their own impotency.

3. To drive them out of themselves, and make them despair of salvation by their own righteousness, and of finding life by the first covenant, Rom. vii. 9.

4. To convince them of the absolute necessity of betaking themselves to the covenant of grace, and the righteousness of the Mediator therein provided, Gal. iii. 22, 24.

Q. Why have men such a natural inclination to be justified and saved by the way of the old covenant of works?

A. It being the covenant of nature, and made with Adam when all mankind was in his loins; men by nature do still entertain a deep impression of it. Besides, man by nature being a proud and selfish creature, he is unwilling to be beholden to another for righteousness and salvation, but strongly inclineth to be his own saviour, and to stand upon his own legs, and this we all derive by natural generation from Adam. Hence it was that the Jews and Pharisees of old sought so earnestly to establish their own righteousness, and declined to submit to the righteousness of Christ, Mat. xix. 16; Luke xviii. 11; Rom. x. 3. Hence also the Galatians of old sought to join their own works with Christ's righteousness (as the Papists do now) in the matter of justification. We are all naturally married unto the law, or a covenant of works, that is our first husband; and from it we must necessarily be divorced, in order to our being married to Christ and his righteousness, in a covenant of grace. But so strong and rooted is our inclination to our first husband, the covenant of works; that even the best believers have a natural hankering after it, and find it the greatest difficulty in the world to get their hearts weaned and plucked from self-righteousness; and from seeking to be justified and accepted with God, by virtue of something in themselves.

Q. Did God leave all mankind to perish under the sentence and penalty of the broken covenant of works?

A. No; for God of his own free-grace, from all eternity, hath elected some to be redeemed and saved from it, Eph. i. 4, 5

Q. What way hath God chosen to redeem and save elect sinners from their lost and perishing estate?

A. Man being wholly miserable, and incapable of any relief by the first covenant; God of his infinite mercy was pleased to frame a gracious new covenant, answering all the demands of our miserable circumstances, and constituted his own Son to be the Mediator and Surety of it; and this is now the only way and method of salvation, Gen. iii. 15; xvii. 2, 7; Rom. viii. 3; Acts iv. 12.

Q. What is this gracious new covenant, which God hath made for redeeming fallen man?

A. It may be said to be twofold, 1. The covenant made from eternity with Christ, in name of the elect, commonly called the covenant of redemption.

2. The covenant of reconciliation, made in time with the elect in Christ, commonly called the covenant of grace.

Q. Doth the word of God give any ground for this distinction?

A. Yes, Psal. lxxxix. 3, &c; Isa. lix. 21.

Q. What is the covenant of redemption?

A. It is an eternal and gracious agreement in the counsel of the glorious Trinity, upon the foresight of man's fall, for the redemption and recovery of elect sinners: wherein God the Father, out of his infinite mercy, gave a certain number of fallen mankind to God the Son, as their federal representative and surety, to be by him redeemed and saved: and for this end, demanding of him that he should assume their nature, and in their room satisfy divine justice, by paying their whole debt both of obedience and suffering, the which they were obliged to do by the covenant of works: and also, that he should undertake to gather all the lost elect and bring them unto God. And for his encouragement in this great work, it was promised to the Son that he should have all requisite furniture, support, acceptance, and success: and likewise a glorious reward to himself, together with grace and glory to his people. With which proposals of the Father, the Son, out of his infinite free love, most cheerfully complied; undertook to do the whole work required of him, accepting of, and claiming the promises made unto him, Psal. lxxxix. 3, 4, 19, 20, &c.; Isa. xlix. 3, 4, &c.; lix. 20, 21; 2 Tim. i. 9; Tit. i. 2; Heb. x. 5, 9; Psal. ii. 7, 8; Isa. l. 5—7; Psal. xl. 7, 8; John x. 18; xvii. 4, 5.

Q. What is the covenant of grace?

A. It is God's free and gracious paction with elect sinners in Christ, proposed to and made with them in the gospel: wherein, according to his eternal compact with Christ their surety, and for the sake of his mediation and merits, he graciously and immutably promiseth pardon, peace, grace, and glory to them. Particularly, he promiseth, in an absolute manner, to grant them the blessings of vocation, faith, regeneration, and other means of salvation. And in order to their obtaining of the pardon of sin, the adoption of children, and eternal life (all which blessings are purchased by Christ), he requires of them that they believe "in his Son the Lord Jesus Christ," and accept of him with all the benefits of this covenant, by a true and lively faith, which they are called to show forth by a sincere repentance, and study of new obedience. All which gracious promises and demands, the elect, in due time, upon God's call, cordially acquiesce in, accept of, and give consent unto: and this they do through the grace and strength of Christ their surety, according to his eternal engagement for them, Ezek. xxxvi. 26, 27; Heb. viii. 10; John i. 12; iii. 16; Jam. ii. 18, 22; John vi. 37, 44, 45; xvii. 12; Acts v. 31.

Q. Was not this new covenant a most wonderful, gracious, and suitable contrivance and remedy for our misery in a fallen state?

A. Yes, for though the first was a glorious covenant, contrived in infinite wisdom; yet, seeing it could not answer the demands of the miserable circumstances we plunged ourselves into, God was content to lay it aside, and frame a new one suitable to our misery. For the first covenant leaving man helpless, hopeless, and remediless under its sentence, having no provision for pardon, place for repentance, nor room for a Mediator, God pitied us in our undone state, (though he could more easily have destroyed Adam and his posterity, and made a new world of innocent creatures, to have been governed by the first covenant;) yea, he took down that glorious fabric of obedience and rewards, and framed a more gracious and excellent one in its stead for saving lost man. And seeing man was disabled and incapacitated for covenanting with God by himself a second time, God found out a Mediator and Surety to bind for him, and perform both the condition and pay the penalty of the first covenant, and answer for any new thing to be demanded of him. And thus both God's justice is satisfied, and man's happiness secured; the law-breaker's life saved, and the law-maker's honour maintained; and free grace highly glorified.

Q. Is there not a great affinity betwixt the covenant of redemption and the covenant of grace?

A. Yes, for they agree not only in their spring, ends, and indissolvable nature, but likewise in their substance and matter; in so far as the covenant of redemption comprehends the whole of the covenant of grace, both promises and demands: for the whole blessings and benefits promised in the covenant of grace to the elect, were from eternity promised in the covenant of redemption to Christ their head and representative; and so to the elect in him: and for the condition or qualifications required of the elect in the covenant of grace; they were first demanded of Christ their head in the covenant of redemption, who then undertook and became Surety for his people's performance. So that we see, in some respect, the covenant of grace is only a transcript of the covenant of redemption, according to 2 Tim. i. 9; Tit. i. 2; Gal. iii. 16.

Q. Wherein then doth those two covenants differ?

A. In these respects, 1. As to the time of making them; the covenant of redemption being made from all eternity; but the covenant of grace only in time, by the preaching of the gospel.

2. The federates, or parties covenanting, are different: in the covenant of redemption, the Father and the Son are the only parties covenanting; but in the covenant of grace, God and the elect are the parties. I grant that Christ is a federate in the covenant of grace, as well as in that of redemption, but in different respects: for in the first he stood as principal, but in the second as surety. In the first he was the only party; but in the second he hath the elect joined with him, Christ is the mediator and surety of the covenant of grace, but the covenant of redemption hath no mediator or surety; the Father and the Son trusted one another upon the agreement.

3. These two covenants differ from one another, as a prior treaty or agreement made by one friend for the behoof of another differs from the posterior ratification of it by the party concerned, for whose good it was made. Our blessed Redeemer, Christ, graciously placed himself as the elect's representative in the covenant of redemption, transacted with God the creditor for the payment of their debt, and made a most advantageous bargain for them. But it being made without the elect's knowledge, it was necessary that their consent should be had to this treaty and method of salvation; wherefore God is pleased to cause it to be promulgated and proposed to them in the gospel, for the gaining of their consent. And God's voice to them in the gospel is to this effect: "Are you content with what Christ my Son hath engaged and done in your name? Are you willing to quit all other methods of salvation, and come to me through a Mediator, and rely wholly upon his righteousness? Are you satisfied with the remedy provided for you in the covenant of redemption?" O, saith the poor soul (being determined thereto by the powerful operation of the Holy Ghost, whose office it is, according to the foresaid eternal agreement, to apply the remedy prepared by Christ), "This is a most noble method of salvation; I am well pleased with the eternal treaty and the execution of it, with the Mediator and his righteousness, and with the great and precious promises made to me in him: I renounce all other ways of salvation, and rely entirely on Christ to bring me to God." And this is that which we call the covenant of grace.

4. They differ in respect of their comprehensiveness; the covenant of redemption being far more large and comprehensive than the covenant of grace, in regard it contains it and much more: for the covenant of redemption hath in it, not only what is promised to, and required of the elect, but also many distinct demands of Christ as their surety, and promises made to him as such, which do not immediately concern the elect: such as these; it was required of Christ that he should "leave his glory, take a body of flesh, fulfil the law, and suffer death: also, that he should quicken the elect by his Spirit, convert and sanctify them, guide them through the world, and bring them safe to glory at last." Again, it was promised to Christ personally, for his encouragement to engage in this work, that he should have all "needful assistance and furniture for it, acceptance and success in it, and a glorious personal reward, an honourable resurrection, and high exaltation above all principalities and powers. That he should have the administration of all things put in his hands for the good of his people, as an unsearchable treasure of grace and rich supplies given him, to communicate to them whatever is for their good and happiness:" whereupon Christ, as our surety, freely undertook the work proposed, and laid hold on the promises, both those made to him personally, and those made to his seed in him, Gal. iii. 16; 2 Tim. i. 9.

Thus we see how many things there are in the covenant of redemption, required of, and promised to Christ as the elect's surety and representative, distinct from the things promised to and required of the elect themselves: which last part makes up the covenant of grace when promulgated to them in the gospel for their consent and acceptance; so that it is plainly a part or branch of the covenant of redemption, and differs nothing from it but as a part doth from the whole, or as the map of a particular province, distinctly bounded and illuminated, with a new inscription or dedication, differs from a general map of the whole kingdom whereof it is a part. The covenant of grace, as proposed to and made with Christ in the elect's name from eternity, can hardly be distinguished from the covenant of redemption; for thus it is a constituent part thereof, and incorporated with it. But as it is drawn out by itself, to be proposed to the elect in the gospel, and their consent obtained to it, it becomes a distinct covenant. Nay, it is distinct both in respect of conditions and promises.

1. In respect of conditions; death, and satisfaction for sin thereby, was the great condition of the covenant of redemption on Christ's part; but faith, and closing with Christ thereby, is the condition of the covenant of grace on the elect's part. I grant indeed, that Christ our Mediator is bound for the performance of both these conditions, but it is in different respects; for the first he is engaged as principal, but for the second as surety. Christ undertook for us things of two sorts; first, things that he was to do for us by himself: secondly, things that he was to make and enable us to do: the first sort he performed for us, according to the covenant of redemption, as the principal party engaged for them. The second he works in us as the surety of the covenant of grace, which from eternity he undertook to be. Now there is a great difference betwixt these two; for though it be certain and true, in the strictest sense, that Christ actually died for us, and satisfied justice for us, and in our room; yet it can noways be said that he repents or believes for us; these are formally our acts, though it be Christ that enables us to do them, and works them in us.

2. In respect of promises; the great promise on God's part to Christ, in the covenant of redemption, was giving to him a seed and a glorious reward: but his great promise to the elect, in the covenant of grace, is the giving of redemption and eternal life to the party believing. The tenor of the covenant of redemption, as made with Christ from eternity, runs thus; "make thy soul an offering for sin, and thou shalt see thy seed:" but the tenor of the covenant of grace, as proposed to the elect in the gospel, is, "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt not perish in thy sins, but have everlasting life," Isa. liii. 10; John iii. 16.

Q. Wherein doth the covenant of grace differ from the covenant of works?

A. In many things; such as, 1. The covenant of works, which God entered into with our first parents, was a covenant of friendship, betwixt God and an innocent creature, that were in amity together. But the covenant of grace is a covenant of reconciliation betwixt enemies, an offended God and guilty man; the first flowed from divine love and goodness; but the second from divine compassion and tender mercies.

2. The first covenant was universal, being made with all mankind in Adam. But the second in particular, being only made with the elect in Christ.

3. The condition required of Adam in the first covenant, was working and obeying, and that to perfection; but that required of us in the second is believing.

4. The first covenant makes the proper condition of life, and the ground of man's justification before God, to be the righteousness performed by the man himself: but the second declares it to be the righteousness performed by our Surety, Christ, apprehended by our faith.

5. The first covenant did not provide, nor so much as admit of a mediator or surety to answer for Adam's performing his part of it, or of any remedy in case of breaking it; for it allowed no place for repentance; it gave no hopes of forgiveness upon any condition whatsoever. But the second covenant graciously admits and allows of all these.

6. The first covenant could be broken and annulled, but the second is indissoluble and everlasting, because of the sufficiency and faithfulness of its surety, Isa. liv. 10; lv. 3; Heb. vii. 22, 24, 25.

7. The least sin or failing on Adam's part made void the first covenant, excluded him from all the blessings promised in it, and rendered him perfectly miserable: but all the sins and failings of the elect cannot dissolve the second, to deprive them of happiness, Psal. lxxxix. 31, 33, 34; Jer. iii. 14; Heb. xiii. 5, 8; 1 John ii. 1, 2.

Q. Hath our faith the same place in the covenant of grace, that Adam's obedience had in the covenant of works? Or, is faith the condition of the covenant of grace, in the same sense that Adam's obedience was the condition of the covenant of works?

A. No; for Adam's obedience was his righteousness before God, and the proper ground of his justification and claim to happiness: it was a real and pleadable condition according to the covenant, upon which Adam's title to life and happiness was properly founded. But this cannot be said of the believer's faith; for faith is not his righteousness before God, nor the ground of his justification and claim to happiness; it being only the instrument or applying condition required of him for interesting him in the righteousness of Christ his surety; which alone is the proper ground of his justification and claim to happiness; and the only pleadable and meritorious condition of life and salvation, which the poor naked and guilty soul must flee to and depend upon.

2. The condition required of Adam, in the first covenant, was to be performed by him in his own strength, i. e. the strength that was given him at his creation. But the condition required in the second covenant, is not to be performed by the elect sinner in his own natural strength, but by the strength freely promised and communicated to him in this covenant.

Q. Doth not the covenant of grace oblige us to obedience, as well as the covenant of works did?

A. Yes; but not in the same way, or for the same ends.

Q. What is the difference betwixt legal and evangelical obedience?

A. It is very great in several respects: 1. Legal obedience was peremptorily commanded as man's duty: but evangelical obedience is also freely promised, and given as the gift of God.

2. The first could not be admitted, unless absolutely perfect: but the second is accepted, though imperfect if sincere.

3. They vastly differ in their ends, the first was required as the proper condition of life and happiness, but the second, as an evidence of our faith, and conformity to our Redeemer. The first was for the justification of our persons; but the second for the testification of our gratitude for redeeming love. The first was required as the legal condition for the purchasing of heaven and glory; but the second, as a gospel qualification in order to possessing it only.

Q. What names or epithets doth the covenant of grace get in scripture?

A. A great many, particularly it is called a testament, a covenant of peace, a covenant of life, a covenant of promise, a new covenant, an everlasting, holy, sure, and well ordered covenant, Heb. ix. 15; Ezek. xxxvii. 26; Mal. ii. 5; Eph. ii. 12; Heb. xii. 24; Isa. lv. 3; Luke i. 78; 2 Sam. xxiii. 5.

Q. Why is this covenant called a testament?

A. It is frequently called so in scripture, and that because the everlasting inheritance promised in it, with all things thereunto belonging, is freely bequeathed and made over to the elect; yea, even the things required of them are freely promised to them: and all these precious promises and legacies are made sure and firm to them by the death of Jesus Christ the testator, Heb. ix. 16, 17; Matt. xxvi. 28.

Q. Is the covenant of grace a scripture term, and what is the import and meaning of it?

A. This term indeed is not found in the express words, though it be often expressed in words equivalent. The term is very significant and most fitly appropriated to this covenant; in regard the free grace (i. e. the undeserved mercy and goodness) of God is richly and gloriously displayed in this covenant. It was free grace that inclined God at first to contrive it, that moved him afterwards to reveal and propose it. It is free grace that determines the elect to consent to it, and abide in it. And it is the exalting of God's free grace which is the great end and design of it. But more especially it is called a covenant of grace, in respect of the matter of it, all the blessings and good things promised in it being God's gracious and free gifts to undeserving sinners, proceeding merely from his gratuitous bounty and astonishing free love in Christ. Yea, so full of grace is this covenant, though God is pleased to require faith of us, as the condition to interest us in the benefits of it, and also good works to show forth that faith; yet, both that faith and these works are as freely promised and given to the elect by virtue of this covenant, as any other blessing in it, Eph. i. 4, 5, 6; ii. 8—10; Zech. iv. 8.

Q. What are these blessings, gifts, and benefits, which are so freely offered and promised to us in this covenant?

A. They are so many they cannot be numbered; and so great, they cannot be expressed. The great things stipulated on God's part in this covenant, and that which is the sum and substance of all his other promises, is, "I will be your God," Jer. xxxi. 33. This is the fullest, largest, sweetest, sublimest, and most comprehensive promise in the whole bible. The covenant of works had no such promise that we read of; God said only to Adam, "Do this and live," i. e. Thou shalt have life and happiness. But in the covenant of grace he said, "Believe in my Son, and I will be thy God," i. e. I will not only give you life, heaven, and glory, but I will give you myself, a Jehovah, all I am, all I have, and all I can do, shall be thine. "I will be thy God," includes all God's blessings to his people, whether grace or glory, earth or heaven, time or eternity. It implies his standing instead of all relations to them; his being their Father, their King, their Husband, their Master, their Friend, their benefactor, and all things to them. Further, "I will be your God," imports an interest in all the divine attributes and perfections; you shall have my wisdom for your direction, my power for your protection, my mercy for your pardon, my grace for your sanctification, my faithfulness for making good all the promises to you, and my sufficiency for giving you perfect happiness. Nay, a whole trinity shall be yours; the Father, with his eternal love and pity; the Son, with all the fulness of his purchase; and the Holy Ghost, to make application of the blessings of that purchase unto you.

Q. What are the blessings of Christ's purchase contained in this covenant?

A. All the blessings and mercies that ever were or shall be enjoyed by any believer in time or eternity; they are all the fruits of Christ's purchase, and run to them in the channel of this covenant. The chief of these particular blessings are, "The new heart, illumination, faith, repentance, pardon, freedom from the law's curses, reconciliation, adoption, sanctification, access to God, hearing of prayers, the quickenings, consolations, and conduct of the Holy Spirit, increase of grace, peace of conscience, perseverance, the ministry of angels, suitable outward provision, through-bearing at death, resurrection to life, and eternal glory:" together with all the graces of the Spirit, and innumerable other blessings, temporal, spiritual, and eternal: Ezek. xxxvi. 25—27; Heb. viii. 10—12; Psal. xxiii. 1, &c.; xxxiv. 10; lxxxiv. 11; xci. 11; Isa. xxxiii. 16; xli. 10; Jer. iii. 19; Hos. xiv. 4, 5; John x. 28; 1 Cor. i. 30; iii. 22; 2 Cor. i. 20; vi. 18; Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; xxxii. 38—41; Rom. viii. 26, 28; John iii. 18, 36; i. 16, 17, 26; Isa. liv. 13; liii. 11; Rom. iii. 24—26; 1 Tim. iv. 8; Phil. iv. 19; 2 Pet. i. 4.

Q. Whether is the covenant of grace absolute or conditional?

A. If the definition before given of this covenant with the scripture texts whereon it is founded, be duly considered and compared, we will find it is partly absolute, and partly conditional.

Q. In what respect is the covenant of grace absolute?

A. In respect of the first blessings and benefits promised in it, which serve as means for obtaining the ends of the covenant, such as effectual vocation, regeneration, faith, and repentance; these are promised, and given absolutely and freely by God for Christ's sake, without depending on any condition to be performed by the elect, Heb. vii. 10; John vi. 44, 45.

Q. In what respect is this covenant conditional?

A. In respect of the second and subsequent blessings of it, which are as the end of the foresaid means, such as union with Christ, justification, adoption, and glorification. God is pleased to suspend the bestowing of these till that condition be performed by the elect, which he requires, viz. faith, John i. 12; Gal. ii. 16; Phil. iii. 19.

Q. In what sense is faith called a condition on our part, in this covenant?

A. I showed before that it is not to be meant in that sense, that obedience is called the condition of the covenant of works; that we do not understand it as an act any way meritorious or pleadable before God for a reward, or an act performed by our own inherent strength, or elicited by the power of our free will. But we mean only that faith is an act or qualification required of us in point of duty, as necessarily antecedent to the conferring of the promised blessings of pardon and life: and that the bestowing of these blessings is suspended, till this act or condition be performed.

Q. Is faith the only condition of the covenant of grace?

A. In this covenant there are conditions of three sorts: 1. There is conditio propter quam, or a condition for which the blessings of this covenant are bestowed on the elect; and that is Christ's satisfaction and merits, in respect whereof all the blessings of the covenant are truly conditional, except that of election, and God's purpose of redemption.

2. There is conditio per quam, or a condition by which we come to get an actual title to, and interest in the second or subsequent blessings of the covenant before-mentioned, and that is faith, which is required as a necessary condition, instrument, or mean of application on one part, in order to our partaking of these blessings, Rom. v. 1; Acts xvi. 30.

3. There is conditio sine qua non, or a condition without which the foresaid blessings of pardon and eternal life cannot be enjoyed; so repentance and new obedience may be called conditions of this sort; in regard they are absolutely necessary for all Christians partly as the concomitants, fruits, and evidences of a true faith; and partly to prepare and "make us meet for the inheritance of the saints in light," Luke viii. 3; Zech. xii. 10; Col. i. 10, 12; Heb. xii. 14.

Q. Doth it not detract from the grace and freeness of this covenant, and afford something to the creature whereof to boast, to say that the covenant requires any condition on our part?

A. If any act or duty required of us in this covenant, were to be performed by our natural strength, or by the help of common grace; or if it did give a right to the blessings of the covenant in any meritorious way, either by way of congruity or condignity in the popish sense: then indeed, it would derogate from the free grace of this covenant; wherefore, with all sound Protestants, we must abhor all thoughts of such duties, works, or conditions as these. But when we call faith a condition, and understand it only of a gracious instrument or qualification in the elect, purchased for them by Jesus Christ, absolutely promised by God in this covenant, and wrought in them by the Holy Ghost; a grace, that receives all from God and gives the entire glory to God: such a conditionality of faith is noways inconsistent with a covenant of grace, or of promise, Eph. ii. 5, 8.

Q. Since faith is not performed by our strength, but wrought in us by the Holy Spirit, how can it be said to be a condition on our part?

A. Though the grace and power of believing be derived from God's Spirit, yet the act of believing is properly the act and deed of the gracious soul, as being exerted and performed by his faculties; and hence it is that the Spirit of God styles these truly our works, that are wrought in us by his grace, Isa. xxvi. 12, "Lord, thou hast wrought all our works in us." They are still termed our works, though performed by his grace.

Q. May not love, repentance, humility, self-denial, holiness, and new obedience, be called conditions of this covenant, as well as faith, seeing these are likewise required of all that entered into this covenant, and many blessings of this covenant are also suspended until the performance of them?

A. There is a very great difference betwixt the conditionality of these graces, and that of faith, as I shall afterwards make appear. In the mean time, I own, if conditions be taken in a large sense, for every thing, duty, or qualification, that is necessarily required of those that enter into this covenant; then indeed all the forementioned graces and qualifications may be called conditions or terms in this covenant; and some of these terms, conditions or qualifications are necessary as antecedents unto our entering into this covenant, others as concomitants of it, and others as consequents to it, though indeed they are also freely promised to the elect.

Q. What are these terms or qualifications, that are required as antecedents unto our entering into this covenant?

A. Such as hearing of the word, some knowledge of God, and sense of our misery, and despair of help in ourselves, and a sight of our need of a Mediator, &c. All these may be called antecedent or preparatory conditions of our entering into covenant, in regard they are necessarily and previously requisite unto it, Matt. ix. 12; Luke xv. 16, 17; John iv. 10.

Q. What are these terms or qualifications, that are required as concomitants?

A. Such as, repentance, love, humility, self-denial, spiritual hunger, &c. these may be called concomitant conditions of our entering into this covenant, in regard they necessarily accompany it, and are inseparable from true faith, Mark i. 15; Acts ii. 38; Luke vii. 47; ix. 23; Phil. ii. 3, 8; Mat. v. 6.

Q. What are these terms or qualifications, which are required as consequent unto our entering into this covenant

A. Such as, evangelical obedience, taking up the cross, patience, perseverance, &c. these we find laid down as fruits and evidences of faith, and required as necessary conditions of our enjoying and possessing the ends of this covenant; viz. eternal life and glory, Gen. xvii. 1, 2; Luke ix. 23; Heb. xii. 14; x. 36, 38. I say, all these may be called conditions, or terms in this covenant, in the sense before specified; as being duties and qualifications necessarily required of all those that enter into it; and so we find these words, conditions and terms, used by many sound Protestant divines.

Q. What is the difference betwixt the condition of faith, and these other conditions required? Or what preference hath faith to these, in reference to this covenant?

A. Repentance, and the other graces and qualifications before-named, are only conditions of certain connection, without which we cannot be justified, united to Christ, or inherit his purchased glory; but faith is the only instrumental, uniting and applying condition of our justification, by, and through which, as a mean and instrument, we are actually justified, united to Christ, and entitled to all the blessings of his purchase. It far excels all other graces, in regard it hath a peculiar influence on our justification, and union with Christ. It doth that noble office to us, which no other grace or act of ours is capable of, because of its special aptitude and fitness for taking hold of the Redeemer, and closing with his righteousness. Hence we are frequently said to be justified by faith, but never by repentance, love, or any other grace. And the righteousness that doth justify us, is often called the "righteousness of faith and by faith." And it is so called to teach us, that as the righteousness of Christ is the only meritorious condition of our justification and our partaking of the great blessings of that covenant; so faith is the only instrument and applying condition thereof, Rom. iv. 13; x. 6; Phil. iii. 9; Gal. v; Heb. xi. 7.

Q. Doth faith justify, and entitle us to the blessings of the covenant, as a work, grace, or habit in us, of special excellency and worth before God?

A. Not at all, for if it be considered as a work or grace in us, it hath not any more intrinsic worth or value, than other gracious habits, nor any more influence on our justification before God, than other graces have, which is indeed none at all. Faith then, doth not any ways justify us upon the account of its own worth, or as it is a work or grace of ours; but only as it is an instrument having a peculiar fitness as the hand of the soul, for apprehending of Christ, and applying his righteousness, which is the only ground of our justification before God. And upon this account only it is, that faith is preferred to all the rest of the graces, and called the only condition of the covenant of grace on our part.

Q. Why is Christ called the Mediator and surety of the covenant of grace?

A. 1. He is called the Mediator of it, because he graciously interposeth betwixt God and man, who were at variance, and by his blood and Spirit reconciles them together, and brings them into a covenant of peace and friendship.

2. He is called surety of this covenant, because he graciously undertakes for both parties fulfilling their parts of it, viz. that God shall perform all his promises to the elect, and that they shall do whatever God requires of them, 1 Tim. ii. 5; Heb. ix. 15; vii. 22.

Q. Doth God need any surety or cautioner on his part?

A. Not at all, upon his own account, for he is the faithful and immutable God, "for whom it is impossible to lie," or falsify his promise. But only on our account, for our guilt having made us suspicious that God would not accept, or dwell with such unworthy creatures: it was requisite for our comfort that the Son of God should be surety to us, for the performance of these promises, that are truly so great in themselves and may justly be astonishing to our thoughts.

Q. Is this covenant universal, or made and entered into with all men, as the first covenant was?

A. No; it is only made and entered into with such as accept the offers and terms of it, and these are none but the elect, Isa. lv. 3; Ezek. xi. 19, 20; Heb. viii. 10; Rom. ix. 4; xi. 5, 7.

Q. Is this covenant offered to none else?

A. Christ and the benefits of this covenant are tendered to all that hear the gospel, without exception: and this is plain from the many general calls and invitations of Christ to lost sinners, with the promises thereto annexed, which we have recorded; together with his peremptory commands, that require every man to come to him, and believe in him, and that under the pain of damnation, Prov. i. 20—23; viii. 1—5; Isaiah xlv. 22; lv. 1; Mark xvi. 15, 16; Acts ii. 38, 39; Rev. iii. 17, 18; xxii. 17.

Q. Have all men, even the worst, sufficient warrant from these general calls, commands, and promises to come to Christ, and take hold of this covenant, with all its benefits and promises?

A. Yes; they may do it warrantably, without any fear of presumption, firmly expecting welcome upon their coming. Nay, they heinously sin against God and their own souls, if they neglect to do it, Isa. li. 3—5; John iv. 37; Heb. ii. 3; iv. 1, 2.

Q. Why is this covenant offered and tendered to all the hearers of the gospel indefinitely, seeing it is only made with a certain number of them, viz. the elect?

A. Because it hath so pleased a wise and sovereign God, who doth all things, "according to the counsel of his will," and is not bound to give an account of his matters. Yet, we may adventure to say, that he doth it for these ends; namely, that he may proclaim the sufficiency and perfection of Christ's ransom, together with the freeness and fulness of divine grace, as a sufficient foundation for all to believe, and flee to Christ for refuge. And also, that by this method the elect may be gathered out of the multitude, and the refusers of Christ left without excuse, Eph. ii. 11; Job xxxiii. 13; Matt. xx. 16; Luke xv. 22; Heb. ii. 3; xi. 13, 14.

Q. Is there any salvation but by the covenant of grace and Christ its mediator?

A. No. Acts iv. 12; 1 Cor. ii. 13; Gal. ii. 16.

Q. How then were the faithful saved, who lived under the law before Christ's coming in the flesh?

A. Though they had a dark and legal dispensation of the mystery of grace, yet they were under the same covenant, and saved in the same method with us; for they had the same Mediator and surety, typified to them by Moses and the sacrifices; they had the same promises of remission and salvation, which we have: and they were called to look through the types and figures, and act faith on Christ to come, as their only Saviour and Redeemer. And so they were justified by Christ in the method of the covenant of grace, and saved by virtue of the blood of Christ their surety, which was agreed upon to be shed for them in due time, according to the covenant of redemption; upon which account he is called "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," Rev. xiii. 8. See also Psal. ii. 12; Isa. xlv. 22; Acts x. 43; Gal. iii. 7—9; 1 Cor. x. 4.

Q. Was the covenant of grace promulgated and dispensed to the church, always after one and the same manner?

A. No; but in different manners; yea, so different, that though the covenant of grace, under all periods, hath still been the same for substance, yet, because of its gradual revelation and different administration, it is distinguished into the Old and New Testament, or the old and the new covenant of grace. The old covenant being that which was administered before Christ's coming in the flesh; and the new, that which is administered since his coming, Heb. i. 1; viii. 13; ix. 1; Jer. xxxi. 31; 2 Cor. iii. 6—8.

Q. Wherein doth the dispensation of the new covenant of grace differ from that of the old?

A. The Old Testament, or covenant of grace, was administered by promises, prophecies, sacrifices, and other types: which all pointed forth Christ as to come. But the new covenant of grace is administered by the preaching of the word, and dispensing of the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper, which show forth Christ as already come. Moreover, the new dispensation of the covenant is far more easy, clear, efficacious, and extensive than that of the old, Heb. x. 1—3, &c.; viii. 6, &c.; 1 Pet. i. 10; Matt. xxviii. 19; 1 Cor. xi. 23.

Q. What way hath God taken to establish and confirm the covenant of grace to us?

A. Several ways: 1. By his word or promise. 2. By his oath. 3. By the death and blood of his Son. 4. By outward signs and seals, commonly called sacraments, Gen. xvii. 7; xxii. 16, 17; Heb. vi. 13—18; xi. 16, 17; Rom. iv. 11.

CONCERNING THE SACRAMENTS.

Q. What is the proper signification of the word sacrament?

A. It is not a scriptural word, more than the word Trinity is: yet seeing the thing signified is there, and the word is very significant, it may be lawfully used. Anciently the word sacrament was a military word, in use among the Romans, and signified the "solemn oath which the soldiers took, to be true to their general;" afterwards, it was used by ecclesiastical writers, to signify any holy mystery, and particularly the sealing ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper; and indeed it is very applicable to them, seeing, by receiving these seals, we solemnly engage ourselves to be the Lord's, and swear to stand by him as faithful soldiers, fighting under his banner against all his enemies.

Q. What is the true nature and use of a sacrament?

A. It is a holy ordinance instituted by Christ in his church, and annexed as a seal to the covenant of grace; wherein, by outward and sensible signs, Christ, and the benefits of his mediation, are represented, sealed, and applied to those that are within the covenant, to confirm their interest in him, to strengthen and increase their faith and all other graces, to testify and cherish their love and communion one with another, to put a visible difference betwixt those that belong to the church, and the rest of the world: and solemnly to engage them to the service of God in Christ according to his word, Gen. xvii. 7, 10; Rom. iv. 11; xv. 8; vi. 3; 1 Cor. xi. 24; Eph. iv. 5.

Q. Why is it said to be an ordinance instituted by Christ in the church?

A. 1. To show that Christ is the sole King and Head of the Church, who alone hath the power to appoint her ordinances. 2. To distinguish the sacraments of Christ's institution from those of popish invention, viz. the five bastard sacraments of ordination, confirmation, penance, marriage, and extreme unction: none of which are instituted by Christ for sacraments; nor have they the parts of true sacraments, and none of them are seals of the covenant of grace.

Q. What are the parts of a sacrament?

A. Every sacrament hath two parts: the one external and earthly; and the other spiritual and heavenly. There is an outward sensible sign, that represents, conveys, seals, and applies the spiritual benefit thereby signified.

Q. What is a sensible sign?

A. That which is obvious to the outward senses of hearing, seeing, tasting, smelling, or hearing. And such are both the sacramental elements and sacramental actions.

Q. What things do sacraments signify and seal?

A. 1. As they are signs, they signify and represent the grace and good-will of God in Christ to his covenanted people. 2. As they are seals, they ratify and confirm his people's right to all the blessings and promises of the covenant, and likewise their engagements to new obedience.

Q. Is not the word alone sufficient to salvation? What need is there for sacraments?

A. It is enough to satisfy us, that the infinitely wise God hath thought fit to adjoin sacraments to his word, as necessary means of his people's salvation and comfort. And since he hath thus graciously appointed them; it becomes us with reverence, thankfulness, and diligence, to receive them, and to judge the contempt or abuse of them a heinous sin before God.

Q. How doth the word and sacraments differ as means of salvation?

A. In several things: 1. The word is directed to the bodily ear; but the sacraments to the eye and other senses. 2. The word is preached to all without exception; but the sacraments belong to none but the members of the church. 3. The word is the ordinary mean of begetting faith; but the sacraments are means for confirming and increasing it, Mark xvi. 15; Acts xviii. 36; Gen. xvii. 7; 1 Cor. iii. 5; Rom. iv. 11.

Q. Why hath God adjoined sacraments to the word?

A. 1. That he might give a further proof of his condescending goodness and tender concern for his people's good. It is a wonderful condescension in God to dispose his grace into a covenant form, and enter into a paction with us; but it is yet more, to be content to add seals to it, for our further confirmation and consolation.

2. That they might serve to awaken the affections and excite grace. Sacraments are, as it were, a visible gospel; the offers of free love and benefits of Christ's purchase are thereby exposed to the eye, as the word doth sound them in the ear. God knows our stupidity and dullness, that we are much more affected with things that we see with our eyes than that which we only hear.

3. That he might provide against that prevailing plague of unbelief in his people; and strengthen their weak faith, by giving them sensible signs of his love, and visible pledge of their interest in it. For, as Christ said to the nobleman of Capernaum, John iv. 48, "Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe."

Q. Are the sacraments efficacious to work grace in all that partake of them?

A. No; for we read of baptism administered to Simon Magus, who still remained a naughty man: and that the Lord's supper may be received by persons unworthy, Acts viii. 23; Luke xiii. 26, 27; 1 Cor. xi. 27.

Q. Whence have the sacraments their efficacy?

A. Negatively they have it not from themselves, ex opere operato, according to the papists: nor from the intention or holiness of the minister that dispenseth them. But, 2. Positively, they have it from Christ's blessing, and the Spirit's working in and by them upon the souls of such as partake of them. It is only Christ, who, by his Spirit, puts life and virtue in the sacraments, and makes them effectual means for conveying and applying his saving benefits to his people's souls.

Q. What were the ordinary sacraments of the Old Testament dispensation?

A. Circumcision and the passover, which are now abrogated by the coming of Christ, who was typified by them.

Q. Hath not Christ appointed sacraments under the New Testament dispensation, in the room of those which he abolished?

A. Yes; viz. baptism and the Lord's supper.

Q. Are not the sacraments, both of the Old and New Testament, for substance the same?

A. Yes; for they both represent and exhibit Jesus Christ, and the same spiritual benefits and mercies through him, Rom. iv. 11; 1 Cor. x. 1.

Q. Is there no difference betwixt them?

A. Yes; in several respects: 1. The old sacraments represented Christ as to come; but the new, as already come. 2. The old represented Christ more darkly; but the new more clearly and plainly. 3. The old were only to endure till Christ's coming in the flesh; but the new, until Christ's coming in glory. 4. Their outward signs differ much one from another.

Q. How doth it appear that circumcision and baptism are the same in substance?

A. In respect they are both sacraments for initiation, typifying, and representing our natural pollution and original guilt, the necessity of being purified from carnal affections, and the way of our salvation by the shedding of Christ's blood.

Q. How doth it appear that the passover and the Lord's supper are the same for substance?

A. By the following things, 1. They both represent Christ crucified, and commemorate his love in delivering his people from the bondage of sin and Satan.

2. The Israelites behoved to prepare themselves for keeping the passover for some time before; particularly they kept the paschal-lamb four days in their houses before it was killed; during which time (as their writers tell), it was tied to their bed-posts, that by their constant hearing of its bleatings they might be excited to look back and remember their sore bondage in Egypt, and their gracious deliverance from it; and also to look forward and remember the sufferings and agonies of the Messiah for their sins. In like manner, communicants ought to prepare themselves for the Lord's supper by serious and frequent meditating upon their misery by nature, the evil of sin, and the bitter agonies which Christ endured in delivering them from it.

3. As the paschal-lamb was roasted with fire; so Christ, in the Lord's supper, is held forth as scorched with the fire of God's wrath.

4. As the paschal-lamb behoved to be eaten, and that wholly; so Christ, in the Lord's supper, must be received by faith, and that wholly in all his offices.

5. As the lamb in the passover behoved to be eaten with unleavened bread and bitter herbs; so Christ must be received, in the Lord's supper, in truth and sincerity, with bitter repentings for sin.

6. As the lamb, in the first passover, was to be eaten by the Israelites in haste, with their loins girt, staves in their hands, and shoes on their feet; so Christ, in the Lord's supper, must be received without delay, with holy resolution and preparation for our spiritual journey, travelling as pilgrims through the wilderness of this world.

7. As the blood of the lamb was to be sprinkled on their door-posts and lintels, for securing them from the destroying angel that cut off the Egyptians' first-born; so, in the Lord's supper, we must have our whole souls besprinkled with Christ's blood by faith, for securing us from the stroke of divine justice; nay, also our outward conversation, that is visible to the world, must be sprinkled that they may take notice of our having been with Jesus, Exod. xii.; 1 Cor. v. 7, 8.

CONCERNING BAPTISM.

Q. What is the true nature and use of baptism?

A. Baptism is a sacrament of the New Testament, annexed as a sign and seal of God's covenant with believers in Christ; wherein Jesus Christ hath ordained the washing with water, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; to be a sign, not only of the solemn admission of the party baptized into the visible church; but also a sign and seal of his interest in the covenant of grace, with all its blessings purchased by the blood of Christ, represented by that water, and particularly to signify and seal his ingrafting into Christ, his remission of sins by his blood, and regeneration by his Spirit; his adoption into God's family, and resurrection into everlasting life. And likewise his solemn dedication to God through Jesus Christ; and entering into an open and professed engagement to be the Lord's, wholly and only his; and to walk with him in newness of life, Matt. xxviii. 19; Gal. iii. 27; Mark i. 4; Tit. iii. 5; Eph. v. 26; Rom. vi. 4—6, 11; 1 Pet. iii. 21.

Q. How many sorts of baptism are mentioned in scripture?

A. We read of six-fold baptism, 1. The Levitical baptisms or washings, Heb. ix. 10. 2. The baptism of tears or repentance, Luke vii. 38. 3. The baptism of affliction, blood, or martyrdom: thus Christ and the martyrs were baptized, Matt. xx. 22, 23; Luke xii. 50. 4. The baptism of the Holy Ghost, or the conferring of the gifts of the Holy Ghost, Acts i. 5. 5. It is sometimes put for the Christian faith or doctrine of baptism, Acts xviii. 25. 6. There is the sacrament of baptism, which we now speak of.

But principally, baptism is twofold, external and internal, of water and of the Spirit.

Q. What parts doth the sacrament of baptism consist of?

A. Of two parts: 1. The outward and visible part signifying. 2. The spiritual and invisible part thereby signified.

Q. What is the outward part signifying?

A. The washing of the body with water, and the using of the words of institution.

Q. What is the spiritual part signified by the washing with water?

A. 1. The washing away of the guilt of sin, or our justification by the blood of Christ applied to the soul. 2. The washing away of the filth of sin, or our sanctification by the Spirit of Christ in the work of regeneration, Rev. i. 5; John iii. 5.

Q. What is signified by the words of institution, or baptizing in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost?

A. 1. It signifies that ministers have authority from God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, to administer this sacrament of baptism, Matt. xxviii. 18, 19.

2. It signifies the baptized person's entering into a solemn covenant with God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, his choosing and taking God the Father as his God and Father; God the Son as his Redeemer and Saviour; and God the Holy Ghost as his Guide, Sanctifier, and Comforter; also it signifies his consecration to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and his coming under engagements to the faith, profession, and obedience of the holy Trinity; together with his solemn renouncing of the three great enemies of the holy Trinity, viz. the devil, the world, and the flesh, 2 Cor. viii. 5; 1 Pet. iii. 21.

Q. Why is the blood of Christ, and blessings of the new covenant, represented here by water?

A. Because of the near resemblance they have to one another in these things: 1. Water hath a cleansing virtue for taking away filth and pollution from the body, so Christ's blood cleanses the soul from sin.

2. Water hath a refreshing virtue to a thirsty traveller, and the dry withered herbs; so Christ's blood and benefits are most refreshing to the poor thirsty soul.

3. Water hath an extinguishing quality for quenching fire; so the blood of Christ quencheth both the fire of God's wrath, and the fire of our lusts.

4. Water hath a mollifying virtue; it softens the hardened earth; so Christ's blood hath softened many a hardened heart into tears, and melted them into a compliance with God's will.

5. Water is most necessary; our bodies could not live or subsist without it; so the blood of Christ is the most necessary and useful thing in the world; our souls without it would perish eternally.

6. Water is cheap and free to all; no man is denied of it; so the blood of Christ is offered freely to all that please to accept of it.

7. Water hath no effect nor operation upon us, unless it be sprinkled or applied; so neither hath the blood of Christ any effect upon us till it be applied by faith.

Q. Is there no sacramental element or rite to be used in baptism, but the washing with water in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost?

A. No; for though the papists join herewith salt, spittle, oil, and the sign of a cross, yet they have no warrant for these from Christ or his apostles; and therefore they are not to be regarded but as superstitious and antichristian additions to Christ's holy institution.

Q. For what special ends hath the Lord appointed baptism?

A. They are various; 1. To be a distinguishing badge of our Christian profession, to distinguish us from Jews, Pagans, and Mahometans.

2. To be a teaching sign or symbol for instructing us in the knowledge of the great articles of the Christian faith; particularly, it is a looking-glass to show us our natural pollution and misery by reason of sin, and our remedy provided in the blood of Christ.

3. To be a confirming seal of God's covenant for assuring believers of the reality of his love, the truth of his promises, and the certainty of their title to the children's inheritance, and (as it were) for giving them infirmity and seising in all the blessings of Christ's purchase; even as men are invested in the right, and put in the possession of a bargain by formalities of law; as a house is delivered us by a key; or a field by stone or earth.

4. To be a gracious channel and means for conveying grace, and soul-purification, and spiritual blessings to those for whom they are designed.

5. To be an obligatory bond on our path to be true and faithful to God, to renounce the service of sin and Satan, and to walk with God in newness of life.

6. To be a meeting-place for parents to meet and treat with Christ concerning the salvation of their young ones. For all which see Gal. v. 3; Acts ii. 38, 41; xxii. 16; Rom. iv. 11; Col. ii. 11, 12; Eph. v. 26; 1 Pet. iii. 21; Luke xviii. 15, 16.

Q. When God seals his covenant with believers at baptism, what things are engaged and sealed on his part?

A. 1. That he will be our God. 2. Receive and own us as members of his visible church. 3. Give us a sealed right to church ordinances and privileges. 4. Cut us off from the old stock of nature, and ingraft us into Christ. 5. Take us into his family, and under his providential care. 6. Entitle us to Christ's purchase, and make over all the blessings and benefits of the new covenant, viz. remission of sin, regeneration, adoption, sanctification, resurrection to life, and eternal glory and happiness.

Q. Doth baptism seal and apply these things equally to all who are baptized?

A. No; for to elect infants and believers in reality, it seals and applies these things absolutely. But to those who are only believers in profession, it seals and applies conditionally, that is, upon supposition that they be what they profess.

Q. Have unbelievers then no benefit by their baptism?

A. Yes; in so far as they are hereby distinguished from the rest of the world, externally separated from Satan, the world, and the flesh, are dedicated to Christ and his service, become members of the visible church, and have a sealed right to gospel ordinances and privileges, if they do not forfeit these by their after-carriage, Rom. ix. 4; 1 Cor. viii. 14.

Q. Is there any thing engaged or sealed on our part in baptism?

A. Yes, viz. that we will be the Lord's, i. e. that we will be wholly the Lord's, soul and body, in all we are, or have. 2. That we will be only the Lord's, and therefore renounce all other lords and masters, the devil, the world, and the flesh. 3. That we will be the Lord's by practice as well as profession, that we will mortify sin, wage war against Christ's enemies, fight under Christ's banner, and study conformity to him, Rom. vi. 4, 5, 12; 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20; 2 Cor. viii. 5; 1 Pet. iii. 21.

Q. Are the benefits sealed to believers immediately conferred upon them, at the moment of baptism?

A. Though a sealed right to these be then given them, yet the efficacy of baptism is not necessarily tied to that moment of time wherein it is administered: for God being a most free agent, makes this ordinance effectual, and confers his grace when and how he pleaseth; besides the fruit and power of baptism reacheth to the whole course of a believer's life, John iii. 5, 8.

Q. Doth not baptism remove original sin and confer regenerating grace to all the partakers of it?

A. No; for many partake of baptism who are unregenerated still: baptism of its own nature, or by itself, operates nothing; but only as the Spirit of God, (the author of grace) doth concur therewith; and being a free agent, he works grace before, at, or after baptism, as he pleaseth. And for original sin, it is not then taken away from believers themselves, except as to its guilt and dominion, (if it please the Spirit to co-operate at that time, and apply the blood of Christ), but as to its pollution and inheritance, it remains in part during their whole lives, as is sadly verified by the complaints of the best of God's people, Psal. li. 5—7; Rom. vii. 23, 25; Acts viii. 13, 23.

Q. What is the necessity of baptism?

A. It is necessary in respect of the command of Christ, who hath appointed it as a sign and a seal of his covenant, and an external mean of salvation; and therefore ought to be held in reverence, and sought for with all due care: and to condemn or neglect this ordinance of Christ's institution is a very heinous sin, Mat. xxviii. 19; Luke vii. 30; Acts xvii. 14; Exod. iv. 24, 25.

Q. Is outward baptism absolutely necessary to salvation? Or are they damned who die without it?

A. It is not the want, but the contempt of this ordinance, that exposeth to damnation; for the converted thief wanted baptism and was saved; besides, it would be a great injury to free grace, and a horrid thing in itself, to say, that it is in the power of wicked men to damn the souls of others, by their wilful neglect of this ordinance, or that the Israelites' infants, who died before the eighth day, or while they were in the wilderness, were all damned; neither are parents guilty in this matter, if they do not neglect this ordinance of Christ, when and where it may be had, Rom. iv. 11; Acts x. 2, 4, 22, 31, 45, 47.

Q. Where should baptism be administered?

A. In the place of public worship, and in the face of the congregation, where the people may most conveniently see and hear; and not in private places.

Q. What is the necessity thereof?

A. In regard baptism is the public entry and door to Christ's house, or the ordinance whereby persons are solemnly admitted into the church, and made members of Christ's family; and therefore it is necessary that the church should be publicly called and assembled to the administration of this public church-ordinance. And that, for these reasons:

1. That thereby they may witness, homologate, and consent to the admission of new members into the church or family of Christ.

2. That the engagement of parents or the party baptized may be public and solemn before many witnesses.

3. That there may be many to join in prayer for a blessing upon the ordinance: it is much for the interest of both parents and children, to have the prayers of all the godly in the congregation for them, on such an occasion; which to be sure are far more prevalent and effectual than the prayers of a few.

4. That the whole congregation may be edified by the dispensing of this solemn ordinance, and excited to remember and improve their own baptism, and be faithful in keeping the covenant engagements which they then sealed before many witnesses, and also to be humbled for former breaches.

Q. To whom is baptism to be administered?

A. Baptism is not to be administered to any that are out of the visible church, "and so strangers from the covenant of promise," till they profess their faith in Christ and obedience to him;

but infants descending from parents, either both, or but one of them, professing faith in Christ and obedience to him, are in that respect within the covenant, and so to be baptized, Acts viii. 36, 37; Gen. xvii. 7, 10; Gal. iii. 9, 14; Acts ii. 38, 49, 41; 1 Cor. vii. 14; Luke xviii. 15, 16; Rom. xi. 16.

Q. To whom is baptism not to be administered?

A. Not to heathens and infidels, or persons openly scandalous; for these being without the covenant, and out of the visible church, have no right to the seals thereof; neither have their infants while they continue so. But if upon hearing the gospel they repent and believe, duly make profession of their faith and obedience, they have a right to this ordinance, Eph. ii. 12; Mark xvi. 15, 16; Acts viii. 13, 36, 37.

Q. Who properly have a right to baptism?

A. All the members of the visible church, and their infants, Acts ii. 39.

Q. What is it you call the visible church?

A. It is a society made up of those who in all ages and places of the world profess Christ and the true religion; and of their children.

Q. What is the invisible church?

A. The whole body of the elect that have been, are, or shall be gathered into one, under Christ their head.

Q. Do all that are baptized become members of the invisible church, and thereby ingrafted into Christ?

A. No; for our baptism makes us only members of the visible church.

Q. What is it to be really ingrafted into Christ?

A. It is for sinners to be cut off from the old stock of nature, and united to Jesus Christ, that they may grow up in him, and bring forth fruit unto him; and this is done upon our believing.

Q. Are adult persons and infants to be baptized in the same way and method?

A. No; for the adult, or persons come to years, must first be instructed in the faith of Christ, and principles of Christianity, and are to make profession of the same, with confession of their sins, before they be baptized, according to the ancient practice, Matt. iii. 6; xxviii. 19; Acts viii. 47. But the infants of believers (of whom these things cannot be expected or required) are to be baptized without such profession or confession, their parents undertaking as sponsors for them.

Q. But how should infants be admitted to baptism till they believe and confess their faith, seeing, according to Mark xvi. 16, they must first believe, and then be baptized?

A. This is only meant of adult persons without the visible church. And though infants do not actually profess their faith, as being incapable of it; yet they are to be ranked among believers, as being the children of believing parents: for infants are but parts of the parents wrapt up in another skin, and to be accounted but one person with them, as the root and branches are but one tree, according to Rom. xi. 16. We are to judge of children by their parents till they come to the use of reason, and be capable to choose their own way, and then indeed they may disinherit themselves by their degeneracy. But till then we are to judge of them by the parents, as we do of a graft taken from a tree and implanted in a new stock; for we judge of the graft by the tree from which it was taken, until it bear fruit by itself, whereby it may be discerned. It is upon this account that God calls the children of his people, "His children," and children "born unto him," Ezek. xvi. 20. Now if children have a covenant relation to God, or be within the covenant (as the children of believing parents certainly are) they have a right to the signs and seals of it also, Gen. xvii. 7; Deut. xxix. 10—15; Acts ii. 39.

Q. Ought not infants, according to this argument, to be admitted to the Lord's supper also?

A. The infants of believers have, indeed, upon the same account, a remote right to this seal likewise; though for the present they are incapable to receive it, as wanting the actual exercise of reason, which is absolutely necessary in order to our examining ourselves, and discerning the Lord's body; these being the indispensable duties of all such as partake of the Lord's supper, 1 Cor. xi. 28, 29.

Q. Should they not, for the same reason, be kept from the seal of baptism, seeing they understand not the nature of that ordinance, nor the duties of the baptized?

A. 1. They understand as much of it as the Jewish infants did of circumcision at eight days of age; and yet that ordinance behoved not to be longer delayed. Now there is the same reason for administering the sacrament of baptism to infants under the gospel, that there was for circumcision under the law, seeing baptism is now come in its room, as the sacrament of initiation or entrance into the church, which circumcision then was. If, by divine warrant, not only Abraham, but all his seed, had a right to the initiatory seal of the covenant, Gen. xvii. 7, 10, then believers now, who are Abraham's children, and under the same covenant with him, must still have the same privilege; seeing that ancient grant was never afterwards repealed, but expressly confirmed under the gospel, according to Acts ii. 39; Gal. iii. 9, 14, 16.

2. Infants may reap the benefit of baptism, though they understand not its meaning. The infants Christ took up in his arms, Luke xviii., knew not his meaning, yet they got his blessing. An inheritance bequeathed to a poor child in the cradle is of use to it, though it understand not the advantage at present, nor hath the comfortable possession till it come to years.

3. It is to be observed, that though the Jewish infants partook of circumcision, yet they were excluded from the passover; and that for the same ground that we exclude our infants from the Lord's supper, which is now come in its room; viz. the want of the actual exercise of reason. For none were to share of the passover but such as could ask concerning the meaning thereof, Exod. xii. 26. But this was not absolutely needful for partaking of circumcision, in regard that was only for conveying a right; but the other was for commemorating a benefit, which necessarily supposed understanding.

Q. Is there any other scripture warrant for the baptism of infants, beside that of the circumcision of the Jewish children?

A. Though that be sufficient warrant for it; yet we have more; for, 1. Christ commands his apostles to disciple and baptize all nations, of which infants are no small part: as our Saviour excludes none from the ordinance, so he limits no time nor age for the dispensing of it: there was no need to give any express charge concerning infants, seeing their privilege was settled for many ages before, and they still in possession of it, by the initiatory seal of circumcision, which was the same in substance with baptism. This was never reversed, but their right declared to continue, Acts ii. 39.

2. Infants are capable both of grace and glory, and consequently are capable of baptism, which seals our right to these, Luke i. 15; xviii. 15; Matt. xviii. 9.

3. Children of believers are pronounced holy, 1 Cor. vii. 14, that is, federately holy, as being within the covenant; and therefore they must needs have a right to the seal of it.

4. Infant baptism was universally practised in the ancient church, they deriving it from the apostles, whose example they followed in this matter; and of whom we have it several times recorded that they baptized such as believed with their households, such as the house of Lydia, the jailor, and Stephanas, Acts xvi. 15, 33; 1 Cor. i. 16.

Q. To whom pertains it to present the infants of the visible church to baptism?

A. It belongs properly to the parents, and not to those who are called godfathers or godmothers—because children have a right to baptism, only in and by their parents: and these only have a power, both by the law of God and nature, to dispose of their young ones, and to order their education; and they only are accountable to God for them. And in the sense of the law, their will is the children's will. Upon all which accounts, parents only ought to present their infants to God in baptism, and consent for them to the covenant of grace, Josh. xxiv. 15; Deut. xxix. 10, 11.

Q. What doth the parents bringing and presenting their children in baptism import and signify in itself?

A. It imports these things: 1. A public acknowledgment that their children are defiled by original sin, and need washing as soon as they come into the world.

2. That they are bound by the ties of nature and common justice to do all they can for their children's help and relief in this miserable state; that they may (so far as lieth in them) repair the injury done them by conveying original corruption to them.

3. That they believe no remedy can cure them, no fountain can cleanse them, but that of Christ's blood, which is represented by the baptismal water.

4. That they willingly dedicate and devote their children to God, to be enrolled in his family, numbered among his children, and entirely disposed of by him.

Q. What are the special duties incumbent upon parents, on the occasion of presenting their children in baptism?

A. 1. To wonder at God's grace and condescension, in taking such pains on us, as to lay the great mystery of godliness and scheme of our salvation before our eyes by visible rites and signs, thereby to affect our senses, and the more effectually to excite our minds to a serious consideration of the great things which God hath done for us. Since the gospel report which the word brings daily to our ears (concerning our misery and remedy, our ruin by sin, and recovery by Jesus Christ) makes but little impression on us; he is pleased to give a perceptible view of these things by baptism to the eye, to try if our eyes will affect our hearts, according to Lam. iii. 51. And ought not this goodness to melt even the hardest heart?

2. To admire God's free grace and mercy, that he is willing to take both us and our children into covenant with himself: that after the first covenant was broken on our part, he was content to enter into a second (a covenant all of grace), and that with his own condemned rebel creature! Abraham fell upon his face when God was covenanting with him; and David was astonished with admiration at it, Gen. xvii. 3; 2 Sam. vii. 19. And so ought we upon this occasion.

3. Parents ought to search and see if they be really in covenant with God themselves; for when we dispense this sacrament, we are to look on the parents that claim the benefit of it to their children, to be persons in covenant with God, otherwise their children have no right to the seal of it. Therefore it highly concerns parents, on this occasion, to inquire if they have as yet entered into covenant with God, by their own personal transaction, and renewing of their own baptismal dedication and engagement. And if they have dealt faithfully with God in this covenant, yea, or not.

4. Parents ought, on this occasion, to renew the covenant which they made with God in their own baptism, take hold of the covenant of grace for themselves, accept of Jesus Christ the Mediator of it, close with his righteousness, and dedicate themselves, as well as their children, to the Lord; and thus transact with God and Christ in secret. Which they are likewise publicly to own and renew, at the presenting of their infants, by a solemn profession of their faith in God the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghost; and dutiful obedience to him according to his word: believers should rejoice to come with their children to baptism, because every time they do it, God renews his covenant with them and theirs; as he did with Abraham at circumcision, Gen. xvii.

5. They ought to be fervent in prayer, wrestling with God for the purification and acceptance of their young ones through Christ's blood; and for a solemn blessing upon the ordinance to be dispensed to them: and that God may join the inward and privy seal of his Spirit, with the outward seal of this sacrament.

6. They ought to study to be well acquainted with the great truths of the Christian religion, as contained in the holy scriptures, and agreeable thereto, summed up in our Confession of Faith, Larger and Shorter Catechisms; that so they may be capable to instruct and train up their children in the knowledge of these truths, according to the engagements which they publicly take on. Alas! there is little conscience made of such a solemn promise by many; they are ignorant of our excellent Confession of Faith and Catechisms, and will not so much as buy them, or read them over; notwithstanding of their reiterated engagements on this occasion.

7. They are to make a solemn surrender and dedication of their children to God in Christ, as children of his family, subjects of his kingdom, and members of Christ's mystical body: and that for the end that they may be washed in Christ's blood, saved by his grace, guided by his Spirit, ruled by his laws, and disposed of by his providence. Thus we are to bring and present our children to God in baptism, as "living sacrifices to him, acceptable through Christ Jesus."

8. We are, in the name and behalf of our infants, they being parts of ourselves, as we showed before, to consent to the gracious offers and terms of the covenant of grace, and that they will be the Lord's wholly and only his. And for this end to teach them, when they come to understanding, the knowledge of God, and the way of salvation through Christ, according to his word; and to instruct them in the duties of the covenant, particularly the necessity of faith, repentance, and new obedience. And because children are more ready to be influenced by our examples than our precepts, we are to engage to show them the copy of a holy life, family-worship, and secret prayer, in our own conversation. Thus Abraham, the father of the faithful, entered into covenant with God for himself and his seed after him, Gen. xvii. 7, 9. And according to that covenant, "he commanded his children and household after him, to keep the way of the Lord," Gen. xviii. 19. And so believing parents under the gospel, being under the same covenant with faithful Abraham, "ought to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," Eph. vi. 4.

Q. What are the duties incumbent upon the congregation, or those that are witnesses to the administration of the sacrament of baptism?

A. 1. Patiently to attend, and wait till it be done; for to remove before the administration of baptism, as many do, argues both a contempt of Christ's solemn ordinance, which he hath instituted for his church's good; and want of charity to those who are to be baptized, in that they decline to say and pray for them, and receive them into the communion of the visible church. And likewise it shows, that they have little regard to their own souls, when they turn their backs upon such an excellent mean of edification as this is. Let such consider whether it had been just and becoming for the whole congregation to have dealt so with respect to them when they were baptized as they deal now in reference to others. Stay still, and pray for the members to be ingrafted, as others did for you.

2. To witness the administration of it with a holy awe and becoming reverence to the great author of it, and mystery represented by it. Remember that it derives its authority and institution, not from man, but from the exalted Lord of angels and saints. Had this ordinance been of man, it had been abandoned and come to nought many years ago; but being of divine original, it hath kept its authority throughout the whole Christian world, for the space of these 1700 years. Wherefore it becomes us all to pay a dutiful regard to the administration of it.

3. Admire the wonderful kindness of God to fallen man, that he pitied us when wallowing in our blood and pollution, and provided a suitable remedy for us. Though he might in justice have suffered such wretches to drop into the devil's arms and hell's flames from the very womb; yet, behold he stretches out his merciful and fatherly arms to embrace us, as soon as we enter into the world; "Suffer little children," saith he, "to come unto me," to me their Friend and Saviour.

4. Bless God that hath ordered your lot to be born within the pale of Christ's church, of Christian parents who early presented and dedicated you in such manner to God, whereby you got a sealed right to gospel-ordinances and privileges, nay, to Christ and all the benefits of the new covenant, upon the condition of your faith; so that now you have encouragement to come and claim your right. Especially you, whose happiness it is to be born of godly and believing parents, bless God for this mercy, plead your interest in the covenant, for your claim is certainly better than others; you may go to God as your father's God, and therefore plead he is yours too; for when God entered into covenant with your fathers, he made it both for them and for you their seed: and how pleasant is it to sing with Moses at the Red sea, Exod. xv. "He is my God, I will prepare him an habitation; my father's God, and I will exalt him." But beware of thinking that your being of such parents necessarily entitles you to the saving blessings of the covenant, though you should do nothing yourselves; nay, if you put not in your claim when you come to age, you forfeit your right. Yet questionless, your birth still entitles you to many external privileges and mercies; upon which account, it is said, 1 Pet. iii. 21, "The like figure unto Noah's baptism doth now save us;" i. e. as the ark, which was a type of baptism, wrought a temporal salvation for all Noah's family; so baptism entitles the families of believers to many temporal privileges and blessings. But though all Noah's family was admitted into the ark, this did not entitle them to admission into heaven; so neither will our outward baptism save us from the deluge of God's wrath, and bring us to heaven: and therefore the apostle adds for explication in the forecited verse, "Not the putting away the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God;" i. e. not the outward washing of the body with water; but the faithful answer of a resolved soul, accepting of and adhering to the covenant sealed in baptism; for at the first planting of Christianity, people were generally grown up when baptized, and made answer publicly for themselves, making profession of their faith and obedience to the holy Trinity, and their renouncing the devil, the world, and the flesh.

5. Bless God that you are born under the New Testament times, when the fountain for cleansing sinners is so fully opened in the word and sacraments, that the streams of it are daily so near you, and you invited to wash therein. Our access to the fountain is now plain and easy. It is not locked up, covered with leaves, or obscured with types and figures, as under the law: we have now an open view of it: there is a wide vent made to its streams, by Christ's death and wounds upon the cross; and excellent channels framed for conveying it to us, viz. the preaching of the gospel with its sacraments. O how inexcusable will we be for ever, if after all this we condemn the water of life, and die in our pollution.

6. Be concerned for the precious souls of those that are to be baptized; pray fervently for them, that God may come and bless his own ordinance to them; give the inward grace with the outward seal: applying Christ's blood to the soul, as water is sprinkled upon the body, that he may regenerate them by his Spirit, stamp them with his image, make them instruments of his glory: that they may rise up, and do God better service in their generation, than, alas, we have done in ours.

7. When you see and hear parents solemnly engaging for their children at their baptism, let such as are parents that have come under the like engagements, consider how they have performed them. Do ye make conscience of praying for your children, teaching them the principles of religion, admonishing them of their duty, warning them against sin, and learning them to read and pray? When took you them aside to tell them of the vows you took on at baptism in their name, and press them to renew personally their baptismal covenant? O have you not cause on this occasion to be humbled for your neglect and shortcomings, in performing your solemn engagements, and seek forgiveness through the blood of sprinkling? O negligent parents! remember what a fearful meeting will be betwixt you and your graceless children one day at Christ's tribunal, when they will come with accusations and curses in their mouths against you for your unfaithfulness in performing your solemn engagements, with respect to their precious souls.

8. Let every one upon such an occasion call to mind his own baptism, how he was thus once presented, dedicated, and sprinkled in like manner; and study by all means to improve his own baptism, which is a most needful, though much neglected duty.

Q. How is it that we ought to improve our baptism?

A. 1. Be sensible of the greatness of the privilege and dignity conferred upon you, in being baptized in the name of Christ, and sacramentally sprinkled with his blood for the remission of sin; and think much upon it. Alas, there are many who never think on Christ or his blood, and put no value upon their baptism. I have read of Lucian, a scoffing atheist, when he apostatized from the profession of Christianity, he mocked at his baptism, saying, "he got nothing by it, but a syllable to his name;" he was Lucius before, and at baptism was called Lucianus. And what do many get by their baptism but a name! Why, they undervalue their baptism, never think on it, nor study any way to improve it.

2. You ought personally and explicitly to renew your covenant and solemn dedication to God, sealed at baptism. It is not enough that you are Christians by your parents' dedication, but you must be so by your own also, by ratifying your parents' deed, when you are of age; otherwise your baptism will profit you nothing; nay, instead of profiting you, it will be a witness against you, if you do not personally transact with God in Christ, and give away yourselves to the Lord in truth and sincerity.

3. Improve your baptism, by labouring to secure and clear up your interest in the pardon of sin, adoption, sanctifying grace, and other blessings sealed to you in that sacrament. Remember, that these blessings were only sealed to you conditionally, upon your believing in Christ: and that they are not actually conferred, till you be sensible of sin, and close with Christ and his righteousness. Go, then, O penitent sinner, apply to the blood of Christ, by faith, which was sacramentally applied to you at baptism, and plead with God for pardon of sin; make use of your baptism as a strong argument for it; say, "Lord, have I thy seal, as well as thy promise, for my pardon? Got I not a pledge of it from thee, at my baptism? Behold thy ring and the bracelets, are they not thine? Lord, make good thy word, thy sealed promise;" I believe, Lord, help my unbelief.

4. Press also for the joyful sense of this benefit of pardon sealed to you in baptism; the having whereof is the most comfortable thing in the world. We see the Eunuch, when he had got this seal of baptism, when on his way rejoicing, "O now," thought he, "my case is blessed, I am a pardoned man, God hath received me into his family, and taken me into covenant with himself, and implanted me a member of his mystical body: I that was a plant of a strange vine, am now ingrafted into a noble stock; and shall I not be glad and rejoice in his salvation?" Thus, O believer, improve the seal of baptism, in order to your growing up to the comfortable assurance of your pardon of sin, and adoption into God's family; seeing these blessings are irreversibly promised and sealed to you in that sacrament.

5. Improve your baptism as a spur to holiness and diligence in Christ's service; forget not him whose name you bear, whose livery you wear, and whose colours you are sworn to. Seeing you are solemnly dedicated to God, and all you have is consecrated to him at baptism; O then live as those who are not your own; spend your strength and time, not in serving sin and the world, but in worshipping of God, in loving, praising, and glorifying of him, "whose you are, and whom you ought to serve. Alas, there are many, who list themselves to God's service by baptism, and yet turn deserters, and go over to the devil's camp, taking on to fight against their King and Lord, to whom they are sworn. They live as if they had been solemnly devoted to, and baptized in the name of the cursed trinity of hell, the devil, the world, and the flesh, instead of the ever-blessed and glorious Trinity of heaven: alas, they live as if they had renounced that, and not the other; which is certainly a most fearful guilt, and cannot miss to be attended with a severe doom.

6. Be humbled for your manifold pollutions, your falling so much short of the grace of baptism, and walking unsuitably to your solemn engagements. Have you not cause to lament before God, for forgetting and slighting the free love of God manifested to you in baptism; and for having so little recourse to the fountain that was opened to you therein, for sin, and for uncleanness; and that you feel so little of the efficacy of the precious blood of your Redeemer, which was represented and applied to you in that ordinance, for melting of your hearts, cleansing you from sin, and quickening you to holiness.

7. Improve your baptism as a shield against Satan's temptations: 1. Are you tempted to despairing thoughts of mercy, or troubled with perplexing doubts and fears? Then remember the seal of free love you got in baptism. Christ himself was tempted after his baptism, to doubt of his filiation and Sonship: but gave Satan a peremptory repulse; teaching us thereby to do the same. Luther saith, that all his answer to the devil, when he tempted him to despair, was, I am baptized into the belief of Christ. 2. Are you at any time tempted to sin? then remember your baptism. Luther also tells us of a holy virgin, that when she was tempted to sin, replied, I am baptized; and indeed this is a sufficient answer to all Satan's temptations. "I am baptized and dedicated solemnly to God; I am not my own, but the Lord's; I am sworn to Christ, and how shall I serve the devil?" Profanity in a Christian is apostacy from Christ, and on the matter a renouncing of his baptism which is a fearful, nay, a devilish sin.

8. Improve it as an argument to courage and resolution in time of danger or persecution. Stedfastly adhere to the doctrine of the Trinity, in whose name you are baptized; be not ashamed of Christ or his truths, seeing his name is called upon you, and you solemnly owned him before the whole congregation. "He that is ashamed of me," saith Christ, "and of my words, in this sinful and adulterous generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels," Mark viii.

38. Dionysia encouraged Majoricus her son, an African martyr, when he was going to die, with these words, "Remember, son, that thou wast baptized in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost."

Lastly, Do not trust to your baptism, and your having the name of Christ called upon you. An empty name and profession of Christianity will not save you; Simon Magus was baptized, and yet perished: many go with baptismal water on their faces, and sacramental bread in their mouths, to hell at last. Kings have both their common and privy seals; rest not in the outward seal, but seek the inward seal of God's Spirit changing your nature, and applying the blood of Christ for cleansing your souls.

Q. Why may not baptism be administered to a person oftener than once, as well as the Lord's supper?

A. 1. It is not commanded to be reiterated, as the Lord's supper is, 1 Cor. xi. 26.

2. Circumcision under the Old Testament was not reiterated.

3. The nature of this sacrament doth not require or allow of repetition: for as the Lord's supper is for nutrition, this is for initiation and implantation. This is the sacrament of our new birth and admission into the church: now as we can be but once new born, and once entered into the church; so we are no oftener to be baptized, Tit. iii. 5.

Q. Wherein do the two sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper agree?

A. In these things, 1. They have both the same author, Jesus Christ. 2. They are both seals of the same covenant. 3. They signify and seal the same things, viz. Christ and his benefits. 4. They are both to be dispensed by ministers of the gospel, and by none else. 5. They are both to be continued in the church till Christ's second coming.

Q. Wherein then do these two sacraments differ?

A. In these things, 1. Baptism is to be administered but once, but the Lord's supper often. 2. There is but one element in the first, viz. water; but in the second there are two, viz. bread and wine. 3. The first may be administered to infants; but the second only to those that are of years, and capable to examine themselves. 4. The first signifies our regeneration and admission into the church: but the second represents Christ as our spiritual nourishment, and sealeth our continuance and growth in him. 5. Baptism is the door of Christ's house, by which we must enter; but the Lord's supper is the table at which the children must feed and receive strength.

CONCERNING THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Q. What is the Lord's supper?

A. The Lord's supper is a sacrament of the New Testament; wherein, by giving and receiving bread and wine, according to Christ's appointment, his death is showed forth: and the worthy receivers are, not after a corporal or carnal manner, but by faith, made partakers of his body and blood, with all his benefits, to their spiritual nourishment and growth in grace; to the confirming of their union and communion with Christ, renewing of their covenant with God, and their thankfulness to him; and their mutual love to, and fellowship one with another, as members of the same mystical body, Matt. xxvi. 26—28; 2 Cor. xi. 23—26; 1 Cor. x. 16, 17.

Q. Who is the author of this sacrament?

A. The Lord Jesus Christ, who is the glorious King and Head of his church, to whom alone it appertains to institute her ordinances.

Q. What may we learn from its being Christ's ordinance?

A. That we ought therefore to have a special regard to it, and beware of either neglecting or abusing it.

Q. When did Christ institute this passover?

A. In the same night wherein he was betrayed, and immediately after he and his disciples had eaten the Jewish passover.

Q. Was not that a very remarkable night?

A. Yes, it was a night ever to be had in remembrance, being the last night before Christ's death, the night wherein he began his bitter agonies, and sweate the bloody sweat for us; a night wherein he saw heaven, earth, and hell, even justice, men, and devils, all drawn up in battle array against him.

Q. Why did he institute this sacrament at such a time?

A. For these reasons, 1. Because this ordinance was to commemorate his death, and so it was very fit to appoint it when he was going to die.

2. To encourage and strengthen the hearts of his drooping disciples, now when he was about to leave them, as to his bodily presence, and they were to meet with many trials.

3. To show the great weight and import of this ordinance; had it not been a matter of the greatest concern to our good and his glory, it had not taken up the thoughts and care of our great Redeemer just when he was going to die, and undergo such unspeakable sufferings.

4. To lay the greater obligation upon us to attend this ordinance, and religiously to observe the charge and instructions he gave concerning it; as being the words of a dying man; nay, of a dying Saviour, who did more for us that night he spoke them, than all the angels of heaven, or relations on earth, could or would have done.

Q. Did not Christ's matchless love to us appear wonderfully, in choosing such a time to institute this ordinance?

A. Yes; 1. In that he minded and spoke so much of us, when his time was so short. 2. That he provided so carefully for us, when his danger was so great. Which shows that still his people lay nearest his heart; that he regarded their interest more than his own, and preferred their comfort to his own safety; for though he saw all his enemies in a full march against him, and his all at stake, whence it might have seemed high time for him to be providing for his own safety: yet he spent much of the short time he had, in providing a sweet feast, and bequeathing rich legacies to his poor people that he was to leave behind him.

Q. Why did Christ institute this sacrament immediately after the Jewish passover?

A. To show that the passover was thereby abrogated, and the Lord's supper come in its room.

Q. Are we not bound to receive this sacrament at night, after Christ's example?

A. The circumstances of time, place, and company, in the first administration, not being essential to the ordinance, were not intended for our imitation. We are no more required to receive it at night than to do it in an upper room, with but twelve in company. Moreover, the time was occasioned by the passover, that was always eaten at night, and in private families: in the room whereof, and after which the Lord's supper was to be instituted. But now when we have numerous assemblies for religious worship, the night would be highly inconvenient for them.

Q. What are the usual names and designations given to this ordinance?

A. It is called the sacrament of the Lord's supper; the Lord's table; the communion; the breaking of bread; the cup of blessing; the feast; Christ's testament; the eucharist; 1 Cor. xi. 20; x. 16; v. 8; Acts ii. 46; Luke xxii. 20.

Q. Why is it called the sacrament?

A. It is called so, by way of eminency: and because here we take a most solemn oath of fidelity to our Redeemer.

Q. Why is it called the Lord's supper?

A. Because, 1. It was instituted when Christ was eating the passover with his disciples, which was at night. 2. The supper then was accounted the principal meal of the family. 3. It is ordained only for those that dwell in Christ's family, and abide with him both day and night.

Q. Why is it called the Lord's table?

A. Because he is the author of it; yea, he is both the maker and matter of this entertainment; the feeder and the food also.

Q. Why is it called the communion?

A. Because in the right partaking of this ordinance, we have communion and fellowship with Christ, share with him in the benefits of his death and purchase, and also have communion one with another.

Q. Why is it called the breaking of bread?

A. Because, in this ordinance, bread is broken and made use of, as the outward symbol and seal of Christ's wounded and broken body, with all the glorious benefits flowing therefrom.

Q. Why is it called the cup of blessing?

A. Because, 1. In the using it, we bless God for his free love to us in Christ. 2. It contains offers, and sealeth to us in a sacramental way all the blessings of the new covenant.

Q. Why is it called Christ's Testament?

A. Because in this ordinance we have Christ's Testament and latter will sealed, and a copy of it put into the believer's hand, containing the rich legacies he hath left them.

Q. Why is it called a feast?

A. Because hereby the believers are richly entertained by Christ, have sweet intimacy with him, and great expressions of his love; and their souls are nourished and strengthened for duty. It is both a marriage-feast and a feast of commemoration.

Q. Why is it called the Eucharist by the ancients.

A. It signifies the thanksgiving; because, 1. When this sacrament was instituted, it both began and ended with the giving of thanks. 2. Because the great design of it is to keep up the thankful remembrance of Christ's death and redeeming love. And believers, when they partake, should with their whole souls give thanks to God because he is good, and sing glory to God in the highest.

Q. What parts doth the Lord's supper consist of?

A. Of two parts; 1. The outward sensible signs. 2. The spiritual and heavenly things thereby signified.

Q. What are the sensible signs made use of in this sacrament?

A. They are of three sorts; 1. Sacramental elements. 2. Sacramental actions. 3. Sacramental words.

Q. What are the sacramental elements here made use of?

A. Bread and wine.

Q. What are the things signified and represented by them?

A. The body and blood of Christ, with all the benefits and blessings flowing therefrom.

Q. What is the necessity of two elements or signs in this sacrament, bread and wine both, might not one suffice.

A. The Lord hath thought fit to ordain them both to be used: and for these reasons; 1. To show us the fitness and certainty of his covenant, and to strengthen his people's faith the more in the belief of its promises. Why hath he annexed two seals or sacraments to his covenant, but chiefly for this end? And why hath he instituted a twofold sign in this sacrament, but for the same design? What Joseph saith to Pharaoh's dream is most applicable here, Gen. xli. 32, "The dream is doubled to Pharaoh twice, because the thing is established of God, and God will shortly bring it to pass." In like manner, O believer, you may perceive here, by the doubling of the sign, that the mercies and blessings sealed in this sacrament are firmly established to you; they are even "the sure mercies of David," and God will shortly bestow them upon you.

2. These two signs are both appointed, because of the unbelief and hardness of our hearts. It is a sad truth of us all, what Christ said to the two disciples, going to Emmaus, Luke xxiv. 25, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe what the prophets have spoken." Nay, we are slow to believe even that which Christ the great Prophet himself hath spoken, when he came in our nature to teach us. And therefore, for curing of this plague, the Lord gives us one sign after another, as he did to the hard-hearted and unbelieving Israelites in Egypt, when he sent Moses to deliver them: to convince them the more of his truth and faithfulness, he gave Moses two signs to show them: and saith to him, Exod. iv. 8, "And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe, nor hearken to the voice of the first sign, they will believe the voice of the latter sign."

3. Both these signs are appointed here, that we may have a more full and distinct representation of Christ's death and sufferings; and may be helped to be the more distinct in our meditations and acts of faith upon this wounded and bleeding Saviour.

4. To show us the plentiful redemption that we have in Jesus Christ. That there is in him not only sufficiency but all fulness and abundance. That he hath suitable supplies for our necessities, and complete nourishment for our starving souls. There is here both the bread of life and wine of consolation.

Q. Are not bread and wine too mean things to be seals or signs of God's covenant?

A. Although they are but common things in themselves, yet having the stamp of divine institution, they become highly valuable, in respect of their signification and ends. A small piece of wax or lead is of little worth in itself; yet when appended to a charter by authority, it serves to give or confirm a right and title to a great inheritance. Of the same use are bread and wine in the Lord's supper; they are seals appended to God's covenant by divine authority, and serve to confirm the believer's right to Christ's purchase, pardon of sin, and eternal life, and so are highly valuable. Our gracious Redeemer thought fit to choose for this end things that were not costly or rare, but common and easy to be had (though most useful in themselves to human life) because he would not be burdensome to his people with any of his ordinances.

Q. Why hath Christ chosen bread to represent his body?

A. Because of the resemblance betwixt bread and Christ's blessed body, in these things: 1. Bread ere it be fit to nourish us must be first sown, and die in the earth; so Christ's body behoved to die, and be buried in the earth, in order to feed and nourish our souls.

2. Bread must be prepared by threshing, bruising, and grinding in the mill, and baking in the oven; so Christ, that he might be a fit Saviour to us, was content to be bruised betwixt the millstones of God's justice and our sins, and to be scorched in the oven of his Father's wrath.

3. Bread thus prepared is most excellent and useful for nourishing and strengthening our bodies; yea, it is the most necessary thing in the world, none can live without it: hence it is often called the staff of bread, as being the support of human life. So Christ's broken body is a most excellent and necessary means provided by God, for preserving our souls' lives; without which we would eternally perish.

4. Bread is most pleasant, as it refreshes, strengthens, and satisfies our hungry bodies; and hence it is called bread that strengtheneth man's heart, Psal. civ.; so Jesus Christ and his broken body is most precious, pleasant, and satisfying to a sensible needy sinner. The hungry believing soul will highly prize this food, though others, who are full, and insensible of their wants, loathe and despise it.

5. Bread must be broken, eaten, and received into the stomach, before it can be of any use to the health, and advantage of our bodies; so Christ's body must be broken, received, and fed upon by faith, ere it can be of use to the spiritual health, and advantage of our souls in this sacrament.

6. Bread, thus received and eaten, becomes one with our bodies; so we, by a believing partaking of Christ's broken body, become one with him, John vi. 56.

Q. Why hath Christ made choice of wine to represent his blood in this sacrament?

A. Because of the resemblance betwixt wine and his precious blood, in the following particulars:

1. Wine, in order to prepare it for use, must be squeezed out of the grape, which for that end is crushed and bruised in the wine-press; so our blessed Saviour was crushed in the wine-press of his Father's justice, till the precious juice of his sacred body did gush out, for the saving of our souls. None could afford our perishing souls this remedy but Christ alone: hence he saith, Isa. lxiii. 3, "I have trodden the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with me."

2. Wine refreshes and cheers the heart of man, Psal. civ.; so Christ's blood doth much more cheer and refresh the soul of a humble penitent sinner, that makes application of it by faith.

3. Wine warms the cold heart: much more doth Christ's blood warm the cold affections with the heart of divine love.

4. Wine is useful to animate and encourage the faint-hearted; much more doth Christ's blood revive and embolden the poor drooping and disconsolate soul. It heartens him to go with a holy boldness to the throne of grace: "yea, to walk through the valley of the shadow of death, and fear no ill."

5. Wine is good for medicine; it cleanses and cures; so the blood of Christ is the most medicinal thing in the world; for it cleanses and cures the putrifying wounds of the soul, 1 John i. 7; Isa. liii. 5.

6. Wine, however, excellent in itself, can be of no use to us, unless it be drunk and applied; so Christ's blood (though the most sovereign thing in the whole world for our perishing souls), will do us no service, if it be not received and applied by our faith.

THE SACRAMENTAL ACTIONS.

Q. What are the outward sacramental actions in the Lord's supper?

A. They are twofold, some on the part of the administrator; and some on the part of the receivers.

Q. What are these actions on the administrator's part?

A. They are four; as may be seen in Christ's example: 1. He took bread. 2. He blessed the bread and wine. 3. He brake the bread. 4. He gave both of them to his disciples.

Q. What is signified by the minister's taking of bread?

A. It signifies God the Father's choosing and taking Christ among men, to be a surety and sacrifice for lost sinners, and his laying upon him, as such, the whole sins of the elect, John iii. 16; Isa. liii. 6; 2 Cor. v. 21.

Q. What is signified by the blessing of the bread and wine?

A. It signifies these things: 1. The consecrating and setting apart of the bread and wine, from a common to an holy and sacramental use; and that by solemn prayer for a blessing from heaven upon them.

2. This blessing being also expressed by the giving of thanks, it signifies a solemn thanksgiving to God for his astonishing grace and mercy to lost sinners in giving them a Saviour and surety: and also for his giving them this blessed ordinance for conveying and sealing Christ's glorious purchase to them.

3. This blessing being of the same import with consecrating or sanctifying, it signifies God's sending his Son into the world, sanctified, blessed, and furnished with all gifts and graces needful for the discharge of his mediatory offices, and for answering of his people's exigencies.

Q. What is signified by the breaking of the bread in this sacrament?

A. It signifies the breaking and wounding of Christ's body, and the bruising of his soul for elect sinners, in order to satisfy God's justice, pacify divine wrath, and purchase salvation for them. And that now the whole work of man's redemption is completed by Christ's death, John xix. 30, which is here represented by these elements and signs.

Q. Is the breaking of bread a necessary or essential action in this sacrament?

A. Yes; it being instituted by Christ, and practised by his apostles, with design to teach us the necessity of Christ's death, and that an unbroken Christ would not profit sinners, and consequently we may infer, that papists and others, who dispense the sacrament with an unbroken wafer, egregiously swerve from the institution, and mar their souls' profiting by his ordinance.

Q. What is signified by the fourth sacramental action, viz. Christ's giving the broken bread, and the poured out wine to his disciples; and the minister's doing this after his example?

A. It signifies these things; 1. God's gracious and free offering of his Son, and Christ's offering of himself to be ours, with all his purchase, upon our believing.

2. God's actual making over, giving, and sealing Christ and all the benefits of the new covenant to the worthy receivers. For as truly as bread and wine are put into their hands, and given them to be their own, and disposed of for their use: so truly is Christ and all the benefits of the covenant made over, given and sealed to them, to be their inheritance and portion, and to be by them freely enjoyed and possessed as their own.

3. It signifies God's offering and giving Christ fully to us. For as he gives us not only the bread, but the wine also, that we may have complete entertainments: so he makes over and gives a full and complete Saviour to believing communlicants. He gives Christ and all Christ's to them: and all that is in him, all his offices, all his benefits, and all his promises. There is no promise reserved, no blessing excepted, or kept back; all is theirs, 1 Cor. iii. 21, 22.

4. It signifies God's making a gratuitous donation and a free gift of Christ and all his purchase to believing communicants. For as the sacramental bread and wine are given freely by the minister to the communicant, without requiring any price or good deed for them; so Christ and all his purchase are made over and given to believers in a way of the freest grace without any worth or desert of theirs, or any thing done by them for which they are bestowed, Isa. lv. 1; Rev. xxii. 17.

5. This breaking, dividing, and distributing these elements among all the communicants, signifies that Jesus Christ is really though invisibly present, dealing forth the effects and benefits of his death and sufferings to all the worthy communicants, young and old, poor and rich, without exception of any. He is a most knowing and faithful steward in his Father's house who will not pass by the meanest of the family.

Q. What is signified by the pouring out of the wine in the cup?

A. Christ's suffering and pouring out his blood most freely and plentifully to wash and save his people from their sins; even as freely as the wine in the sacrament is poured out to them. Hence it is said, Isa. liii. 12, "He poured out his soul unto death," i. e. he gave his life and soul so freely and willingly for us as we pour out water out of a vessel.

Q. After what manner are the elements to be given to the communicants? Is the bread to be put into their mouths, or the cup into each of their hands by the ministers?

A. No; this is not agreeable to Christ's practice in the first institution, nor with the table posture then in use, which he kept with his disciples in time of the actions; speaking to them, at the giving of the elements, in the plural number, "Take ye, eat ye, drink ye all of it," which import his giving the elements to those that sat next him, to be handed about from one to another: for had he given them to every particular man, he would have said, Take thou. Besides, this practice of our Saviour with his disciples suits best with that familiar way of feasting, common among people that are come to age and the use of their reason. And the communicants' taking the elements into their own hands, carries some resemblance of the free and deliberate consent of faith, requisite in our receiving of Christ in the sacrament, John i. 12.

Q. What are the outward sacramental actions on the part of the communicant?

A. They are these, 1. Their taking the bread and the cup into their hands. 2. Their eating the bread, and drinking the wine. 3. Their dividing the elements among themselves and giving to one another. 4. Their doing all this sitting in a feasting posture.

Q. What is signified by the communicants taking the bread and cup into their hands?

A. Their cheerful stretching forth of the hand of faith to accept of a crucified Christ for their Saviour, with all his benefits, as offered to them in the gospel: and the soul's hearty compliance with the gracious terms of that offer.

Q. What is signified by our receiving of both the elements?

A. Our taking and receiving Christ wholly as he is held forth and offered unto us in the gospel, without making exception of any of his offices or demands. We profess hereby that we are satisfied to take Christ as he is, his person, his offices, his benefits, promises, and all that is in him: that we are content with his laws, as well as his love; his precepts, as well as his promises; and his cross, as well as his crown.

Q. Have communicants a right to the cup as well as the bread?

A. Yes, certainly they have, according to our Saviour's institution and pattern, and his apostles' practice, which we have plainly recorded, Matt. xxvi. 26—29; 1 Cor. xi. 24, 25. And if one of the sacramental signs were wanting, believers would not have a full representation of their Redeemer's sufferings, nor a complete feast for their nourishment and strength.

Q. Are not papists much to blame then in taking the cup from the people?

A. Most certainly they are; for as they do a great injury to the people, so they are guilty of the greatest sacrilege before God, and rebellion against his authority, who instituted this sacred ordinance. For, by the institution, the people have as good a right to the cup as to the bread. Nay our Saviour, as it were, foreseeing the papists' encroachment in this particular, is more express in his injunction concerning the cup than the bread; in these words, "Drink ye all of it." Also their obedience to this injunction is more expressly recorded than with respect to the bread, in these words: "and they all drank of it;" compare, Matt. xxvi. 27; Mark xvi. 23.

Q. What is signified by the communicants eating the bread and drinking the wine?

A. In general, it signifies our making close and particular application by faith of Christ and all his benefits unto our souls, and their various necessities and exigencies, each of us saying of Christ in a believing manner, with Thomas, John xx. 28, "My Lord, and my God." But, more particularly, these actions of eating and drinking in the sacrament signify; 1. Our near union with Christ: for as, by eating and drinking, the bread and wine enter our bodies, become ours, and turn one with us; so we by receiving and applying Christ's broken body and shed blood in the sacrament by faith, Christ is mystically united to us; he is made one with us, and we one with him. All that he hath, his blood, and all the purchase of it, his merits, graces, influences, riches, &c. all are ours.

2. They signify the great satisfaction and complacency which the believer hath in partaking of Christ and his benefits: for as eating and drinking are actions very gratifying and pleasant to the body; so our tasting and partaking of Christ's dainties in the sacrament is most pleasant to the hungry soul.

3. They signify the strength and increase of grace which the believer receives by this ordinance. For as, by our eating and drinking of earthly food, our bodies are increased and strengthened for labour; so by this spiritual food, our graces are increased, and souls strengthened, for the duties of religion.

Lastly. These sacramental actions denote the mutual giving and taking seising and infetment betwixt Christ and the believing communicant. As by the giving and receiving earth and stone among men, infetment is given or taken of a field or heritage; so, by the giving and receiving of bread and wine in a sacramental way, believers get infetment of Christ and his purchase as their own inheritance; and also Christ hereby takes infetment of them, both soul and body, as his people and portion, his servants and soldiers, to obey him and fight for him all the days of their lives. Likewise, by these sacred symbols, he takes possession of their souls and bodies as his temples, solemnly consecrated to him for his service and residence.

Q. Why should communicants divide the elements among themselves and give to one another?

A. 1. That they may the more closely imitate the practice of Christ and his disciples, in partaking of the passover and the Lord's supper, Luke xxii. 17; Matt. xxvi. 26, 27.

2. That they may testify their mutual Christian love and union among themselves, and their communion and fellowship one with another, 1 Cor. x. 16, 17.

Q. What should be the bodily posture of communicants in time of receiving?

A. It ought to be a feasting-posture, or such a table-posture as is ordinary at feasts in the place of the world where we live; and that is sitting. And this we have authorised by the example of Christ and his apostles at the first institution, Matt. xxvi. 20, 26; Luke xxii. 14; John xiv. 31. I grant indeed they sat leaning, yet still that posture is termed a sitting, as in the forecited texts. Besides, that was the ordinary table-posture then in use among the Jews; which clearly warrants us to use that posture which is ordinary among us. This also is proper to signify that holy familiarity which Christ allows his people with himself at this ordinance; for it is a blessed love-feast, wherein he treats his people as his friends and intimates.

Q. But may it not be thought presumption, or want of due reverence in sinful man, to adventure to sit at Christ's holy table?

A. 1. It is far greater presumption in sinful man to think to amend or alter Christ's wise and holy institution to the better; or to pretend to be wiser, holier, or humbler than the apostles and primitive church, who used this posture, or to accuse them of indecency and irreverence.

2. It is no presumption in sinful men to receive that honour which their Lord and Saviour put upon them: or to use that holy familiarity with him which he allows them: for the disciples were sinful men as well as others, and yet they sat with their Lord and Master at the first communion, and continued afterwards so to do.

Q. Why may not the reverend and humble posture of kneeling be admitted at the Lord's table?

A. 1. It cannot, because of the reasons above-mentioned; for we must not be wise above what is written, or think to please God by our inventions in his worship.

2. It is of a popish original; for pope Honorius II. was the first that ordained this posture of kneeling, in the beginning of the thirteenth century; and that as a native consequence of the doctrine of transubstantiation, which had been decreed some time before, by his predecessor pope Innocent III. And we ought not to symbolize with papists in their errors.

3. There is too much ground to suspect this as a practice of idolatry, or having a tendency that way. For, (1.) The papists, by this posture, professedly worship the sacramental bread, believing it to be Christ's real body; and plainly say, that if they believed not this, they would neither worship it nor kneel in receiving it. (2.) Our kneeling before the elements, and that out of reverence and respect to them, in an act of worshipping God or Christ, seems to say, that we worship God or Christ in or by the use of them. Now these elements, being consecrated creatures, of purpose placed before us, to be an image and representation of Christ to us, it hath too great appearance of evil to use an outward posture of adoration before them; especially seeing this is not done in the other sacrament, viz. that of baptism.

Q. Do not many, who use this posture, profess they have no design of worshipping the bread as the papists do, and consequently are not to be suspected of idolatry?

A. 1. Though they have no such design, yet still they do a thing that hath a dangerous tendency, and an appearance of evil, which we are expressly commanded to shun.

2. A good intention will not excuse an idolatrous action; the Israelites pretended not to worship the golden-calf, but Jehovah before it, and yet that did not excuse their sin.

THE SACRAMENTAL WORDS.

Q. Are not the sacramental elements, actions, and words, to be reckoned all three together, as the outward sensible signs in this ordinance, for exhibiting, sealing, and applying Christ and his benefits to worthy communicants?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there any difference between them?

A. Though they all be very significant and instructive to us in partaking, yet they seem to differ in this; that the sacramental elements mainly hold forth the spiritual matter and substance which we partake of; the sacramental actions serve as a rule or example to regulate our practice in it; and the sacramental words point forth the doctrine, uses, and ends of the ordinance.

Q. What are the sacramental words chiefly to be used in dispensing and distributing the elements in this sacrament?

A. These words which Christ spoke at the first institution.

Q. What were the words which Christ spoke?

A. He spoke something concerning the bread, something concerning the wine, and something concerning the whole sacrament.

Q. What did Christ speak with respect to the bread?

A. He said, 1. Something by way of command, viz. "Take, eat, this do in remembrance of me."

2. Something by way of explication, viz. "This is my body which is broken for you," 1 Cor. xi. 24.

Q. What did Christ speak concerning the wine?

A. He said likewise, 1. Something by way of command, viz. "Drink ye all of it; this do ye, as often as ye drink it, in remembrance of me," Mat. xxvi. 27; 1 Cor. xi. 25.

2. Something by way of explication, viz. "This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for many for the remission of sins," Mat. xxvi. 26, 28; Luke xxii. 20.

Q. What spake Christ with respect to the whole sacrament?

A. He said, by way of argument to enforce it,

"For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show forth the Lord's death till he come," 1 Cor. xi. 26. He likewise added on this occasion, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom," Mat. xxvi. 29.

Q. What is the import of these words concerning the bread, Take, eat?

A. It is as if Christ had said, Receive and make use of this broken bread, as a sign and seal of my broken body, with all its benefits. As ye take the bread out of my hand, and by eating receive it into your stomachs; so accept of a Saviour as he is offered unto you, receive the atonement, approve of it, and consent to it; come up to the gracious terms on which Christ and his benefits are proposed to you, accept of his grace, and submit to his government.

Q. What should we think upon, when we hear these words?

A. We should think upon the infinite free love of God in giving his Son, and of Christ in giving himself, to such poor wretches as we are. Yea, we should, in a contemplative and believing way, think we see Christ (as it were personally) at the head of the table, making offer of himself, in the freest manner, saying, "Take me, and the whole purchase of my death and sufferings; take my sealed testament, and all the legacies in it: take a sealed pardon of all your sins, and a sealed right to eternal life.

Q. In what manner are we to take Christ and his benefits in this sacrament?

A. We are to take Christ and all the blessings of his covenant in the following manner. 1. Sincerely and honestly, without all dissimulation of hypocrisy, which is a thing most hateful to God.

2. Entirely, fully, and without exception of any thing required of you.

3. With close and particular application, saying, "My Lord, and my God."

4. With thankfulness and praise, stirring up your souls and all that is within you, to bless his holy name. Bless God for such a glorious Surety, such a rich purchase, such a free covenant, and such suitable promises.

5. With humility and self-denial, reckoning yourselves unworthy of the least crumb from his table, renouncing all confidence in your preparations, humiliations, or qualifications of any sort, saying, "In the Lord only have I righteousness and strength."

Lastly, We ought to take Christ and his purchase in the sacrament with full assurance of faith; looking on the sacramental bread, as the Lord's seal and pledge of our interest in, and title to, all the blessings of the covenant: and taking this bread as a sure sign and token from Christ, that this body was broken for us; believing that Christ and all the blessings of the covenant, and purchase of his death, are herewith given to us, as really as Christ gives the bread into our hands.

Q. What is the meaning of these words, This is my body broken for you?

A. The meaning is, this bread broken is my body spiritually and sacramentally; or, it signifies and represents my body; and is a visible sign and token of my body, its being broken, bruised and crucified; yea, crucified for you, O worthy communicant, even "wounded for your transgressions, and bruised for your iniquities."

Q. Do we not partake of Christ's body and blood in the sacrament, after a corporal or a carnal manner, or by the mouth of the body?

A. No; we only do it spiritually by faith, which is the mouth of the soul.

Q. Is not Christ really present in the sacrament: and are not believers said to be partakers of Christ?

A. Though Christ is not bodily present, yet he is really and truly present in a spiritual and invisible manner. He is present by his God-head, and by his Spirit. He is present by his power and efficacy, communicating and applying the virtue and benefits of his death: and thus we are really made partakers of Christ in this ordinance. We partake of the sun when we have its beams of light and heat darted down upon us, although we have not the bulk and body of the sun put into our hands: so we partake of Christ in the sacrament, when we share of his grace, and the blessed fruits of his broken body, though we do not actually eat his flesh with our mouths.

Q. Are not the bread and wine, by the words of consecration, transubstantiated, and really turned into the body and blood of Christ, as the papists do maintain?

A. No; the opinion is false and absurd, in regard;

1. It is destructive of the very nature and end of a sacrament, which is to signify and commemorate an absent Christ; for according to this opinion he would be corporally present, and so there would be no difference betwixt the signs and things signified.

2. It is also destructive of the nature of Christ's body; for, according to this opinion, it would not be a true human body, "in all things like unto his brethren," Heb. ii. 17, if it could be seen or felt, or could be contracted into the bounds of a small bit of bread.

3. It is expressly contrary to the scriptures, which call the elements after their consecration, still bread and wine, as formerly; Matt. xxvi. 29; 1 Cor. x. 16, yea, many times over, 1 Cor. xi. 26—28. Again, the scriptures inform us, that when Christ first administered this sacrament, his body was entire, and his blood in his veins; and that the same body afterwards went forth and swate blood in the garden, was crucified, buried, and rose again, appeared alive to many witnesses, and at length really ascended up into heaven, where he still continues; and his body must remain there till his coming at the last day; and so it neither was, nor can be corporally eaten in the sacrament, Matt. xxvi. 26, 27; 1 Cor. xv. 4—6; Acts i. 9—11; iii. 21; 1 Thess. iv. 16; Heb. viii. 4.

4. It is contrary to sense and reason; for it is most obvious to us, that the bread and wine, after consecration, are the same in substance that they were. We see, feel, taste, and smell them to be real bread and wine still: they retain both their quantities and qualities; they have the length, thickness, breadth, colour, taste, and smell of bread and wine. Reason also tells us that the same body cannot be at the same time both glorified in heaven, and broken and eaten upon the earth. That Christ's body could not be entire, living, sitting at the table, and speaking with his disciples; and yet at the same time broken, dead, lying on the table, and eaten by his disciples; yea, and by himself also.

Besides these, many other monstrous absurdities and contradictions follow upon the doctrine of transubstantiation.

Q. What are the other absurdities of this doctrine?

A. 1. It would follow hence, that either Christ behaved to have many thousand bodies, which would be monstrous; or that the same one whole body of Christ can be in many thousand places at the same time: both whereof are equally absurd.

2. It destroys the testimony of our senses in all other cases; so that the being or power of God cannot be proven by the works of creation, which is contrary to the apostle's doctrine, Rom. i. 20. Nor can the truth of Christ's resurrection be proven from the testimony of the witnesses, or from their seeing, feeling, and hearing, which is contrary to Luke i. 1, 2; 1 Cor. xv. 5—7; 1 John i. 1. According to this doctrine, there was no strength in the argument which Christ used to prove the verity of his resurrection when he appealed to the senses of his disciples, bidding them "handle him and see, and behold his hands and feet, and thrust their hands into his side," Luke xxiv. 39, 40; John xx. 27. And this would go far to stake the truth of Christianity itself, which depends on the resurrection of Christ.

3. This doctrine allows a power to a silly mass-priest, which is not granted to all the angels in heaven, viz. to make his Maker, and eat his God: for he worships what he makes, and eats what he worships.

4. According hereunto, Christ's glorious body would yet be liable to sufferings, subject to corruption, and obnoxious to be eaten by wicked men, yea, by dogs, rats, mice, &c.

5. It would follow that a minister could give to a communicant the thing signified, as well as the signs, which is the prerogative of God alone.

6. That other figurative expressions in scripture should also be understood literally; and so Christ would also be turned really into a door, a vine, a rock, &c. For he doth as expressly call himself by those names as he calls the bread in the sacrament his body.

Q. Is there no change made at all upon the elements at consecration?

A. Yes; but it is not a physical, but a moral change; it is only a change as to their use and signification. By consecration they are set apart from common use to a sacred and mystical use. They are no more for ordinary aliment to the body, but become thereby signs of Christ, seals of grace, pledges of justification, and earnest of salvation; which is not done by destruction of their nature, but by divine designation. As of common wax a valid seal is made to a charter, by putting an authoritative stamp upon it, though it be still the same that it was, as to its substance: so here the consecrated elements still retain their former nature, and are not Christ's real body and blood, under the accidents of bread and wine; as the papists most absurdly assert.

Q. How then can Christ's words be true, when he saith expressly of the bread, This is my body?

A. These words are most true in a sacramental sense, for Christ speaks here in a sacramental dialect, and retains the same style he had used formerly concerning the passover, Exod. xii. 11, "It is the Lord's passover." Now this cannot be meant but figuratively; for certainly the lamb, or the eating of it, was not literally the Lord's gracious act of passing over the Israelites' houses, when he came to destroy the Egyptians on every side of them; but a sign or token of his passing over them; and yet he says expressly, "It is the Lord's passover." Thus also did he speak of the other sacrament, viz. circumcision, when he instituted it, Gen. xvii. 10, "This is my covenant." Now circumcision was not literally the covenant itself, but only a sign and seal of the covenant. Also in the institution of the Lord's supper, he useth the same sort of figurative speeches; and if the papists will not grant this concerning the bread, when Christ said of it, "this is my body;" yet whether they will or not, they must own it concerning the wine, when he saith, "this cup is the new testament." For here is a two-fold figure; first, he did not mean this properly or literally of the cup or vessel that contained the wine, for so the cup cannot be the new testament or covenant of grace, but the wine contained in the cup. Neither, secondly, can the wine be properly called the new testament or covenant itself, but only a sign or pledge of it. So that we see such metonymical and figurative speeches are the ordinary sacramental language that God in all ages hath made use of, in instituting the seals of his covenant. And can papists give any solid reason, why such speeches as these should be taken in a figurative sense in one place and not in another, when the case is the same, and the necessity plainly equal.

Q. What is the meaning of Christ's words concerning the cup. "Drink ye all of it; this do ye, as often as ye drink it, in remembrance of me?"

A. He means these things; 1. To discover the freeness of his grace, and the ready welcome he gives to all his guests, even the meanest and poorest of them.

2. To teach us eagerly and affectionately to receive, together with the cup, the precious blood of Christ, and by faith apply it to our souls in a particular manner, for the curing of all our diseases, the washing away all our sins, and the supply of all our wants.

3. That in the receiving and drinking of this cup, we should entertain and keep up a fresh and thankful remembrance of Christ's sufferings, and of his dying love in shedding and offering up his blood as a propitiatory sacrifice for our sins. We should remember and think upon both what he hath done, what he is still doing, and what he is about to do for us.

Q. Why are we so expressly charged to remember Christ in this ordinance? Are we in any hazard of forgetting him?

A. Yes; our Saviour knows that we have worldly hearts, treacherous memories, and stand in need of all these memorandums, to keep up the lively remembrance of his love.

Q. What is implied in remembering of Christ?

A. It hath in it, 1. The knowledge of Christ and the method of redemption through his blood.

2. Some precious acquaintance with him, by a work of grace on the heart, and closing with him by faith.

3. A believing contemplation of his death and sufferings.

4. Such a remembrance as makes deep and suitable impressions on our souls.

Q. What obligations lie upon us to keep up the remembrance of Christ?

A. 1. Because he is our most loving Friend; a Friend that remembered us in our low estate, and that hath done more for us than all the friends of the world could or would have done.

2. Because he is an absent Friend; yea, absent on our account, and still negotiating our affairs at the court of heaven. He constantly remembers his people, and hath them still on his heart, and in his eye.

3. Because he is a Friend quickly about to return. He is still meditating on it, and fast preparing for it. He is hastening to come again in the clouds to meet his people, take them home to his palace, and put them in possession of all his purchase.

Q. What kind of remembrance of Christ ought we to have, in receiving the sacrament?

A. Not a bare historical remembrance, for so Judas, Pilate, and the devils in hell, may remember how they betrayed and crucified Christ on earth; but it is a remembrance with suitable impressions on our souls.

1. We must have an awful and reverential remembrance, adoring the justice and holiness of God, displayed in the sufferings of Christ his dear Son. O how vehemently did he hate sin, that he would not spare him when he cried, and was but surety for another! May we not cry with the Bethshemites, 1 Sam. vi. 20, "Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God?"

2. It must be a mournful and heart-breaking remembrance, looking on a slain Christ in the elements, as one pierced through and crucified by our sins; and our eye should affect our hearts with grief and sorrow for those sins that nailed and killed the Lord of life.

3. We must have a sin-loathing remembrance, abhorring, with the utmost detestation our cursed sins, that made a strong and mighty Redeemer to sweat blood, and groan under their weight; yea, never parted with him till they brought him to a bitter death.

4. It must be an affectionate remembrance. The unparalleled love of Christ discovered in the sacrament, must not be thought on without love. Our hearts should even burn with affection to him, when we remember the great floods of wrath that brake in upon Christ's soul, and yet could not drown his love to us.

5. It must be a thankful remembrance, saying, "O what shall I render to Christ for undertaking my deliverance, and wading through hell to save me from perishing there for ever! O if men and angels would help me to extol his free grace and wondrous love!"

6. It must be a fiducial remembrance, laying the whole stress of our soul's justification and salvation upon the death of Christ; pleading it with God, for answering all the accusations of Satan, the indictments of the law, and challenges of our own consciences.

Q. What is the import of these words of Christ, concerning the cup: This cup is the New Testament in my blood, shed for many for the remission of sins?

A. It is a figurative speech, as I showed before, and the plain literal sense of it is, the wine in this cup, as representing the shedding of my blood for your sins, is a sure sign and token to you of God's making and confirming the New Testament, or covenant of grace, with you; and of his sealing all the blessings of it unto you; or, This cup is a visible pledge to you of that rich covenant with its blessings, which is brought about and ratified to you by the shedding of my blood for sin.

Q. What are the sweet instructions and meditations which these words of Christ afford us?

A. They are many, such as these; 1. The covenant of grace is Christ's testament, wherein all manner of precious legacies are freely bequeathed unto his people.

2. That this testament is sure, and of undoubted force, being confirmed by the death of the testator, and sealed with his blood.

3. That Christ puts a sealed copy of his testament into every worthy communicant's hand, at the Lord's table.

4. That the covenant of grace, with all its blessings, is purchased by Jesus Christ to believers, by the price of his blood.

5. That pardon of sin is one of the choicest legacies in Christ's testament, and to be highly valued.

6. That without the shedding of blood, even the precious blood of Christ, which is the blood of atonement, there is no remission of sin.

7. The blood of Christ cannot be effectual to any unless it be received and applied by the hand of faith.

8. That in order to make a good title to covenant blessings, it is absolutely needful that every man for himself take hold of the covenant, as tendered in the gospel ordinances.

9. That the news of a covenant ratified, and pardon sealed by the blood of Christ, is most reviving and refreshing to the guilty soul; as wine that makes glad the heart.

Q. What are the legacies and blessings contained in the Testament given, and sealed to believers in the Lord's supper?

A. There is the Holy Spirit to teach, guide, and comfort them; there is pardon of sin and peace with God; in a word, there is wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, redemption, grace, and glory. All which, with many more, were mentioned before, among the promises of the covenant of grace.

Q. How shall we know if we have any part in Christ's Testament, or if our names be in it?

A. By these two things, 1. If we heartily take hold of it, embrace its promise, and acquiesce in the method of salvation contained in it.

2. If we can prove ourselves to be among Christ's poor relations, or claim any connection to him by faith and regeneration: all these being children and heirs, having an interest in Christ's testament, Isa. lvi. 4, 5; John i. 12; 2 Cor. vi. 16—18; Ezek. xxxvi. 25, 26; Rom. viii. 17.

Q. What are the marks of those who are children of Christ's family and heirs of his testament?

A. They are such as are begotten by the word to a lively hope, transplanted from nature's garden to grace, and become plants of his right hand's planting.

2. They know something of the spirit of adoption, and his operations in their souls; particularly in discovering sin, exciting to prayer, conquering lusts and sanctifying the heart, Rom. viii. 15; Gal. iv. 6; Eph. iv. 23, 24.

3. They have children's frames and dispositions of heart, viz. A filial fear, and reverence of God, a filial love and affection to Christ, and a deep hatred of every thing that is offensive or dishonourable to him. Also they have a great concern for their mother the church, and a love to their brethren the saints. They love their Father's presence, and desire to be much about his hand, Mal. i. 6; John viii. 42; Psal. exix. 136; cxxxvii. 6.

4. They have children's appetites for their food; they earnestly desire the ordinances, and communion with Christ in them, Psal. lxxxiv. 1; 1 Pet. ii. 2.

Q. How are we assured that Christ's testament is firm and unalterable?

A. From these three things; 1. The faithfulness and immutability of the Testator, Job. x. 23; xiii. 8; Rev. i. 5.

2. It is become of unalterable force by the Testator's death, and is confirmed by his blood, Heb. ix. 16, 17; Mat. xxvi. 28.

3. He hath appended the two great seals of heaven to it, baptism and the Lord's supper, on purpose to declare the validity and fulness of his testament.

Q. But how are we certain that this testament will be duly executed, according to the Testator's will?

A. Because, 1. He hath left it in a sure and faithful hand, even that of the Holy Spirit, who is the executor thereof, to apply it, and bestow the legacies it bequeathes, upon those who are named in it, John xiv. 16, 26.

Yea, 2. The blessed Testator is risen from the dead, and lives for ever, to see the execution of his own testament himself, Rev. i. 18; Heb. vii. 25.

Q. When will all these legacies be bestowed on the heirs of this testament? Is it just now?

A. They are just now infert, and vested therein, by the word and sacraments; whereby their right is sufficiently secured to the great estate which Christ hath left them by his latter-will. And, in the mean time, they have out of it a sufficient maintenance, to continue till the time appointed come, when they shall enter into the full possession of the whole. Believers, while here, are but minors, and not fit to be entrusted with the management of their estate, so that it is secured for them in good hands, till they arrive at full age.

Q. What is the meaning of the words which Christ spoke with respect to the whole sacrament, "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show forth the Lord's death till he come?"

A. It is as if he had said, See that ye make conscience of coming to this holy table, and of coming frequently: for every time you do, it in a right manner, you keep up the memorial of your Lord and Saviour's death, in a way that is pleasant to him; seeing he hath appointed this as a standing ordinance in the church to continue till his second coming to judgment; when he will call his whole servants to account concerning their observing his injunctions, and this among the rest.

Q. What obligations lie upon us to come and partake of this ordinance?

A. All the professors of Christ are obliged to it on many accounts; 1. In point of duty. 2. In point of interest. 3. In point of gratitude. 4. In point of safety.

Q. How are we obliged in point of duty?

A. Because Christ our Lord and law-giver hath peremptorily commanded it; nay, for the more security, he repeats the command twice, 1 Cor. xi. 24, 25, "This do ye, this do ye;" and surely all of us owe obedience to his authority, without reserve.

Q. How are we obliged to partake in point of interest?

A. Because of the great advantages which are to be got by it, seeing Christ and all the benefits of the new covenant are here sealed and applied.

Q. How are we obliged to partake in point of gratitude?

A. 1. Because the command enjoining this duty, was among the last words of our dying Friend and Saviour, who did more for us than all the world could have done.

2. Because the design of the ordinance is to keep up the memorial of the love which our dying Saviour expressed at the first institution of it, in suffering death, and offering up himself a sacrifice to divine justice, in our stead.

3. Because he seeks no greater return for his love, than a thankful remembrance of it.

4. Because he puts us to no greater charge to express it, than by eating and drinking at his table.

Q. How are we obliged to partake in point of safety?

A. Because the slighting, or wilful neglecting of this ordinance, is a great sin before God, and very provoking to him, as well as dangerous to ourselves.

Q. Wherein lies the sin of neglecting this ordinance?

A. In respect it is no less than contempt of the words of our dying Saviour, disobedience to his command, ingratitude to our greatest benefactor, a base slighting of God's love, Christ's sufferings, and all the great preparations he hath made for us: a wronging of our own souls, and despising of our choicest mercies and privileges.

Q. What is the danger of neglecting this duty?

A. It draws on the wrath and vengeance of God, nay, of Christ the Mediator; which must be very terrible. As God threatened to cut off those that neglected the passover of old; so he threatened severe wrath against those who should neglect the gospel-feasts, Num. ix. 13; Zech. xiv. 16—18. And these threatenings are renewed, Mat. xxii. 7; Luke xiv. 24.

Q. Is it a good excuse for neglecting this ordinance, for the people to say, they are not prepared, have quarrels with their neighbours, or cannot get such particular sins left?

A. No; for the want of preparation is our sin, and one sin can never excuse or answer for another. It is a fearful thing to live in a sinful course against light, and then to make sin an excuse for the neglect of commanded duty.

Q. Is it not enough that we partake of the Lord's supper once in our lives, as we do of the other sacrament, baptism?

A. No; for baptism being the sacrament of initiation, is not to be repeated; but the Lord's supper being for nutrition, is often to be received.

Q. What obligations lie on us to partake often?

A. We are obliged to it; 1. By our Saviour's words at the first institution, 1 Cor. xi. 25, 26, "As often as ye do this;" which have the virtue of a command to frequency in communicating.

2. By the examples of the apostles and primitive Christians, whose practice it was to communicate frequently, nay, for ordinary, every Lord's day, Acts ii. 42, 26; Acts xx. 7.

3. Our soul's necessities call for frequency in partaking; for we are often ready to forget Christ, and therefore we often need this ordinance to bring him to our remembrance. We are often subject to spiritual deadness, weakness of faith, and decays of grace; and therefore have frequent need of this ordinance, for strength and quickening.

Q. Are we as much obliged to frequent communicating as the apostles and primitive Christians were?

A. Though they were in a much better frame for it, as having had more recent and warm impressions of the love and death of their Redeemer constantly upon their spirits, than we have; yet certainly we are under as strong obligations to frequent partaking as the first Christians were. For we have the same Lord and Saviour that they had, and are under the same obligations of love and gratitude to him. We have the same need of the application of Christ's blood, and a confirmed interest in his meritorious death that they had; and consequently the same need of this memorial feast and sealing ordinance.

Q. Is not frequency apt to breed formality in this duty?

A. 1. The same things may be alleged with respect to other duties, which yet is no good argument for the unfrequent practice of them.

2. This fault is noways chargeable upon the holy ordinance and institution of Christ, but upon the corruption and carelessness of our hearts; which we ought diligently to watch and strive against; endeavouring in Christ's strength, as often as we partake, so often to prepare for it, with all due care and solemnity.

Q. What is meant by showing forth the Lord's death in the sacrament, which seems to be laid down as our main business in this ordinance?

A. We may be said to represent, show forth and annunciate the death of Christ in this sacrament, three ways; 1. With respect to ourselves. 2. With respect to the world. 3. With respect to God.

Q. How are we to show forth the death of Christ with respect to ourselves?

A. As the external elements and signs, in the Lord's supper, give a plain representation of the death and sufferings of Christ to the eye of the body; so, in partaking of these elements, we ought to set the things represented by them (viz. the death of Christ, with the matchless love he therein expressed), before the eyes of our minds and understandings, in order to beget a fresh remembrance of that dying love, and to raise our faith and hope in a crucified Saviour.

Q. How are we to show forth Christ's death in the sacrament with respect to the world?

A. By owning hereby, in the most public manner, that we are the disciples of a crucified Jesus; not ashamed of our Master, or his ignominious death, but declaring before all that we glory in him, and rely upon the merits of his death here showed forth, as the only hope of our salvation; and that we have no Saviour besides him.

Q. How are we to show forth Christ's death in the sacrament with respect to God?

A. Two ways; 1. We are to show it forth to a loving and merciful God, in a way of thanksgiving and praise; ascribing all glory to him for such a noble ransom and sacrifice as he hath found out and provided for us.

2. We are also to show forth Christ's death in the sacrament to a just and sin-revenging God, in a way of faith and prayer; pleading this sacrifice with God, as a cover and defence against the sword of justice, and curse of the law; and presenting it as the ground of all our hopes and expectations.

Q. Is the Lord's supper to be reckoned a sacrifice to God, as the papists have turned it, in their mass, into a proper atoning sacrifice for the sins both of the dead and living?

A. Not at all; for that is nothing but an abominable corruption of this blessed ordinance. For though the Lord's supper be a representation and memorial of the sacrifice of Christ's death and sufferings, which he offered to God upon the cross for our sins; and, in partaking thereof, we may by faith plead this sacrifice with God; yet the sacramental bread and wine are no such sacrifice to God themselves; but only a sign and seal thereof, given by God to us for strengthening our faith in his mercy promised unto us through Christ's death.

Q. What are the absurdities of the papists' doctrine and practice in this matter?

A. 1. The popish mass-priests usurp Christ's priesthood and office, pretending really to offer up Christ a sacrifice to God, which none but himself could do.

2. This highly reflects upon the perfection of Christ's sacrifice that he once offered up on the cross, which we are assured, by the word of God, was acceptable to God, perfect, and never needing to be again repeated, Heb. ix. 25—28; x. 12, 14.

3. This is bottomed on their absurd doctrine of transubstantiation, which teacheth that the bread in the sacrament is turned into Christ's real and true body, which is most false; as I proved before.

Q. What is the import of showing forth the Lord's death "till he come?"

A. Till he come, imports, 1. That this sacrament is to endure till Christ's second coming and no longer.

2. That in communicating we should have the lively faith of Christ's coming at the great day, to judge of our sincerity and faithfulness in covenanting with him; as also to fulfil all his promises to worthy communicants.

3. That communicants should always live in the hope and expectation of the coming of Christ, and of everlasting glory, Tit. ii. 13; Jude 21.

Q. Why cannot this sacrament continue after Christ's coming?

A. Because in heaven there is no need of sacraments. Here we hold communion with Christ by signs and symbols, in regard of our darkness, distance, and imperfection; but above believers will see him as he is, and enjoy him perfectly. Faith shall be turned into vision, and hope into fruition. "The day will then break, and all the shadows will flee away," Cant. ii. 17; Rev. xxi. 22, 23.

Q. What is the meaning of these words of Christ at the first institution, "Henceforth I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom?"

A. Christ designs hereby to teach his disciples several things, 1. That now he was taking his leave of sacraments and ordinances here below; and that there is no use for such above.

2. That the Lord's supper here is an emblem of the marriage-supper of the Lamb hereafter: or a representation of that heavenly communion above, which the saints for ever will partake of with the Lord Jesus, which is held forth by the pleasures of a banquet of wine.

3. That the pleasures of that communion, which they should entertain with him in heaven, will never wax old, but always continue fresh and new.

4. That in this world they were no more to have communion with him in his bodily presence, as they had formerly enjoyed; but they must henceforth feed on him by faith, till their happy meeting together in heaven; where faith will be swallowed up in vision.

5. That notwithstanding of the want of his bodily presence, they should still keep up communion with him in the use of this ordinance, patiently waiting and looking for the full accomplishment of it, in that glorious eternal feast above.

Q. Is there not a great difference between the communion here and the communion above; or between our drinking the fruit of the vine here, and our drinking it new with Christ in his Father's kingdom?

A. Yes, the odds are very great: For, 1. The communion, which Christ allows his people here, is but the foretaste or first-fruits of the promised land, given to wean their hearts from this world, and sharpen their appetites and desires after the Canaan above, where these first-fruits grow and are fully ripe.

2. The comforts of the lower table are but small, and of short continuance for ordinary: but these of the higher table are full, satisfying, and everlasting.

3. Here we feed on an absent Christ by signs and symbols, and have but bad appetites for our food: but the communicants above will enjoy Christ's bodily presence, see him as he is, and have vast and never-failing appetites for that heavenly feast.

4. Here communicants meet in parcels, and in sundry places: but above, the church of the first-born shall meet together in one general assembly and be all set together with Christ, as it were at one table.

5. Here many traitors and unworthy communicants thrust themselves in among the children, and many things happen to mar the children's comfort: but above, no Judas or unfurnished guest can come, nor any thing fall out to impair the glory of that feast.

6. The lower table is placed in temples made with hands, with earthly men attending; but hereafter the glorious heavens will be the rooms, and the heavenly hosts the attendants.

7. Here the communicants are entertained with the singing of psalms: but above there will be the multitude of the heavenly host, singing, "Hallelujah to the Lamb that sits upon the throne, and glory to God in the highest."

Q. What are the great ends and uses of the Lord's supper?

A. 1. To keep up the solemn and lively remembrance of Christ's death, and dying love to lost sinners among men, while the world stands.

2. Solemnly to make over, apply, and seal Christ, his purchase, and all the benefits of the new covenant, unto true believers.

3. That hereby we may have occasion to make public profession of our owning and receiving a crucified Jesus, as our only Saviour and Master.

4. That we may testify our thankfulness to God, for giving his Son to die for our redemption; and to the Son, for laying down his life so willingly for us.

5. That we might get a pledge and seal of our union and communion with Christ, and our faith in his promises strengthened and confirmed.

6. That we may renew and seal our covenant with God in Christ, personally ratify our baptismal vows, and solemnly bind ourselves to take God for our God, and give up ourselves to be the Lord's people, and to walk with him in the ways of gospel obedience.

7. It is appointed as a sign and bond of believers' union and communion among themselves; their mutual love to, and fellowship one with another.

Lastly, It is designed as a spiritual meal, for strengthening of the Lord's people in the inward man, for nourishing their graces, cheering their hearts, removing their fears and faintings, and giving them a pledge of heaven, and a foretaste of the eternal communion above. For all which, see Matt. xxvi. 26, 27; 1 Cor. xi. 20, 25, 35, 36; x. 16, 17; Gal. iii. 1; Heb. ix. 15—17.

Q. Is it not to be feared that many have not right ends in coming to the Lord's supper?

A. There is too much ground for it; and people's ends are surely wrong; 1. When they come to the Lord's table to make atonement for their sins, or purchase and ensure heaven to them; as some ignorant persons think they do in this action.

2. When they come, thinking hereby to hide or cloak some sin or wicked practice they are presently living in.

3. When they come only to comply with the custom and fashions of the places where they live, or to prevent people having bad thoughts of them, or some worldly inconveniences to themselves.

4. When they come to please ministers and friends, or to gain applause and a good name in the world.

5. When they come in order to qualify or put themselves in a capacity for obtaining or keeping lucrative posts or places of preferment in the world.

6. When people come to this ordinance, thinking to be converted by it, and brought into Christ.

Q. May not people be converted by this sacrament?

A. This is not a converting, but a confirming ordinance in its own nature, which supposes that those who come to it are converted, and in Christ before. Yet we must own that this ordinance hath been the occasion of converting many thousands, by reason of the word preached or dropt at the dispensation of it, which God hath signally blessed to them. But though sovereign grace may do so, this is no warrant for unconverted persons to come and partake of this holy feast, which the Maker of it hath not instituted for them, but for his people.

Q. To whom is the Lord's supper to be administered?

A. Only to those who have a gospel-right to it, and gospel-preparation for it.

Q. Who are those who have a gospel-right to this ordinance?

A. There is a two-fold gospel-right: 1. An external right, with respect to the church. 2. An internal right with respect to God.

Q. Who have an external right with respect to the church?

A. Those who, being baptized, have a competent measure of Christian knowledge, profess their faith in Christ, and live religious and blameless lives before men. These have so far a right to this table in the sight of men, that they cannot be justly debarred from it by the office-bearers of Christ's house, Acts viii. 36—38; Phil. i. 27.

Q. Who are those that have not this right, and are to be kept back from this holy table?

A. All who are grossly ignorant, or openly profane.

Q. Who are to be reckoned grossly ignorant?

A. All those who know not God in his nature, persons, and attributes; who know not their misery by nature and the way of their recovery by Christ? who know not the nature of regeneration or conversion; nor the ends and uses of the Lord's supper.

Q. Why should such ignorant persons be kept back from this ordinance?

A. Because they are not capable to examine themselves in order to prepare for coming, nor rightly to discern the Lord's body in the sacrament when they do come; and so they would provoke God, and get no benefit by their coming, but much hurt, 1 Cor. xi. 28, 29; 1 Tim. v. 22.

Q. Who are to be reckoned openly profane?

A. All such as live in the open and known commission of sin, and omission of duty, without repentance, or serious resolution to reform their lives.

Q. Why are such to be kept back?

A. Because such but mock God, when they pretend to seal a covenant with him; they dishonour God, and profane the ordinance, when, with unholy hands, they presume to meddle with such holy things. Yea, they contract the guilt of Christ's blood, and "eat and drink judgment to themselves," 1 Cor. xi. 27, 29; Matt. vii. 6; Num. ix. 6, 11.

Q. Are all those who have knowledge in their heads, or morality in their lives, to be thought worthy communicants?

A. Though such have a right to this ordinance before men; yet many such may want grace in their hearts, and so have no right before God; and consequently are unworthy communicants.

Q. Who are those who have an eternal and true right to the Lord's table in the sight of God?

A. All such as are truly in covenant with God; believe in Christ with their hearts, obey him in their lives, and make suitable preparation for this holy ordinance.

Q. Doth not God call and invite all the professors of Christ to come to his table, and consequently have they not all a right?

A. Very true, all professors, nay, the greatest sinners, are called to come; but surely God doth not call them to come to his table in their sins, but to come in due order, first to quit their sins, close with Christ, and then to come to his table: we are first to prepare, and then come. And though many unprepared persons may have allowance from men, who know not their hearts or secret actions; yet none but the prepared (notwithstanding of the general call) have God's allowance to come to his table, or can expect benefit or welcome from him, Isa. lv. 7; Matt. xxii. 11, 12.

Q. Why have none God's allowance and welcome to his table, but believers in Christ?

A. Because this is a seal of God's covenant with his people, which supposeth that it should be made and consented to on our part beforehand, otherwise we annex the great seal of heaven to a blank; which is a mocking of God. So that this ordinance is instituted to confirm believers who are in the covenant; and not to convert unbelievers; and consequently none but believers have a right before God.

Q. Are all believers still welcome guests to his table: or can they never be guilty of unworthy communicating?

A. There is more requisite to worthy communicating than being in a good state; we must also be in a good frame: there must not only be faith in a habit, but faith in the lively acts. So that if a believer neglect to examine himself, fail in his preparation, or want grace in exercise, he even communicates unworthily: yet neither this, nor any other of his sins, will bring him unto condemnation, though it brings on chastisement, 1 Cor. xi. 28, 30—32; Matt. xxv. 5; Rom. viii. 1; Psal. lxxxix. 32.

Q. What is it to communicate unworthily?

A. It is for a man to partake in an unworthy state, an unsuitable frame, or with wrong ends. Or more particularly, it is for a person to approach ignorantly, without suitable knowledge: or to approach formally, without a suitable reverence and awe of God; or to come without due preparation, without the exercise of faith, love, repentance, spiritual hunger, thankfulness to God, covenanting with him, and resolutions against sin. Or to come, entertaining some known sin in the life, whether of omission or commission, or harbouring some secret lust in the heart, such as pride, malice, or revenge.

Q. Is not unworthy communicating both highly sinful and dangerous?

A. Yes: for, 1. The sin of it is no less than murdering the Son of God, and being accessary to the guilt of shedding his innocent blood. 2. The danger of it is both temporal strokes and eternal damnation: for this heinous sin, God is provoked to throw the bodies of many into the grave, and the souls of many into hell, 1 Cor. xi. 27, 29, 30.

Q. Why should this sin be reckoned so very heinous?

A. For these reasons; 1. It argues a low esteem and an undervaluing of Christ, his precious blood, and redeeming love.

2. It is a solemn affront to Christ; as it is to a king to throw his picture or great seal into a puddle.

3. It is a horrid mocking of Christ, as it is a pretence of love to him, and hatred of sin, while, in the mean time, sin is hugged and Christ despised.

4. It is a plain accession to the guilt of the Jews and Romans, who imbrued their hands in Christ's blood; for he is reckoned accessary to a murder who consents to it, aids, or abets the murderers, and this unworthy communicants are guilty of.

Q. Is not the guilt of unworthy communicants in some respect more heinous than that of the Jews?

A. Yes; for the Jews, when they pierced him and shed his blood, did it ignorantly; they did it to one they reckoned a criminal and a blasphemer; they did it to him when he was in the frame of a servant, in a state of humiliation. But unworthy communicants do this wittingly against him; they own him to be their innocent Saviour, now gloriously exalted at the right hand of God; and at a time when he is displaying his love, and making a rich feast to them; which makes the crime horrid and monstrous. Which consideration should make us all tremble, and cry with David, Psal. li. 14, "Deliver me from blood guiltiness, O God."

Q. Who are those that may be reckoned worthy communicants?

A. Those who are in a worthy state, viz. a state of grace; who have a worthy frame of spirit, viz. the lively exercise of grace; and who have worthy ends and designs, viz. to show forth Christ's death, and renew covenant with God.

Q. Are there any worthy communicants in a legal sense?

A. No; for the best saint hath no worth or merit before God; he hath nothing in himself to found his claim or plea for any of these good things which God bestows in the sacrament. There are still many sins and imperfections in the best, so that after we have done all, we must acknowledge ourselves to be most "unworthy and unprofitable servants," Gen. xxxii. 10; Luke xvii. 10.

Q. What is meant then by the worthiness which some communicants are said to have?

A. Nothing but a gospel suitableness and meetness of our soul's state and frame in this holy ordinance; for worthiness is often taken in this sense in scripture, Matt. xxii. 8; Luke iii. 8; Col. i. 10; Rev. iii. 5.

Q. Is perfect holiness, a strong faith, or a very great measure of knowledge in religion, or sensible joy and comfort at the Lord's table, essentially necessary to worthy communicating?

A. No; for there may be worthy communicants in a gospel sense, graciously owned and accepted of God, who yet may have many sins and doubts, much darkness and confusion: but where there is any measure of true faith in Christ, though weak, the Lord marks not iniquity, but looks on the soul as white, through the imputed righteousness of Christ, Num. xxiii. 21; Psal. cxxx. 3, 4.

Q. What is it then to communicate worthily; and wherein lies the nature of this work and duty?

A. It is a complex act, and a very great work; and it lies shortly in our receiving Christ and his benefits with the hand of faith, and making particular application of them for our souls' necessities; as we receive the elements with our bodily hand, and make use of them for our bodies. Or it is to cast our guilty souls into the open arms of a crucified Saviour for mercy, and in the mean time to embrace and clasp about this bleeding High-priest, with the arms of faith, as our Saviour and Lord; saying with Thomas, "My Lord and my God." It is a flying into his wounds for shelter, and applying his blood for pardon and cleansing. It is a taking Christ's body and blood to save us, and a giving up our souls and bodies to be saved, taught, and ruled by him. Or, in a word, to communicate worthily, is to eat and drink at Christ's table, with a believing and thankful remembrance of his love, resting on his merits, mourning for sin that pierced him, and solemnly resolving to pierce him no more.

Q. What are the advantages of worthy communicating?

A. They are very many, and very great; hereby Christ and his benefits are received, the soul's diseases and plagues are cured, our sins and lusts weakened and killed, and our graces strengthened and increased. Hereby the hard heart is softened, and the cold heart inflamed, the dead soul quickened, the palsied hand cured, and feeble knees strengthened. Hereby the straitened soul is enlarged, the wandering heart fixed, the creeping desires elevated, the fainting heart supported, the cloudy mind brightened, the uneasy conscience satisfied, and doubting souls resolved; many times hath Christ made himself known to his disciples in the breaking of bread; herein he hath allowed them the smiles of his face, the comforts of his Spirit, and seal of their pardon, and a sight of the King in his beauty, and a Pisgah view of Canaan. O worthy communicant, is there any meal in the world so profitable as this? A meal that proves life to your souls, and death to your sins, a cordial to your hearts, and balm to your wounds, strength to your graces, and poison to your lusts.

Q. What are the disadvantages of unworthy communicating?

A. It draws down judicial strokes from God upon the soul, diseases and untimely death on the body, and eternal wrath upon both. It brings on desertion from God, and the rebukes of his anger, darkness on the mind, deadness and impenitency on the heart, barrenness and leanness on the soul, decay and withering on the graces, formality and lifelessness in duties, fearedness, and sometimes horror on the conscience: yea, it lets loose Satan against the soul. And some of these plagues have even believers themselves smarted under, for their careless communicating, 1 Cor. xi. 29, 30.

Q. What is the meaning of these words, 1 Cor. xi. 29, "He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body?" Is this sin so damnable that there is no pardon for it?

A. Though the sin be heinous, yet it is not unpardonable: that is not the meaning of the words; the word damnation, in the original is Krima, which properly signifies judgment, as well as damnation, and therefore our Assembly divines use this word upon this subject, "They eat and drink judgment to themselves," that is, they make themselves liable to temporal, spiritual, and eternal judgments: temporal and spiritual judgments will follow them in this world, and without a timely repentance, these will end in eternal damnation in the other. This is pardonable, as well as all others, through "the blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin." For as the virtue of this precious blood saved and cleansed many, who actually shed it at Jerusalem; so it can save and cleanse those who spill and trample it under foot in the sacrament, upon their application to it, Luke xxiv. 46, 47; Acts ii. 36, 38, 41; 1 John i. 7.

Q. Doth the presence of a wicked man pollute the sacrament to worthy receivers who sit at the table with him?

A. No; for it is said, "he eateth and drinketh judgment to himself" only, not to another that receives with him; otherwise Christ and his apostles had been defiled by the company of Judas; for at the sacrament of the passover he certainly was.

Q. Why is the guilt of this damning sin laid upon the unworthy communicant's not discerning the Lord's body?

A. Because he doth not distinguish between common bread and the sacramental bread, which represents the Lord's body; but useth it with as little preparation and regard, or as carelessly, as he useth the other; which infers dreadful guilt before God.

Q. Where is the sacrament to be administered?

A. Only in the congregations and assemblies of God's people. For, 1. Christ gave it to his disciples when met together, and not to any of them apart, Matt. xxvi. 20, 26.

2. It was the practice of the primitive and apostolical churches to administer and partake of this sacrament publicly, when the congregation or church was assembled together in one place; which is ratified by the apostle, 1 Cor. xi. 20.

3. Because it is one great design in this ordinance, to testify union or communion of Christians one with another, 1 Cor. x. 16, 17, "For we being many, are one bread." Now this union of man cannot be expressed where there are not many convened together to do it.

Q. Wherefore may not the sacrament be administered to the sick, or persons on a death bed?

A. It ought not, because of the foresaid reasons; and also in regard of these following: 1. We have neither precept nor example for this practice in the word of God; and so it cannot be done in faith, Rom. xiv. 23.

2. It derogates much from the awfulness and solemnity of this great and august ordinance, to administer it so privately, and with so little deliberation and preparation, as often it is done, where this practice is allowed.

3. Few sick or dying persons are privileged with such firmness of mind, calmness of thought, free exercise of reason, and undisturbed use of the faculties, as is necessary for a man's examining himself before he partake, and so exerting the several acts of faith, and the other graces which are requisite in partaking. And to administer the sacrament to those who are tossed with sickness, distracted with pain, or incapable of any freedom or distinctness of thought, as most sick people are, is to profane the ordinance, and to do the sick person more harm than good.

4. This were to symbolize with papists and idolaters in their superstitious practices, and to homologate their errors: for papists believe that the sacraments of themselves confer grace, and that all is well, if they at last partake of this sacrament. From all which errors, idolatries, and superstitious customs, we ought to keep at due distance in obedience to God's command, Exod. xxiii. 24; Lev. xviii. 3; Deut. xii. 30; 1 Cor. x. 6; Rev. xviii. 4.

Q. Seeing it is our indispensable duty to communicate, and that frequently; and it is so highly dangerous to communicate unworthily: what course shall we take, in order to our being worthy communicants?

A. We must with all earnestness seek after that gospel fitness and preparation, which God requires of those that approach to this holy ordinance.

PREPARATION FOR THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Q. What sort of preparation is it, that God requires of such as come to his table?

A. It is not a slack or careless preparation, to be put by in a hasty and superficial manner, as some do, who never set about it till Saturday or the Lord's day morning before they communicate. No, it must be timeous and deliberate, conscientious and impartial, diligent and fervent in the use of all appointed means, depending upon God's Holy Spirit for the gracious preparation of the heart according to his promise, Psal. x. 17; Prov. xiv. 1.

Q. What is the necessity of such solemn preparation for the Lord's table?

A. For these reasons, 1. God requires it, 1 Cor. xi. 28. 2. There was also a great preparation required for the passover, Exod. xii; Num. ix. And this was not put by in a short time; for the trumpet was blown in Jerusalem to make intimation of its approach fifteen days before; and every family was to have the lamb in their houses four days before the eating of it, Psal. lxxxi. 3; Exod. xii. 3, 6. Also their house was to be prepared and narrowly searched for leaven, and that with candles; Christ, before eating it, caused bespeak and make ready an upper room, furnished, swept, and garnished for that purpose: all this serves to teach us what preparation we should make for the Lord's supper, that now is come in room of the passover.

3. The soul makes a near approach to an infinitely holy God in this ordinance; yea, transacts and renews covenant with him, which calls for our making solemn preparation, as it was the saints' practice of old on such occasions, Gen. xxxv. 2, 3; Josh. iii. 5; 1 Sam. vii. 3; xvi. 5; Psal. xxvi. 6.

4. There is need for it, because we are naturally unfit and unprepared; we have carnal hearts, dead affections, and unholy souls; and therefore they must be renewed, quickened, and purified, before we can hold communion with a holy God at his table.

5. God makes great preparations for us in this ordinance; he hath made all things ready on his part; a rich feast, a complete Saviour, a full covenant, a sufficient ransom, a perfect righteousness, suitable promises, sovereign remedies, a glorious purchase, and everlasting inheritance. And are not we bound in duty and gratitude to prepare for receiving those great things, Prov. ix. 2; Matt. xxii. 4.

6. There is great danger in coming unpreparedly, even of eating and drinking damnation: of which I have spoken before. We must not think that we can escape the eye of a jealous and all-seeing God at this feast; for he narrowly views all the guests, and will spy out every unprepared communicant; as he did the man that wanted the wedding-garment, Matt. xx. 11, about whom he gave most fearful orders, ver. 13.

Q. What are the parts of preparation required of us in order to our approach to God's table?

A. There are generally two, but very comprehensive, viz. self-examination, and exciting of the graces.

Q. What is the nature of this work of self-examination?

A. It lies in a free communing with our own hearts, and bringing our souls before the tribunal of conscience, and there judging them according to God's word. And in this process there must be an awakening summons given, and impartial inquiry made, plain accusations tabled against us, and a just sentence pronounced upon us, concerning our state. And if the sentence be bad, there must be the poor pannel's earnest cries for mercy, and a fleeing quickly to our Surety for repealing of the sentence of the law. All this I include in self-examination, as a necessary preliminary for preparing us to come to the Lord's table.

Q. Is there an absolute necessity for self-examination before communicating?

A. Yes; 1. Because without it we cannot know how it is with us as to our state, and whether we have a right to approach or not. 2. Without it we cannot know our wants and miseries; see our need of Christ, or esteem him precious. 3. Without it we cannot have a full discovery of our sins, and so cannot reform from them. 4. Without it we cannot know the deficiency or weakness of the sacramental graces in us, and so cannot excite them. 5. Without a particular knowledge of our plagues and distempers, we cannot make particular application of the remedy provided for us in the sacrament.

Q. What are the properties of this duty?

A. 1. It is absolutely necessary: for it is the first step to our conversion.

2. It is a duty much neglected by the most part of the world, they have no acquaintance with themselves.

3. It is very difficult and displeasing to nature. We are most unwilling to turn accusers of ourselves; it being against self-love, which always inclines us to flatter ourselves.

4. It is a duty we soon tire of, and are ready to flinch from, after we begin it. It is no easy matter to keep the mind close at this work for any considerable time together.

5. It requires a constant dependence on, and looking to God for the Spirit's assistance and light, without which we cannot make right discoveries of ourselves, Psal. cxxxix. 23, 24.

Q. What are these things we ought to examine ourselves about, before we approach to the Lord's table?

A. Concerning these five things: 1. Our state and condition. 2. Our sins and shortcomings. 3. Our wants and necessities. 4. Our ends and designs. 5. Our graces and qualifications.

Q. Is it possible to know the spiritual state and condition of our souls, if it be bad?

A. Yes; by marks and evidences laid down in scripture: particularly our state is bad, if we love the world more than God; if we mind our bodies more than God; if we mind our bodies more than our souls. If we be insensible of the necessity and usefulness of Christ to our souls. If we make religion only our by-work, and give God no more service than what the world and the flesh can spare. If we live vain and careless lives, and allow ourselves in known sin, 1 John ii. 15; 2 Tim. iii. 4; John v. 40; Rem. viii. 5; x. 3; Matt. x. 37; Psal. lxxiii. 27.

Q. How may we know if our spiritual state be good?

A. By such evidences as these: if we be heartily concerned about our souls and eternity, and carefully seek the favour of God through Christ: if we place our happiness in the enjoying of communion with God, and not in the world's comforts: if Christ the Mediator, his ordinances, people, and all that belongs to him, be precious to us; if indwelling sin be our burden, and we sincerely strive against sin both in heart and life; if we make conscience of our words and ways, and have a respect to all God's commandments. These are marks of our state being good, Psal. lxxiii. 25; cxix. 6, 128; Rom. viii. 5; vii. 24; 1 Pet. ii. 7; 1 John iii. 9, 14; Gal. v. 24.

Q. What is that good state we must necessarily be in if we would be worthy communicants?

A. We must be in covenant with God through faith in Jesus Christ; and acquainted with a saving change of our hearts and natures by a work of regeneration.

Q. Who are those that are in covenant with God?

A. Those who have actually taken hold of the covenant of grace, and have cordially consented to its gracious offers and terms by faith; particularly, those who have been thoroughly convinced of their misery under a covenant of works, and have betaken themselves to the new covenant; have heartily acquiesced in the way and method of salvation through Christ and his righteousness; have cordially accepted of Christ in all his offices and promises; and in him have made choice of God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as their God and portion; have also given up themselves, soul and body, and all they have, to be the Lord's, to be for him, and not for another: and in Christ's strength have engaged to live for God, and walk with him in newness of life; as becomes his covenanted people: and this is what we call our personal-covenanting with God, which ought to be solemnly gone about, by all that would seal a covenant with God at his table, Psal. xvi. 2; 1. 5; Isa. xlv. 5; Jer. 1. 5; Psal. cxix. 57; 2 Chron. xxx. 8; 2 Cor. viii. 5; Rom. vi. 4, 13; 2 Cor. v. 15.

Q. Is not personal-covenanting with God, the same thing with faith?

A. Yes; only it imports a very solemn, implicit, and distinct exerting of the several acts of faith, and lies mainly in these two, acceptance and dedication.

Q. Is our accepting of Christ as a Lord and Sovereign that act of faith which entitles us to the covenant and its blessings; or that it is a mean and instrument of our justification before God?

A. No; for though it be essentially requisite to our entering into the covenant, and necessarily connected with our justification; yet it is not, itself, that very act of faith, whereby we are entitled to the covenant and justified before God.

Q. What is the precise act of justifying faith, then, whereby that is done?

A. The act of faith, whereby we are absolved, reconciled, and justified before God, and entitled to the covenant, and all Christ's purchase therein offered, is precisely the soul's embracing Christ as a bleeding high-priest, offering up himself a sacrifice to divine justice, for expiating our guilt, and acting the part of a cautioner in paying our debt: so that the proper object of that faith which is justifying, is Christ crucified and his righteousness, and upon this alone doth the believing soul rely for pardon and salvation. Yet, as I said before, with this act of faith, which accepts of Christ as a high-priest and surety, is inseparably connected that other act, viz. the accepting of Christ as a King and Lord, to rule and govern us all the days of our life; which is absolutely requisite to our covenanting with God. And hence it is that there is a distinction made betwixt justifying faith and saving faith. So that we see personal-covenanting is also one with faith; only it comprehends more of its act than that which is precisely justifying, Deut. xxvi. 17.

Q. Since the first act in personal-covenanting is acceptance; what are those things we must accept of?

A. We must first accept of Jesus Christ as our peace-maker and Mediator with God, seeing it is only by him we have access to God, and all the promises come to us in him. Then we must accept of all the covenant blessings, even a whole Godhead, as our portion; God the Father as our Father in Christ; God the Son as our Redeemer, our prophet to teach us; our priest to atone for us, and our king to govern us; God the Holy Ghost as the applier of Christ's purchase, by his renewing us, sanctifying, comforting, and guiding us to glory. We must accept of all the divine attributes and perfections; God's wisdom for our direction, his power for our protection, his mercy for our pardon, and his faithfulness for making good all the promises to us. We must accept of all the gifts and graces of the Spirit, faith, repentance, love, hope, fear, patience, &c. as our portion in Christ. We must accept of all the divine precepts as our rule; all his ordinances and providences as our helps to heaven: his covenant as the treasure of our supplies and comforts: his rod to reclaim and spur us on to duty: his people as our companions in travel: and his heaven as our home and eternal dwelling place.

Q. Seeing dedication is the other act in personal-covenanting, what is it we are to dedicate to God?

A. As God gives himself wholly to us, so we must dedicate and give ourselves wholly and unreservedly to him; our souls with all their powers and faculties; our understandings to embrace God's truths; our wills to comply with his will; our consciences to receive his orders; our memories to lay up his counsels; and our affections and desires to be centered upon him, as the object of our happiness. Also we must devote and give up our bodies, with all their senses and members, to be for his service: our eyes to read his word and behold his works: our ears to hear his calls: our feet to walk in his ways pleasing to him: our hands to supply his people in distress; and our tongues to pray, and speak the language of Canaan. Again we must give up our enjoyments to him, our time and talents, our estates and substance, our relations and friends, our gifts and graces, our power and interest, to be employed for God and his honour, and to be entirely disposed of for his service and glory. Likewise, we must dedicate our service and endeavours to God, with all the actions and performances of our lives; aiming at his glory in all we do, resolving and engaging, in Christ's strength, to live wholly to God, perform every duty he commands, suffer patiently what he lays on us, watch against every sin he forbids, and renounce all his enemies. In a word, we must give up and resign our whole man to God, and all that we have, to be guided by his Spirit, ruled by his laws, and disposed of by his providence. And in these things lies our personal covenanting with God, which certainly is the communicant's best token to warrant him to approach to the Lord's table.

Q. Is not the gracious covenant which believers are brought into by their clothing with Christ, called God's covenant, and a covenant which he makes with us? How then can we be said to make a covenant with him?

A. I grant that it is God's covenant, and that ordinarily he is said to make the covenant with his people, and for this good reason, that God is the blessed author and deviser of this covenant and revealer and proposer of it to us; and he that affords us grace and strength to consent to it, and do our part of the covenant. But the covenant of grace being a marriage-covenant, it necessarily imports in its nature a bargain that is mutual, and requires the consent of both parties, in order to the making and concluding of it. So that we are to be active in, and not wholly passive in this transaction; something must be done on our part, when we enter into this covenant; not that we have this principle of activity in and from ourselves; no, it is the fruit of Christ's purchase, and his Spirit's operation, freely promised and given us by God, Jer. xxix. 13. But seeing this activity is put forth and exerted by our faculties, it becomes the act and deed of the gracious soul. That this covenant is mutual, and requires activity on our part, is plain from scripture, and the several ways that faith is expressed therein. Our entering into this covenant is held forth by the sinner's yielding himself to the Lord, or giving his hand to the Lord, as in the original, 2 Chron. xxx. 8, by our taking hold of the covenant, Isa. lvi. 4, or making a covenant with God, Psal. l. 5; 2 Chron. xxix. 10; Jer xxxiv. 18, so that we are said to make it with God, as well as he is said to make it with us. Also it is held forth by our joining ourselves to the Lord in a covenant, Jer. l. 5. Our avouching the Lord to be our God, Deut. xxvi. 17. Our swearing to the Lord, 2 Chron. xv. 14. Our being married to the Lord, Jer. iii. 14; Hos. ii. 19, 20. Our subscribing with the hand unto the Lord, and saying, "I am the Lord's," Isa. xlv. 5. Our soul's saying to the Lord, "Thou art my Lord, thou art my God, and my portion," Psal. xvi. 2; xxxi. 10; Hos. ii. 24; Lam. iii. 24. Likewise in the New Testament our covenanting with God is held forth by our coming unto God by Christ, Heb. vi. 25, laying hold upon the hope set before us, Heb. vi. 18, embracing of the promises, Heb. xi. 13, receiving Christ, and being married to him, John i. 12; Mat. xxii; Rom. vii. 4. All which expressions import our activity in covenanting with God. I grant, indeed, that it is God that works in us, and that it is he that is the first mover in this blessed bargain; he courts us before we consent; he chooses us before we choose him, Hos. ii. 23; Zech. xiii. 8, 9, so that this covenant is all free grace: for though God puts a condition in it on our part, yet he graciously works it in us, and promises it to us, saying, "Ye shall be my people," Jer. xxiv. 7; Ezek. xxxvi. 26—28; Phil. ii. 12, 13.

Q. In what manner must we go about this work of personal covenanting with God?

A. 1. We must have our hearts prepared and put in a suitable frame for it; they must be spiritual, humble, and panting after God in Christ.

2. We must be deliberate in managing this weighty transaction, and labour to have a clear view of the nature and frame of the covenant of grace: what God offers and promises to us, and what he requires of us; and endeavour by grace to get our hearts wrought up to a steadfast resolution to comply therewith.

3. We must still bring Christ along-t with us in our covenanting with God; we must bring the sacrifice of his merits to atone for the breach of the first covenant, and his suretyship to answer for our faithfulness in the second, ere we can expect to be taken into covenant with God, and owned as his people.

4. We must give up and engage ourselves to God in a most humble and self-denied manner, narrowly watching against a selfish and legal frame of spirit in this work, which we are most ready to decline unto, and guarding with all care against any secret relying upon our own engagements and doings, or letting them come in the room of Christ, who alone is the Lord our righteousness. Therefore, in managing this work, let us rely wholly upon Christ's righteousness to procure us access to God, and acceptance with him; and upon his strength and grace both in making and performing our promises and engagements to him; let these scripture-texts be still in our view, Psal. l. 5; Jer. xxiii. 6; Isa. xlv. 24; 1 Cor. i. 30; Phil. iii. 8, 9.

5. We should set about this work of personal covenanting timeously and speedily, without delay or loss of time; and particularly, let it be done in the season of youth; or when persons first get their eyes opened to see their lost state by nature, and their need of Christ.

And then, lastly, it ought to be undertaken and gone about in an humble dependence upon divine grace, and conducted with all secrecy and retiredness, seriousness, and holy awe; and yet in the most solemn and explicit manner, with the express words of the mouth, as well as the fixed purpose of the heart; yea, subscribing it with the hand, and calling heaven and earth to witness our sincerity in this grand affair. An example whereof I have subjoined in the appendix of this catechism.

Q. What is the necessity of our personal covenanting with God?

A. 1. Because God requires it of us, and promises great happiness to them who did it in sincerity, 2 Chron. xxx. 8; Psal. l. 5; Isa. lvi. 4—7.

2. The nature of faith (which is required of every man) implies covenanting with God: for faith is the uniting grace, and carries in it not only an assent of the understanding, but also the consent of the will to embrace God's offers of salvation through Christ, and accept of Christ on his own terms, both as our Saviour and Ruler, Matt. xi. 28, 29; xvi. 24. He is a High-priest on the throne, Zech. vi. 13.

3. Our baptism obligeth us to personal covenanting with God. For the whole of the covenant of grace is contained in baptism, and every man's consent to it is implied in these words, "I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," that is, I sprinkle thee with water, which represents God's bequeathing and making over to thee all Christ's purchase, in sign and testimony, that thou dost own God the Father for thy Father in Christ, God the Son for thy Redeemer, and God the Holy Ghost for thy Sanctifier: now it is certainly requisite that we should, when we come to age, personally renew our baptismal covenant, and ratify our parents' deed, that we may be Christians by our own free choice and consent, as well as by our parents' dedication. And this every individual man and woman that would be saved, must do for themselves, by their own particular consent and personal coming into the bond of this covenant, Ezek. xx. 37. The which, if we neglect to do, our baptism will not profit us, for God will rank and punish us with the uncircumcised, Jer. ix. 25, 26.

4. This was the practice of God's people of old, Deut. xxvi. 17; 2 Kings xxiii. 3; 2 Chron. xxix. 10; Neh. ix. 38; Psal. l. 5; Jer. xxxiv. 18; l. 5; Isa. lvi. 4, 6. Nay, it is the practice of all the New Testament believers, 2 Cor. viii. 5; xi. 2. For our giving ourselves to the Lord, in marriage-transaction, plainly imports our covenanting with God.

Q. But what warrant have we for such an express verbal way of covenanting with God, as before mentioned?

A. I do not say that such an explicit or formal transaction is absolutely necessary to salvation, seeing a man's state is safe, if he with his heart close with God's offer of salvation, through Christ: but yet this express verbal transacting is very necessary on several accounts.

1. Because it is a matter of the greatest moment and concern to our souls to be in a covenant with God, and we can never be at too much pains to make it sure. Shall we be so very express, plain, and peremptory in other bargains of lesser moment, and yet be content to be negligent in this, upon which our eternal concerns depend.

2. It is necessary, that so the impressions of our consent and engagements to the Lord may be fixed the deeper in our minds and memories; and so may be the more abiding with us.

3. It is necessary for the strengthening of faith, and preventing many groundless fears and jealousies about our soul's estate. There is nothing so liable to be questioned and brought into debate, as our interest in Christ, and our being in covenant with God through him; and therefore we should do all we can for maintaining a comfortable sense of it upon our spirits, that we may be the more cheerful in our obedience to God. And this way of solemn verbal transacting with God is a proper means for that end; it being, as it were, a formal instrument taken and put in record of what passeth betwixt God and the soul.

4. This practice is very advantageous and supporting to God's people in the day of trouble and distress, or when they are in the view of death. How comfortable is it then to call to mind former experiences of the soul's communion with God, and particularly for them to remember how, at such a time and place, they joined themselves to the Lord in a personal and perpetual covenant: then and there God spake with them, sealed their pardon, and owned them as his covenanted people. The soul was helped, solemnly and expressly, to say unto the Lord, "Thou art my God;" and God graciously answered the soul, "I am thy salvation." This was very comfortable to the royal psalmist in the time of his greatest straits, and when in prospect of eternity, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5; Psal. xlii. 6, 11; lxxvii. 10—13; cxliii. 5, 6.

5. Express transacting with God hath been the usual practice of the best and holiest of God's people; and still is most frequent in those times and places where the power and life of religion most abound: this practice of God's people hath been visibly owned by God; by this method many of them have attained to the comfortable assurance of their interest in Christ and the blessings of the new covenant, which hath been very refreshing to them through the whole course of their lives. And to the neglect of this ancient and useful practice, many think the great decay of religion in our day is to be imputed.

6. There is solid foundation and warrant given for express verbal transacting with God, from his word, and the practice of his saints therein recorded. For the covenant betwixt God and his people is there represented by a marriage covenant betwixt husband and wife, Hos. ii. 19, 20; 2 Cor. xi. 2. And we know it is necessary that the wife give express and explicit consent to the husband, as well as the husband to the wife. And therefore the Lord saith to his people, "Thou shalt call me Ishi;" that is, my husband, "and thou shalt not be for another, so also will I be for thee," Hos. ii. 16; iii. 3. Such a consent gave the spouse, Cant. vi. 3, "I am my Beloved's, and my Beloved is mine." Likewise our joining ourselves to the Lord, in this covenant, is called a "giving the hand to the Lord," which imports a most positive and express way of transacting, 2 Chron. xxx. 8. Again he saith, "One shall say, I am the Lord's, and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord," Isa. xlv. 5. These and many other scriptures that might be cited, import a most express and formal consent in this covenant to be necessary and warrantable on our part, Jer. iii. 4, 19; Isa. xiv. 24; Zech. xiii. 9. Which also we have exemplified in the practice of Jacob, David, Hezekiah, Nehemiah, Thomas, and other saints, Gen. xxviii. 20, 21; Psal. xvi. 2; cxl. 6; 2 Chron. xxix. 10; Neh. ix. 38; John xx. 28.

Q. What are the proper seasons for express covenanting with God?

A. 1. In time of youth, when the heart is most tender and melting: and especially when persons are first brought under convictions, and are about to renew their baptismal engagements, and approach to the Lord's table for receiving the second seal of God's covenant, Psal. lxxi. 5, 17; Jer. ii. 2; iii. 4.

2. This practice is to be renewed upon some special occasions. As, (1.) In time of great backsliding and deep humiliation for the same, Neh. ix. 29. (2.) In time of great straits and imminent dangers, Gen. xxxii. 9, 26; Psal. xxxi. 14; lvii. 1, 2. (3.) When persons are undertaking some great and difficult work, as Joshua when Israel was to settle in Canaan in the midst of snares, Josh. xxiv. 23—25. And Jacob, when going to Padan-aram, Gen. xxviii. 20, 21. (4.) When believers are under desertion, and in the dark about their case, and, through temptations, brought to question if ever they really covenanted with God: then it is proper to essay the matter anew, and do what we can to put it out of doubt, by saying expressly to God, "Thou art my God, and my portion," Psal. xxxi. 14; cxlii. 5. So the spouse, when deserted, professed and avowed Christ as her beloved, Cant. v. 4; vi. 3. (5.) Some have repeated this practice with comfort at the beginning of every year. I grant, indeed, there is hazard lest people, by frequent express covenanting with God, turn too formal in it: and therefore it may be as fit, on some occasions, to declare, in the sight of God, our adherence to the covenant formerly made. Formality and negligence in this work should be especially guarded against; for our express verbal covenanting is of no worth, unless heart-covenanting be joined with it. It is a mocking of God to draw nigh to him with the lips, when the heart is away.

Q. What shall we think of those who apprehend that they once covenanted with God in Christ: but by their sins they have broke their engagements, and so are no more to be reckoned God's covenanted people?

A. 1. All such have cause to be humbled deeply for their sins, whereby they have broken covenant with God: and if they be not humbled on this account, they have indeed ground to suspect themselves, that they were never truly God's covenanted people.

2. We ought to remember that the covenant of works and the covenant of grace differ vastly in their nature: for the first could be violated by the least sin, but the second cannot be dissolved by any sin of the covenanted. For though we break the engagement we come under when we enter into this covenant; yet God will not break the promises he makes on his part. God's gracious covenant with his people stands firm and undissolved, notwithstanding of many breaches and failures on their part; because there is a Surety in this covenant from whom he receives satisfaction for the sins of the covenanted; and upon this account, it is provided as a special article of this covenant, that God will forgive the sins and breaches of his covenanted people, when they confess them, and sue for pardon for their Surety's sake: and hence it is, that the covenant of grace is perpetual and indissoluble, and those who are once in covenant with God are still in it, Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; Psal. lxxxix. 31, 34; Isa. liv. 8; 1 John i. 9; ii. 1.

3. All sensible backsliders, covenant-breakers, and treacherous dealers of any sort, are graciously invited and encouraged by God to return to him, and renew their covenant again, Jer. iii. 1, 12—14, 16, 20—22; Hos. xiv. 1—4.

Q. But what if we should just break over again? Is it not better not to engage, than come under new obligations, which would but aggravate our guilt?

A. 1. It would be a fearful aggravation of sin indeed, to come under new engagements to God, without having a sincere design of keeping them.

2. We are peremptorily obliged by God's command to renew covenant with him, and not left to our freedom to come under new engagements or not as we think fit.

3. It is good to be jealous of ourselves in taking on new engagements; for the weaker we be in our own eyes, and the more we distrust our own strength, the stronger and safer we really are, 2 Cor. xii. 10.

4. If we covenant honestly with God through Christ our Surety, we may expect sufficient covenanted grace and strength, for breaking the power of sin in us, and enabling us to wrestle against it. And likewise we will have our Surety engaged to answer for all our failures; and though we be weak, to be sure he is sufficient, able, and responsible for us.

Q. Is not this doctrine, concerning the perpetuity of the covenant, and Christ's suretyship for us, an encouragement to people to turn licentious in their walks?

A. Not at all; for, on the contrary, believers are hereby laid under stricter obligations to love God and Christ, which love will surely and sweetly constrain them to a holy and obedient walk. And whoever they be that improve this doctrine as an encouragement to sin, they are none of God's covenanted people; for it is the character of the ungodly, "To turn the grace of God into lasciviousness:" and though they should do so, yet the foresaid doctrine is true, and necessary to be published, to prevent dejected souls being sunk with discouragement, or driven into despair, Rom. vi. 1; 2 Cor. v. 14, 15; Gal. vi. 1; Jude 4.

Q. But what shall be said to those, who are so discouraged with a sense of their own unworthiness to enter into covenant with God, that they suspect God is not willing to accept of them?

A. 1. God never refused to enter into covenant with any upon the account of unworthiness. Who more vile than Manasseh, and yet God excluded him not upon his humble application? Who more unworthy than the prodigal, that forsook his father, and took on to serve the devil and his swinish lusts, and yet upon his return, the father takes him in his arms, rejoices in him as his dear child, and calls heaven and earth to rejoice with him too, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 12, 13; Luke xv. 13, 15.

2. God never took any into covenant with him but the unworthy; for God's covenanting with any of the sinful posterity of Adam, who are all of them utterly unworthy of this privilege, is an act of pure grace, and free condescending love, which all his people will have reason to admire and glorify to all the ages of eternity.

3. The more sensible we are of our unworthiness, and humbled for it, the more fit we are for covenanting with God; for it is such he hath promised to accept, Psal. x. 17; Isa. lxvi. 2; Matt. v. 3.

4. Though we be altogether unworthy, in ourselves, of being taken into covenant with God; yet worthy is the Lamb our surety, who hath merited this privilege to unworthy sinners, and it is only his worthiness that we must plead.

5. We have the plainest calls, and most pressing invitations from God to the unworthiest of sinners to come and enter into covenant with him, and many arguments made use of to engage them to it, 2 Chron. xxx. 8; Isa. li. 4; lv. 3, 7; Ezek. xviii. 30, 32; 2 Cor. v. 20. Now for any to doubt of God's willingness to enter into covenant with him, after these plain proofs which he has given us of it, is no less than to suspect God's sincerity and ingenuity in his offers and declarations, which must be no small crime.

Q. But what shall be said of those who have many times refused God's gracious offers, and hence are afraid that he will not accept of them now?

A. 1. They ought to be deeply humbled for the former refusals they have given. 2. Bless God that the treaty is not yet broken off, and that his gracious offers are still sounding in their ears. 3. The longer they have formerly refused, the more haste ought they now to come and take hold of God's covenant, that they may not provoke him by refusing or delaying any longer.

Q. But have we strength of ourselves to take hold of this covenant and transact with God?

A. 1. I grant we have not, but yet it is not here that the bargain sticks; it is not so much for want of power, as want of will, that this transaction is not made; for if once we were willing, strength would not be wanting: yea, it is our unwillingness that ruins us, John v. 40. 2. We ought to be deeply humbled, under a sense of our impotency before God, lie groaning in his way, plead earnestly for pity, and flee to God's power, Christ's grace, and the Spirit's assistance, to enable us for this work, begging importunately, that, according to his promise, for Christ's sake, he would put a principle of life and activity in us, that we may covenant with God, and close a bargain with him through Christ. 3. As we ought to be looking and seeking for this principle of activity from God; so we must not lay aside our own endeavour and efforts, weak as they are, till we know that we have this principle of the Spirit's concurrence with us; for commonly the Spirit's work in the soul is not discernible at first: but, seeing the duty is ours, though the work be the Spirit's, we ought in a humble dependence on Christ and his Spirit for strength, to be aiming and endeavouring to close with God in Christ, take hold of his covenant, and consent to the gospel method of salvation, as we can: and if by any means we can get a hold of this covenant, let us take it, and say, with our souls, to the Lord, "Thou art my God." For it pleaseth God to see us attempting our duty, and he useth to join weak endeavours, and work in and by our own activity and weak endeavours, gradually influencing and inclining our hearts and wills to spiritual things, and holy duties, Luke xi. 13; Isa. lxiv. 5; Jer. xxx. 21, 22; xxxi. 18; Hos. xiv. 2—4. Faith ordinarily comes at first to Christ with a weak and trembling hand, endeavouring to take hold of God's covenant and the offers of grace, but knows not if these endeavours shall be any way available: faith even adventures on a may be, "It may be the Lord will be gracious: who knows but he will return," Amos v. 15; Joel ii. 14.

Q. What shall we say of those who refuse to enter into covenant with God, because they suspect they are none of God's elect, and so have no right to God's covenant?

A. We are to look on this suspicion as a temptation of Satan, designed by him to hinder sinners from Christ, or to drive them to desperation, and therefore ought to be resisted: for, 1. It is great madness to open our ears to the suggestions of the devil, who is a "liar and murderer from the beginning," and stop them from hearing the voice of the God of mercy and truth speaking to us in the scripture, and calling us to take hold of his covenant.

2. It is high presumption to intrude ourselves into the secret decrees of God, which he hath forbid us to pry into, and to reject those plain duties which he hath commanded: for "secret things belong unto God, but revealed things unto us," Dent. xxix. 29.

3. The way to know our election is to make sure our effectual calling, which must be by entering into covenant with God through Jesus Christ, and turning our back upon sin; which, if our hearts be determined to do, we may surely conclude we are elect vessels; for turning to God in Christ is a fruit and certain proof of election, 2 Pet. i. 10.

4. This way of acting in soul-matters must be altogether against reason, seeing it is so in things respecting the body. We would reckon him a self-murderer that would take no food, nor use any means for preserving his natural life, because of an apprehension he hath that he is appointed to die in a short time. So they murder their souls, who will not use the means of spiritual life, because they fear they are not elected. Again, if we have but a probability of gaining some temporal advantage, though not a certainty, we will venture and run some hazard for it: and do we think heaven and eternal glory such small things, that we will not venture and essay to take hold of God's covenant in order to obtain them?

Q. What shall we say of those who fear it is now out of time for them to attempt this, because they suspect their day of grace is past, and the door is shut?

A. 1. I grant there are not a few who provoke God to shut the door and give up with them, because of their long grieving and quenching the Spirit of God, and living securely in known wickedness, under the most searching and lively sermons; upon which account he withdraws his Spirit, and plagues many with judicial obduration, so that no means can do them any good. Wherefore if we in any measure be guilty of the foresaid sins, it should be matter of great mourning and humiliation to us.

2. Closing with Christ in the gospel offers, can never be too late, nor out of time: for God hath said, "Whosoever believeth in Christ shall not perish, but have everlasting life;" but saith not, if they do not believe against such a time, they shall be excluded: No! the offer is made to all sinners whatsoever, and late believers or repenters are not excepted from the benefit of it more than others.

3. They that can say, they sincerely desire God's favour and heart holiness, the death of sin, and true love to God, more than all the glory of the world; or, that they sigh and groan after Christ, and would fain have him for their Lord and Saviour; it is a sign their day of grace is not over, for these very desires are some degrees of grace, and a certain evidence that God still continues to deal with their hearts.

Q. What are the marks of those who are truly God's covenanted people?

A. They are a willing people, humble and self-denying people: they are an holy people, zealous of good works; they are a thankful and God-exalting people. Jesus Christ the Mediator and Surety of the covenant is very precious to them. The free grace of the covenant is the matter of their wonder and admiration. They are inclined to perform covenant-duties, and that in a covenant way, relying on covenant-strength, from a principle of love and gratitude to their covenanted God, and with an eye to glorify his name, Psal. cx. 3; cxv. 1; Ezek. xvi. 62, 63; Tit. ii. 14; Isa. lv. 1; xiv. 24; lvi. 4—6.

Q. Are all those that are truly in covenant with God, acquainted with the new birth and a work of regeneration?

A. Yes; for these two, being in covenant with God by faith in Jesus Christ, and being renewed or born again, are inseparably connected, Ezek. xxxvi. 26—28; 1 Cor. i. 17.

Q. What is it that you understand by the new birth or a work of regeneration?

A. These words, the new birth, new creature, regeneration, renovation, conversion, and effectual calling, are commonly used to denote the same thing; and they signify that gracious and saving change which is wrought upon the whole man, both inwardly and outwardly, by the almighty power and grace of the Spirit of God, by the means of his word; whereby the soul, being awakened to see its misery and danger in a natural state, is humbled for sin, and powerfully drawn and determined to come to Jesus Christ for remedy; the mind is savingly enlightened, the will is made pliable, the heart is melted and made new, the seeds of grace are sown therein, sin's power is broken, the outward life is reformed, and the whole man is turned from sin to Jesus Christ and his ways, firmly resolving, through his strength, to walk with him constantly in the practice of holiness and duties of religion, Eph. i. 18, 19; iv. 23, 24; Tit. iii. 4, 5; Acts xxvi. 18; Ezek. xxxvi. 27, 29; Rom. vi. 6; 1 John iii. 9.

Q. What are the signs of a person that is unregenerated and in a state of nature?

A. They are such, 1. Who love the world and the things of it more than God, 1 John ii. 15; Jam. iv. 4.

2. Who against light live in the practice of secret wickedness, or regard iniquity in their hearts, Col. iii. 5, 6; Isa. l. 13—15; Jer. xlv. 16.

3. Who believe not the report of the gospel concerning Jesus Christ, John iii. 36; viii. 24.

4. Who go about to establish their own righteousness, not submitting to the righteousness of Christ, Rom. x. 3.

5. Who are haters of the people of God, 1 John ii. 9; John iii. 10.

Q. Have such who, upon self-examination, find themselves in that state, any cause to despair of mercy?

A. Though they may despair of help from themselves, or of help from God, while they resolve to continue in sin; yet they are to believe there is a door of mercy and hope opened to the greatest sinners in the gospel through Christ, seeing he is willing to accept of all who are sensible of sin and misery, and come to him for help; and to despair of mercy in Christ is the greatest slight and dishonour that can be done to him and his most efficacious blood, Matt. xi. 28; 1 Cor. vi. 9—11; 1 John i. 7; Lam. iii. 26.

Q. What course shall these sinners take, who are convinced of their bad estate, in order to be brought out of it?

A. 1. They ought to cherish convictions, and labour for a deep and thorough sense of sin and misery, Matt. ix. 12; Luke iv. 18.

2. They are to be diligent in attending upon the word, and in the use of prayer and meditation, John v. 25; 1 Pet. i. 23; Acts ix. 11.

3. They are to believe, though neither faith nor repentance be in their power, yet they are both purchased by Christ, and graciously promised to sinners in the gospel, Phil. i. 29; Acts v. 31; Ezek. xxxvi. 26, 27.

4. They ought, in the firm persuasion of Christ's ability and willingness to help, to be looking to him for righteousness and strength; and in the painful use of all the ordinary means, to be much in pressing their own hearts to believe and close with Christ in the gospel-offers; earnestly crying to God with Ephraim, "Turn thou me, and I shall be turned, for thou art the Lord my God," Jer. xxxi. 18.

Q. But may we not delay this affair till afterwards?

A. No; we must presently set about it. For, 1. Our lives are most uncertain, and many thousands go suddenly into eternity before they be aware; and none knoweth how short while the days of God's patience, and the offers of grace, may last, Jam. iv. 14; Heb. iii. 15; Luke xii. 20.

2. A state of sin is so dangerous, that we should not willingly venture to live and lie down another night in it.

3. The longer we delay conversion-work, the more unwilling we will be to set about it; the heart will be the more hardened, and the habits of sin be more strengthened: our guilt will be the more increased, and our souls the more unwilling to be called to account.

4. There are many thousands in hell already who have perished through delays.

5. If we refuse to hearken to God in the time of youth and prosperity; he may justly refuse to hearken to us in the time of our need, Prov. i. 26, 28; Zech. vii. 13.

Q. By what marks may we know if the saving change by regeneration be wrought upon us, and that we are new born, and in a state of grace?

A. By these; 1. If we have got our eyes opened, and new discoveries of sin, Christ, and holiness; if sin appear to us most vile, Christ most necessary, and holiness most beautiful, Acts xxvi. 18; Rom. vii. 12, 13.

2. If we have got new cares and concerns of soul, not about "what we shall eat, drink," &c., but "what shall we do to be saved," get the favour of God, our interest in Christ secured, and our souls made meet for glory, Matt. vi. 31—33; Acts xvi. 30; Job xxiii. 3.

3. If we have got a new heart, and a new principle of spiritual life, and be endued with new resolutions to strive against sin, and walk with God in newness of life, Ezek. xxxvi. 26; Rom. vi. 4, 12; Gal. v. 16, 17.

4. If we have got new desires after the word of God, and the means of spiritual nourishment, 1 Pet. ii. 2.

5. If we have earnest desires after God's presence in ordinances, and particularly after converse with God in secret prayer, Psal. lxxiii. 1, 2; lxxiii. 28; Acts ix. 11.

6. If we hunger and thirst after righteousness both imputed and inherent, Matt. v. 6.

7. If indwelling sin and remaining corruption in our hearts be our greatest grief and trouble, Rom. vii. 24.

8. If we have a sincere love to all the people of God, 1 John iii. 14.

Lastly, If we come to the light, and be willing to be searched, and have matters put to a trial, John iii. 20, 21; Psal. cxxxix. 23, 24.

Q. What are the marks and properties of a new heart?

A. The new heart is a sincere and single heart; it is a soft and tender heart, trembling at God's word, and is affected with frowns; it is grieved for inward sins and heart-plagues; it is afraid of temptations to sin and the appearances of evil; it is concerned for the honour of God, and affected with the dishonours that are done to him; it desires and delights to do the will of God, and chooseth the things that please him, Ezek. xxxvi. 26; Psal. xviii. 23; xxx. 7; cxxxix. 21; Isa. lvi. 2, 4; Gen. xxxix. 9; Rom. vii. 22, 24; Acts xiii. 22.

Q. What shall these poor exercised souls do, who, after the most diligent search, still doubt of their being in a gracious state: for when sometimes they attempt to lay claim to some of the foresaid marks, they are presently beat off again, and all is darkened to them, so that they cannot say they have any true grace or faith at all?

A. These trembling and doubting souls, who are labouring by all means to attain to clearness about their soul's condition, and yet cannot win at it, are very much to be pitied: for though they be still using the means for light, yet they can get no solid ground to build any confidence upon; and hence they are often tempted to renounce their hope, and give over all further endeavours.

But such ought to consider, 1. That all seasons, and particularly a deserted condition, is not a very proper time for believers to examine and find out the marks of this gracious state; for ordinarily, then, Satan raises many fogs and mists to obscure their grace, and the saving change the Spirit of God hath wrought in their souls, that they cannot possibly discover it; so that they must wait a fitter opportunity for this work.

2. We ought not to overlook the lowest marks of grace, but be thankful if we can at least say, Our souls desire grace and an interest in Christ above all things: and that we are much troubled and cast down for want of clear evidences thereof; and though we cannot say we have true love to Christ, yet it is our greatest grief that we cannot get our wretched hearts to love him: and though we cannot say we believe in Christ, yet we resolve never to rely on our own righteousness, nor seek another Saviour, but to cast our souls down at his feet, and look up to him, and none other for help: and though we cannot say he will have mercy upon us; yet nothing in all the world would so please our hearts, as one ray or pleasing look of his countenance. And though we cannot say we have true repentance, or any gracious change wrought in us: yet we resolve never to give over duty, nor give way to any known sin: we will find thirst for Christ as our Saviour, and for heaven as our home. Then, I say, we ought to be thankful. For these, though often overlooked, are some degrees of faith, and evidences of the Spirit's work in the heart; for the least degree of grace is grace, as well as that which is stronger: as the least spark of a diamond is truly a diamond, as well as bigger stones; and the least drop of dew is water, as well as the river. We read of faith "like a grain of mustard seed," which nevertheless is true faith, as well as that which is stronger; and we must not "despise the day of small things," Matt. viii. 26; xvii. 20; v. 6; xii. 20; Zech. iv. 10; Mark viii. 24; ix. 24; Job xiii. 15.

3. If we cannot attain to clearness, by poring on the marks of a gracious change, or of saving faith in us (as indeed some times believers cannot, since there is no mark can be given, but a scrupulous conscience will find an evasion or back door), then let us try to act faith in a direct manner upon Jesus Christ; for often believers come sooner to clearness about their interest in him, by the direct acts of faith, than by the reflex acts. Therefore let us flee to Christ for refuge, and lay hold upon the offer and promises of life through him, as if we had never done it before. Let us go and transact a covenant with God in Christ, as if we had never essayed any thing like it before: and possibly our fears will soon vanish, and light break in, Psal. xcvii. 11.

Q. But can we never conclude that we are renewed and in a gracious state, till we feel the pangs of the new birth, be acquainted with a law work, and deep humiliation for sin: do not these necessarily go before our closing with Christ?

A. 1. I grant indeed that the operation of the spirit of conviction by the law or the spirit of bondage, ordinarily goes before the spirit of adoption, and the intimations of pardon by Christ: and that all who come to Christ must come in the due sense of their sins and misery by nature: and that some have had a great measure of conviction, sorrow, and humiliation for sin, Rom. viii. 15; Mat. ix. 12; Acts ii. 37; Psal. xxxviii. 11.

2. God is a sovereign free agent, and is not tied to one way of working in those he brings home to himself. Some he brings in very early in their childhood, so that they do not remember the working of God's Spirit in them, which they have truly felt: and these he brings in, in riper years, he deals variously with them: in some the work of humiliation is very great and discernible; but in others not, as in Zaccheus and Lydia: in some humiliation work is deep and short, as was in the jailor and the three thousand converted by Peter's sermon, who were convinced and pricked in their hearts, repented and closed with Christ by faith, were converted and baptized all in a few hours, Acts ii. 37, 41; Acts xvi. 30, 33, 34. In others again, this work is not so deep but of longer continuance: some God calls not home till they have run a long race in a course of open sin, and rebellion against God, and these he useth to humble more deeply, and for a longer time; so that they can better observe the steps of the Spirit's working in them, than others. Paul was three days under deep conviction and humiliation, Acts vi. Others again, are in the time of their youth restrained from gross sins, and have had always some liking to religion and the people of God, yet without saving grace: when God brings these in, usually their humiliation is not so deep as others. Nay some are drawn to Christ by the sweet cords of love, and scarce knew any thing of those Mount Sinai-thunderings, or the legal shakings and terrors that others are sorely broken and exercised with. They are called in by the still and calm voice of the gospel, which convinces them in a kindly manner, melts their hearts for wounding of Christ, and warms their souls with the gracious discoveries of his free love and matchless excellencies, which makes them to stand and wonder, and readily to yield themselves his captives. Zaccheus was soon surprised with the love-offers Christ made to his soul, so that he came down in haste, and received him joyfully.

3. I grant, that those who are brought in without a discernible law-work, are ordinarily more in the dark afterwards about their souls' estate than others; because their change was not so remarkable. Satan often makes more successful attacks upon them to drive them to doubting and despondency, than on those who are gained by the law-terrors; and hence they are frequently tempted to raze the foundation.

4. As God doth not limit himself to one way of working, so none can prescribe what time or degree of humiliation is sufficient or necessary for the soul's conversion and closing with Christ. Only if we have as much of it as is necessary to let us see our need of Christ, and determine us to pass through all difficulties to come at him for salvation; and cause us to loath ourselves in dust and ashes, and to hate every sin, and break off from it: I say, if this be obtained, which is the true end of humiliation, we have no ground to despond for want of such particular degrees and measures of it. Who can tell what measure of it Zaccheus, the Ethiopian eunuch, Lydia, and others had, whose heart the Lord suddenly opened by his word, to Christ: they had so much as made them break through all oppositions to Christ, and willingly to close with him on his own terms, and to reckon him more lovely than heaven and earth, and all their idols and enjoyments in a world, and say, None but Christ: which if we can win to, we need not be troubled, though we have not been so long in the depths and in the dark as others: for Christ did never put any away from him upon that account; he saith not, The man that comes to me convinced and humbled, in such a measure, I will receive: but, "Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out." Our coming to Christ is a certain proof of our having seen our misery, and the worth of Christ, which is the main thing required of us.

5. Our keeping off from Christ, till we attain such a measure of sorrow and humiliation, savours too much of the covenant of works, which all Adam's children naturally incline to be justified by, for herein we are prone to affect making some sort of expiation or atonement for sin of our own, or to seek a price to bring in our hands to Christ, whereby we might purchase his blood, or some way deserve him and his righteousness; which is a dangerous practical error.

6. Our not being humbled enough for sin, should not make us linger in flying to Christ; but rather hasten our flight to him, who "is exalted as a Prince and Saviour, to give repentance to Israel, as well as forgiveness of sin." Let us then be sensible of the hardness of our hearts, and humbled so much the more, that we are not humbled as we ought to be, for offending God; and so let us run in to Christ, that he may give us a better measure of humiliation and repentance, Acts v. 31.

Q. What shall we think of those exercised persons, who doubt of their conversion, because they know not the time when it was?

A. There are several things said upon the former question, which may help to resolve this.

To which I add, 1. That the conversion of some is so remarkable, that it is no hard matter for them to be particular as to the time of it; and it is very comfortable to such as can be so.

But, 2. There are others, who are brought in by the calm gospel-way, in whom faith, repentance, and a holy life, have been gradually wrought, and grown somewhat insensibly with the growing knowledge of the gospel and the will of God revealed therein, of whom it may be truly said, the "kingdom of God cometh not with observation;" so that they cannot particularise the time of their conversion, Mark iv. 26, 27; Luke xvii. 20.

3. We ought to look into our hearts and examine if Christ's Spirit be dwelling there; and if we find that he is, we need not trouble ourselves though we know not the particular time and manner of his entrance; let us try if we value Christ above the world, and desire nearness to him, rather than the best things in the world; if we would rather displease all the world than displease him. And also, if we be acquainted with the illuminating work of his Spirit, making new discoveries of things to us, which we had not before; and though we cannot tell exactly the time, manner, and steps of the change, yet if we can say with that blind man, John ix. 25, "One thing I know, that whereas I was once blind, now I see." Once I saw little evil in sin, but now I see it exceeding sinful and damnable; once I saw little evil in my nature, but now I see my nature corrupt and my heart deceitful and desperately wicked, swarming full of vile lusts. Once I thought something of my own performances, but now I see them all to be loss and dung. Once I saw little need of Christ, but now I see him to be more necessary to my soul than food to my body. Once I thought I might perform duty well enough in my own strength, but now I see I can do nothing without Christ. Once I saw little beauty in Christ, but now I see he is the rose of Sharon and the chiefest among ten thousand; nay, among all the thousands in heaven and earth. Well, if this be our case, we need not be anxious to know what day, month, or year, the Holy Spirit wrought these things in us; for to be sure, the happy change is wrought, for though once "we were in darkness, yet now we are light in the Lord," Phil. iii. 3, 8, 9; Cant. v. 9, 10; 1 Pet. ii. 7.

Q. But how shall exercised souls do, who after all pains and searchings, still doubt of their being in covenant with God, and in a gracious state? can such doubting souls adventure to the Lord's table?

A. There are many exercised persons, who doubt much of their being in a gracious state, and yet are really in it, though they cannot attain the assurance of it. Many have great fears and perplexities because of the weakness of their faith, and yet their weak faith is truly faith. Wherefore, if such doubting souls be truly concerned and affected for the weakness of faith and want of suitable preparation for covenanting with God, and if they can say they have unfeigned desires to be found in Christ, and to be in covenant with God, and to part with every known sin, and also willing to be at all pains to prepare for this ordinance, in the use of the means of God's appointment, then they may adventure to come to it: for sincere desires to believe and close with Christ are some degrees of faith; and this sacrament is appointed for the relief, strengthening, and establishment of weak and doubting believers, who bewail their unbelief, and look to Christ for help, Isa. l. 10; xl. 11, 29, 31; Mark ix. 24, 25; Psal. x. 17; lxiii. 2, 5; Matt. xi. 28; xii. 29.

Q. What then is the meaning of that scripture, Rom. xiv. 23. He that doubteth is damned if he eat?

A. The apostle is there dissuading from eating of flesh that was sacrificed or dedicated to idols, for fear of giving offence: and his meaning is, he that doubts of that meat, whether it be lawful or not, and yet ventures on that, whereof he is not persuaded of its lawfulness, he wrongs his own conscience and offends God; which indeed is damnable in itself, as being against his light. The apostle is not speaking there of the Lord's supper, which is itself plainly a commanded duty, and the neglect whereof is infallibly sinful; but of eating flesh that had been dedicated to idols, which was doubtful in itself, and became plainly sinful, as it gave offence to weak brethren.

THE EXAMINATION OF OUR SINS.

Q. Seeing the next thing to be examined after our state is our sins and short-comings; how are we to examine these before our coming to the Lord's table?

A. We ought to set time apart, and convene our souls before God and conscience, and compare our hearts and lives with the rule of God's commandments. And for this end we must pray for the light and assistance of God's Spirit, look into our hearts, look back to our former ways, and take a full and particular view of all our sins, so far as we can remember, sins both original and actual, sins of youth and riper age, sins of heart and of life, sins of purpose and of practice, sins of omission and of commission, sins secret and open, sins in thoughts, words, and deeds. We are to consider our sins both against the first and second table of the law; how we have injured God, our neighbours, ourselves, with all the heinous circumstances and aggravations of our sins. And in order to get a full discovery of our manifold transgressions and sins against every one of God's commandments, let us seriously read over the questions in our Larger Catechism, concerning the duties required, and the sins forbidden in each of the ten commandments, and also concerning those aggravations (therein mentioned) which make some sins more heinous than others, with the scriptures there adduced for proving these things: and there we may get (through the blessing of God) a most surprising and humbling sight of our guilt and innumerable transgressions before God, both of omission and commission, of heart and life, secret and open, that may cause us, with bitter lamentation, to cry out with the psalmist, in prayer to God, Psal. xix. 12, "Who can understand his errors, cleanse thou me from secret faults." And in a special manner, we ought to search for our predominant sins and idols, and particularly to examine into those defilements and that guilt which we have contracted, whether by the lusts of our hearts, or the out-breakings of our lives, since the last approach we made to the Lord's table.

Q. What are those lusts and plagues of the heart that we should be most concerned about in self-examination?

A. They can scarcely be numbered, and therefore referring to the Larger Catechism, as aforecited, for a more particular view of them, I only add this word, that we ought, with deep concernment of soul, to inquire into these grievous heart-plagues, viz. our atheism, unbelief, worldly-mindedness, pride, impenitency, forgetfulness of God, slighting of Christ offered in the gospel, our aversion to duty, ingratitude for mercies, security and formality, unmindfulness of death and eternity; our heart-backslidings, wanderings, and wearying in duty, resting upon duties, forgetfulness of solemn vows, or malice, passion, envy, discontent, &c.

Q. What shall we think or say of those, who, upon self-examination, complain that they find these heart-plagues upon the growing hand in them, and hence are ready to conclude themselves hypocrites or unbelievers?

A. 1. If these heart-evils be strong or prevailing in them, and they not concerned or exercised upon that account, it is a very bad sign indeed. But if they be truly concerned, they ought to remember that the best of God's people have also complained of prevailing sins and heart-plagues, Psal. lxxv. 3; Rom. vii. 21, 23, 24.

2. Let us examine whether the power and prevalence of sin in us be such, as may be consistent with a gracious state, or not; (1.) Are these lusts and heart-plagues our daily grief and burden? Are they matter of exercise and trouble to us? Do we groan under them, pray and strive against them? Would we reckon it the greatest happiness in the world to be freed from them? And do the hopes of being delivered from them at last, sweeten the thoughts of death and heaven to us? Then it is a good sign, Psal. lxxvi. 18; Rom. vi. 24; Phil. i. 23. (2.) Do we carefully set ourselves to oppose and watch against the out-breakings of these lusts, whether in words or deeds; and sincerely desire and breathe after universal holiness? Then it is a good mark, Psal. xviii. 23; cix. 5, 6.

3. When any sin prevails or breaks out, are we humbled for it? Do we lay the whole blame on ourselves, and heartily approve of God's law? saying with Paul, "The law is spiritual:" yea, it is "holy, just, and good, but I (wretched I) am carnal, and sold under sin." O for an entire conformity to that holy and excellent law! Rom. vii. 13, 14, 22.

4. Are we restless till we flee to the blood of Christ for pardon of, and cleansing from, any such prevailing sin? and never in our element till we get the upper hand of it, and be in God's way again? Rom. vii. 24, 25.

5. Are we resolved in Christ's strength never to submit to, or to make peace with our lusts, but all our days to wage war against them, and cleave close to the Captain of our salvation, looking to him for sanctifying grace, furniture, and spiritual weapons for this warfare? Then it is a sign we are no hypocrites, but grace is in the heart, and faith will have the day at last, Acts xv. 9; Heb. xi. 33, 34; 1 John v. 4.

Q. But what shall be said of those who, after search, find the woful prevalence of the sad heart-plague of backwardness and unwillingness to duty, and especially secret duties; is there any comfort for such?

A. 1. Where this is found, and the heart is backward, particularly to secret prayer, it appears that corruption is in some strength, and gives ground for great searchings and thoughts of heart, and should be matter of deep humiliation in the sight of God.

2. They ought not hence to despair, if we consider that in the best of God's people, there is a mixture of willingness and unwillingness; they are composed of spirit and flesh, which act contrary to one another; so that many times "they cannot do the good which they would," Gal. v.

17; Rom. vii. 19. And hence it was that Christ made apology for his disciples, when they omitted watching and prayer, and fell asleep again and again, after warning and excitation thereto: "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak:" there was a weakness, weariness, and unwillingness in their flesh, though there was still a willingness in their spirit and renewed part, Matt. xxvi. 41.

3. Let us examine if we can say that our weariness and unwillingness is our greatest burden and affliction; that we are weary of it, resolve never to give way to it, but always to struggle against it, and keep up duty as we can. Then there is ground of hope, seeing our unwillingness is not yielded to; for if that were the case, we would turn our back on duty altogether. Let us not, in this case, wholly cast away our confidence, but wait and pray in hope, for a time of reviving, and a day of the Mediator's power.

Q. What shall these do, who, upon trial, find themselves guilty of great unthankfulness for mercies, yea, of backslidings and breach of solemn vows made at sacrament occasions? How can such adventure to approach again to the Lord's table?

A. 1. These things should be matter of great sadness and sorrow of heart to us; as certainly they will be to every sincere soul.

2. We ought not to sorrow as those who have no hope, but, in a humbling sense of these God-provoking evils, return to him whom we have grieved, with shame and blushing of face; and rightly "consider what an evil and bitter thing it is to forsake the Lord," Ezra ix. 5, 6; Jer. ii. 19.

3. Let us do all this with expedition; for not to be speedy in our return is, upon the matter, to approve and vindicate our former backsliding; which will still be more provoking.

4. We ought to consider and believe, that in our covenanted Redeemer there is sufficient fund for stocking and setting up poor bankrupt sinners of new; "for in him dwells all fulness," for his people's emptiness, and may be had too at a very cheap rate, Col. i. 19; Isa. lv. 1.

5. For our encouragement, let us take a view of his kindly and engaging invitations to bankrupt and backsliding souls to return to him again, with his free promises of pardoning mercy and sanctifying grace to them upon their so doing, Jer. iii. 1, 12—14, 22; Hos. xiv. 1—4. One would think a serious consideration of these many charming and alluring calls, might overcome and melt the most backsliding heart in the world! Can we but wonder and say, Certainly a merciful God is most earnest with us to return, when he doubles and triples his invitation in the same chapter, "Return, return, return, O backsliding children;" when he saith so to those who have most deeply revolted, Isa. xxxi. 6. Surely an ingenuous heart will melt into tears, and cry out, as Saul to David, though he was a man of a very hard heart and rugged nature, 1 Sam. xxiv. 16, 17, yet he wept and lifted up his voice, "Thou art more righteous than I, thou hast rewarded me good," &c. It affects the most hard-hearted person, and makes a very rugged nature to relent, to think we have been injurious to the most kind and obliging friend. But much more it will affect a believer's heart to think, "Have I done all this against a gracious Father that still pities and provides for me? All this against the special offers of his love, and the precious blood of his dear Son? All this against the yearning bowels of his mercy, and yet my heart so little moved?" "Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee: I am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants." Let us take this course, and we may expect our Father's heart will melt, the fatted calf will be killed, and the best robe brought out, and unworthy we made welcome again to his table.

Q. But how shall those return, or have any confidence to come to this table again, who have sinned against light and conscience, relapsed into the same sins after vows, sinned with deliberation, &c. Surely these are not the spots of God's children?

A. 1. These indeed are very heinous aggravations of sin, and call for great mourning and humiliation before God.

2. I know no sin that believers are absolutely secured against falling into, except that which is unto death.

3. It is not a way to pay our debt, or get free of heinous sins, to sink and despond without casting our eyes about us, and inquiring for a fund from whence they may be answered.

4. We are assured, by the faithful word of God, that there is a remedy provided for all sin, the greatest as well as the smallest; and that never any is put back that come to it for relief, 1 John i. 7; vi. 37; Isa. lv.

5. Let us see if we can say that our repentance, resolutions, and carefulness, gradually increases, as our guilt is renewed or heightened. It is not so with unrenewed men; for as their sin increaseth, their conviction and repentance decreaseth.

6. The greater our debts be, they lay greater obligation upon us to hasten to the rich treasure of God's pardoning grace, and put a special argument in our mouths to plead for it, Psal. xxv. 11, "Pardon mine iniquity, for it is great."

Q. But is there any hope of pardon for wilful sinning, when it is expressly said, Heb. x. 26, "If we sin wilfully, after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin?"

A. 1. That place is not to be understood of every wilful sin; but of a total renouncing and rejecting Christ by infidelity and apostacy, after we have known his truth, and been convinced that he is the only Saviour; which wilful sinning includes in it despite and malice against Christ, and is attended with final impenitency.

2. Though every degree of wilfulness and crossing of light be a grievous aggravation of sinning, and calls us to be humbled to the dust; yet we ought not to despond as if there was no hope; for none sin more against light, than sometimes the godly have done, such as David, Solomon, and Peter (who were clearly illuminated, and knew more of the evil of sin, and more of the will of God, than others about them) and yet they obtained pardon for their sins so heinously aggravated: and the same may we firmly expect for ours, if we be humbled for them, and flee speedily to the blood of sprinkling, resolving, in Christ's strength, against these and all other sins for the future.

Q. What is incumbent upon communicants, after they have discovered their sins, with their several aggravations by self-examination?

A. They ought to draw up a catalogue of them, as it were, and go humbly therewith to God in Christ, with ropes about their necks, sorrow in their hearts, tears in their eyes, and confessions in their mouths, and ingenuously spread it out before him, crying for mercy, and looking for pardon through the "blood of Christ, that cleanseth from all sin." They ought to lay hold on Christ and the promises, by faith, renew covenant with God in him, and turn from all their sins to the ways of holiness, Isa. lv. 7; lvi. 4; Joel ii. 12; Matt. xi. 28.

EXAMINATION OF OUR WANTS AND NECESSITIES.

Q. How are we to examine our wants and necessities, before our approaching to the Lord's table.

A. We ought seriously to consider and inquire into all the defects and needs of our souls, and labour to have a lively and particular sense of them upon our spirits, and come to Christ in this ordinance, as our head of influences, fountain of supplies, and treasure of grace, for the supply of all our wants, the redress of all our grievances, and answering all our complaints.

Q. What are these particular wants and needs of our souls, that we are specially to inquire into, at such a time?

A. As they are many, so we must be at great pains to find them out, and therefore we are to inquire particularly into the maladies of our souls, and the defects of our graces; and what are the reinforcements and supplies we mainly stand in need of. Let us ask ourselves: do we need more faith, wisdom, sincerity, self-denial, meekness, patience, humility, and brokenness of heart? Do we need a reviving to our languishing repentance, declining love, weak faith, staggering hope, and faint desires? Do we need food for our hungry souls, white raiment for our nakedness, eye-salve for our blindness, enlargement for our straitenings, loosing for our bonds, ease for our burdens, resolving to our doubts, peace to our troubled conscience, cordials for our faintings, comfort against our fears, strength for our feeble knees to enable us for our spiritual journey, and plasters for our manifold sores? Do we need cures for our darkness and ignorance, our hardness and impenitency, our unbelief and hypocrisy, our deadness and formality, our inconstancy and backslidings, our heart-wanderings and wearying in duty? Do we need a sight of our interest in Christ, a seal of our pardon, clear evidences of grace, a view of the King's face and of the promised land? Do we want returns to our prayers, supply of bodily necessities, relief under bodily distresses, support under heavy afflictions, patience and submission under losses, strength to resist temptations, preparation for sufferings and trials, grace to vanquish lust, or deliverance from atheistical and blasphemous thoughts? These and many others of our wants, griefs, and burdens, we ought particularly to examine and inquire into, before we approach to the Lord's supper.

Q. What is the necessity of our examining our wants and necessities so particularly, before such an ordinance?

A. Because it is the duty and interest of communicants to come with all their grievances to Christ in this ordinance; seeing here they have freely offered and exhibited to them all needful and suitable supplies treasured up in Christ's fulness. In this ordinance Christ sets himself upon a throne of grace, with a sceptre of mercy in his hand, and graciously waits to hear his people's complaints and petitions, saying to the believer, as Ahasuerus to Esther at the banquet of wine, "What is thy petition, and what is thy request; and it shall be granted to thee?" Esth. v. 6. And as he said to the blind men, "What will ye that I should do unto you?" Matt. xx. 32. Now without a due sense of our wants and necessities, we cannot make particular requests to Christ, nor can we look for any benefit from this feast, which is only provided for the hungry and sensible soul, Luke iv. 53; Psal. ix. 18; Isa. xlv. 3; Matt. ix. 12.

EXAMINATION OF OUR ENDS AND DESIGNS.

Q. How are we to examine our ends and designs, in approaching to the Lord's table?

A. I have before showed particularly, what are the ends and uses of the Lord's supper; we ought then to consider them before our approach, and ask our consciences, in the sight of God, if these indeed be the ends which we purpose and set before us in this solemn work; and see if we can appeal to the Searcher of hearts that it is not to please men, or to get ourselves a name, or for any such by-end, that we go to this holy table; but to obey the charge of our dying Saviour, to show forth his death; renew and seal our covenant with God in him, get nearness and communion with him, nourishment to our souls, and supply to our manifold wants.

Q. Why should we so particularly examine our ends and designs, before we come to the Lord's table?

A. 1. Because an all-seeing God looks especially to our ends and designs in our spiritual performances, and so must we. He noticeth people's ends in fasting, Zech. vii. 5, "Did ye at all fast unto me, even unto me?" Christ inquired into people's ends in going out to hear John, Matt. xi. 7, "What went ye out for to see?" And more especially will he notice our ends in going to his holy table, about which he hath given us such strict charge, 1 Cor. xi. 28, 29.

2. Because wrong ends will make the best actions abominable in the sight of God. Hence it was that he abhorred Jehu's zeal, the Jews' sacrifice, and the Pharisees' alms deeds, and good works, Hos. i. 4; Isa. i. 13; Matt. vi. 1, 2; xxiii. 5.

3. Because right and pure ends in this ordinance will excite us to preparation for it, beget reverence in us when we attend it, and awaken desires after the blessings which are here offered and exhibited.

EXAMINATION OF OUR GRACES AND QUALIFICATIONS.

Q. Ought all who come to the Lord's table to have saving grace, as necessary to qualify them for it?

A. Yes; for without saving grace in the heart, we are incapable of holding communion with God, or of putting forth those acts of faith, love, and repentance, which are necessary in partaking of this sacrament, Matt. vii. 16—18.

Q. What is saving grace?

A. It is a principle of spiritual life, purchased by Christ, and wrought in the souls of God's elect by the Holy Spirit, and ordinarily by the ministry of the word: whereby they are inclined and strengthened sincerely to think, act, and to do those things which God requires, and are well-pleasing to him, Eph. iv. 18; Heb. xiii. 12; xii. 28; Rom. xv. 16; John xvii. 17.

Q. By what evidences may we know if we have saving grace?

A. By those formerly given, concerning a saving change and the new heart, which may briefly be summed up in these two: 1. Saving grace turns the heart not only from sin, but against sin: so that the soul sincerely hates it, and seeks its destruction, both in heart and life, Ezek. xviii. 30, 31; Psal. cxix. 104; Gal. v. 24.

2. Saving grace turns the heart to God and godliness, and makes the soul willing and inclinable to do these things that are acceptable to God, cheerfully to obey the will of his precepts, and patiently to submit to the will of his providences, Isa. lv. 7; lvi. 4; Psal. cxix. 112; Job i. 21; Acts xxi. 13, 14.

Q. Can no hypocrite attain to saving grace?

A. No; for though some hypocrites have reformed their lives, and gone a great length in religious performances, and have attained to several qualifications which resemble true grace; yet none but believers attain to real and saving grace.

Q. How far may some hypocrites go in religion, and yet fall short of grace?

A. 1. They may attain to great gifts and knowledge in divine things; so did Balaam and Judas.

2. They may have a great profession and outward show of godliness; so had the foolish virgins, and the people of Sardis.

3. Their consciences may be awakened for sin, and they may tremble for fear of God's wrath; so was it with Judas and Felix.

4. They may confess sin, and express much sorrow for it; so did Ahab, Judas, and many of the Israelites, Exod. xxxiii. 4; Num. xiv. 39, 43; 1 Sam. vii. 3, 5.

5. They may leave off gross sins, and set about a great reformation of their lives; so did Herod and the Pharisees.

6. They may believe the truths and doctrine of Christ; so did Agrippa, and many of the Jews, John i. 33; Acts xxvi. 27.

7. They may show much zeal for these truths, both by promoting them and suffering for them; so did Judas and many others, 1 Cor. xiii. 3; Phil. i. 15, 16, 18.

8. They may show much love to ministers, and the ordinances dispensed by them; so did Herod with respect to John, and the Jews with respect to Ezekiel, Mark vi. 20; Ezek. xxxiii. 31, 32.

Nay, there is no grace or quality in true believers, but hypocrites may attain to something like it. They may have a sort of faith, repentance, love, delight, joy, desire, zeal, fear, mortification, contempt of the world, &c.

Q. How may we distinguish between true grace in believers, and the counterfeit grace that may be in hypocrites?

A. 1. In believers, the nature and heart is renewed; but in hypocrites, nature is but refined, for the old heart still remains.

2. True grace is situated mainly in the heart and affections; but the hypocrite's goodness is mainly in their external actions and deportment.

3. True grace is an immortal principle that abides constantly in the soul; but the hypocrite's goodness is like the "morning cloud and early dew, that vanisheth away."

4. True grace carries the believer a further length in religion than the hypocrite's goodness can do, even to renounce self, love God above all things, and hate every thing that is contrary to him.

Q. What are these attainments in graces and religion that hypocrites cannot arrive to?

A. Whatever length they may go in religion, or change be made upon them; yet they can never attain to these things that are peculiar to the truly gracious.

As, 1. Hypocrites can never attain to pure ends in their actings and performances; they never aim singly at God's glory, Christ's honour, and the good of souls; but still they desire to be seen of men. Their chief end is to get a reward either from God or man, or to evade trouble, either in their bodies or consciences here or hereafter.

2. They can never apprehend Christ altogether lovely, and the only satisfying good in the world, and be willing to part with all for him. For there is still something with them that they love better and prefer before Jesus Christ.

3. Hypocrites can never win the length to be truly grieved for indwelling sin, heart plagues, and those secret evils that would never turn to their shame before the world.

4. They can never attain to have a universal respect to all God's known commands, and to be as zealous for secret duties, as for those that are public.

5. They never attain to renounce all their own doings as filthy rags, and go beyond all things in themselves to Christ and his righteousness, desiring only to be found in him.

6. Hypocrites go not the length of being restless and unsatisfied, if they find not God's presence and communion with him in duties. They are easy, if they acquit themselves therein to the approbation of men or a natural conscience, although they want the approbation and countenance of God.

Q. Is it not an essential property of true grace, where it is, to grow?

A. Yes; because, 1. Grace is the "seed of God," 1 John iii. 9, and it is natural for seed to grow.

2. Because of the union of the gracious soul with Christ the head. All believers are branches ingrafted into this true vine, and therefore must grow, John xv. 5.

3. Because God hath appointed it, that hereby believers by degrees may be made meet for heaven, and ripened to be transplanted to the new Jerusalem, Col. i. 12; Prov. iv. 18.

Q. How may we know whether we grow in grace or not?

A. By these marks our growth may be discerned:

1. If we be growing downward in humility, and be still more vile in our own eyes, 1 Pet. v. 5.

2. If we be growing upward in heavenly mindedness, and the world still have the less room in our hearts, Heb. xi. 13.

3. If our appetites after spiritual food be increasing, 1 Pet. ii. 2.

4. If our consciences be growing more tender and watchful against sin; and if we notice the first rising of sin in the heart, and avoid all temptations to it, Gen. xxxix. 9, 10.

5. If we take more delight in spiritual exercises, prayer, praise, and meditation; or in these duties that are displeasing to the flesh, such as mortification, self-examination, mourning for sin, self-denial, &c.

6. If we be more concerned for the glory of God, the interest of Christ's kingdom, and the good of precious souls.

7. If we can trust in God when outward and visible helps fail, Heb. ii. 17, 18.

Q. Shall we conclude those to have no true grace who complain that grace is so far from growing in them, that they are sensible of a sad decay in it?

A. No; for, 1. Believers do not grow at all times; they have not only their spring time, but also their winter seasons, when their leaves wither through some prevailing temptation, and they seem to be on the decaying hand: for we see the church of Ephesus is charged with "falling from her first love," and yet a golden candlestick still, Rev. ii. 5.

2. Believers may mistake about their growth; they may judge their grace grown weaker, when really it is not, when only the sense of their corruptions is grown stronger, their temptations increase, or comforts are withdrawn; and yet in the mean time, grace may be in its vigour. Also the earnest thirstings of some after grace may occasion them not to notice what they have.

3. It is with the growth of grace as with the motion of the sun or the growth of plants, which we perceive better a while afterwards, than in the mean time of it, Mark iv. 26, 27.

Q. What are these sacramental graces or qualifications which we should especially inquire after and examine into, before our partaking of the Lord's supper?

A. There are these eight, viz. knowledge, faith, repentance, fear, love, thankfulness, holy desires, and new obedience; all of them necessary to fit us for a worthy partaking of this ordinance.

I.—CONCERNING KNOWLEDGE.

Q. Why is knowledge so necessary for worthy partaking?

A. 1. Because without knowledge we cannot "discern the Lord's body," which is absolutely necessary to be done, in order to escape God's judgments; which are denounced against those who do it not, 1 Cor. xi. 29.

2. Without knowledge we are not capable to examine ourselves, which is indispensably requisite before partaking, 1 Cor. xi. 28.

3. Without it we cannot repent; for how can we repent of sin, till we know the evil and dangerous consequences of it?

4. Without knowledge we cannot receive Christ in the sacrament; for how can we close with Christ till we know our wants and our need of Christ, together with Christ's fulness and fitness for us?

5. This is a feast appointed for believers, the friends of Christ; but ignorant persons are unbelievers, and enemies to Christ; they are under the power of Satan, and held by him in the chains of darkness; they are under the power of reigning sin; for ignorance itself is a great sin, and the root of many others, Eph. iv. 18, 19; Hos. iv. 1, 2; 1 Pet. i. 14.

Q. What is to be understood by discerning the Lord's body in the sacrament?

A. 1. Our putting a difference betwixt the consecrated elements and common bread and wine: looking upon them as a sacred representation of Christ's body and blood, and a seal of the covenant of grace to all worthy partakers.

2. Our making a solemn difference betwixt the body and blood of Christ, and that of a mere man; for it is the body of the Lord, even of him who is Jehovah.

3. Our looking through the elements to a bleeding Saviour, as offering up himself a sacrifice to atone divine justice for us; and discerning him as really present in the sacrament, exhibiting, offering, and actually bestowing himself, with the benefits of his death, to worthy communicants.

4. Our having some distinct views of Christ's sufferings, in the cause of them, the greatness of them, the necessity, value, and sufficiency of them; together with their great and glorious effects.

5. Our beholding a dying Saviour with suitable affections. We must discern him in the sacrament, so as to prize and esteem him highly: we must discern him, so as to wonder at his free love, and admire his condescendence: we must discern him, so as to look to him only for pardon and salvation, yield our hearts to him, hate and abandon sin that pierced him, and follow the Lamb wherever he goes.

Q. What is that knowledge which is needful and competent for worthy communicants?

A. 1. We must know God in his nature and essential perfections, and especially these attributes that shine most brightly in the sufferings of Christ, such as the wisdom, goodness, holiness, and justice of God. Also we must know God in his persons, that there is one God in three distinct persons, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and these three are one, and the same in essence. And that this God created the world by his power, and ruleth it by his providence.

2. We must know the fall of Adam, with the sad fruits of it on all his posterity. We must know what a happy state man was in before the fall, and what a sinful and miserable condition he is in now, of which I spoke before.

3. We must know where our help and remedy is to be found, viz. in Jesus Christ our only Saviour. We must know what Christ is in his two natures, God and man; in his three offices of prophet, priest, and king. We must know Christ in his commission, that he was sent of God; in his design in coming to the world, which was to redeem the elect; in the manner of his effecting our redemption, by his obedience and sufferings; the manner of applying it, by his intercession in heaven, and his Spirit on earth. We must know the nature and necessity of faith in order to our getting an interest in what Christ hath done and suffered: and the necessity of regeneration and a saving change, in order to our being happy. We must know the value and merits of Christ's sufferings, and the efficacy of his blood; that there is no justification but by his righteousness, and no sanctification but by his Spirit.

4. We must know the nature, ends, and uses, of the Lord's supper, what is represented by the bread and wine, and what we are to do at the communion-table.

Q. What kind of knowledge is it that communicants ought to have of these things?

A. 1. Not a literal or head knowledge only, not such a knowledge as a parrot hath, that may be taught to repeat the creed, without reason or sense to understand or believe one word it speaketh. But, 2. It must be a rational, heart-affecting and saving knowledge, that we must have of divine truths.

Q. What are the marks of this saving knowledge?

A. The saving knowledge, which believers have, and no hypocrites nor natural men can attain to, hath these characters.

1. It is a convincing and experimental knowledge; the soul firmly assents to, and feels the truth of what it knows, and saith of our Saviour's coming, with Paul, "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance," &c. 1 Tim. i. 15. There is as great a difference betwixt a natural man's and a believer's knowledge, as betwixt the knowledge in a naturalist and an Israelite, concerning manna. The one, by reading and study, knows more of the nature and effects of it; but the other, by tasting and feeding on it, knew it more feelingly and satisfyingly. So believers know Christ and his truths convincingly and experimentally, Psal. xxxiv. 8; 1 Pet. ii. 3.

2. It is a Christ-exalting and self-abasing knowledge: it makes the soul to value Christ at a high rate, and count all the glory of the world as loss and dung besides him. It lets us see that Christ is glorious, but we are vile: that Christ is full, but we are empty: that he is rich, but we are poor and naked, Phil. iii. 8, 9.

3. It is a confidential knowledge, it induces the heart to trust in God's mercy and power, and to accept of his Son Jesus Christ, as the only way to the Father, Psal. ix. 10; John vi. 40, 45.

4. It is a quickening and efficacious knowledge, warms the heart, transforms the soul, and reforms the life. As light and heat are inseparable, so divine light in the mind conveys a heat into the affections. It inflames the heart with love to Christ, and a desire to be like him; it determines the will to comply with duty, to avoid sin; it spurs on the soul to live up to its light, to be active in God's service, and run the ways of his commands, 2 Cor. iii. 18; Jam. iii. 17.

Q. Whence is it that believers get this saving knowledge?

A. From Jesus Christ, the great Prophet and Teacher of his church, who instructs them by his Spirit, as well as by his word: there is none that teaches like him, for he both gives light, and eyes to see the light; he not only opens the scriptures to his people, but he also opens their understandings to receive the truth, Job xxxvi. 22; Isa. xlii. 6, 7; Luke xxiv. 32, 45; Jer. xxiv. 7.

Q. Have not communicants, who are taught this saving knowledge, other thoughts and uptakings of divine things than natural men have?

A. Yes; their thoughts and uptakings of those things are far different from those of natural men, 1 Cor. ii. 14; i. 23, 24.

Q. What thoughts and uptakings have they of the covenant of grace, which is sealed in this sacrament?

A. That it is everlasting, well ordered in all things, and sure; and therefore they cheerfully consent to it, and venture their souls upon it, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5.

Q. What do they think of Christ crucified, who is here set before their eyes?

A. That he is a most glorious, well qualified, and all-sufficient Saviour, "able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him," Heb. vii. 25.

Q. What thoughts have they of sin that pierced him?

A. That it is the murderer of Christ, and the worst of evils, which therefore they will, through the help of divine grace, constantly abhor, Zech. xii. 10; Rom. xii. 9.

Q. What do they think of Christ's way, viz. holiness?

A. That it is both pleasant and advantageous, and therefore they will love it, and walk in it, Prov. iii. 17; Psal. xix. 11; cxix. 47, 48.

Q. What thoughts have they of Jesus Christ's people?

A. That they are the excellent ones of the earth, and the most desirable company in it, however they be despised by the world, Psal. xvi. 3; cxix. 63.

Q. What do they think of Christ's day?

A. That it is the choicest day of the week, holy, honourable, blessed, and enriching, being Christ's weekly market-day for our souls, Isa. lviii. 13, 14.

Q. What do they think of his word and ordinances?

A. That they are food to their souls, cordials to their hearts, a lamp to their feet, and a light to their paths, Psal. cxix. 50, 103, 105.

Q. What do they think of the ordinance of the Lord's supper?

A. That it is Christ's banqueting house, and a rare feast for the soul, which he hath in love provided for his people in the wilderness, Cant. ii. 4; Isa. xxv. 6; 1 Cor. v. 8.

Q. What do they think of this world?

A. That it is a strange country, the place of their pilgrimage, and that all in it is vanity, and vexation of spirit, Heb. xi. 13; Psal. cxix. 54; Eccl. i. 14.

Q. What do they think of the other world above?

A. That it is their country and their home, and the things of it are real, great, eternal, and very near, Illeb. xi. 16; 2 Cor. v. 1; iv. 18; 1 Cor. ii. 9.

II. CONCERNING FAITH.

Q. What sort of faith is it that worthy communicants ought to have?

A. Not a temporary faith, or a faith of miracles, nor a historical faith only, but a saving and justifying faith.

Q. What is the historical faith?

A. It is the assent of the understanding upon the truths of Christ revealed in the gospel, whereby a man believes and gives credit to these truths as certain and true. This is not saving faith itself, but it is absolutely necessary to it, as the foundation to the superstructure, and an excellent help to promote it; for the stronger our assent is to divine truth, the more lively will our saving faith be. The more strongly we believe in Christ's ability and sufficiency for the office of Mediator, the more are we helped to rely on him as our Mediator. Now, though saving faith can never be without this assent, or historical faith: yet historical faith may be, where saving faith is not, as is plain from John ii. 23; Acts viii. 13; Jam. ii. 19.

Q. What is saving faith?

A. It is a grace, or special gift of God to his elect, wrought in their hearts by the Spirit and word of God: whereby they, being convinced of sin and misery, and of their own inability to recover themselves out of their lost estate, do not only assent to the truth of God's records concerning Christ in his word, but also receive and rest upon Christ and his righteousness, for pardon of sin and salvation, according as he is offered in the gospel, Eph. i. 12, 13, 19; ii. 8; Acts xvi. 30; x. 43; 1 John v. 10, 11; John i. 12; Phil. iii. 9.

Q. What is the particular act of faith that is the mean of our justification before God?

A. It is not our knowledge, nor the mere assent of the understanding to scripture truths, that justifies us; but it is the receiving and resting upon Christ as a Priest, offering up himself a sacrifice to justice, and making satisfaction for our sins.

Q. What are the words and phrases whereby the Holy Ghost in the scripture expresses justifying faith?

A. It is sometimes expressed, 1. By coming unto Christ, John vi. 35.

2. By flying to Christ for refuge, Heb. vi. 18.

3. By casting our burdens on him, Psal. lv. 23.

4. By leaning on him, Cant. viii. 5.

5. By staying ourselves on him, Isa. i. 10.

6. By looking unto Christ, Isa. xiv. 22.

7. By taking hold of Christ, Isa. xxvii. 5.

8. By receiving of Christ, John i. 12.

9. By cleaving to him, Acts xi. 23.

10. By putting on Christ, Rom. xiii. 14.

11. By hungering and thirsting after him, Matt. v. 6.

12. By eating and drinking, John vi. 53.

13. By embracing the promises, Heb. xi. 13.

14. By trusting in Christ, Eph. i. 12, 13.

15. By seeking of Christ, Isa. lv. 6.

16. By running after Christ, Cant. i. 4, and running to Christ, Isa. lv. 5.

Q. Why is faith so necessary to worthy communicating?

A. It is impossible to please God in any duty without faith, and far less in this, where it is so highly necessary, and so much to be exercised. What can we do at the Lord's table without faith? seeing faith is the soul's eye that sees Christ in this ordinance. It is the hand that takes hold of Christ, and the arm that embraces him. It is the spiritual mouth and stomach that feeds on Christ. It is the bond of our union with Christ; it brings us into Christ's family, and makes us his children. And, lastly, it is the spring that moves all the other graces, and sets them on work: and therefore it is highly necessary at this ordinance, Heb. xi. 6; x. 22; John xvi. 31.

Q. What is implied in that saving act of faith, the soul's receiving and resting on Christ as exhibited in the sacrament?

A. It imports these things; 1. A lively sense of the soul's misery and danger without Christ.

2. A rejecting of all other dependencies and supports besides Christ, Hos. xv. 3.

3. A fixed resolution to look still to Christ, wait on him, and humbly submit to any thing for mercy; like Job and the woman of Canaan, Job xiii. 15; Matt. xv. 23, 25, 27.

4. A hearty consent of the soul to the covenant of grace and God's offer of salvation through Christ, with a cordial approbation of the gospel-way of salvation and the soul's acquiescing in it, as most excellent and suitable.

5. Our actual adventuring ourselves and our salvation upon a crucified Christ and his righteousness; casting our perishing souls into the bleeding arms of our High-priest and Surety for shelter and mercy; saying, "Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do?" I am well content with thy person and thy offices, with thy righteousness and purchase, priesthood and kingdom, laws and love, cross and crown. Though the receiving of Christ as a King be not the first and primary act of faith, yet it is consequential to it, and inseparable from it. The believer must cheerfully accept of Christ as a Prince on the throne, as a Priest upon the cross, Zech. vi. 13; John i. 12; Heb. ii. 17; Isa. lv. 4, 5; xxxiii. 22; Acts v. 31; Matt. xi. 28, 29.

Q. Why is faith so acceptable and well-pleasing to God, particularly in the act of communicating?

A. 1. Because it is a grace that humbleth the creature, strips it of its own worth, and excludes all boasting in the business of our salvation, Rom. iii. 27.

2. It highly exalts free grace, and sends us out of ourselves to look for all our comfort and happiness in the mercy of God through a Mediator, Rom. iv. 16; Eph. iii. 7, 8.

3. It puts the highest honour on God's beloved Son, approves his glorious undertaking, free love, and excellent offices: it makes Christ the alone ground of our justification and acceptance with God, and gives him all the glory of our salvation: which is most acceptable to God, 1 Pet. ii. 7; Matt. xvii. 5; 1 John iii. 23.

4. It is the grace that unites the soul to Christ, makes it one with him, and clothes it with the white robe of his righteousness; upon which account God delights in believers, and sees no iniquity in them, Phil. iii. 9; John xvi. 27; Num. xxii. 21.

5. Faith is the spring and first motion of all the rest of the sacramental graces, love, repentance, thankfulness, holy desires, and new obedience. It excites them, affords matter to them, and sets them all a-work, Lam. v. 2—4; 2 Pet. i. 5.

Q. How is saving faith wrought in the soul?

A. By the Spirit of God, who doth it by these two means:

1. He prepares the soul for faith by the ministry of the law, for thereby he discovers the evil and guilt of sin, and the dreadful wrath that is due for it. He humbles the soul for sin, makes it despair of relief from the creature, and convinceth it of its need of a Mediator, John xvi. 8; Rom. iii. 20; Acts iv. 12; Matt. ix. 12.

2. The Holy Spirit works faith in the soul by the ministry of the gospel. For thereby he discovers the ability and fulness of an offered Saviour, and the necessity and excellency of faith. He begets in the soul a high esteem of Christ, thirsting desires for him, and some hope of relief by him. He takes the soul wholly off from depending on its own righteousness, and makes it resolve to use all means to find Christ, fall down at his feet, and lay the whole stress of its salvation upon him alone, 1 Tim. i. 15; John iii. 16; 1 John iii. 23; Cant. iii. 2; v. 10; Phil. iii. 9.

Q. By what marks may we examine ourselves if we have true saving faith?

A. By the description, which is given before, of its nature, and the manner how it is wrought. Besides which, we may take these other marks.

1. True faith makes Christ exceeding precious to the soul in all his offices, as a prophet, priest, and king, and determines the soul to embrace him wholly and undividedly, and set him up as an absolute Lord over all its interests and concerns whatsoever, 1 Pet. ii. 7; Isa. lv. 4, 5.

2. It is attended with true repentance; for it softens the heart, and makes it bleed for sin that pierced Christ: and engages the soul to crucify sin, pursue it as Christ's enemy, and part with every beloved lust, Acts xx. 21; Mark i. 15; Zech. xii. 10; Isa. liii. 5, 6.

3. It makes a man very humble, and denied to his own will, wisdom, credit, ease, and worldly enjoyments, and especially to self-righteousness. It makes the soul content, and willing to be saved by Christ in his own way, without joining any thing with him to rob him of the glory of its salvation, Matt. xvi. 24; Phil. iii. 9; 1 Cor. i. 30, 31.

4. It inclines us to aim at Christ's honour in all our actions, whether we pray, read, or communicate; yea, even when we eat, drink, buy, or sell, 2 Cor. v. 14, 15; 1 Cor. x. 31.

5. It is attended with obedience to the will of God, and fruitfulness in good works, and makes the soul willing to serve Christ, as well as to be saved by him, Rom. xvi. 26; Jam. ii. 17, 18; Col. iii. 24.

6. It works by love, and makes the believer do all duties from a principle of love, and carries out the heart to love God for sending Christ into the world, and to love every thing that bears Christ's image. And so sincere is his love, that it prompts him to duty and keeps him back from sin, much more than the law, or fear of hell, doth, Gal. v. 6.

7. It not only reforms the life from the practice of sin, but purifies the heart from the love of sin, by arguing against it from the word, and applying the blood of Christ to the soul, Acts xv. 9; John xvii. 17; Zech. xiii. 1.

8. True faith inclines and encourages the soul to draw near unto God in prayer, for the accomplishment of those things it relies on Christ for, Heb. iv. 16; Rom. x. 12—14; Psal. cxviii. 25, 26.

Q. What shall these poor discouraged souls do, who have been examining their faith, but are not able to lay claim to these marks, and still fear they have no faith; can such adventure to come to this ordinance, where faith is so absolutely necessary?

A. 1. Faith indeed is absolutely necessary at the Lord's table, but it is not absolutely necessary that we should know it. Assurance is not essential to faith, for there may be true faith wrought in the souls of some, who yet do not perceive it. The mists of guilt, Satan's temptations, and their own fear, may so rise up and obscure their knowing faculty, that they cannot see "the things that are freely given to them of God," 1 Cor. ii. 12.

2. There is some faith so weak and small, that it can scarcely be discerned by us, which yet may be real, sincere, and acceptable before God. And this is expressed in the lesser degrees and workings of faith, which yet are true faith; such as these,

(1.) A total renouncing of our own righteousness; with a resolution never to depend upon any thing in ourselves, or any other, besides Christ, Hos. xiv. 3.

(2.) A good opinion and esteem of Christ, with a persuasion of his power, fulness, and suitability to our miserable circumstances. This was all that the leper and woman with the bloody issue had, when they first came to Christ, Matt. viii. 2; ix. 21.

(3.) An earnest desire, or a hunger and thirst after Christ and his righteousness, Psal. xliii. 1; Matt. v. 6.

(4.) A willingness to be the Lord's, and wholly resigned to him, to be managed and disposed of as he pleaseth, Psal. cxix. 94.

(5.) A deep and heart-affecting sense of that grievous clog, unbelief, that hinders the soul's motion towards Christ, Mark ix. 24.

(6.) A serious resolve and endeavour of the soul to go out to Christ, throw itself at his feet, and die at his door, though he should not have mercy. Now these desires, motions, and workings of the heart, in a sensible sinner, are some degrees of true faith which God will not despise, Neh. i. 11; Mark ix. 24, 25; John xiii. 15; Matt. xii. 20.

3. Seeing Christ is a most tender-hearted and compassionate Saviour, that will not "break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax;" but is content to accept of those that come to him with a weak and trembling hand: such weak and doubting believers ought certainly to come to Christ in the sacrament, where he seats himself on a throne of mercy to wait for needy sinners, and hath graciously appointed this ordinance for strengthening and increasing weak faith.

4. Such weak and discouraged souls should narrowly watch the seasons of God's near approaches in the ordinances, and these special golden minutes when the Spirit strives, the Father draws, bowels of mercy yearn, and heaven's gales blow; and presently take hold of, strike in with, and improve them: as Benhadad's servants watched for the word brother from the king of Israel's mouth, and hastily caught it, 1 Kings xx. 33.

Q. Are we not utterly unworthy to receive such a glorious Saviour in the arms of faith? How can we expect that he will match with such vile wretches as we are?

A. I answered this objection before, when treating of covenanting with God, to which the reader is referred. I only add these things,

1. That seeing this glorious Redeemer freely offers himself to the most unworthy, he ought readily and without hesitation to be entertained by us: for though we be most unworthy of receiving Christ, yet he is most worthy of our acceptance, 1 Tim. i. 15.

2. This exalted Saviour thinks it no disparagement to suit his worthiness to our unworthiness, his riches to our poverty, his eye-salve to our blindness, his white raiment to our nakedness, and his fulness to our emptiness: for he saith to the unworthiest sinner that comes to him, "All thy wants be on me;" and though thou hast no beauty of thine own, yet "I will make thy beauty perfect through my comeliness put upon thee; and so the King will greatly desire thy beauty," Ezek. vi. 14; Psal. xlv. 10, 11.

3. Though there be a great show of humility in this objection, yet there is often no small pride at the root of it. For if there be ground of objecting against us upon the score of unworthiness, it becomes us to let it come from Christ's side; but so wedded are we to the old covenant of works, that we would be at giving as good as we get, or at least some thing in lieu of it: but our money and qualifications will perish with us, if we think to buy such a prize as glorious Christ. If we be not content to accept of Christ on the score of infinite free grace and matchless condescending love, we can never expect to enjoy him, Isa. lv. 1, 9; Rom. xi. 33; Eph. iii. 18, 19. Free grace is an ocean of such a depth and breadth, that it never yet hath been sounded or measured by men or angels: nay, to all eternity it will be acknowledged it hath neither bank nor bottom.

III. CONCERNING REPENTANCE.

Q. Seeing repentance is another sacramental grace, which we must necessarily examine ourselves about; what is that repentance which worthy partakers must have?

A. True repentance, or repentance unto life, is a saving grace, or a special gift of God to elect sinners, wrought in their hearts by his Spirit and word, whereby, upon a due sight and senso of the danger, guilt, and odiousness of their sins; and upon a discovery and belief of the mercy of God in Christ to such as are penitent; they mourn for, and hate their sins, confessing them to God with shame and grief, and turn from them all to God, and the ways of holiness, both in heart and life, Zech. xxii. 10; Acts xi. 18, 21; Ezek. xviii. 30; xxxvi. 31; Joel ii. 12, 13; Jer. xxxi. 18, 19; 2 Cor. vii. 11; Prov. xxviii. 13; 2 Kings xxiii. 25.

Q. What are the parts of true repentance?

A. There are these parts in it, 1. Conviction. 2. Discovery of God's mercy in Christ. 3.

Humiliation. 4. Confession. 5. Hatred of sin. 6. Turning from sin. 7. Turning to God and his ways.

Q. Wherein consists true conviction of sin?

A. In a right uptaking of the nature and evil of sin, and a sense of the wrath of God that is due to it.

Q. What is it in sin that the soul must be convinced of?

A. We must be convinced of sin, 1. In respect of its source and fountain, from whence all our actual sins proceed, and that is, our corrupt nature and wicked heart, Psal. li. 5; Jer. xvii. 9; Matt. xv. 18, 19.

2. In respect of its intrinsic evil and malignity, that it is enmity and rebellion against God, Rom. viii. 7.

3. In respect of its pollution and deformity, that it renders us vile and loathsome in the sight of God, Zech. xi. 8.

4. In respect of the number of our sins, that they are more than our hairs, Psal. xi. 12.

5. In respect of the aggravation from the heinous circumstances attending the commission of them.

6. In respect of the guilt and demerit of them, that we have thereby forfeited all our mercies, and deserve everlasting wrath.

Q. What is the difference between the convictions of natural men, and those of true penitents?

A. 1. Natural men's convictions proceed only from a natural conscience, awakened upon some occasion: but those of a true penitent are the special work of the Spirit of God, Exod. ix. 27; John xvi. 8.

2. Natural men's convictions are most unwelcome and burdensome to them: but the true penitent is desirous of them, Acts xxiv. 25; Job xiii. 23; xxxiv. 3.

3. The natural man's convictions are mainly for gross sins, and the out-breakings of the life; but the true penitent is also sensible of the corruption of the nature, plague of the heart, and sins most secret, Matt. xxvii. 4; Psal. li. 5; Rom. vii. 24; Psal. xix. 12.

4. Natural men's convictions proceed from the fear of hell or temporal judgments; but those of the true penitent arise mainly from a view of sin's evil, God's goodness, his patience, or Christ's sufferings, Psal. lxxviii. 34; Luke xv. 18; Zech. xii. 10.

5. The one is only of short continuance, but the other is abiding and durable, Hos. vi. 4; Psal. li. 3.

6. The one is cured by natural means, but the other only by the blood of Christ, Acts xvi. 30, 31.

Q. Why is the discovery of God's mercy in Christ a necessary ingredient to true repentance?

A. 1. Because God out of Christ is a consuming fire; and so, without a sight of his mercy in Christ, we would never turn from sin to him, but would be ready to sink with Judas, under tormenting despair, Heb. x. 41; xii. 29.

2. Because the apprehension of the mercy of God in Christ is a great encouragement to us to leave sin, and a mean to affect our heart with kindly grief and godly sorrow for sin, Psal. cxxx. 4; Rom. iii. 4.

Q. Wherein consists true humiliation for sin?

A. In these things, 1. In a real inward sorrow and bleeding of heart for sin, and the dishonour done thereby to God, Psal. li. 3, 4; Zech. xii. 10.

2. In a holy shame and blushing of soul for sin in the sight of God, Ezra ix. 6.

3. In the soul's loathing and abhorring itself for its unworthy carriage towards so gracious a God, Job xlii. 6.

4. In outward mourning for sin, and bewailing it before the Lord, Psal. xxxviii. 18.

Q. What is the difference between the humiliation of a natural man, such as Ahab, and that of a true penitent?

A. There is such a difference, as between the convictions of natural men and true penitents, of which I spoke before. I only add this, that a natural or unrenewed man's sorrow and humiliation for sin, is not so much for sin itself, as for the effects and consequences of it, as it exposes him to temporal or eternal judgments, as it deprives him of outward mercies, blasts his reputation, breaks his employment, brings on corporal punishment here, or makes him obnoxious to hell-fire hereafter. But the true penitent mourns for sin, as it displeases and dishonours God, wounds Christ, grieves his Spirit, and gratifies the devil. Also he grieves for it, as it defiles the soul, indisposes for holy duties and debars from communion with Christ.

Q. What sort of confession of sin is requisite to true repentance?

A. 1. It must be cordial and sincere: not superficial and imperfect, Job xlii. 6.

2. It must be free and voluntary, and not extorted by judgments or the fear of hell, Matt. xxvii. 4; Luke xv. 18.

3. It must be particular and distinct, so far as we can remember our past sins; and not rest in generals, Judg. x. 10; Psal. li. 4. 14; 1 Tim. i. 13.

4. It must be humble and mournful, and attended with holy shame and self-condemnation, Dan. ix. 8; Luke xviii. 13; Psal. xxxiv. 4, 18.

5. It must be attended with present forsaking of sin, Prov. xxviii. 13.

Q. What sort of hatred of sin is it, that is an ingredient of true repentance?

A. It hath these properties: 1. It is a sincere and well-grounded hatred: unrenewed men may hate sin because of its effects; but a true penitent hates it, because it is vile and loathesome in the eyes of God, the murderer of Christ, and an enemy to his own soul.

2. It is a deep and implacable hatred; a natural man can have no such hatred of sin; it is only a slight or transient quarrel he may have with sin upon some particular occasion, and hence he may proceed to lop off some of the branches of sin, but he strikes not at the root, the corruption of the heart; he seeks not to put the old man to death: but the true penitent hates sin implacably; he seeks its ruin, aims at its life, and would have it utterly extirpated; and longs for the time when he shall be wholly delivered from it, Rom. vii. 24; 2 Cor. v. 4.

3. It is an universal hatred: a natural man may hate some odious gross sins, or sins that are neither pleasant nor profitable to him: but the true penitent hates sin as sin, and so hates every sin, whether secret or open, pleasant or profitable, in himself or in others, Psal. cxix. 128.

Q. What sort of turning from sin is requisite to true repentance?

A. 1. A turning that proceeds from right principles, not from the dictates of a natural conscience only, or respect to human laws, or from fear of God's judgment: but from a sense of the intrinsic evil of sin, the holiness and goodness of God, or a view of Christ's sufferings.

2. It must be a present turning from sin, without delaying one moment longer, Psal. cxix. 59, 60.

3. A final and everlasting turning, without ever looking back to Sodom again, or entertaining a favourable thought of sin, that killed the Lord of life, Hos. xiv. 8.

4. An universal turning from all sin, both in heart and life; no Agag must be spared, nor any darling lust reserved, Isa. lv. 5; Ezek. xviii. 30, 31.

5. It must be attended with turning to God, and all commanded duties; for we must not only cease to do evil, but learn to do well, Isa. i. 16, 17; Isa. lv. 7.

6. This turning ought to be with all the heart, and with fasting, weeping and mourning, Joel ii. 12.

Q. What is this turning to God, which is included in true repentance?

A. It implies these things: 1. A sight and sense of our undone condition, while we live and continue at a distance from God, and the great happiness of nearness to him, Psal. lxxiii. 27, 28.

2. The outgoings of the soul to God in spiritual breathings and desires, Isa. xxvi. 8; Job xxiii. 3.

3. The humble application of the soul to God in Christ, for mercy and pardon, Psal. li. 1.

4. The soul's making choice of God for its God and portion, Jer. iii. 22.

5. Our resigning and giving up both the inward and outward man to God's service and obedience.

We must turn both our hearts and feet to God's testimonies, Psal. cxix. 57—59.

Q. Why is fasting necessary to be joined with our repentance and turning unto God?

A. Because God hath enjoined it as a good mean to wean the heart from the world, quicken prayer, and kindle zeal. And it carries in it somewhat of a holy revenge upon the flesh or body for its former excesses, which is very acceptable to God; though it cannot in the least make satisfaction to justice for sin, 2 Cor. vii. 11.

Q. Are tears absolutely necessary to true repentance?

A. They are very desirable expressions of our grief for sin. God noticeth the tears of true penitents, and puts them up in a bottle, Psal. lvi. 8. Yet sometimes there may be a tender heart, where are few tears to be seen, because the bodily constitution may be dry, and not qualified for producing tears. But if we can command tears for other things, such as worldly losses and crosses, and can find none to shed for sin, we may suspect that our repentance is not true.

Q. But what shall those do who find their hearts so hard that they can neither get tears, nor any true grief for sin?

A. 1. This has been the complaint of many of God's people, that their hearts are hardened from God's fear, Isa. lxiii. 17.

2. Let us consider if our hard-heartedness be our great burden and trouble. Can we say, that it is our daily complaint to God, and that we would give all we have in the world to have our hearts brought to tenderness, and even live beggars upon this condition? then surely there is some life and tenderness in the soul.

3. Let us go to Christ, and plead for the blessed Spirit of grace, which he hath both purchased and promised, to take off the veil of darkness from our hearts, and the scales of blindness from our eyes; that we may see sin in its blackness and deformity: let us cry to him with Job, iii. 23, "Make me to know my transgression and my sin." And let us plead his free promise, Ezek. xxxvi. 26.

4. Let us oft be aiming to apply the softening blood of Christ to our hard hearts. And oft be viewing sin in the bright looking-glass of his sufferings? O! can we see our sins binding a heavy cross on Christ's back, driving big nails into the most sensible parts of his body, and piercing his heart with sorrow, and yet our hearts remain unpierced? Shall the rocks rend, and the earth shake, the sun draw in its light, and the heavens mourn in black, when Christ suffered for our sins, and yet we stand unconcerned? Surely there is not such a heart-affecting sight either in earth or hell, as the death of our innocent Redeemer.

Q. Why is repentance and sorrow for sin so necessary to right communicating?

A. 1. Because it is necessary for our access to, and communion with God in any duty. It is to such that God hath promised to look, and with such that he is pleased to dwell. It is only humble and penitent addresses that he will accept; and thence he preferred a broken heart to all sacrifices, Psal. li. 16, 17; x. 17; xxxiv. 18; Isa. lvii. 15; lxvi. 1. But impenitent persons are hateful to God, and can have no communion with him, Psal. v. 5; xlviii. 11.

2. Because in this sacrament, we enter into, and renew covenant with God; and penitent mourning for long distance and estrangement, to many sins and backslidings, is previously requisite thereunto, Jer. l. 4, 5.

3. Because here we are to receive the seal of the pardon of our sins, and it is only a soft heart that can receive the impression of this seal, Luke viii. 44, 48; xxiv. 47.

4. Because nothing suits a broken Christ so well as a broken heart. In this ordinance we behold God punishing his Son for sin, and Christ breathing out his dying groans for it; and surely it is most fit that our hearts should bleed for it; if Christ wash our souls with his blood, in gratitude we should wash his feet with our tears, Zech. xii. 10; Luke vii. 38, 47.

5. Because, without repentance, we cannot prize the great blessings and comforts exhibited to us in this ordinance. None but the sensible sinner and humble penitent will value the blood of Christ, the pardon of sin, and favour of God, which are here offered, Matt. ix. 12; Luke i. 53; Prov. xxvii. 7.

6. Because repentance is absolutely necessary for killing of sin, and reforming the life, which is one great end in this ordinance. As God here lets us see his love to Christ, so he discovers the bitterness of sin, that we may hate and forsake it; now it is by repentance that we taste of sin's bitterness, and the necessity hereof at this ordinance was prefigured by the bitter herbs with which the children of Israel were appointed to eat the passover, Exod. xii. 8.

Q. Hath not repentance many counterfeits?

A. Yes; for, 1. Some confess their sin who never forsake it; as those, Num. xiv. 40; 1 Sam. xv. 24. That was but a counterfeit repentance.

2. Some may have slight, superficial sorrow, and outward expressions of mourning, where the heart is not touched for sin, 1 Kings xxi. 27.

3. Some may have the heart rent with legal convictions and terrors, as Judas and Felix had, and yet never broken or melted for sin.

4. Some may have a natural softness and tenderness of spirit, whereby they are apt to relent and shed tears at the hearing of any tragical story, or seeing any moving object, and yet, never truly weep, to see their own sin. The story of Joseph in the pit will affect them as soon as that of Christ upon the cross.

5. Some have several good motions and pangs of sorrow, at hearing of a sermon, or when they are under the rod, which yet soon vanish, Hos. vi. 4; Mark vi. 28.

6. Some come under express vows and resolutions against sin, in time of sickness and distress, or when conscience is awakened: who yet are never true penitents for sin, Num. xxii. 17; Jer. ii. 20; 1 Sam. xxvi. 21.

7. Some may not only leave off gross sins themselves, but express great zeal against the sins of others, as Jehu did against the worship of Baal, and Judas did against prodigality, and yet be strangers to true repentance, 2 Kings x. 16, 28, 29; Matt. xxvi. 8, compared with John xii. 4, 5. All these then are but counterfeited repentance.

Q. By what marks, then, shall we examine our repentance, if it be true, and not counterfeited?

A. By these already mentioned, in the parts and description of repentance before given. To which I add these;

1. A true penitent is more grieved for the evil of sin, than for the evil of affliction; and more troubled for abusing the goodness of a father, than for drawing down the wrath of a judge, Luke xv. 18.

2. The true penitent lays the axe of repentance to the root of sin, viz. the corrupt heart; he pants for deliverance from it, and for a greater degree of heart-purity and renovation, Psal. li. 10; Rom. vii. 24.

3. The true penitent is highly concerned and careful to apply to the blood of Christ both for pardon from the guilt of sin, and sanctification from the pollution of sin; for true repentance and saving faith are inseparable, Psal. li. 1, 7; Acts ii. 38; xx. 21; Mark i. 15.

4. Let us examine our repentance by these adjuncts and fruits of it recorded in 2 Cor. vii. 11. If it works in us, (1.) Carefulness to avoid sin, and preserve ourselves from it. (2.) Clearing of ourselves by self-examination, and applying to Christ our surety. (3.) Indignation against sin as the enemy of God, the murderer of Christ, and destroyer of our souls. (4.) Fear of being defiled again with sin, which excites to watch against temptations and inlets to it. (5.) Vehement desires after a total deliverance from it, and after Christ our deliverer and his righteousness. (6.) Zeal for God's honour, by new obedience, and bringing forth fruits meet for repentance. (7.) Revenge upon sin, by mortification, because it crucified Christ. (8.) There is a holy shame upon the remembrance of sin; not that of a thief, because of the punishment and disgrace, but that of a son, because of the ingratitude and loathsomeness of sin, Ezek. xvi. 63.

IV.—CONCERNING HOLY FEAR.

Q. What is this fear that is requisite to worthy communicating?

A. It is a holy awe and reverence of God, wrought in the renewed heart by the Holy Spirit, whereby the soul, out of a deep sense of God's majesty and goodness, is inclined to draw nigh to God in Christ, stand in awe to offend him, avoid sin as the greatest evil, and study the things that are pleasing to God, Jer. xxxii. 40; v. 22; Psal. cxxx. 4; Heb. xi.; Gen. xxxix. 9; Job i. 1, 7; Acts x. 35.

Q. What is the necessity of this holy fear at the Lord's table?

A. Because when we go to the Lord's table, we solemnly place ourselves in the presence of the great Jehovah, who is our judge, the searcher of our hearts, and the all-seeing observer of our actions; and a God that is very jealous of his honour, and "will be sanctified of all that draw nigh to him," Lev. v. 3; Heb. xii. 28, 29.

2. Because, at the Lord's table, we have a most awful discovery of the holiness and justice of God in the sufferings of Christ there represented. How vehemently did he hate sin, that he would not spare his dear Son when he cried, nor abate one farthing of the debt he owed justice as our Surety, but exacted full satisfaction, and punished sin to the uttermost? The heavens darkened, and the earth shook, when God punished Christ for sin, and ought not we, the guilty sinners, to tremble and adore his justice, saying with the Bethshemites, "Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God?" 1 Sam. vi. 20.

3. Because this holy fear is an excellent preservative against wandering thoughts, a spur to mind our work, and excite the graces of liveliness, and do every thing as in the sight of an all-seeing God, Psal. lvi. 8; Gen. xxxix. 9; Neh. i. 11.

4. Because of the importance of the work of communicating, and the danger of miscarrying in it. We have ground to fear and be jealous of ourselves, lest we be found unwelcome guests, and want the wedding-garment when the king comes in to see his guests. We have cause to fear, lest we miss Christ's presence and the seal of our pardon: yea, lest we be guilty of wounding Christ, and eating and drinking judgment to ourselves, by unworthy communicating; but a holy fear is a good mean to prevent this hazard.

Q. How may we know whether we be actuated by a holy or a slavish fear, in this and other religious duties?

A. 1. A holy filial fear of God is always joined with love to him; but a slavish fear is attended with some degree of enmity and hatred against God, Hos. iii. 5; Rom. viii. 7.

2. Slavish fear dreads God because of his power and justice; but filial fear also, because of his goodness and loving-kindness, Hos. iii. 5.

3. Slavish fear is attended with a shyness of God's presence; but filial fear puts the soul on to seek nearness with God, Gen. iii. 10; Psal. lxxxiii. 27, 28; Hos. iii. 5.

4. Slavish fear dreads nothing but hell and the punishment of sin; but filial fear dreads sin itself as the greater evil of the two, Psal. vi. 4; iv. 4; Acts xxiv. 25.

5. Slavish fear makes men averse from the light of the word and a faithful ministry; but filial fear makes us suspicious of ourselves, and willing to be tried, John iii. 20, 21; 1 Kings xxii. 8.

6. Slavish fear restrains only from the external acts of sin, and puts men on to external performances in duty only; but godly fear makes a man guard even against inward and secret sins, and study to please God inwardly as well as outwardly, and give him the heart as well as the life, Isa. viii. 13.

V.—CONCERNING LOVE.

Q. What is that love which a worthy communicant ought to have?

A. There is a three-fold love necessary: 1. Love to God and godliness. 2. Love to the people of God. 3. Love to our enemies.

Q. What is true love to God?

A. It is a special affection or saving grace, wrought by God's Spirit in the hearts of his people, whereby, from a special discovery of the glory and excellency of God, their souls are determined to have a high and superlative esteem of him, their desires are carried out after him, and their delights are centered on him, as their chief good and portion, Rom. v. 5; Psal. lxxiii. 25; xlii. 1, 2; xvi. 5, 6.

Q. Why is love to God and Christ so necessary to worthy communicating?

A. 1. Because this sacrament is a love feast, appointed for expressing the mutual love and affection of Christ and his people to one another, and therefore it is designed only for his friends and disciples. Now how contrary is it to the nature of this ordinance, for people to approach to it without love! Or to sit down to his love-feast with enmity in their hearts at the master of it! Cant. v. 1; Matt. xxvi. 27.

2. Because we have here the highest representation of divine love that ever was given.

Here we may see both the arms and heart of the Son of God open on a cross to us, with his affections streaming out to us in blood: and we may hear the dying groans of the Lamb of God just expiring under the burden of wrath that was due to us. And what a monstrous thing would it be for us to want love to him at such a time! Gal. ii. 20; Eph. v. 2; Rev. i. 5.

3. Because other graces which are to be exercised in this ordinance, very much depend upon love; without it we cannot be heavenly-minded in this duty, we cannot have high thoughts of Christ, we cannot delight in him, nor have any hungering desires after him. Without love to Christ we cannot hate sin, nor be grieved for it; nay, we may see the print of the nails, and put our fingers into his wounds, without any remorse for sin that made them. Mary's tears were most free when her love was most hot, Luke vii. 37, 38; Isa. liii. 2, 3.

4. Without love to Christ we can have no benefit by the sacraments, for we can have no communion with God, nor any manifestations of his favour without it, seeing these are only promised to such as love him, John xiv. 21, 23.

5. Because the want of this love brings men under the severest curse, 1 Cor. xvi. 22.

Q. Must not our love to God at the sacrament be directed to all the persons of the glorious Trinity?

A. Yes; we must love God the Father as our Father; God the Son as our Mediator and Redeemer; and God the Holy Ghost as our Sanctifier and Comforter.

Q. How may we know if we love God the Father as our Father?

A. By our filial respect and dutiful carriage to him; if we fear him, and stand in awe to offend him, if we be tender of his honour, troubled at his frowns, desirous of his presence, and careful to please him. If we depend on him for what we want; love to address him; imitate him in his holiness, and obey his injunctions, Mal. i. 6; Psal. cxxxix. 20, 21; xxx. 7; Isa. lvi. 4, 5; Rom. viii. 15; 1 Pet. v. 7; Eph. v. 1; 1 Pet. i. 14, 15.

Q. How may we know if we love God the Son, as our Mediator and Redeemer?

A. By our accepting of him, and improving him in all his mediatory offices: learning of him as our prophet, relying on him as our priest, and obeying him as our king: and by our renouncing all other lords and saviours besides him, Mat. xi. 28, 29; Isa. xvi. 13; Heb. v. 9; Eph. i. 12, 13.

Q. How may we know if we love the Holy Ghost, as our Sanctifier and Comforter?

A. By our hearkening to his calls, seeking his assistance in duties, laying ourselves open to his influences, cherishing his motions, and delighting in those duties and ordinances where his operations are to be expected, and desiring to be directed and guided by him in all our ways, Psal. xxvii. 8; 1 Thess. v. 19; Eph. iii. 16; Psal. lxxiii. 2; clxxiii. 10, 11; Rom. viii. 14.

Q. Seeing love to Christ, our crucified Saviour, is especially requisite at the Lord's table; by what marks may we examine our love to him, if it be true and not counterfeit?

A. By these: 1. Let us see if we can give any reason for our love to him; if we love him not only for what he hath done for elect sinners in general, but for what he hath done for us in particular, in hearing our cry, and helping us when we were brought low under a burden of guilt and fears, Psal. cxvi. 1, 6, 8.

2. If we love him, also, because of his own intrinsic beauty, matchless worth, and personal excellencies, that render him altogether lovely in himself, as well as a suitable Saviour to us, Cant. v. 10—16.

3. If our hearts and thoughts be frequently going out towards him, and our meditation of him be sweet; for surely, if Christ be our treasure, our hearts will be with him, Psal. civ. 34; Mat. vi. 21.

4. If we be earnestly desirous of his gracious presence in duties and ordinances, and languish for him when he withdraws, Psal. lxxxiv. 1, 2; Cant. iii. 1—3; v. 8.

5. If we have common friends and common enemies; love what Christ loves and hate what he hates; if we rejoice when his name his great, and his interest flourishes, and grieve when any wrong or dishonour is done to him, either by ourselves or others, 1 John v. 1, 2; Psal. cxxxix. 21, 22; xcvi. 10; John xiv. 28; Psal. cxvii. 9.

6. If we love Christ and his interest in all states and conditions; own him under persecution and reproach, and highly esteem a crucified, as well as a glorious Christ, a condemned as well as an adored Christ, Cant. viii. 6, 9.

7. If we love Christ wholly, and all that is in him; love him in all his offices, in his death as a sacrifice, and in his life as a pattern; love him as a prince on the throne, as well as a priest on the cross; love him for purity, as well as pardon; for sanctification, as well as satisfaction. No lover of Christ will desire a disjunction of Christ's priestly and princely offices, for he sees them sweetly linked together; and hence it is that Christ is styled "a Priest upon a throne," Zech. vi. 13. And therefore he will love his laws to obey them, his ordinances to attend them, his sabbaths to sanctify them, and his people to associate with them, John xiv. 21; 2 Cor. v. 14, 15; 1 John v. 1—3; Psal. cxix. 63.

8. If we love Christ above our relations, enjoyments, and dearest things we have in the world, yea, even life itself, Mat. x. 37; Acts xxxi. 13; Rev. xii. 11.

9. If we be breathing after fresh intimations of Christ's love to us, and seeking still more assurance and evidences of it, Cant. i. 2. 3; viii. 6.

Q. What shall these exercised souls do, that suspect their love to Christ not superlative; that they love him not above their relations and dearest enjoyments in the world? By what marks do we know if we do?

A. By these: 1. If no affection to any creature can draw us willingly or wittingly to do that which is displeasing to Christ.

2. If we value Christ's friendship and favour more than that of any creature, and would choose rather to displease all the world than offend him.

3. If the loss of Christ's countenance, or any injury done to him, affect our hearts more than any worldly loss or damage.

4. If it be our greatest grief, that we cannot get more love to Christ. And, if we can appeal to himself, who knoweth our hearts, with Peter, that we love him sincerely, though not so much as we ought, John xxii. 17; Eph. vi. 24.

Q. Are there not many who have left their first love, like these, Rev. ii. 4. How shall we know if it be so with us?

A. If decay of love to Christ be our disease, it will have such symptoms as these: 1. Christ will be less in our hearts and mouths than formerly.

2. We will be more slack in our obedience, and have less delight in duty than before.

3. It is a sign of decaying love, when we lose our tenderness of conscience, and wonted abhorrence of sin, Christ's enemy.

4. When we are more easy under Christ's absence and withdrawals, and less anxious for his presence.

5. When we lose our wonted appetites for our spiritual food and nourishment from Christ in the ordinances.

6. When we lose our public-spiritedness and concern for the interest of Christ's kingdom and glory in the world.

7. When we are little concerned to have heart-holiness, which is Christ's image, drawn upon the soul.

8. When we have little desire for Christ's second coming, or for the enjoyment of him in heaven.

9. When earthly-mindedness, and love to the world, is on the growing hand.

Q. Is there not a love to worldly things, which is lawful and allowable? How may we know when we love the world too much?

A. Our love to the world is unlawful and excessive: when, 1. Worldly things are first in our thoughts in the morning, or last at night.

2. When they jostle out spiritual things from our minds.

3. When we think on worldly affairs, with greater intensity of mind, than these things that are spiritual and heavenly.

4. When the impressions of worldly things last longer with us, than those things which immediately concern the glory of God and our souls' good.

5. When the ends we propose to ourselves in worldly cares are chiefly, that we may satisfy our natural desires, prevent poverty, or make ourselves great; not that we may glorify God, and be more capable to serve him.

Q. What shall we do to get the decayed fire of love to Christ kindled and increased?

A. 1. Let us labour to be deeply sensible of this evil of decay of love to Christ, and heavily bemoan the coldness of our hearts before God.

2. Let us humbly apply to Christ, our great physician, who only can cure this plague of a spiritual consumption as well as our other souls' diseases.

3. Let us earnestly seek after further discoveries of Christ's excellency and loveliness; for if we once saw his beauty, our hearts would surely go out after him.

4. Let us meditate much on the love of a crucified Jesus in sweating blood, and laying down his life for such enemies as we are: let us take a view of him, in his dyed garments, as he is described, Isa. lxiii. 1—3.

5. Let us carefully search out the lust or idol, the Delilah, or worldly enjoyment, that hath stolen our hearts from Christ; and when we have found it, let neither our eye pity nor spare it, but presently cast it out.

6. Let us seriously think, on the one hand, upon the heavy curse and vengeance which abide those that do not love Christ, 1 Cor. xvi. 22. And, on the other hand, upon the unspeakable reward laid up for all true lovers of Christ, as recorded, 2 Tim. iv. 8; 1 Cor. iii. 9.

7. Let us consider that loving of Christ will be the eternal employment of saints in heaven: this grace of love abides for ever, when all the rest fail.

8. Let us earnestly pray for the breathings of his Holy Spirit, these "north and south winds to blow on our withered gardens." And let us plead his gracious promises of strength and quickening, which he makes to languishing and decaying souls, particularly these, Isa. xl. 29—31; Jer. xxxiii. 6; Zech. xii. 8; Hos. xiv. 5—7. Let us often cry with David, "Quicken thou me according to thy word," Psal. cxix. 25, 107, 154, &c.

9. Let us, in this case, follow the advice and prescription of Christ, our great Physician, Rev. iii. 4, 5, "Thou hast left thy first love, remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do thy first works."

The advice contains three directions, 1. "Remember from whence thou art fallen," i. e. compare thy former state with thy present: remember what a warm heart and lively affections you once had to Christ, and how cold and dead they are now.

2. "Repent," i. e. mourn over your sad backslidings and decays, and acknowledge them before God.

3. "Do thy first works," i. e. be as diligent in duty as formerly. When we find this holy fire decayed, we ought to cast on more fuel, i. e. use all God's appointed means for rekindling the flame, be much in prayer, reading, and hearing the word; delight much in the converse and fellowship of warm and lively Christians, and go frequently to the heart-warming and love inflaming ordinance of the Lord's supper, carefully guarding against formality in communicating, or slightness in praying for it.

Q. What way shall the lovers of Christ express, or show forth their love to him?

A. 1. By studying likeness and conformity to him. Holiness is Christ's image: let us imitate Christ herein, that we may in some measure be like him whom we love, in meekness, humility, self-denial, diligence, and heavenly-mindedness: in a word, let us be holy in our thoughts, affections, speeches, actions, and in all manner of conversation: for so Christ was, Heb. vii. 26; 1 Pet. i. 15, 16.

2. Let us seek to converse with him, and be much in his company: let us walk with him in the galleries of ordinances, and be much in secret prayer, and in all those duties where fellowship with him is to be obtained, Cant. i. 7; iii. 2; vii. 5; viii. 13.

3. Observe his injunctions and keep his commandments, John xiv. 15.

4. Be concerned for his interest, kingdom, and glory upon earth, Psal. cxxii. 9; Phil. ii. 21.

5. Let us place all relations, worldly interests and enjoyments, below him, Matt. x. 37.

6. Give ready audience to his ambassadors, and kindly entertainment to all his love motions, Psal. xlv. 10; Cant. v. 2.

7. Avoid every thing that Christ hates, Psal. xevii. 10; xiv. 7.

8. Love his people and whatever bears his image, 1 John v. 1.

CONCERNING LOVE TO GOD'S PEOPLE.

Q. Why is love to our neighbours, and especially to the people of God, so necessary for a worthy communicant?

A. 1. Because God requires us, in all our solemn approaches to him, to see that we be in a state of amity and friendship with our brother; not harbouring any wrath or malice in our hearts, as we would be accepted of God, Matt. v. 23, 25; 1 Cor. v. 8; 1 Tim. ii. 8.

2. Because it is one end of this ordinance to represent the union of believers together into one mystical body, as the bread is made up of many grains compacted together: and also to testify their communion and fellowship with one another as members of the same body: and how can this be done without mutual love? 1 Cor. x. 16, 17.

3. Because brotherly love is inseparable from faith, and given frequently as a mark of Christ's disciples, for whom this sacrament is appointed, John xiii. 35; 1 John iii. 4; iv. 7.

4. Because without this love we can expect no benefit by this ordinance, nor any communion with Christ in it, 1 Pet. ii. 1—3. 1 John iii. 23, 24; iv. 12, 16. As the Spirit descended on the disciples, when they met together in one house, and were all of one mind and one heart, so he will not enter the house or heart where love and peace do not dwell, Acts ii. 1, 4; iv. 31, 32; Jer. xxxii. 39, 40.

5. Because as we are bound to remember Christ's death in the sacrament, so we ought in receiving it to remember the dying charge and injunctions he gave his people, when he instituted and dispensed it; and particularly this of brotherly love, which he so earnestly pressed in his sacramental discourse and farewell sermon, John xv. 12, 17, and also prayer for it, John xvii. 11, 21.

Q. But if my neighbour hath offended me, or I him, and declines to return to a state of love and reconciliation to me; should this hinder me from partaking of the Lord's supper?

A. If we sincerely use the means which God hath appointed, in order to a reconciliation with our offending and offended brother, and endeavour so far as we have access to have the difference removed, and entertain no prejudice, hatred, or revenge in our hearts against him; though our endeavours of reconciliation should not have the desired effect, through our neighbour's obstinacy or untractableness, we are not to abstain from our duty, or deprive ourselves of the benefit of this ordinance, because of his fault, Matt. v. 23, 24.

Q. By what marks may we know if our love to God's people be true and sincere?

A. By these, 1. If we love them upon spiritual grounds, because of their relation to God as his children, and to Christ as his members, and because of their likeness to God and Christ in holiness, 1 John v. 1, 2; 1 Pet. i. 22.

2. If we love them universally, whether they be rich or poor, relations or strangers, and even though they differ from us in some lesser things, Col. i. 4; 1 Pet. ii. 17.

3. If we love them fervently, and above all others, 1 Pet. i. 22; Psal. xvi. 3.

4. If we love them constantly, in adversity as well as in prosperity, when they are despised, reproached and persecuted by the world, as well as when honoured and esteemed, John xiii. 2; 1 John iii. 16, 17; Heb. xiii. 1.

5. If we prefer their company, and delight in it above that of any others, Psal. cxix. 63; xvi. 3.

6. If we sympathise with them, both in their joys and sorrows, Rom. xii. 15; 1 Cor. xii. 26.

7. If we be ready to serve them, and supply their wants, 1 John iii. 18, 19; James ii. 15, 16.

8. If we can bear with injuries from them, and be ready to forgive them, and even to cover their faults from others, 1 Cor. xiii. 4, 7; Eph. iv. 32; 1 Pet. iv. 8.

CONCERNING LOVE TO OUR ENEMIES.

Q. Wherefore ought we to love our enemies?

A. 1. Because God has commanded it, Matt. v. 44; Rom. xii. 14.

2. Because of the example of God in loving and forgiving us who are enemies to him, and of Christ in dying for us, Eph. iv. 32; Col. iii. 13.

Q. What sort of love is it, that we ought to bear to our enemies?

A. A love of benevolence and beneficence, though not a love of delight and complacency, Matt. v. 44, 45; Rom. xii. 20, 21.

Q. How may we know if our love to our enemies be true?

A. 1. If the example of Christ's loving and dying for his enemies have influence upon us, Rom. v. 8, 10; Col. iii. 13.

2. If we incline to forgive them, and wish their good and welfare, Luke xi. 12; Prov. xi. 23.

3. If we rejoice not in their hurt, Prov. xxiv. 17.

4. If we shun to revenge ourselves upon them, Rom. xii. 17, 19.

5. If we pray for them, relieve their wants, and return them good for evil, Mat. v. 44; Rom. xii. 20, 21.

VI.—CONCERNING THANKFULNESS.

Q. Why is thankfulness to God so necessary in partaking of the Lord's supper?

A. 1. Because in this ordinance we have the representation of the greatest love and goodness that ever God expressed to the world, in giving his dearly beloved Son to be a sacrifice for sin, and offering him to be a Saviour to us, John iii. 16; Gal. iii. 1.

2. Thankfulness to God is a special design of this ordinance: upon which account it is called the eucharist or thanksgiving; because here we express our thankful remembrance of redeeming love, and celebrate the praises of our loving Redeemer, Mark xiv. 26.

Q. How may we know if our thankfulness be of the right stamp?

A. 1. By our low thoughts of ourselves, and our disclaiming all worthiness in us to receive the least mercy, Gen. xxxii. 10.

2. By our having a high esteem of God's mercies to us, and especially spiritual blessings; reckoning Jesus Christ to be the mercy of mercies, Luke i. 68, 72; 2 Cor. ix. 15.

3. By our dutiful rendering to God according to the mercies received from him, Psal. cxvi. 12; 2 Chron. xxxii. 25.

Q. What is it that a thankful communicant should render unto the Lord?

A. 1. Both soul and body, as a living sacrifice and thank-offering, 2 Cor. viii. 5; Rom. xii. 1.

2. Sincere love and hearty affection, Luke vii. 27, 28, 47.

3. High praises and humble prayers, Psal. cvi. 1, 2; cxvi. 1, 2, 17; ciii. 1—3; 1 Tim. i. 15, 17.

4. Paying our sacramental vows by a holy walk, diligent service, and zealous acting for God's glory, Psal. cxi. 12, 14; cxix. 106; 1 Cor. xv; Acts xxi. 13.

CONCERNING HOLY DESIRES.

Q. What are those holy desires, which are necessary for worthy communicants?

A. They are the soul's spiritual appetite, or its hunger and thirst after Christ and his benefits, as its proper food and nourishment, Isa. xxvi. 8, 9; Matt. v. 6.

Q. Why is this holy desire or spiritual appetite so necessary to worthy partaking?

A. 1. Because it is necessary in all our duties and approaches to God, and much more in this which is so solemn, Psal. lviii. 8.

2. This ordinance is a feast, and certainly an appetite is proper for that if we would profit by it. Without it we can taste no spiritual sweetness in this feast, get no nourishment by it, nor expect welcome to it, Matt. v. 6; Luke i. 53; Rev. xxii. 18.

3. The greater our appetite and longings be, the greater will be our satisfaction; when the desire opens the heart widest, God opens the hand largest to fill it, Psal. lxxxi. 19.

Q. How may we know if our desires or appetites be of the right sort?

A. By these marks: 1. True hunger is insatiable without food: bring a treasure, a crown, or the greatest preferments to a hungry man, all cannot satisfy him: so nothing can satisfy the hungry soul but Christ; not his ordinances or benefits only, but himself; not the supper or bread of the Lord, but the Lord of the supper, and the Lord of the bread, Psal. lxxiii. 25; Job xxiii. 3.

2. Hunger is insupportable without meat; the man must die if he want it: so the truly hungry soul cannot live or subsist without Christ; he can bear the want of other things, but Christ he cannot want, Psal. cxliii. 7, 9.

3. Hunger makes a man resolute, active, and industrious; he will spare neither cost nor travel for food, it would even break through stone walls: so a hungry soul will venture through all difficulties to find Christ, Cant. iii. 2, 3.

4. Hunger makes a man very humble; he will make the coarsest bread, or meanest crumb, very welcome: so the truly hungry will be content to have Christ upon any terms, though it were even to be the meanest servant of his house, or set with his dogs, provided always he may have a relation to his family, Luke xv. 10; Matt. xv. 27.

5. Hunger makes a man restless and impatient of delays till food be brought; so the hungry soul cries oft, "How long, Lord, wilt thou forget me? How long wilt thou hide thy face? When shall I come and appear before God?" Psal. xliii. 1, 2.

6. It makes a man prefer Christ and his ordinances to all his worldly interests, and willing to part with all things to obtain these, Luke v. 11.

7. It makes Christ and his spiritual benefits very sweet and pleasant to the soul, and likewise the ordinances that convey them, Cant. ii. 3; Psal. cxxxii. 1.

VIII.—CONCERNING NEW OBEDIENCE.

Q. What is that new obedience which is required in worthy communicants?

A. It is an unfeigned desire and purpose of the soul, followed with suitable endeavours in the life (through the strength of Christ), to yield sincere, constant, and universal obedience to God's revealed will; being humbled for short-comings, and desirous to be clothed with Christ's righteousness, and accepted of God, only for the sake of his perfect obedience, Psal. cxix. 4—6, 30—32, 112; Phil. iv. 13; iii. 9; 2 Chron. xxx. 18, 19.

Q. Why is it called new obedience?

A. Because it is only performed by those who are new creatures, and are actuated by new principles, and enabled by new strength, according to the tenor of the new covenant, 2 Cor. v. 17; Rom. xii. 2; Phil. iv. 13.

Q. Why is this new obedience needful to worthy partaking?

A. 1. Because the new covenant, which is sealed in this ordinance, binds us to it; for as here we take God for our God; so we give up ourselves to be his people, which necessarily includes our obedience to him, Jer. xxxi. 33; Heb. viii. 10.

2. Because without new obedience, and sincere purposes of it, a man comes to the Lord's table in a state of rebellion and not in obedience to Christ; and so can have no communion with him: for his fair profession is but dissimulation, and his religious performances hypocritical and abominable to God, 1 Sam. xv. 22, 23; Amos iii. 3; Tit. i. 16.

3. Carefulness to maintain good works is positively required of all that close with Christ by faith, and is an evidence of the reality of our faith, Tit. iii. 8; Jam. ii. 18, 20.

4. There can be no true thankfulness for redeeming love without it, Rom. xii. 1; 2 Cor. vii. 1.

5. Without holiness in heart and life, there is no seeing of God, Matt. v. 8; Heb. xii. 14.

Q. How shall we examine the truth and reality of our new obedience?

A. We ought to inquire into these five things; 1. If it spring from new principles. 2. If it be guided by a new rule. 3. If it be done in a new manner. 4. If it aim at new ends. 5. If it hath new properties.

Q. What are the principles of gospel-obedience?

A. The grace of God's Spirit planted in the heart, and especially the graces of faith, love, and fear of God. Fear of hell, or love of reward, may force the hypocrite to some sort of obedience; but love to God, and a tender regard to his authority, chiefly influence the believer, Rom. xvi. 26; Heb. xi. 7, 8; 2 Cor. v. 14; Psal. cxix. 4, 5.

Q. What is the rule of gospel-obedience?

A. 1. The will and commands of God revealed and contained in the holy scriptures; and not the precepts and inventions of men, Isa. viii. 20; 1 Thess. iv. 3; Psal. cxix. 4, 5; Gal. vi. 16.

2. The example of Jesus Christ, our pattern, 1 John ii. 6.

Q. What is the new manner in which gospel-obedience is performed?

A. It is done in faith, that is, depending on the strength of Christ for enabling us to it, and on the righteousness of Christ for our acceptance in it, and leaning nothing upon any of our own performances, but relying entirely upon Christ, Col. iii. 17; Phil. iv. 3; iii. 7—9; Eph. i. 6; Luke xvi. 10.

Q. What are the ends which believers aim at in their new obedience?

A. Not to gain the world, or get the applause of men, as hypocrites do; but to please God, show forth his glory, and promote their neighbour's edification, 1 Cor. x. 31; Col. i. 10; Phil. ii. 4.

Q. What are the properties of gospel-obedience?

A. 1. It is universal; the obedience of the whole man to the whole laws and commands of God, Psal. cxix. 34; 2 Cor. vii. 20.

2. It is a willing obedience, not constrained by the commands of men, education, a natural conscience, or fear of hell; but an obedience that springs from love to God and his ways, Psal. cx. 3; xl. 8; Rom. vii. 22.

3. It is a quick and speedy obedience, Psal. cxix. 60; Gal. i. 16.

4. It is a persevering and resolute obedience, notwithstanding of trials and difficulties, Psal. cxix. 106, 112; Acts xi. 23; Rev. ii. 19.

5. It is a humble and self-denied obedience, Luke xviii. 10.

6. It is a confidential obedience, performed in Christ's strength, and relying on his merits for acceptance with God, Eph. i. 6; Heb. xiii. 15.

So much concerning the first part of our preparation for the Lord's supper, viz. self-examination: and so we come to the second part.

THE EXCITATION OF GRACE.

Q. Why should grace be excited and quickened, before our partaking of the Lord's supper?

A. Because liveliness and activity of soul is necessary to worthy communicating. That a man may be qualified for a feast, it is fit that he not only be living, but also be in health, and have an appetite: for a sick or swooning person is unfit for a feast, as well as a dead man. So, in order to worthy communicating, it is requisite that grace not only be in the habit, but that it be brought forth to lively exercise; and that for these reasons:

1. The very work of communicating lies in the vigorous actings of faith, love, repentance, and other graces of the Spirit.

2. Because in this ordinance we make a solemn and immediate approach unto the living God, who will be served in a lively manner, and abhorreth a cold and lukewarm temper in his worship, Rom. xii. 11; Acts xxvi. 7; Rev. iii. 19; Mal. i. 14.

3. Because to act without liveliness, is not only unsuitable to this solemn ordinance, and to the Author of it, but also most uncomfortable to ourselves; for lifeless duties are unpleasant, and occasion many bitter reflections to the soul.

4. Without liveliness of grace, we are in hazard of unworthy communicating, and of drawing down judgments on ourselves, 1 Cor. xi. 28—30.

Q. What is that lively frame of soul which a communicant should have on approaching to the Lord's table?

A. He should have all the sacramental graces drawn forth into exercise, and his heart thereby brought into a humble and self-abasing frame, a melting and mourning frame, a loving and affectionate frame, a longing and panting frame, a thankful and praising frame, and a willing and obedient frame, to run the ways of God's commandments, Psal. cxix. 32.

Q. What course shall we take to get the sacramental graces brought to lively exercise?

A. By the diligent use of the means which God hath instituted, particularly by reading and hearing of God's word, by serious and retired meditation upon proper objects, and by earnest prayer and frequent ejaculations to God for the help of his Spirit.

Q. What are these proper objects we should meditate upon, in order to bring the grace of faith into lively exercise?

A. Let us meditate on the greatness of Christ's sufferings, the acceptableness of his sacrifice, the infinite virtue of his blood, the fulness and sweetness of his promises, and the freeness of his gracious invitations, with the assurance he gives of acceptance and welcome to all that come unto him.

Q. What shall we meditate on, in order to get holy fear quickened?

A. We ought to meditate on the infinite justice and holiness of God, and his vehement indignation against sin, manifested in the sufferings of Christ for sin; and upon the near approach we make to a holy God in this ordinance, and the danger of unworthy communicating.

Q. What should we meditate on to get repentance quickened?

A. Upon the heinous and God-provoking nature of sin, the number and greatness of our sins, the variety and greatness of our Redeemer's sufferings, and upon our sins as the cause of them all.

Q. What shall we meditate on, to get love to God and Christ quickened?

A. Upon the infinite love of God in sending his own Son to die for us; upon the matchless love of Christ in coming into the world, his readiness and willingness to sacrifice himself for us, his intrinsic loveliness and excellency; the unspeakable vileness and unworthiness of those whom he loved, and suffered so much for.

Q. What shall we meditate upon to get love to the people of God quickened?

A. Upon the words of our dying Redeemer enjoining it; upon the image they bear, their near relation to Christ and to us; and upon the love of Christ in dying for them.

Q. What shall we do to get love to our enemies quickened?

A. Let us think on Christ's command for it, and his example in loving and dying for us when enemies to him.

Q. What shall we think on, to get our desires and spiritual appetite quickened?

A. Upon our souls' manifold necessities and wants, the fulness and suitableness of the supplies Christ hath provided for us in this ordinance; and the gracious promises he hath made to satisfy those that hunger and thirst.

Q. What shall we meditate upon, to get our thankfulness to God quickened?

A. Upon the freeness and greatness of redeeming love, the suitableness and excellency of the new covenant, the richness and fulness of this gospel-feast, and our unworthiness of the least of God's mercies.

Q. What shall these do, who complain of their spiritual deadness still continuing, and who cannot get their hearts brought to a lively frame, for approaching to this holy ordinance?

A. 1. They ought to examine what may be the cause of their spiritual deadness. 2. Use all proper remedies for curing this disease.

Q. What are the ordinary causes of our spiritual deadness?

A. 1. Our commission of some sin, and not repenting for it; upon which account God is provoked to withhold the influences of his Spirit, Psal. li. 11. 2. Our omission of duty or sluggish performance of it, brings on deadness. A key not turned rusts in the lock, Isa. lxiv. 7.

3. Our careless entertaining of convictions, and the motions of the Holy Spirit, grieves and quenches the Spirit, and so brings on deadness.

4. Our unthankfulness for former mercies, especially spiritual mercies and revivings, provokes God to shut his hand, and suspend his influences, Col. ii. 7.

5. Our earthly-mindedness, and taking too much liberty in the delights of the world deadens the heart, Psal. cxix. 37; Jude 19.

6. When we grow proud of gifts, attainments, or enlargement in duty, God is provoked to blast them to us, James iv. 6.

7. Heavy troubles and discouragements tend to deaden the heart, Psal. cxix. 107.

Q. What are the proper remedies for curing our spiritual deadness?

A. 1. Let us be deeply sensible of this sad plague, search out the cause of it, and be humbled for it before the Lord.

2. Let us study to keep up a lively faith of the unseen things of another world; for when unbelief prevails, our spiritual life decays, Heb. iii. 12.

3. Let us act faith on Christ, and thereby draw life and quickening from him, who is "the fountain of life and head of influences" to his people; he is a living head, and will communicate life and light to his languishing members, Jehn x. 10.

4. Let us carefully cherish all the motions and convictions of God's Spirit, watch against all known sin, the love of the world, the company of the wicked, and every thing that tends to grieve and quench the Spirit, 1 Thess. v. 19.

5. Let us be frequent in reading, hearing, and meditating upon the quickening word and precepts of God, Psal. cxix. 93.

6. Delight in the company of lively Christians, whose flame may help to kindle our languishing spark, Psal. cxix. 63.

7. Let us think much on the activity and liveliness of the glorified saints and angels above, in the service of the living God; and as we pray that we may "do his will on earth as they do in heaven," let us join our endeavours with our prayers, chide our drowsy hearts, and excite them to liveliness, Mat. vi. 10; Psal. lvii. 8; ciii. 1, 2; Jer. xxx. 21.

8. Let us attend God's quickening ordinance, and continue to use all means; still waiting, longing, and looking to the Lord, who hath promised to give power to the faint, and to be as the dew to Israel, Psal. xxvii. 8; Isa. xl. 29, 31; Hos. xiv. 5.

Q. But what shall poor exercised souls do, who, after using all means, find their deadness still continuing? dare they adventure to approach to the living God in the sacrament?

A. 1. We ought to consider that our dying Saviour hath commanded us to come to his table, and we are under an indispensable obligation to obey it, and that our sinful indisposition cannot excuse us from our duty. And, therefore,

2. We must not stop in complaining of our deadness, but we must be restless under it, mourn over it, pray against it, struggle in the use of all means to get it removed, and set our hearts to our duty: and if we be conscious to ourselves that we have been honestly exercised, though with much weakness, in the use of all appointed means, we are not to give over thoughts of communicating; but, in obedience to Christ's command, and with a serious design to keep up the remembrance of his dying love, we ought to set about it with hope and expectation that God will meet with us and bless us in this quickening ordinance, and graciously remove our complaints, according to his promise, Psal. ix. 8; xxxiii. 18, 22; Isa. xli. 17, 18.

3. Let us remember that this course of sincere aiming to obey Christ's command, and preparing ourselves in the use of all means, is to lay ourselves in God's way and road, who has promised to meet such as remember him in his ways, and commonly hath a desirable issue. For God often surprises his people with supplies of life, when they are struggling with their deadness in the use of means; help comes in, in the mean time, so that though they begin duty with a dead frame, yet they end it with a lively. "Before they are aware, their souls will make them as the chariots of Aminadab," Isa. lxiv. 5; Cant.

vi. 12, read Psal. xiii. the first verses compared with the latter.

Q. Are not retired meditations upon the sufferings of Christ, and secret prayer to God, two special means for quickening our graces, and preparing us for the Lord's table?

A. Yes; when they are rightly managed and duly performed.

I.—THE MEDITATION OF CHRIST'S SUFFERINGS.

Q. Wherein doth the nature of the duty of solemn and retired meditation consist?

A. It consists in the soul's abstract and retiring itself from the world, and setting itself seriously to contemplate and think upon spiritual objects, for holy and practical uses: which religious exercise is a very necessary and profitable duty in itself, and the character of a godly man, Josh. i. 8; Psal. i. 2; Gen. xxiv. 63; Psal. exix. 97.

Q. What is the advantage of this duty?

A. It is a great help to other duties; it affords matter to the tongue in prayer and praise, it makes us fruitful in reading and hearing the word, it over-awes the soul from sinning, and melts the heart into penitential tears for sin, it quickens the graces in communicating, raiseth the soul's esteem of Christ, enforceth holiness, and excites diligence and activity in the service of God, Psal. xl. 1; Jam. i. 24; Psal. cxix. 97, 99; xc. 11; li. 3; 2 Tim. i. 12; Cant. v. 16; Psal. xxvi. 3; Heb. xi. 36.

Q. Why is this useful and profitable duty so much neglected by us?

A. 1. Because of our spiritual sloth, that makes us unwilling to engage in duties that are difficult, spiritual and tedious to the flesh, Prov. xxi. 25.

2. Because of our guilty consciences, that make us unwilling to be alone and retired, lest the mind should fall upon itself, or bring the awful Judge of the world and a future state into our remembrance, Rom. i. 28.

3. Because of the carnality and dulness of our hearts, the throng of worldly business that takes up the time of many, the barrenness of our thoughts as to spiritual things, and the natural inclination of our hearts to wander and skip from one subject to another, Isa. vi. 10; Jer. iv. 14.

Q. How shall we manage this work of retired meditation before the sacrament?

A. 1. Let us call in the assistance of the Spirit of God to dispose and fix our hearts for it, Cant. iv. 16.

2. Let us excite and rouse up our souls, and all their faculties, to the work, Psal. lvii. 8.

3. Let us meditate but upon one thing at once, and labour to keep our mind and thoughts fixed upon the object that we think on, for some time together, till once our hearts be affected with it, and moved to holy mourning, prayer, or praise.

4. When we come any speed in this exercise, let us bless God for it, and this is the way to have more success in it: for as that which goeth up in vapours comes down again in showers; so that which goeth up in praises comes down again in blessings, Psal. lxvii. 5, 6.

5. Let us begin and end this work with prayer; in the beginning, let us pray for a blessing on the duty; and in the end, let us pray that God may preserve the spiritual thoughts we have had upon our hearts, 2 Chron. xxix. 28.

6. Let us realize the presence of God to ourselves, and place ourselves before his all-seeing eye, when we are about his exercise, firmly believing that his eye pierceth into our heart and most secret actions, Psal. xvi. 8.

Q. What should be the special subjects of our meditation before our approach to the Lord's table?

A. The evil and demerit of sin, the goodness of God, the love of Christ; the preciousness of the soul, and the excellent contrivance of our redemption; all which, as in a bright looking-glass, we may contemplate and view in the sufferings of Christ, which therefore should be the principal subject of our meditation, 1 Cor. ii. 2; Gal. iii. 1; John i. 29.

Q. What is it in the sufferings of Christ, that we should especially think upon?

A. We should meditate, 1. On the variety and greatness of them. 2. On the course of them. 3. Christ's innocency and patience under them. 4. The excellent properties of them.

Q. How shall we meditate on the variety and greatness of Christ's sufferings?

A. By taking a serious and fixed view of the many sore calamities and distresses which he endured in this world, in his life, and at his death, both in soul and body.

1. Think how our glorious Redeemer was harassed and tempted by the devil forty days in a wilderness.

2. What poverty and want he lay under, travelling up and down on foot, and having no where to lay his head.

3. What grievous reproaches were cast upon him.

4. How he was the object of the common hatred of the world; a multitude went to apprehend him, as if he had been a common enemy or robber; the multitude cried, "Away with him," and preferred the greatest malefactor before him, though he went still about doing them good.

5. Think on the unspeakable pressure of divine wrath which he lay under in the garden of Gethsemane, which made him wrestle as in an agony, and sweat great drops of blood, complain to his disciples, and cry to heaven for relief.

6. Think how he was betrayed by one of his own disciples, and sold to his enemies for a very small price.

7. How he was denied by another of his chosen disciples, and deserted by all the rest, in time of his distress.

8. How he was taken and fast bound with cords, as if he had been a thief or an evil doer.

9. How cruelly he was affronted and abused by rude soldiers a whole night; by being buffeted, spit upon, blind-folded, struck on the face, mocked with a ridiculous garb put upon him, and having the hair plucked from his cheeks.

10. How he was hauled to the judgment-seat of men, accused of crimes he knew nothing of, and, without any cause, stripped naked, and severely scourged.

11. How he had a crown of thorns plaited for his head, with the sharp points turned inward, and this put on, and driven into his head by a staff.

12. How contrary to all law as well as the conscience of his judge, he was condemned to be crucified, and put to death, as one of the vilest malefactors.

13. How the heavy tree of the cross was laid and fastened on his sore bleeding shoulders, and he forced to carry it to the place of execution, yea, to wrestle with it up to mount Calvary, till he was ready to faint under the burden.

14. How he was laid on the ground, stretched forth naked, and racked on the cross, and both feet and hands fastened to it with big nails; and then the cross lift up with our nailed and bleeding Saviour upon it, and let fall into a deep hole digged for the foot of it; and so the wounds still widened, and the blood gushed forth, till he expired amidst these tortures, which lasted (as learned men think) for the space of six hours.

15. Think how great the anguish of his soul was at this time, when he bore our sins, in his own body on the tree; he was inwardly scorched with the fire of God's wrath, which "dried up his strength like a potsherd," and made him cry out, "I thirst," yea, cry aloud, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" So fearful were his sufferings, the whole world was moved thereat, the earth shook, the rocks rent, the heavens darkened, the sun veiled his face; and shall not our hearts be moved with contemplation of them?

Q. What was the cause of Christ's sufferings?

A. Our sins, which Christ out of pure love undertook to become a surety and sacrifice for, to the justice of God: these were the burden that pressed him down in the garden; that made the nails, and drove them into his body on the cross, Isa. liii. 5; Rom. v. 25; Dan. vii. 26.

Q. How did Christ's innocency and patience appear under his sufferings?

A. In that he was the immaculate Lamb of God who had done no evil. His judge on earth was forced to exculpate him; the Judge of heaven was well pleased with him, and received him into glory. "He was brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and opened not his mouth;" he reviled not his persecutors, but heartily prayed for them, and willingly poured out his soul unto death, Isa. liii. 7, 12; 1 Pet. ii. 22, 23; Luke xxiii. 14, 15, 34.

Q. What are the properties of Christ's sufferings on which we ought to meditate?

A. 1. The seasonableness of them; Christ stepped in and suffered for his people, before so much as one drop of wrath alighted on them.

2. The voluntariness of them: he most willingly offered himself a sacrifice to divine justice, without any sort of compulsion, nay, he hastened to do it, Psal. xl. 8; Luke xiii. 50; xxii. 15.

3. The universality of them; he suffered in all his offices, in his good name, in his outward goods, in all his senses, in all his members.

4. The extremity of them; the cup he drank was most bitter, being altogether mingled with wrath and curses; he was roasted with the fire of divine vengeance, and found no pity nor abatement, Rom. viii. 32.

5. The acceptableness of them to God; a slain Christ was a "sacrifice of sweet smelling savour to God," seeing it brought honour to his law, glory to his justice, praise to his mercy, and safety to his people, Eph. v. 2.

6. We ought to think upon the efficacy and benefit of Christ's sufferings to us: so great is the efficacy and virtue of them, that they reach back to the beginning of the world, and extend forward to the end of it: and procure great blessings to his people in all ages. In a word, the wounds and sufferings of Christ have an atoning, reconciling, healing, purifying, and softening virtue, which we should often think upon.

Q. How may we know, if we have an interest in these sufferings of Christ, and if he died for us in particular?

A. By these marks: 1. If we be his people, and willing to do and suffer what he would have us, Matt. i. 21; Psal. cx. 3.

2. If we have an high esteem of Christ and his sufferings, 1 Cor. ii. 2; 1 Pet. ii. 7.

3. If we reject all other saviours, and desire our souls only to be sheltered in Christ's wounds, and sanctified by his blood, Hos. xvi. 3; Rev. i. 5.

4. If our hearts melt for piercing him, Zech. xii. 10.

5. If we be bent to kill sin that crucified Christ, Gal. v. 2, 4.

6. If we be friends and lovers of Christ, ready to obey his commands, John xv. 13, 14.

II. PRAYER.

Q. Why is prayer so needful before we approach to the Lord's table?

A. 1. Because prayer is a great mean, on our part, for making up and preserving our acquaintance with God, Job xxii. 21, 26, 27.

2. It is needful, both to sanctify the ordinance to us, and us to the ordinance, 1 Sam. xvi. 5; 1 Tim. iv. 16.

3. It is the way to procure the Spirit's influence for quickening grace, and enlivening us for duty, Cant. iv. 16.

4. Because no benefit can be expected by this ordinance without prayer; for it is the means appointed of God for obtaining all spiritual blessings, Ezek. xxxiv. 37; Matt. vii. 7; Jam. i. 17.

Q. What things should communicants especially pray for, before their partaking?

A. 1. For pardon of the sin of neglecting this ordinance formerly, and of unsuitable partaking of it.

2. For the preparation of our hearts for this ordinance, and for quickening all the sacramental graces, particularly faith, love, repentance, and hunger, and thirst for this spiritual feast, Psal. x. 17; Prov. xvi. 1.

3. For pardon of all defects and short-comings in our preparation, 2 Chron. xxx. 18—20.

4. For the Lord's gracious presence both with ministers and people, for communion with Christ in the ordinance, for the intimations of his favour, the breathings of his Spirit, and communiations of his grace; that we and many others may be nourished, strengthened, and comforted by this gracious and life-giving ordinance, Exod. xxxiii. 14, 18; Cant. iv. 16; Isa. lxiv. 1.

Q. What kind of prayer is it, that will be effectual?

A. 1. Humble prayers; we must level ourselves with the dust, when we speak to the God of heaven; for it is such prayers that he will regard, Gen. xviii. 27; Psal. x. 17.

2. Prayer in faith; if we would prevail in prayer, we must by faith eye the power, mercy, and promise of God, and rely upon the mediation and righteousness of Jesus Christ, in all our pleading with God, Jam. i. 6.

3. It must be fervent and importunate, as if it were the last prayer we were to put up, and the last sacrament we were to see, and as if our lives and eternal well-being depended upon it, Gen. xxxii. 25, 26; Lam. iii. 41; Isa. lxiv. 7.

4. It must be argumentative; pleading the power of God, the mercy of God, his free promise, the blood of his Son, the glory of his name, our great misery and necessity, Josh. vii. 9; Psal. lxxxix. 9; Dan. ix. 16—18.

Q. But what if we have prayed and wrestled, and yet the Lord shuts out our prayers, and gives no answer?

A. 1. This is no singular complaint, for it hath been the case of many of God's saints in former ages, Psal. xxxi. 22; Lam. iii. 8, 44; Jonah ii. 4.

2. There is a great difference between delaying and denying of prayer, or between God's suspending the answer and his rejecting it. For God, many times, for wise and holy ends, is silent, and lets his people's suits depend long before he answer them; when yet in the mean time he approves and accepts of their prayers, Luke xviii. 7; Matt. xv. 23, 28.

Q. How shall we know that all our prayers are not rejected, when yet we receive no answer to them?

A. 1. When we are resolved and enabled still to wait upon God in the way of duty, though he hide himself from us, Isa. vii. 17.

2. When we are enabled to clear and justify God in his dealings, and blame ourselves only for the cause of his silence, Lam. iii. 39, 40, &c.

3. When we are helped to discover the failings and defects of our prayers, so as to be humbled for them, Isa. lxvi. 6, 7.

4. When we get the Spirit's assistance to strengthen and to enlarge our hearts in prayer, Psal. cxxxviii. 3; Isa. lxv. 34.

5. When the Lord's suspending his answer makes us the more inquisitive into our hearts and ways, to find out the cause thereof, Lam. iii. 8, 40.

Q. Wherefore is it that the Lord delays to hear his people's prayer?

A. For these ends; I. To chasten and humble them for their sins, such as, their sloth and formality in duty, their self-conceit and leaning upon their performances, their neglecting the Spirit's motions, their want of suitable apprehensions of God, and pure ends in prayer, their not joining suitable endeavours with their prayers, their not watching for a return, &c. Isa. lix. 2; lxiv. 7; Psal. lxvi. 18; v. 1; 1 Pct. v. 5; Jam. iv. 3. II. For the manifestation of his own glory particularly, for discovering his power and goodness in helping and delivering his people, when matters are brought to extremity with them, John xi. 5, 6. III. For the trial and exercise of his people's graces, either that the weakness of them may be discovered, or the sincerity of them evidenced, particularly, the Lord designs hereby,

1. To try our faith if we will trust him for what we see not, and believe he is still as good as his word, though sense suggests the contrary, Matt. xv. 27, 28; 2 Cor. v. 7.

2. To try our patience, if we be content to wait God's leisure, and time of accomplishing his promises, Heb. vi. 12; x. 36.

3. To try our love, if we will esteem, and shall add some directions how we ought to be employed, when going to the Lord's table, and when we sit down at it, and in the act of communicating.

Q. How should we be employed when going to the Lord's table?

A. 1. We should be thinking what a high privilege it is, that such unworthy creatures as we should be admitted into such near communion and fellowship with God.

2. We should have awful impressions of the solemnity of the ordinance, and greatness of the work we are going about; the great advantage of doing it right, and the great danger of doing it wrong.

3. We should be thinking, this may be the last communion we shall see on earth, and the last offer we shall get of the water of life, in this manner; and therefore we ought carefully to receive and improve it.

4. We should guard against wandering and impertinent thoughts, and labour to get our hearts wholly fixed on the great work in hand.

5. We should be mediating on the unsearchable love of Christ, and his undertaking to suffer both the pains of death and hell for us, that were enemies to him.

6. We should be meditating on the fulness and suitableness of the many sweet offices and relations which Christ bears to his people. Let us think on him and go to him, as a surety, to pay our debt; as a physician, to heal our diseases; as a mediator, to make up our peace with God; as a ransom, to deliver us from captivity; as a refuge, to shelter us from danger; as a teacher, to open our eyes; as a bountiful friend, to give an alms and satisfy our hunger: yea, as a loving husband, to clothe us, enrich us, and provide for us all we want.

Q. What are these, in a word, that are in a fit case to come to the Lord's table?

A. All penitent believers, who have seriously considered the nature of the covenant of grace, with the ends and uses of this sacrament; and examined themselves if they have unfeignedly consented to the covenant, and stand to the consent already given; live according to the covenant, in a sober, righteous, and godly life, repent sincerely of all known falls and breaches, and continue not in any known sin; ask forgiveness of all they have wronged, and forgive those who have wronged them; stir up themselves to the lively exercises of faith, and all the other sacramental graces.

THE DUTIES REQUISITE IN PARTAKING.

Q. How should we be employed when the time of partaking comes?

A. I have already anticipated much that might be said here, in opening the nature of this sacrament, and showing what is signified by the sacramental elements, words, and actions; what is implied in the act of worthy communicating, and what is the bodily gesture requisite therein: to which the reader is referred. Besides which, I shall add some directions how we ought to be employed, when going to the Lord's table, and when we sit down at it, and in the act of communicating.

Q. How should we be employed when going to the Lord's table?

A. 1. We should be thinking what a high privilege it is, that such unworthy creatures as we should be admitted into such near communion and fellowship with God.

2. We should have awful impressions of the solemnity of the ordinance, and greatness of the work we are going about; the great advantage of doing it right, and the great danger of doing it wrong.

3. We should be thinking, this may be the last communion we shall see on earth, and the last offer we shall get of the water of life, in this manner; and therefore we ought carefully to receive and improve it.

4. We should guard against wandering and impertinent thoughts, and labour to get our hearts wholly fixed on the great work in hand.

5. We should be mediating on the unsearchable love of Christ, and his undertaking to suffer both the pains of death and hell for us, that were enemies to him.

6. We should be meditating on the fulness and suitableness of the many sweet offices and relations which Christ bears to his people. Let us think on him and go to him, as a surety, to pay our debt; as a physician, to heal our diseases; as a mediator, to make up our peace with God; as a ransom, to deliver us from captivity; as a refuge, to shelter us from danger; as a teacher, to open our eyes; as a bountiful friend, to give an alms and satisfy our hunger: yea, as a loving husband, to clothe us, enrich us, and provide for us all we want.

Q. How should we be employed when we sit down at the Lord's table?

A. 1. We should compose ourselves into a serious frame and disposition, agreeable to this ordinance.

2. We are to behold, by faith, the affecting sight represented to us in this ordinance.

3. Raise holy and suitable meditations from the sacramental elements, words, and actions made use of, in the administration of this ordinance.

4. Exercise the graces in a lively manner, which are necessary in the act of communicating.

Q. What is that serious frame or suitable disposition of soul which communicants ought to have when they sit down at the Lord's table?

A. We should approach to God in this ordinance and partake thereof: 1. With an holy awe and reverence of God; adoring his justice and holiness, manifested in the sufferings of Christ, 1 Sam. vi. 20; Psal. v. 7; Heb. xii. 28.

2. With humble, low, and abasing thoughts of ourselves and all that we can do, looking on ourselves as poor and maimed, halt, blind, and impotent, unworthy of the least crumb, Luke xiv. 21; Isa. lvii. 15; Jam. iv. 6, 10.

3. With staidness and fixedness of thought, summoning all the faculties of the soul, and thoughts of the heart, to attend and keep close to this momentous affair, Eccl. v. 1; Psal. cxviii. 27.

4. With holy confidence, as children sitting down at their father's table, looking for, and expecting some gracious allowance from him, and believing that he would not give us stones when we ask bread, Matt. vii. 9; Heb. iv. 15, 16; x. 22.

5. With a sharp and lively appetite after the spiritual benefits contained in this feast, desiring nearer communion with God, clearer tokens of his distinguishing love in Christ, Psal. lxxxi. 10.

6. With burning love and affection to Christ, who purchased this feast and opened this fountain to us, and laid out the most precious treasure of his blood to make us happy, Psal. lxxiii. 25; Cant. v. 8.

7. In this suitable communion frame, there should be a mixture of holy mourning and rejoicing; (1.) Mourning for sin, when we call to mind the anguish of Christ's soul, the bruises of his body, and the effusion of his blood for it. (2.) Rejoicing in Christ Jesus as those that are satisfied with his undertaking, and thankful for his coming, and wonder at the rich feast he has provided for us, Zech. xii. 10; Rom. v. 11; Phil. iii. 3; Psal. xxii. 26.

Q. What are these affecting sights set before the eyes of our faith, at the Lord's table, which we ought to contemplate when we sit down thereat?

A. In general, Christ crucified is here evidently set forth, which is the most piercing and affecting sight to the eye and heart of a believer, Gal. iii. 1; Zech. xii. 10.

More particularly we may here see, 1. The great evil of sin, that nothing could atone for but such a sacrifice, and nothing can cure but such a medicine.

2. The infinite justice of God, and his displeasure against sin, which nothing could pacify but a satisfaction of an infinite value.

3. The greatness of the damned's misery, who have God's justice to satisfy for themselves for ever, without hope of any to be a propitiation for them.

4. The dreadfulness of that wrath which we deserved and must have suffered, if no surety had interposed to suffer it for us.

5. The greatness of the love of Christ, who condescended to suffer both the pains of death and hell, for such vile creatures as we are.

6. The preciousness of our souls, and the great value that Christ put upon them, in that he gave both his soul and body to be a ransom for them.

7. The excellency and blessedness of pardon of sin, that our infinitely wise Redeemer gave such a price to obtain it to us.

8. The worth of heaven and eternal glory, that could be purchased at no lower rate than the blood of the Son of God.

9. The riches and glory of the heavenly feast, where the saints see Christ as he is, and feed on him eternally, without signs or symbols.

10. The earnest desire Christ has to engage sinners' hearts to him, in that he comes in the sacrament, with his dyed garments to cover them, his wounds opened to shelter them, and his blood streaming forth to cleanse them.

Lastly, We may here see our glorious Redeemer spoiling principalities and powers (conquering and disarming our enemies, the law, Satan, death, and hell), "making a show of them openly, and triumphing over them in his cross," Col. ii. 15.

Q. What meditation ought we to raise from the sacramental elements, words, and actions made use of at the Lord's table?

A. I have already insisted on these more largely when showing the meaning and signification of them, from whence we may raise many suitable meditations. All I shall say now shall be briefly summed up in these following things:

1. When we see the elements of bread and wine, let us think on the body and blood of Christ, as the only proper food and nourishment of the soul.

2. When we see the minister take the bread into his hand to separate it from common use; let us think on God's setting Christ apart by his eternal decree, and separating him from all other men to be our Mediator and Surety.

3. When the minister blesses and consecrates the elements; let us think on God's sending his Son into the world, sanctified and furnished with all gifts and graces needful for his mediatory office.

4. When we see the bread broken; let us meditate on the breaking and wounding of Christ's sacred body on the cross, and all the bruises, sufferings, and pains which he endured, both in soul and body, for our sins.

5. When we see the wine poured out; let us think on the shedding of Christ's most precious blood, and on his willingness to pour out both his blood and soul unto death to save us from eternal wrath.

6. When we see the minister offering and giving the elements to us; let us meditate on the infinite love of God the Father, in giving Christ to be our mediator; and of Christ the Son, in giving himself to be a sacrifice for us; and of the Holy Ghost, in revealing and applying Christ to us.

7. When the minister saith to us, "Take, eat; Drink ye all of it;" let us think how freely God offers Christ to us, and how earnestly he presseth us to accept of him as our Saviour.

8. When we see that there is both bread and wine provided for us in this feast; let us think on the plentiful redemption, complete nourishment, and fulness of grace which we have in Jesus Christ.

9. When we see that both of them are offered and given to us; let us think that it is God's will that we should stretch out the arms of faith, and embrace Christ wholly, in all his benefits, offices, laws, and cross.

10. When we see the bread and wine given separately; we should think how Christ's blood was separated from his body, that we might not be separated from God for ever.

11. When we see the elements divided and distributed among the communicants; let us think how Christ is really, though invisibly, dealing forth the effects and benefits of his death and sufferings to the worthy receivers.

12. When we are receiving and eating and drinking the bread and wine; we should be meditating on the spiritual receiving and applying of Christ by faith, and the sweetness and pleasantness of the benefits of his death, and on the close and intimate union that is betwixt Christ and believers.

13. When we feel the wine warming our cold stomachs; we should meditate the more intensely upon the warm love and blood of Christ, till once they warm our cold hearts and affections with vehement love and desire to our Redeemer.

14. When we hear of Christ's dying charge "to do this in remembrance of him;" and of his testament sealed in this sacrament; we should affectionately remember the love of our dying Friend, and meditate on the precious legacies he hath bequeathed to believers. Of which I have treated more largely.

Q. Wherein doth the work of communicating chiefly consist?

A. Besides what I have said before on this head, I shall add these two things; 1. Upon God's part; communicating lies on God's giving infetment to the believer, of Christ and all his purchase, by the symbols of bread and wine, Christ here marries believers, and gives himself to them in the relation of a husband; and in token thereof, gives them, as it were, his ring or picture, and grants them the investiture and possession of his house or palace above, by delivering the key thereof into their hand; which, upon their consent and acceptance, gives them as true right to Christ and all his purchase, as any man hath to an house or estate by an infetment or sealed charter.

2. On the believer's part; communicating lies mainly in their receiving the seal of God's covenant with them, and the seal of all his gracious promises to them in Christ; and particularly in laying hold and applying of Christ for pardon of sin, for cleansing from sin, and for strength to do every commanded duty; all which is promised in this covenant. So that the work of communicating doth not (as some are ready to think) lie principally in meditating upon Christ's love and sufferings, our engaging and covenanting to be the Lord's, making vows against sin, or putting up of prayers and requests to God. All these, indeed, ought necessarily to attend our communicating, but they are not the direct and principal acts of it. The nature whereof, as is said, consists mainly in our cordial receiving of Christ and his purchased benefits, as they are tendered in the covenant of grace, and sealed and applied in this sacrament: and in our believing that Christ's broken body and shed blood, here represented, with all his merits and graces, are as truly applied to us for curing and saving our souls, and become ours by faith; as the consecrated bread and wine enter into our bodies, and become ours by feeding thereon. And these acts are to be accompanied with the lively exercise of all the sacramental graces, particularly faith, repentance, desire, love, and joy.

Q. How is faith to be exercised in partaking of the Lord's supper?

A. Faith being as the eye of the soul, to discern Christ; as the hand of the soul, to receive him; and as the mouth of the soul, to feed on him in this ordinance, should be most actively employed and diligently exercised in our partaking; particularly in these acts: 1. In believing firmly the doctrine of the gospel, the truth of Christ's death, his redemption, and the world to come.

2. In looking unto Christ lifted up upon the cross for healing to our souls' maladies.

3. In fleeing into the open arms and wounds of a crucified Jesus, our bleeding High Priest, for shelter and protection from wrath.

4. In embracing and clasping about this Redeemer, as our soul's upmaking portion, saying with Thomas, "My Lord, and my God."

5. In applying the blood and merits of Christ to ourselves, for stopping the mouth of conscience, silencing the clamours and curses of the law, and answering the accusations of Satan.

6. In pleading his blood with a just and faithful God, for the pardoning of our sins, the justifying of our persons, the acceptance of our performances, the softening of our hearts, the curing of our diseases, the quickening of our graces, and sanctifying of our souls.

7. In giving up our souls and bodies to Christ, to be saved by his blood, guided by his Spirit, ruled by his laws, and disposed of by his providence: saying with the Spouse, "My beloved is mine, and I am his."

Q. How is repentance to be exercised, in our partaking of the Lord's supper?

A. By remembering our sins that pierced Christ, with holy shame and sorrow, abhorring them loathing and condemning ourselves for them, firmly resolving against them, and sincerely purposing to follow Christ all our days in the ways of new obedience.

Q. How is holy desire to be exercised, in partaking?

A. In panting and breathing after the virtue and efficacy of Christ's blood, still more and more; for subduing and killing of sins and lusts, for enlivening our dead souls, and curing our heart plagues, for quickening and strengthening our weak and decayed graces, and for more intimate fellowship with Christ, and surer tokens of his special and distinguishing love.

Q. How is love to Christ to be exercised, in partaking?

A. By the outgoings of the heart and soul towards him, closely thinking upon his free love and the expressions of it, with wonder and admiration: highly esteeming and prizing this glorious Redeemer, delighting in him, and cleaving to him, as our soul's chief good and portion, and longing for the full enjoyment of him in glory.

Q. How is holy joy to be exercised in partaking?

A. By the soul's being cleared and lifted up in the believing view of its interest in Christ and his purchase, rejoicing in God as its covenanted God and portion, showing forth his praise, and magnifying him for redeeming love.

Q. What shall those poor souls do, who, in obedience to Christ's command, come to the Lord's table, but when they are set down at it, are wholly out of case, as they think, for the exercise of the foresaid graces, being plagued with much deadness and confusion, and likewise harassed with strong temptations?

A. It is indeed very afflicting and discouraging when it is so with any poor exercised soul, and will occasion many great thoughts and searchings of heart.

But, 1. If the disorder of our hearts be our great grief and burden, and we desire nothing more than a right frame of spirit, for remembering and receiving a dying Saviour in the sacrament; it is a sign of some spiritual life and feeling.

2. We should consider, that it is no singular case to be assaulted with temptations, at such a juncture; for Joshua the high priest, when standing before the Lord, had Satan at his right hand to resist him, Zech. iii. 1, 2.

3. If we feel much heart-deadness at such a time, we should send up some fervent ejaculations for the assistance and breathings of the Spirit to warm our hearts, and enliven our affections, Cant. iv. 16.

4. We ought to rouse and stir up ourselves, use quickening motives and arguments, and expostulate with our own hearts, and say, O, I am lively enough in all my worldly concerns, which are but trifles; and shall I be dead and dull in this weighty affair; when the question is, "Whether I shall live in heaven or hell for ever? What life and activity have many in the ways of sin and service of the devil? And shall I be so dead in the service of the living God? O, my drowsy heart! art thou not ashamed to think so coldly on thy bleeding Saviour? Is Christ's heart so warm to thee, and thine so cold to him?" Thus all means must be used in dependence upon God; and so let us wait on him, and help will come in the time of need, Psal. xxxi. 24; xliii. 5; lvii. 8.

5. Let us hence see the more need of a crucified Jesus, to quicken our dead hearts, and subdue our strong temptations; and let us apply the more heartily to him in this ordinance, where he seats himself on a throne of grace, ready to answer his people's requests, and supply their needs. Let us draw life from his death and quickening from his resurrection. And let us remember, it was Christ's special errand into the world, to bring abundant life to his people, and to destroy the works of the devil, John x. 10; iii. 8.

Q. What shall those do, who complain of such wandering hearts, that they cannot get them stayed a moment upon one subject; and even when they are set down at the Lord's table, they find them hunting after vanity?

A. 1. Let them groan under this before God, as a very grievous plague and affliction; for if ever there was a time when the heart should be fixed, and the thoughts stayed, it should be when we sit down at the Lord's table, and have the great God to transact with.

2. Let us labour to over-awe our hearts with the deep apprehensions of God's presence and all-seeing eye, believing that God noticeth us now more than ever.

3. Let us cry for more love to Christ, and for further discoveries of his loveliness, and this would be a mean to fix the heart, "For where the treasure is, there will the heart be also."

4. Let us chide and check our hearts for every vain excursion, and say, "O my wandering heart! Did I come here to think on any thing, but Christ and his love? Is this a place for earthly trifles? Is this the way to show forth my Redeemer's death? If I cannot watch with Christ one hour, how shall I dwell with him, and live in the contemplation of him for ever?"

5. Let us present a crucified Christ to the eye of the mind, and study to hold this object still in its view. And let us have the communicant's proper work deeply fixed in our minds and memories, and labour to keep the heart close to its work, and even let us "bind the sacrifice with cords to the horns of the altar;" viz. the cords of strong resolutions and fervent ejaculations; and when those birds of prey come down upon the sacrifice, let us, like Abraham, drive them presently away, Gen. xv. 11; Psal. cxviii. 27; xxxvi. 11.

Q. Are not vows and prayers requisite at the Lord's table?

A. Yes; for here we are to profess our sorrow for sin, and thankfulness for God's favours, and join ourselves to the Lord in an everlasting covenant; and it certainly becomes all true penitents, thankful souls, and honest covenanters, to make vows; and those vows are nothing worth without prayers to God joined therewith, for strength to keep them. And those vows and prayers seem to be most seasonable after our receiving of the elements, and our exerting of the direct acts of communicating, Job xxxiv. 31, 32; Gen. xxviii. 20; John i. 16; Neh. x. 29.

Q. What is the nature of these vows, which we ought to come under, at this juncture?

A. A religious vow is a serious oath of dedication of ourselves to the Lord's use and service; or, it is a solemn engagement and promise unto the Lord, whereby we bind and oblige ourselves to be the Lord's dutiful children and servants, Num. xxx. 2; 1 Chron. xv. 12—15.

Q. What is the necessity of making such vows?

A. 1. Because God is pleased thus to bind himself solemnly to us, which should draw out some answerable return from us to him, Heb. vi. 18; Psal. cxix. 106.

2. That we may solemnly confirm and ratify what was done and engaged in our name at baptism: a bargain that is made for an heir, during his nonage, is to be confirmed by him when he comes to age.

3. That thereby we may give our solemn approbation and testimony to God's ways and service as the best and most excellent.

4. That thereby we may engage our souls the more to steadfastness and constancy in duty, discourage Satan and our spiritual enemies, and prevent our backsliding, which we are naturally prone to, Hos. xi. 7.

Q. What are those things which we ought to vow and oblige ourselves unto at the Lord's table?

A. 1. That we will in the strength of Christ keep ourselves from all known sin. 2. That we will make conscience of performing all known duties, or, in a word, that we will "cease to do evil, and learn to do well," Isa. i. 16, 17.

Q. What are these evils that we should mainly vow against at the Lord's supper?

A. 1. In general, we must vow against all sin, as the traitor and murderer of the Lord of glory. If ever the soul take up a prejudice and antipathy against sin, it should be at the Lord's table, where the evil of it is so clearly discovered; then it is, especially, that we, by solemn vows should cast away all our transgressions, saying with Ephraim, "What have I to do any more with idols?" Hos. xii. 8.

2. In particular, we ought to vow; 1. Against all gross sins. 2. Against all secret sins. 3. Against all heart-sins. 4. Against our darling-sins, and these sins that do most easily beset us. 5. Against all temptations to sin, and especially the snares of bad company, Psal. xiv. 5; xix. 115.

Q. What are these religious duties that we should vow and bind ourselves unto, at the Lord's supper.

A. 1. In general, we ought, in the strength of the grace of Jesus Christ, solemnly to vow and promise, that we will mind religion as the one thing needful, and make the pleasing of God the chief business of our lives; that we will give God not only the outward man but the heart, in all our duties; that we will set the Lord always before us, and study to live a life of communion with God, and still press forward to the full enjoyment of him above, Rom. xii. 11; Psal. xvi. 8; Phil. iii. 13, 14.

2. In particular, we should vow and bind ourselves; 1. To the conscientious performance of secret duties, which the eyes of the world cannot observe. 2. To these duties that contribute most to promote the life of religion, and bring us unto communion with God. 3. To these duties that conscience doth most accuse of neglecting. 4. To these duties by which we may be most capable to advance God's glory and the welfare of precious souls, and by which we may adorn our profession, and make religion amiable in the eyes of strangers: and especially, that we will make conscience of family-religion, and study to recommend piety to our near relations, Gen. xviii. 19; John xxiv. 15; Psal. ci. 2.

Q. Is it a season for communicants to be making requests when they are at the Lord's table?

A. Yes; for then we come to Christ in a good day when there is plenty about his hand, when he hath on his dealing garments, and both his heart and hand are open to us. On this royal feast-day he sets himself upon a throne of grace, with a sceptre of mercy in his hand, and waits for our addresses, and says, as the king to Esther at the feast, "What is thy petition?"

Q. What are these particular petitions, we should be putting up at the communion table?

A. Our requests at that time should be suitable to the particular circumstances and necessities of our souls, which are best known to ourselves. Only, in general, it is very proper at that time to be putting up requests for strength to keep our engagements and pay our vows; for the Spirit's influences to quicken us to liveliness of frame in this and all duties; and to preserve liveliness in us; and likewise for holy wisdom and skill to improve Christ for righteousness and sanctification: for heart-holiness and grace, to subdue indwelling sin: for strength to grapple with temptations, and bear up under trials; for converting grace to our near relations; for the advancement of Christ's kingdom and interest through the world, and especially the land of our nativity, and the congregation we belong to; for persecuted Protestants, that are deprived of such gospel-feasts, &c.

THE DUTIES REQUISITE AFTER PARTAKING.

Q. What duties are required of us after partaking of the Lord's supper?

A. 1. To preserve and keep up a suitable frame of spirit, when we rise up and come away from the Lord's table.

2. To examine ourselves when we go to our retiring places.

3. To order our conversation aright afterwards.

Q. What is that suitable frame and disposition of spirit which communicants ought to have when they rise and come from the Lord's table?

A. We ought to come away from this ordinance, 1. In an admiring frame. 2. In a thankful frame. 3. In a rejoicing frame. 4. In a humble frame. 5. In a watchful frame. 6. In a praying frame. 7. In a charitable frame. 8. In a willing and obedient frame. 9. In a fixed and resolute frame. 10. In a longing and heavenly frame.

Q. What is it that should be matter of admiration to communicants when they come from the Lord's table?

A. We should wonder at the goodness and condescension of God to us, that he should have had such thoughts of love to us; provided such a surety and sacrifice for us, as his own beloved Son; entertained us at his table; taken us into covenant and communion with himself, and given us earnest of the everlasting inheritance: and that he who is higher than the heavens should have done all this for creatures who are by nature mean as worms, nay, polluted and loathsome in the sight of God, Psal. viii. 4; cxiii. 5, 6; 2 Chron. vi. 18; 2 Sam. vii. 18.

Q. What is it that we should be thankful for when we come from the Lord's table?

A. We should be thankful to God for his love in giving Christ; for Christ's love in giving himself; and for the love of the Holy Spirit in revealing Christ to us, and in us. Also, we should bless God for all the blessed fruits of this love, particularly for the well-ordered covenant of grace, and the seals of it; for pardon of sin, and all the rich benefits sealed to us at a communion-table; that we live in a Goshen on earth, and have the prospect of a Canaan above, Luke ii.

14; Eph. i. 3; 2 Cor. ix. 12, 15; Rev. i. 5; Deut. viii. 10.

Q. What is it that we should rejoice in when we go from the Lord's table?

A. 1. In the persons of the glorious Trinity; in God the Father, as our covenanted God and portion; in God the Son, as our Saviour and Redeemer; and in God the Holy Ghost, as our Comforter and Sanctifier, Psal. xliii. 4; Rom. v. 11.

2. In the attributes and perfections of God; particularly in his goodness, mercy, wisdom, almightiness, immutability, and faithfulness, as being all in confederacy with us, and engaged to promote our well-being and happiness, Psal. civ. 24; lxxiii. 25, 26; xlviii. 14; Heb. iii. 17, 18.

3. We ought to rejoice in our Redeemer's love, his wonderful undertaking, and in the glorious victories and purchase he hath obtained for us, Phil. iii. 3; Luke i. 46, 47, 49—51.

4. We should rejoice in the ways of God, having our hearts lifted up in them, and enlarged both to run and sing in the ways of the Lord, and go about every commanded duty with pleasure, Acts viii. 39; 2 Chron. xvii. 6; Psal. cxix. 32; cxxxviii.

Q. Wherefore should we come from the Lord's table in a humble frame?

A. Because we have manifold grounds for our humiliation before God at that time, when we consider: 1. Our vileness by sin, and our deservings on that account; we have more reason to cry out than Mephibosheth had, when David promoted him to eat bread at his table, "What is thy servant, that thou shouldst look upon such a dead dog as I am?" 2 Sam. ix. 8.

2. When we consider the defectiveness of our preparation for this solemn ordinance; alas, our souls were not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary!

3. When we consider our great short-comings in the near approach we were making to a holy God; namely, that our hearts were not more deeply affected with the great sights presented to our view, and the glorious things put in our offer at the Lord's table; that our dull affections were not more raised, our wavering minds more fixed, and our cold hearts more warmed, when we were about such spiritual and heavenly work, 2 Chron. xxx. 18, 19.

4. We have cause to be humbled when we consider, that we are still exposed to many dangers, and environed with strong enemies, who are never more busy and active than after we have been at the Lord's table, or admitted to nearness with God; and especially when we consider our own weakness and insufficiency to grapple with them, Luke xxii. 31; 2 Cor. xii. 7, 8.

Q. Wherefore ought we to come from this holy ordinance in a watchful frame?

A. Because of the many evils, snares, and enemies, that we are then in hazard of; and therefore we must stand upon our guard and watch, particularly with these:

1. The malicious designs and devices of Satan, who is going about seeking to rob us of any benefit we have got by this ordinance, Luke xxii. 31; Matt. xxvi. 41; 2 John 8.

2. We ought especially to watch against the workings of spiritual pride after this ordinance, for our wicked and deceitful hearts, are most ready to be lifted up with the great favours and honour here conferred upon us, Luke xxxiii. 25.

3. We should guard against resting upon the sacrament, as if all our work were now done, and our warfare accomplished; no, we are still in a military state, and may expect new assaults from our spiritual enemies; we have still the good fight of faith to fight, and the work of our salvation to work out, which must be done with a constant holy fear and trembling, Cant. iii. 7, 8; Phil. ii. 12.

4. We must watch against the levity and wanderings of our own hearts, that are prone soon to divert from the work we have been about; and study to keep them close in meditation upon a crucified Christ, and the great sights which we saw at a communion-table.

5. We should watch against vain and frothy discourse, and the snares of company, after this ordinance; for hereby many have soon lost that sweet relish of the things of God which they have had upon their spirits; wherefore secret meditations, prayer, and praise, after this solemn work, are safer for communicants, than to be in the best of company.

6. We should watch against the inroads of worldly cares and incumbrances, that they be not allowed suddenly to rush in upon us, to rob us of the spiritual frame and comforts we have been privileged with in this ordinance. We ought not hastily to return to our worldly business after a sacrament, but by degrees; and that with great tenderness, care, and circumspection; resolving that Christ shall have the throne of the heart, and the world be kept at the footstool.

7. We should carefully guard against all temptations to passion and rash anger, and study to be meek and quiet under provocations; for if we give way to the disorders and tumultuous passions of our hearts, the Holy Spirit will be grieved, and provoked to withdraw from us.

8. We should watch against sloth and formality in duty, and be endeavouring always to stir up ourselves to liveliness and spirituality in all our performances.

9. We must watch against relying on our own strength in performing duty, and study to keep ourselves constantly depending on Christ as our head of influences, and looking to him for our quickening and strength.

Q. Why should we come from this ordinance in a praying frame? Do we need any thing more than what God hath freely given us?

A. Though all things needful be freely promised and sealed to us in the sacrament, yet we must continue to pray for the accomplishment of these promises, Psal. cxix. 49.

2. We must pray for the continuance of the Spirit's influences and grace to preserve in us that tenderness of heart, warmth of affection, and liveliness of frame, which have been wrought in us by means of this ordinance, 1 Chron. xxix. 18; Psal. lxxviii. 28.

3. We must pray for strength to keep the promises, and pay the vows which we have made to the Lord at this occasion; and that God may save us from apostacy and backsliding, which our hearts are naturally bent unto, Psal. xvii. 5.

Q. Wherein lies that charitable disposition which we ought to have, when we come away from the Lord's table?

A. 1. In bearing a good will to the souls of all men, and heartily wishing their welfare, 1 Thess. iii. 5, 12, 15.

2. In having a true love to all the members of Christ's mystical body, and bearing with them, though in several things they differ from us

3. In a readiness to relieve the poor and indigent, according to our ability, Gal. vi. 10.

4. In a disposition to forgive those that have been injurious to us. And surely all who have been sharers of God's mercy and grace in the sacrament, will come away from it with such a charitable disposition.

Q. What is that willing and obedient frame which communicants ought to have, when they come away from the Lord's table?

A. It lies in these things: 1. A grateful sense of the many ties and obligations we are under to serve him.

2. In making it our great scope and design to approve ourselves to God in all things.

3. In making it our study to know God's mind and will, and what it is that is most acceptable and pleasing to him.

4. In having an universal respect to all God's commands, and a readiness of mind to every good work.

5. In being active and zealous for the glory of God, and the interest of his kingdom among men.

Q. What is that fixed and resolute frame which they ought to have?

A. It is the soul's deliberate and steadfast resolution to adhere to Christ, his ways and interest, in the midst of all trials and difficulties. We must now be at a point in this matter, fully determined, by the grace of God, to look and go forward in our Christian course, and that no solicitation or temptation shall move us, either to look back or draw back; but that with "purpose of heart we will cleave unto the Lord," Psal. cxix. 30, 31, 115; Acts ix. 23.

Q. What is that longing and heavenly frame which we ought to have when we come from the Lord's table?

A. It consists in these things: 1. In a firm belief of Christ's second coming, and of the life everlasting.

2. In a lively meditation upon Christ's coming, and the future glory.

3. In an earnest looking for that blessed hope, and a joyful expectation of the glory to be revealed, Tit. ii. 13; Rom. v. 2.

4. In a constant watching and preparing for the coming of the Bridegroom, Luke xii. 36, 37.

Q. Are not our hearts prone to lose their tenderness and spirituality after the sacrament? How shall we retain our liveliness, and keep up, in some measure, our communion-frame, even when the communion is over?

A. 1. We must have deep impressions of the treachery and falseness of our hearts, and of their woeful natural bias to depart from God, and turn carnal, Hos. xi. 7.

2. We must be humbled under a sense of our own weakness and insufficiency to preserve our spiritual life, or so much as to think a good thought of ourselves; for God gives grace to such humble souls, 1 Pet. v. 4.

3. We should be keeping up a constant thankful sense of God's kindness to us at the sacrament, and be thankfully praising him for it; and this is an excellent way to engage the continuance of his mercies, Psal. lxxvii. 5, 6.

4. We should be frequently thinking on these affecting sights which we saw at the Lord's table, and study to keep up the impressions thereof at all times on our minds. I made mention of these sights before.

5. Let us study and learn the art of deriving life and influences from Jesus Christ, by acting in a constant and believing dependence on him, as our Fountain of life, and Head of influences, John x. 10.

6. Let us watch over our hearts and frames with much holy suspicion and jealousy, lest Satan, the world, or our lusts, should rob us of the spiritual treasure we have got. And especially, let us watch against the first declining of the heart, and beginnings of deadness, and presently cry to the Lord for help and quickening.

7. Let us be much in secret prayer, pleading with God for the constant supplies of his Spirit, which is the fire that can only maintain warmth and liveliness of frame in our souls against all the cold blasts of the devil and the world.

8. Let us delight in the company and converse of lively Christians; for one live coal makes another to burn, Heb. x. 24.

9. Let us delight in attending sacramental occasions, and be still longing for the returns of this quickening ordinance, and for the Lord's special presence therein.

10. Let us always guard against those things that tend to deaden our hearts, or that may occasion the losing of our frames. And these I mentioned before, when treating on the causes of spiritual deadness.

SELF-EXAMINATION AFTER THE SACRAMENT.

Q. What is the necessity of self-examination after the sacrament?

A. 1. Because our Lord puts his disciples to the trial, concerning their faith, after they had been at his table, John xvi. 31.

2. This is a necessary mean to bring us to a proper state of humiliation and repentance, for the defects and short-comings that have attended our communicating.

3. It is needful to keep people from deceiving themselves, by thinking that they have true grace, and are in a happy state, while in the mean time they are poor, wretched, and miserable.

4. Without it we cannot be thankful to God for the benefits we received in this ordinance; seeing it is by after-reflection that we come to be sensible of the Lord's gracious dealings with us.

5. The neglect of self-examination after the sacrament, is the occasion of many doubts and perplexities that the Lord's people fall into after this solemn ordinance. Did we carefully remark the workings of our faith and love at the Lord's table, and the tokens of Christ's love we receive there, we might be enabled to resolve many doubts, and repel many temptations, that otherwise will be too hard for us.

Q. What are these things which we ought to examine ourselves about after we come from the sacrament?

A. Concerning two things: 1. How we have dealt with God in this ordinance. 2. How God hath dealt with us. We ought narrowly to examine if we have dealt sincerely and honestly with God in this solemn work; and if God hath dealt graciously and bountifully with us.

Q. By what marks may we know if we have dealt sincerely and honestly with God in this solemn ordinance?

A. By these; 1. If we were meditating upon a crucified Christ at his table, with faith, love, mourning, and thankfulness, sincerely aiming and designing to keep up the remembrance of his matchless love, to show forth his death till he come again; and were looking only to Christ for acceptance in the duty.

2. If it was our aim, when receiving the elements, believingly to accept of a bleeding Jesus as our High Priest, Saviour, and Lord, and to apply to his blood for answering all the exigencies and necessities of our souls.

3. If we sincerely aimed to transact and seal a covenant with God through Christ, at his table, according as personal covenanting was explained before.

Q. How may we know if we were sincere in our transacting and covenanting with God?

A. By these two things: 1. By reviewing the frame that our hearts were in, while we were doing it.

2. By considering the disposition of our souls since that time.

Q. How shall we know if we had the right and gracious frame of heart, while we were transacting with God, which sincere covenanters have?

A. We may know it by these marks: 1. If we were low and vile in our own eyes, and deeply sensible of our unworthiness to be received into covenant with God, Ezck. xvi. 62, 63.

2. If we were weary of the burden of sin, and groaning to be delivered from it, Psal. xxxviii. 3.

3. If we were longing and panting for Christ, as the only suitable help and remedy provided for us by God, without whom we could have no access to God, no peace, no pardon, no grace, no glory.

4. If we found our hearts going out to God in Christ, as our God and portion, making choice of him as our happiness, chief good, and end; and accepting of Jesus Christ as the only way to God.

5. If we were resigning and giving up ourselves in all we are, and in all we have, unto God, to be governed, disposed of, and employed according to his pleasure, 2 Cor. viii. 5.

6. If we sincerely renounced our own righteousness in the point of justification; and our own strength in sanctification, and the performance of duties; saying, "In the Lord Christ only we have righteousness and strength," Isa. xlv. 24.

7. If we be sincerely renouncing and parting with every sin, and saying with Ephraim, "What have we to do any more with idols?" Hos. xiv. 8.

Q. How shall we know if the present disposition of our souls be such as sincere covenanters use to have after their coming from the Lord's table?

A. Let us try it by these marks: 1. If we can say our souls have high and exalted thoughts of God whom we have chosen, and admiring thoughts of Christ the Mediator, as altogether lovely, Isa. xxv. 1; 1 Pet. ii. 7.

2. If we be well pleased with the contrivance and design of the covenant, that is, to have our sins pardoned, and our souls justified and saved wholly by the righteousness of our Redeemer, that free grace alone may eternally have the praise, Rev. i. 5; Psal. cxv. 1.

3. If our hearts be melted for sin, at the remembrance of the wounds of Christ, which were represented to us at his table as pierced and opened by our sins; and be fully resolved, through his grace, that we will pierce him no more.

4. If indwelling sin and heart-plagues be a greater burden to us than all the crosses and troubles that we can meet with in this world, and that we are more desirous to be rid of sin than of any affliction whatsoever.

5. If we are resolved, through divine strength, to be a people zealous of good works, and to obey every commanded duty, John xv. 14; Tit. ii. 14.

6. If we are sensible of our own insufficiency and weakness to keep covenant with God, and therefore are brought to renounce all confidence in ourselves, and to say, "In the Lord only we have righteousness and strength," Isa. xlv. 24.

7. If we can say the world and its best things are, in our eyes, as dung and nothing in comparison of Christ and his righteousness: and that we are more concerned to have an interest secured in him, to have heart-holiness, and the image of Christ drawn in us; and that we desire further degrees of grace, of faith, of love, and brokenness of heart for sin, more than any honours, profits, and pleasures this world can afford: then surely these are good signs that our hearts have been sincere in covenanting with God.

Q. Is not their case sad, who, upon examination, may find that their hearts are not right with God, and that they have dealt falsely and hypocritically in this matter, and so have communicated unworthily?

A. Yes; it is very sad: for, 1. They have been guilty of dissembling with the great God, in pretending to join themselves in covenant with God, while they continue in league with the devil and sin.

2. They have sadly been deceiving themselves in pretending to come and receive the pardon of their sins, while they never repented of them, nor designed to part with them; and so are in hazard of going to the grave with a lie in their right hand.

3. They have been crucifying Christ afresh, and putting him to open shame, and the blood of Christ is crying for vengeance against them.

4. They have been eating and drinking damnation to themselves, "not discerning the Lord's body;" nor receiving him by faith.

Q. Is there any help for those that are in this sad case; and what is it they should do?

A. 1. They ought to set their souls a-trembling before God, for their condition is very sad and highly dangerous.

2. They should set their souls a-wondering that the Lord did not lay his hand upon them, and smite them dead with the bread in their mouth, or cup in their hands, or that he did not send them to hell from the communion-table.

3. They ought to bless God that their case is not hopeless, remediless, like that of the damned; and that yet they are in the land of prayer and repentance, and have an offer of mercy and pardon through the blood of Christ.

4. They should presently go and weep and mourn over a slain Christ, whom they have pierced and crucified by their sins, and particularly by their unworthy communicating. The advice which Peter gave to Simon Magus (whom he declared to be in the "gall of bitterness, and bend of iniquity," after he had received the sacrament of baptism) is very proper for them: "Thy heart is not right in the sight of God; repent, therefore, of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee," Acts viii. 21, 22.

5. They ought presently to flee by faith to the blood of Christ, which they have shed; and apply it for pardon and cleansing; seeing nothing can wash them from this guilt, but that very blood which they have spilt; and blessed be God for this efficacious remedy that can cure the deepest wound, and most desperate disease; "for the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin," 1 John i. 7.

Q. Ought we not also to examine and try how God hath dealt with us in this ordinance?

A. Yes; we are not only to examine and try how we have dealt with God in this solemn ordinance, but also how the Lord hath been pleased to deal with us, that if we be sensible of his beautiful dealing towards us, we may be thankful for it; and if we be not sensible of it, that we may inquire into the cause, and be humbled before God.

Q. May not some mistake God's dealings with them in this ordinance, and make wrong conclusions concerning them.

A. Yes; there is no doubt but many mistake and deceive themselves in this matter; some concluding they have got real benefit by this ordinance, when they have got none; others, that they have got no good by it, when really they have; like those mentioned, Prov. xiii. 7.

Q. Who are those that deceive themselves, thinking they have got benefit by the Lord's supper when they have really got none?

A. 1. Those who mistake the common flashes of affection, which they may have on this occasion, for spiritual liveliness of soul, and the gracious influences of the Spirit.

2. Those who mistake their seeming joy and delight, which they may feel at this time, for joy in the Holy Ghost.

3. Those who take their delusive and false peace, which they may have in their minds on this occasion, for a true peace of conscience.

4. Those who apprehend their temporary faith, counterfeit love, and their pangs of grief, tears, and resolutions, which they may attain to, at such a time, to be true grace, and certain evidences of a gracious work of the Spirit; when yet they are no more than what hypocrites may arrive to, without the aid of special grace.

Q. How shall we distinguish the gracious liveliness of believers from the common flashes which hypocrites may have, at sacraments?

A. By these characters: 1. True liveliness of soul arises from a gracious and renewed heart, influenced by the Spirit of God; but these common flashes may be where there is no gracious change in the heart at all, being occasioned only by outward things, such as the revelation of the great things done by Christ for lost sinners, the pathetickness or fervency of a minister, the lively representation of Christ's sufferings, the example of others, or the like.

2. Gracious liveliness humbles the soul, and inclines it to give all the glory to God: but common flashes cherish pride, puff up the man to a conceit of himself, and to rest upon his attainments.

3. Gracious influences of the Spirit leave some solid and lasting impressions upon the soul, and make a man tender and conscientious in his after walk: but common flashes are soon gone, leave no abiding impressions, and produce no gracious effects in the heart or life; but the man that hath them turns as carnal and careless, hardened and profane, as formerly, Psal. lxxviii. 34, 37; 2 Pet. ii. 22.

Q. How shall we distinguish between the joy of believers, and that which hypocrites may have at communion occasions?

A. They differ in these things: 1. In respect of their antecedents; true joy follows after true sorrow and heart-brokenness for sin; this hypocrites know nothing of, but believers do, Psal. cxxvi. 5; Matt. v. 4.

2. In respect of their foundation: true joy is founded upon the promises, and the Mediator of the covenant, and springs from a gracious discovery of redeeming love, and our interest therein. But the hypocrite's joys are built on a false and slippery foundation, Matt. xiii. 20, 21; Phil. iii. 3; Rom. v. 11.

3. They differ, in respect of the matter of them; hypocrite's joys are only terminated upon the external part of duties and ordinances; but the believer's joy is upon the account of God's presence in them. The hypocrite rejoiceth not in Christ's ways and ordinances, as they are means for enjoying communion with him, but only as they satisfy conscience, and get them the applause of men.

4. They differ in their fruits and effects: 1. True joy abaseth, but the hypocrite's joy puffs up the heart. 2. True joy makes the believer's heart burn in love to Christ, and to have a very high esteem of him; but the hypocrite's joy hath no such effect. 3. The spirit of sanctification, and endeavours after holiness, always attends joy in the Holy Ghost; but, notwithstanding of the hypocrite's joys, the heart is still carnal, and the life unholy, Rom. xiv. 17. 4. Spiritual joy encourages and strengthens the soul for duty, particularly for attending ordinances, bearing afflictions, and resisting temptations, Neh. viii. 10; Isa. xi. But the hypocrite's joy produceth no such fruits.

Q. How shall we distinguish between a false and delusive peace, which some may have after a sacrament, from a true peace of conscience?

A. They differ mainly in two respects: 1. In respect of their antecedents and causes. 2. In respect of their consequents and effects.

Q. How do they differ in respect of their antecedents and causes?

A. I. A false peace of conscience, which hypocrites have, ordinarily flows from these springs: 1. From the flattery and deceitfulness of our own hearts, that are bent to speak peace to us, when there is no peace from God. 2. From the delusions and suggestions of Satan; sometimes he keeps the house as a strong man armed, and so all is at peace; at other times he is fain to make use of his cunning artifices for that end; he flatters the sinner, blinds the mind, dazzles the eye with false appearances, and sometimes ceaseth from tempting, and so he goes out when he is not cast out, Matt. xii. 43, 44. 3. This false peace proceeds from a man's mistaking of his soul's state and condition, thinking himself something when he is nothing; apprehending conviction to be conversion, legal sorrow to be repentance unto life, common flashes and stirrings in the affections to be the special influences of the Spirit. 4. From too high an opinion of our duties and performances, as if these were sufficient to satisfy God's justice, and recommend us to him. 5. From outward favourable providences, and worldly prosperity, as if these things were a certain sign of God's special love.—But,

II. True peace of conscience, which is wrought by the Spirit of God in the believer, springs from other causes and antecedents; such as these:

1. From a true faith in Jesus Christ, our peace maker, Rom. xv. 13.

2. From a true love to God and his law, Psal. cxix. 165.

3. From a tender and conscientious walk, Gal. vi. 16.

4. From a view of our covenant-relation to God, and gracious nearness to, and communion with him in duty, Sam. i. 18; 2 Sam. xxiii. 5.

5. Solid peace of conscience commonly follows upon an inward soul conflict, and deep humiliation and trouble for sin, Psal. cxlvii. 3; Isa. lvii. 15; lxi. 3.

6. It ordinarily follows upon fervent wrestling with God by prayer, and upon the diligent use of all the other means and ordinances of God's appointment, 1 Sam. i. 18; 2 Thess. iii. 16.

Q. How doth a true and false peace of conscience differ, in respect of their consequents and effects?

A. 1. A false peace hath ordinarily such things attending, or following upon it, as these:

(1.) It doth not incline the soul to be low in its own eyes, and to exalt Christ and free grace; but rather to exalt self, and lean upon duties and attainments.

(2.) It doth not determine the heart to hate sin, and love duty, or influence a man to a holy walk and conversation; but rather to separate what God hath joined together, viz. holiness and peace, Deut. xxix. 19.

(3.) A false peace cannot support a man when outward comforts are withdrawn; but leaves him comfortless in the time of affliction.

(4.) It makes a man unwilling to be searched and tried by the light of God's word, John iii. 20.—But,

2. A true peace of conscience hath such consequents and fruits as these:

(1.) It makes the man to have an high esteem of Jesus Christ, who is our peace; and to count all things as loss and dung beside him.

(2.) It makes a man content with that lot and condition in the world which the Lord thinks fit to carve out for him.

(3.) It composes and cheers the heart in time of the greatest dangers and difficulties, and when all worldly comforts fail, Heb. iii. 17; John xvi. 33; Psal. iv. 7, 8.

(4.) It makes a man active for God's glory, and the interest of religion, Psal. li. 12, 13.

(5.) The man that hath it doth not shun the light, but is always willing to be tried by it, Psal. cxxxix. 23.

(6.) He guards against the temptations of Satan, the rising of corruption, the out-breakings of sin, and every thing that tends to disturb his peace.

Q. How may we know that the faith whereby we were receiving and apprehending Christ in the sacrament was a true and saving faith, and not a temporary faith which hypocrites may have?

A. By taking a view of the different properties and effects of a temporary and saving faith.

I. As for a temporary faith, it hath these following: 1. It only gives a seeming consent to Christ, like the stony-ground hearers, and almost persuades them to be Christians; but doth not prevail with them cordially to accept of Christ, both as a Saviour and Lord.

2. It doth not make them part wholly with their own righteousness for Christ's righteousness, but still they continue upon their legal foundation, and rest upon their own doings.

5. It never brings a man the length to resign himself and his most valuable interests and concerns in the world to Jesus Christ, to be disposed of by him as he thinks fit: but still some Agag or other must be reserved.

4. It never brings a man to apprehend Christ as matchless and altogether lovely, and to be willing to suffer the loss of all things for him: but still there is something the hypocrite prefers unto Christ. But,

II. A true faith determines the soul to embrace Christ wholly in all his offices; it makes a man part entirely with his own righteousness, and cry, "None but Christ." It makes him give up himself wholly to Christ, to esteem Christ as exceeding precious, to study to raise his honour, advance his interest, and oppose his enemies, and to do everything that is well-pleasing in his sight.

Q. How shall we know if the love we were expressing to Christ at his table be true and sincere, and not a counterfeit love, such as hypocrites may have?

A. 1. The hypocrite's love is selfish; he loves Christ because he apprehends that Christ loved him, laid down his life for him, and hath purchased great happiness to him; but he doth not love him for his own intrinsic beauty and excellency. Again, the hypocrite's love is not superlative; he loves him not above all things in the world, his love doth not prompt him to all that Christ commands, and to undertake these duties that are most difficult and spiritual: it doth not make him thirst for nearness to him in ordinances, and long to see him and dwell with him in glory. But,

2. True love to Christ makes the believer do all these; it makes him desirous of his presence, zealous for his interests, concerned for his people, and afraid to displease him. It makes the believer have common friends and common enemies with Christ; love what he loves, and hate what he hates; rejoice when he is glorified, and grieve when he is dishonoured. It makes him desire conformity to him, and love holiness, because it is his image; and also to long to be with him above, where he shall be like him, and see him as he is.

Q. How shall we know if these pangs of grief and tears, which some attain to in this ordinance, be hypocritical sorrow, or repentance unto life?

A. There is no doubt but hypocrites, and those whose hearts were never truly broken for sin, may shed tears, and have some pangs of sorrow at such an occasion; but then, it is certain their sorrow doth not proceed from an internal principle, or a special discovery of the evil and hateful nature of sin; but only from external motives and considerations, such as these—the consideration of the solemnity of this ordinance; the great danger of unworthy partaking; the hearing of a pathetic sermon, or a fervent representation of Christ's sufferings; the example of others weeping beside them; a view of the sad effects of sin, as it exposes the sinner to infinite wrath, and shuts out from eternal happiness. These things, I say, may occasion some pangs of sorrow, and tears in natural men, at a sacrament, and especially in those who are endued with something of a natural compassion and sympathy, which disposes them to relent and weep at the hearing of any tragical story, or beholding any pitiful spectacle. All this may be without any special operation of the Spirit of God, or real change on the heart; the hearts of natural men are like the stones, which are wet by the rain, but not softened. But,

2. That repentance which is true and saving, makes the soul to mourn for sin, upon the account of its intrinsic evil; because it highly dishonours God, abuses the goodness of a Father, wounds a loving Redeemer, grieves the Spirit of grace, defiles the precious soul, defaces the image of God, and debars from communion with him. It makes the soul to mourn for heart-sins, as well as outward sins, and long earnestly for more heart purity, and a total deliverance from sin.

Q. How shall we distinguish these purposes and resolutions which hypocrites may put on at a sacrament, to walk religiously and circumspectly, from the sincere resolution of true believers?

A. 1. Hypocrites' purposes and resolutions are not cordial and deliberate, but hastily taken on without consideration; they are not made in faith, and with self-denial and dependence on Christ, but taken on in their own strength. Their resolutions are not sincere and universal against all known sin, and for all known duty, but only against some particular sins, and for some particular duties. They proceed not from a principle of heart-love to God and holiness; but only from legal terrors and apprehensions of wrath.—They are not continuing, for they are only taken on in a fit, and soon vanish. But,

2. Believers' resolutions are cordial and deliberate, humble and self-denied, sincere and universal, and make abiding impressions on the soul. They proceed from heart-love to God, a deep conviction of the evil and danger of sin, and a gracious discovery of the beauty and excellency of holiness. They are made in an humble sense of their own weakness, wholly distrusting their own power, and relying entirely upon the grace and strength of Christ their surety, according as it is promised to them in the covenant of grace, Psal. lxxi. 16.

Q. Are there not some sincere souls who mistake the Lord's dealing with them, and think they have got no benefit by the sacrament, when they really have?

A. Yes; for there is a difference betwixt real communion with Christ, and sensible communion with him; the two disciples going to Emmaus had the first, but wanted the latter; they conversed with Christ in the way, but knew him not. So God's people may sometimes get special tokens of his bounty at the sacrament, when they are not sensible of it; and many have ground to say, as Jacob did of Bethel, "Surely God was in this place, and I knew it not," Gen. xxviii. 16.

Q. What may be the reasons of their mistake?

A. 1. Some may think they have got no good at the sacrament, because they have not got that which they particularly expected and looked for, though perhaps God hath given them something in place of it, that is as necessary and fit for them.

2. Some may reckon they have got no good, because they have not got so much as others, or, perhaps, as they themselves have felt at former occasions: they too much overlook and undervalue the crumb God hath given them, because of its smallness; though surely the least token of his favour should be highly prized and most thankfully received, as being far greater than they deserve.

3. Some may think they have got no good because they did not sensibly perceive it when they were at the Lord's table, or immediately thereafter: but we must know, that a sovereign and wise God will not be limited, but take his own time and way, to make his people sensible of these things that are freely given them at his table.

Q. What is the reason that so many of the Lord's people complain they get little or no benefit by this solemn ordinance; that they come expecting to meet with Christ at his table; but alas, they return disappointed?

A. 1. Sometimes the Lord may hide himself from his people, for his own holy and wise ends; that he may try them how they will behave in his absence; that he may humble them under a sense of their own weakness; and that he may excite them to greater earnestness and fervency in seeking after him. But,

2. The ordinary cause of God's dealing so with any, is for something in themselves: either, 1. They have not been at due pains in preparing themselves before they came to this ordinance. Or, 2. They have trusted too much to the preparation and pains they were at, expecting that this would make them acceptable to God, and merit something at his hand. Or, 3. Their appetites were not sharpened enough for this feast, they had not such a sense of wants and plagues as was needful. 4. It may be they rested more upon the ordinance itself, or the ministers that dispensed it, than upon the Author and Institutor of it. 5. Perhaps there was some leaven in the house, or Achan in the camp; I mean, some secret lust or idol, which was unhumbled for, or uncast out of the heart, for which God may be chastising them. 6. It may be, they have not readily hearkened to Christ's knocks, nor opened the door presently when he came to it, for which Christ is sometimes provoked to depart, as Cant. v. 2, 3, 6.

Q. What course ought these to take, who complain they find no benefit in this ordinance?

A. 1. They ought always to justify Christ in his dealings, and never blame him, who is certainly a gracious and bountiful Saviour, and delights in mercy.

2. They should only blame themselves for it, and diligently search for the cause of their disappointment in themselves, and cry with Job, "Show me wherefore thou contendest with me, make me to know my transgression and my sin."

3. When the sin is found out, they should humble themselves for it, mourn over it before the Lord, and flee to the blood of Christ for pardon.

4. They should long for another communion occasion, prepare for it more diligently and self-deniedly, watch more carefully over their hearts, and seek Christ more earnestly than before; resolving still to look to him, wait for him, and lie at his feet; pleading his power, mercy, and faithfulness, to the very last.

Q. How may we know if the Lord hath dealt bountifully with us in this ordinance?

A. The Lord deals bountifully with his people in this ordinance, when he visits them with his gracious presence, draws nigh to them by his Spirit's operations, and vouchsafes to hold communion with them.

Q. Are not God's people always near God, and he to them; and doth not his Spirit still dwell in them? Psal. xxxiv. 18; cxlviii. 13; John xiv. 16, 17. How then doth God draw nigh to them with his gracious presence and Spirit in the sacrament?

A. 1. We must distinguish betwixt a state of nearness and acts of nearness. Believers, by conversion and faith in Christ, are brought into a state of nearness to God, in so far as they are brought into favour and friendship with God, get the image of God drawn upon their souls; and the Spirit of God to dwell in their hearts. But it is in worship that believers attain to acts of nearness and communion with God.

2. There are some special acts of nearness to God in worship, that believers only attain to at some times: for God is nearer to them in some duties than others; as he allows them more of the evidences of his favour, and of the influences of his Spirit, at one time than another.

3. Though God be always near to his people, in respect of his Spirit's inhabitation; yet not always in respect of his sensible operation. Though Christ still dwells in the heart by his Spirit, yet he doth not always act alike in the soul, but only according to his good pleasure.

4. God is always near to his people by those operations and influences of his Spirit, which are necessary for preserving the being of grace in them; but not always near by those influences which actuate and enliven grace, and give them suitable consolations.

Q. How is it that God draws nigh to his people by his gracious presence, and holds communion with them by the special operations of his Spirit?

A. He draws nigh and communicates himself to his people, by his spiritual influences: 1. Of light. 2. Of life. 3. Of strength. 4. Of comfort.

Q. How is it that he draws nigh to his people with his influences of light, in this ordinance?

A. By giving them gracious and satisfying discoveries of God, and Christ, and spiritual objects: As,

I. When he gives them such a view of God's glory, in his attributes and perfections, as make deep impressions on their hearts; as, 1. When he lets them see the greatness and majesty of God, so as to fill them with holy fear and reverence of God, and humble them under a sense of their own nothingness before him. 2. When he shows them the infinite holiness and purity of God, so as to humble them under a sense of their own vileness and sinfulness in his sight, and make them cry with Isaiah, "Wo is me, I am undone, I am unclean," &c. Isa. vi. 5. 3. When he makes his goodness and mercy pass before them, proclaiming his name in their hearing, "The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness," &c. Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7, so as to set them a-wondering at God's free grace and goodness in pitying wretched rebel-sinners, and finding out a way for their recovery.

II. When he discovers to us the glorious divine attributes shining forth in a crucified Saviour: As, 1. When he lets us see the infinite justice and mercy of God illustriously displayed, yea, meeting together, and sweetly reconciled in the death and sufferings of Jesus Christ.

2. When he lets us see the divine power and strength treasured up in a crucified Jesus; and that he is able to draw our dead souls out of the grave, though our sins were as mountains of lead to hold them down. That he is able to kill our lusts, though every one of them were like Goliath to strength. That he is able to cleanse our souls, though every one of our sins were red as crimson. That he is able to bear us up, bring us through, and keep us by his power through faith unto salvation, though of ourselves we be weak and unstable as water.

3. When he lets us see the infinite goodness and mercy of God laid up in a crucified Christ, that he is not only able, but most willing, compassionate, and ready to save and pity helpless sinners; so as our hearts are melted by the discovery, and made to say, we will never again have uncharitable thoughts of Christ, we will never say he is cruel or hard-hearted to a perishing sinner; for we see he is all made up of bowels and tender mercies.

4. When he lets us see all the divine fulness dwelling in a crucified Redeemer. 1. That there is a fulness of grace in our Mediator, answerable to all our soul's wants and miseries; a fulness of light for our darkness; a fulness of life for our deadness; a fulness of strength for our weakness; and a fulness of merit for our guiltiness. 2. That there is in him a fulness and suitableness of offices; being constituted of God to be a prophet, to cure our ignorance; a priest, to atone for our guilt; and a king to rescue us from the bondage of our enemies. 3. That there is in him a fulness and suitableness of relations; that he stands in the relation of a physician, to cure our diseases; of an advocate, to plead for our acceptance with God; of a surety, to clear our old accounts and arrears; of a shepherd, to seek the lost straying sheep; of a brother and friend, to conduct our cause with God, when we are incapable to act for ourselves.

III. When he lets the soul see that Jesus Christ is not only a great and glorious Saviour in himself, but that he is our Saviour; when he clears up to us the evidences of our interest in him; so that we are in ease to say with Job, "I know my Redeemer liveth;" and with Paul, "I know in whom I have believed."

IV. When he lets us see the intrinsic evil and vileness that is in sin, and gives us such a discovery of it, in the glass of Christ's sufferings, as makes us to see its monstrous deformity, and God-provoking nature; and also to loathe ourselves, because of our abominations.

V. When he lets us see such a beauty in holiness, as it is the image of God, and that which makes us to resemble him, as causeth our souls to thirst for further degrees of it.

VI. When he gives us a heart-engaging view of the fulness, suitableness, freeness, sureness, order, and excellency of the new covenant and its promises; that it is Christ's blessed testament and latter-will to his people, containing and bequeathing many rich and precious legacies to them; all which are ratified and sealed to them in the Lord's supper.

VII. When he gives us a convincing view of the emptiness of the world, and the insufficiency of all creatures to help a sinner, or satisfy the desires of an immortal soul; so that we are fain to betake ourselves to Christ as our all-sufficient help, and cry, "None but Christ."

VIII. When he gives a soul-ravishing discovery of the things that are unseen in the other world, the glory of heaven, and the inexpressible happiness of the saints that dwell there; so as to make us long for the finishing of our pilgrimage, that we may depart and be with Christ.

These, and such like discoveries, the Lord oftentimes makes by his Spirit to his people in this ordinance; by opening their understandings to see divine things in another way than ever they saw before.

Q. How is it that the Lord draws nigh and communicates himself to his people in the sacrament by the influences of life?

A. By sending his quickening Spirit to put life in their graces, and to draw them forth to a lively exercise; particularly, 1. When he actuates their faith and enables them to go out to Christ, lay the burden of their sins upon him, and lean wholly to him for pardon and salvation.

2. When he quickens repentance, and makes the heart to melt into tears and godly sorrow for sin.

3. When he kindles love in the heart, and makes it to burn, while he talks with them, and opens to them the scriptures.

4. When he draws out the desires and pantings of their souls towards Christ, and makes them hunger and thirst for God, and follow hard after him.

5. When he quickens the spirit of prayer in them, and makes them more fervent and lively in pouring out their hearts to God, and causes them to take delight in their duty. Thus the Lord draws nigh to his people in the sacrament, by enlivening their souls in the exercise of grace; but seeing I have treated of this liveliness more particularly before, and given marks for the trial of it, I shall add no more upon this head.

Q. How is it that the Lord draws nigh and communicates himself to his people in this ordinance by his influences of strength?

A. He doth it by the operations of his Spirit in their souls these several ways;

1. When he seasonably steps in, and supports their weak faith, staggering hope, and fainting hearts, when ready to sink with fears and discouragements, Isa. xli. 10.

2. When he encourages them to undertake, and enables them to perform, the hardest and most difficult duties; not only to attend all public ordinances, but even to make conscience of secret prayer, mortification, mourning over sin, &c. Isa. xl. 24.

3. When he enables them not only to perform duty, but even to do it with delight and activity; counting it their meat and drink to do God's will, and reckoning one day in his courts worth a thousand elsewhere.

4. He strengthens his people at the sacrament, by enabling them to conquer and subdue their strong lusts and corruptions, that formerly were too hard for them.

5. He doth it by enabling them to resist all temptations, and get the victory over Satan, Luke xxii. 31.

6. By encouraging them to patient bearing of the cross, and all these afflictions and burdens that the Lord thinks fit to lay upon them, Psal. cxxxviii. 3.

Q. How is it that the Lord draws nigh to his people in the sacrament by his influences of comfort?

A. 1. By clearing up the evidences of their graces to them; so that they are made to see that they have true grace wrought in them by the Spirit of God. Before, they questioned if they had any faith; but now they can say with the poor man in the gospel, "Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief." Before, they doubted if they had any love to Christ; but now they are helped to say with Peter, "Lord, thou that knowest all things, knowest that I love thee."

2. He comforts them, by clearing up to them their interest in the great and precious promises; and in Jesus Christ the author of them, and his glorious purchase; so that they are enabled to say with the spouse, Cant. ii. 16, "My beloved is mine, and I am his;" and neither sin nor death will dissolve this sweet relation, Rom. viii. 35, 38, and this gives them very strong consolation.

3. He comforts them in the sacrament, by intimating to them the pardon of their sins, and a free discharge of all their debts, graciously whispering by his Spirit into the ear of the soul such a word as that which Christ spoke to the man sick of the palsy, "Son, be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee," Matt. ix. 2.

4. He comforts them, by loosing them from their bonds and straitening of spirit, and allowing them free access unto the throne of grace, so as they can pour out their melting hearts in God's bosom, with some confidence of his favour and good will, 2 Cor. iii. 17.

5. He comforts them, by hearing and answering their prayer, and graciously bestowing upon them their spiritual mercies, which they have been many a day seeking and wrestling for, Deut. iv. 7.

6. He sometimes gives them the assurance of his love and favour, by the witnessings of his Spirit concurring with the reasonings of their spirits, whereby they are enabled clearly to discern and know the things freely given to them of God, and conclude that they are in covenant with God, and passed from death to life, 1 Cor. ii. 13; Rom. viii. 16.

7. He comforts them, by letting out upon their souls the sensible breathings and influences of his Spirit, that are like the dew to the withered grass, the rain to the dry ground, or the south wind to the spices. And those enlarge their hearts, put an edge upon their faith and love, and make them cheerful in every duty, Psal. lxxii. 6; cxix. 32; Hos. xiv. 5; Cant. iv. 16.

8. He sometimes comforts them, by bringing them into his banqueting-house, and setting them under the banner of his love. He sheds abroad his love in their hearts, and gives them peace and joy in believing. He scatters their clouds, dissolves their doubts, removes their fears, and makes them to hear the voice of joy and gladness. Conscience acquits them, as sincere in their faith and love. God smiles on them, and kisses them with the kisses of his mouth, that is, he enables them to apply the sweet comforts of his promises, which are the refreshing words of his mouth, sweeter to them than honey from the honey-comb. Thus the Lord sometimes makes his people joyful in the house of prayer, satisfies them as with marrow and fatness, gives them the peace that passeth understanding, and fills them with joy unspeakable and full of glory; whereby they are enabled to delight and rejoice in God, as their covenanted God. He brings them out of the miry clay, sets their feet upon a rock, establishes their goings, and puts a new song in their mouth, "even praises to our God," Psal. xl. 1, 3; li. 8; lxiii. 5; Cant. ii. 4; i. 2; Rom. v. 5; xv. 13.

Q. How shall we know that our manifestations and attainments on sacrament occasions are real, and not delusions?

A. 1. Those manifestations which are from God, commonly carry their own evidence along with them, that convinces the soul of their reality.

2. They are usually attained after much wrestling, humiliation, and tender walking.

3. They are accompanied with great self-loathing and abasement, and bring humbling discoveries of our own nothingness, emptiness, and villainess, Luke v. 8.

4. They excite us to high exalting thoughts of Christ and free grace, and to approve heartily of Christ in all his offices.

5. They stir up those that have them to holiness and tenderness of walk, and to have a holy jealousy over themselves. But so do not the delusory attainments of hypocrites.

6. Where manifestations are real and gracious, the soul entertains good thoughts of Christ, and gives him its testimony as lovely and matchless, even when he is withdrawn, Cant. x. 6, 10.

Q. But what shall these serious souls do that cannot lay claim to those high attainments and comforts before-mentioned?

A. 1. Let them bless God that they have these things necessary for making out a saving interest in Christ; for some of these high things afore-mentioned are not essential thereunto.

2. Let them beware at any time of razing the foundation, upon the account of their wanting these special blessings and attainments; seeing the promises of life and salvation are not annexed to these, but unto faith followed with holiness.

3. We have even ground, from Heb. ii. 15, and other texts, to believe that there are some heirs of glory, who have a cloudy passage and a rough sea through their whole voyage to the heavenly Canaan; being all their life-time very subject to fears and darkness: though, indeed, I grant it is God's ordinary way to give his people some lucid intervals and calm breezes now and then, for their support and through-bearing.

Q. May not some poor souls have real communion with Christ, and reap spiritual benefit by this solemn ordinance, who have not such comforts and sensible manifestations from God as before-mentioned?

A. No doubt they may; for when Christ gives his people a hearty grief and sorrow for sin, it is as sure an evidence of his gracious presence, and his holding communion with them, as when their souls are affectionately melted into love, praise, and joy. There is communion with Christ, even in a reproof, as is evident in the case of Peter, when he denied his Master; Christ gave Peter then a look, and it was a heart-piercing look, whereby he was sharply rebuked; and yet it was one of the sweetest and kindest looks that ever Peter met with since his conversion; for it melted his heart, set him a-mourning, and brought him back again to his Redeemer, whom he had so foully deserted. And there, we see, was sweet communion with Christ, even in sharp rebukes; so that the nature of communion with Christ is by many very much mistaken, when they confine it only to sensible manifestations of God's love, and the smiles of his face. For there may be real communion with Christ, and great soul-advantage reaped by the Lord's supper, where these are not enjoyed.

As for instance, 1. When we find our repentance and grief for sin increased; when we see more of sin's deformity and bitterness; abhor it, and resolve against it more, as Christ's enemy; and are more afraid of grieving or piercing him by it than formerly.

2. When we have an higher esteem of Christ and his glorious undertaking, and find our hearts better pleased with the tenor of the covenant, and contrivance of redemption through Christ, than formerly.

3. When we are strengthened to pray better, cry more fervently to God, and be more anxious for his presence in duty than formerly.

4. When we find stronger desires after heart-holiness, and for grace to make us capable to serve Christ, and advance his glory and interest in any station.

5. When our hearts and consciences are more tender than formerly, so that we dare not now shift any known duty, nor venture on sin, or temptations to it as before. The company of the wicked, and all other temptations to sin, are now unwelcome to us.

6. When at least we can say, that we have a greater burning of desires towards Christ than before; that we long, thirst, and are wholly restless without him, and even would be content to part with all our best enjoyments in the world for an interest in him: then it is a sign Christ hath been with us in this ordinance, and hath showed us tokens for good, for which we have cause to be thankful to him.

Q. What shall we say of those who thought they had something of the shining of God's face upon their soul, when they were at the table; but now they are gone, and their sky is again overcast with clouds: they apprehended their hearts were melted, and their affections thawed, and their souls were in a good frame, but now they are dead again, as before?

A. 1. Let such examine their attainments, whether they be temporary flashes, or seeming goodness of hypocrites, by the marks and differences which I have laid down before for that end.

2. Let them not conclude that all they tasted or felt at the Lord's table was delusion, because their case is so soon altered; for it is no new thing for the people of God to complain of a sudden change in their prosperous condition, and to be troubled with heart-deadness and drowsiness, and with Christ's withdrawing soon on the back of sweet communion with him, Psal. xxx. 6, 7; Cant. ii. 17, 18, compared with Cant. ii. 1; Mat. xxvi. 26, 30, 35, compared with chap. v. 40, 43, 45.

3. They ought to reflect upon their own carriage under Christ's smiles, and see what ground they have given him to withdraw. It may be, 1. They were not thankful when they had his presence. Or, 2. Perhaps they were vain or proud of it. Or, 3. They were not watchful against their spiritual enemies. Or, 4. They trusted too much to themselves, and did not depend upon Christ for preserving their gracious frame of heart.

Q. What course ought those serious souls to take, who have so soon lost their gracious frame and attainments?

A. 1. Let them beware of questioning all the former proofs of God's favour, or blaming Christ now for unkindness in tarrying so short while with them; but let them blame their own unwatchful and untender carriage while he was pleased to visit them with his presence.

2. Let them go in secret, and be deeply humbled under a sense of their miscarriage and mismanagement, and look to the blood of sprinkling for pardon.

3. Let them try to close afresh with Christ on the gospel offers, and seal the covenant of new; and if they subscribed it before with a trembling hand, and so indistinctly and darkly that they cannot read their name, let them now subscribe it over again, and study to do it in more distinct and legible characters.

Q. What is incumbent upon those who are still sensible of God's gracious presence, and bountiful dealing towards them, at the sacrament?

A. 1. They should wonder that he condescends so far to such vile unworthy creatures, 2 Sam. vii. 18.

2. They should be thankful, and rejoice in him: "Let the children of Zion be joyful in their King," Psal. cxlix. 4.

3. Let them entertain their Redeemer kindly, and hold him in the galleries by a holy importunity, and carefully guard against every thing that may stir him up, or awake him, till he please, Cant. ii. 7.

4. They ought to set up their pillar of remembrance, record what they have seen and met with at this ordinance, take all about them to witness that it is Christ, and resolve to keep it always on record, and make use of it against the time when cursed unbelief, or a challenging devil, will be ready to say, "Where is thy God?" Psal. xliii. 3, 4, 6.

5. They ought to walk very tenderly and watchfully, fearing lest they should lose what they have got; like a traveller that hath much money or many jewels about him, who is apt to suspect every one he meets with for a thief. We have many envious enemies, who have a narrow eye upon us at this market of grace, and seek to rob us of the precious treasure we get there, Luke xxii. 31.

6. They ought to pity and pray for others that have not got their length, and by prayer send portions to those for whom nothing is provided.

7. Let them commit their hearts and frames to Christ's keeping, that he may preserve any good thing to them they have got, and be surety for them and it, and make it forth-coming to them against the time of need, 1 Chron. xxix. 18; Psal. cxix. 122; 1 Tim. i. 12.

8. Let them carefully notice the first step or least degree of God's withdrawing from them, and endeavour to hold him, and stop his way, by throwing themselves at his feet, and humbly beseeking him to stay with them, notwithstanding of many grounds of provocation.

Q. But what shall those poor believers do, who, instead of praising God for his bountiful dealing at this ordinance, are put to sigh and mourn under darkness and desertion?

A. 1. They should consider that this case is not unusual for the best of saints; Job, David, Asaph, Heman, nay, Christ himself, have complained of desertion.

2. They should make no harsh construction of God's dealing with them, but leave their complaints upon themselves, and justify God in all he doth.

3. They should be deeply humbled under the loss of God's gracious presence, be grieved for those things that have sinned him away, sit as a widow in his absence, and refuse all other comforters till he return, Lam. i. 16.

4. They should be searching diligently for the Achan in the camp, the sin for which God is contending with them, Psal. lxxvii. 6; Job x. 2.

5. They should learn to live by faith, and trust in a withdrawing God; believe him, think and speak well of him when he frowns, as well as when he smiles, Job xiii. 15.

Q. Is not desertion, or the withdrawing of God's presence from a poor soul, a very sad and melancholy case?

A. Certainly it is; for, 1. The soul under desertion is deprived of the light of God's countenance, which is the choicest blessing in the world, Psal. iv. 6.

2. The consequences of God's withdrawing are very heavy and grievous to believers; because ordinarily there follow upon it these evils: 1. Great darkness and confusion upon the Spirit, Lam. iii. 2. 2. Great hardness and impenitency upon the heart, Isa. xliii. 17. 3. Much deadness and stupidity upon the affections. 4. Loss of spiritual appetite and desires. 5. Unspiritedness and disability for duty, Psal. xl. 12; lxxxviii. 4. 6. A general barrenness upon the soul, and witheredness of the graces, John xvi. 6. 7. Liableness to all sorts of dangers and enemies, Num. xiv. 9. 8. Anxiety of mind for former unkindness and unthankfulness to God, Psal. lxxvii. 3. 9. Unwelcome thoughts of death and judgment. 10. A revived sense of wrath, and of the law's curses and threatenings. 11. Melancholy apprehensions of God's judgments to pursue them, while they are in time. 12. Fears of utter rejection, and eternal banishment from God's presence, Psal. lxxvii. 9, 10; exix. 8.

Q. What are the usual causes of God's withdrawing from his people?

A. 1. Their scandalous outbreakings, Isa. i. 23, 15. 2. Their wearying of duty, Isa. xliii. 22. 3. Their not entertaining Christ's calls, and his Spirit's motions, Cant. v. 2, 3, 6. 4. Their earthly-mindedness, and preferring of time's things to precious Christ, Isa. lvii. 17; Mat. viii. 28. 5. Their sloth and formality in duty, Isa. lxiv. 7. 6. Their want of a due sense of their own sins, and the sins of the land where they live, Hos. v. 15. 7. Their making a saviour of their duties, and their putting these in Christ's room. 8. Miscarriages under, or after signal enjoyments and manifestations, 1 Kings ii. 9. 9. Their sins under, or after great afflictions, Isa. lvii. 27.

Q. What shall we do to recover God's gracious presence again when we have lost it?

A. 1. Let us be sensible that we have sinned him away. 2. Let us humbly inquire into the cause of his departure. 3. Let us be restless and uneasy in our minds till he return. 4. Let us conscientiously attend all ordinances, and use all means for recovering God's presence. 5. Let us be still lamenting after the Lord, and bewailing the loss we sustain for want of him. 6. Let us both be mourning for, and striving to mortify these sins and idols that have taken our Lord away from us. 7. Let us still continue in fervent prayer, and wrestle with God for his gracious return; and let us fill our mouths with arguments to plead with him for it, Psal. xxv. 16, 17; Job xxii. 3, 4.

Q. What are those proper arguments, which we are to plead in prayer for the return of God's gracious presence?

A. 1. We ought to plead the low and helpless case we are in without it, Psal. lxxix. 8. 2. We should plead the extreme need we stand in of it. 3. Plead the greatness and tenderness of God's mercy, and Christ's bowels of compassion, Mat. xv. 22. 4. Plead how easy it is for him to answer all our complaints, and redress all our grievances, Psal. lxxx. 1. 5. Plead the freeness of his grace. 6. The greatness of his power. 7. The glory of his name, Psal. lxxix. 8. 8. Let us plead former experiences of his kindness, Psal. lxxxvi. 3, 5, 13. 9. Let us much plead our covenant relation to God, and our interest in him. The church and the people of God often make use of this argument with God, "We are thine, a people that belong to thee," Isa. lxiii. 19; Psal. cxix. 94; lxxix. 8. And this argument hath often prevailed with God to return to his people, Isa. lxiii. 8; Exod. xxxii. 11—14.

Q. But what shall these do, who cannot plead this argument, in regard they fear they are not in a covenant with God, and so cannot say to him, We are thine?

A. 1. Though believers under desertion are often tempted to renounce and quit claim to any covenant-relation to God, yet we should not hearken to that temptation, nor be willing to let go the covenant we have taken hold of. But seeing we have fled to the horns of the altar for safety, we should abide by them; and even when by temptations we are beat off from one horn, we should strive to hold fast by another. And, therefore, when we cannot say to God, we are thine by his acceptance, yet we should say, we are thine by our own resignation. As we have formerly given up ourselves to God, so we resolve to abide by that deed: we will not be the devil's, nor the world's, we will be but the Lord's. And when we are thus helped resolutely to cast ourselves upon him, our souls may revive, and faith gather strength in prayer; for, to be sure, God is more ready to covenant with us than we with him; and more willing to be ours, than we are to be his.

2. Let us plead a title to God by creation, when we cannot do it by redemption; so doth the church under desertion, Isa. lxiv. 7—9, "O Lord, thou art our Father, we are the clay, and thou our Potter, and we are all the work of thine hand. Be not wroth very sore," &c. If we can do no more, let us thus plead an interest in him by creation, and wait his leisure; for if we duly make use of this one talent, it will increase.

Q. What shall be said to those disconsolate souls, who are complaining that it is not with them now as in the days of old, and in months past, when the candle of the Lord shined on their heads; once they went to communions with great satisfaction, and returned with the high praises of God in their mouths, but now God hath altered the course of his dealing with them. He hides his face, and sacrament days are melancholy occasions to them. They call to mind former experiences, but alas, they find that but increases their trouble, Psal. lxxvii. 3.

A. 1. Let all such consider, that God takes different ways of dealing with his people. He useth to treat young beginners otherwise than those who have made some progress in religion: he knows young beginners are raw and tender, and unable to bide a storm: and therefore it is said, "He carries his lambs in his bosom." We use to hire children to learn their lesson, when they go first to school; but afterwards we correct them, and make them learn with a frown.

2. We ought to remember that Christ will have his people to live and walk by faith, and not by sense, to follow him in dark nights, and through rough paths, and even when he seems to flee from them. It would be no trial to our faith and love, to follow Christ in the roughest ways, had we still a view of the crown, and of Christ's smiling face: but Christ will have his disciples taught to follow him without sensible encouragements. We see those that run a race, get a sight of the silver cup or prize first when they set forth; but perhaps never see it again till they get it in their hand, and yet they run on: so a traveller may see the city he is going to, when he is several miles off, and yet it may be out of his sight when he is within half a mile of it; but he believes it is not far off, and therefore still goes on.

3. Let such disconsolate souls strive to keep up a warm love to Christ, and to commend him highly, even in his absence, as did the spouse, Cant. v. 6. There we see she had sought Christ, but could not find him; she called him, but he gave no answer; and she is rudely handled in his absence by the watchmen, and upbraided by the daughters of Jerusalem: yet, notwithstanding of all these discouragements, she breaks out in the most lofty commendation of her Beloved and his matchless excellencies, ver. 10—16; and concludes all with this, "He is altogether lovely."

4. However melancholy the present case of such may be, yet they should study to sing praises to God, in a thankful remembrance of the kindness he hath showed to them in former times. It is a provoking carriage in many believers, that when any new cloud comes, or doubt arises, they prove as froward and unthankful to Christ, as if he had never done any thing for them at all. It would certainly be both just and generous in believers, to sing praises to their Beloved under their darkest clouds.

Q. But how shall they sing, who think they have cause to weep with Jerusalem, Lam. i. 16, "For these things I weep, mine eyes run down with water, for the comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me?"

A. They should mix their weeping with singing, for tears and praises are not inconsistent; sometimes it rains while the sun shines. Believers are called to "praise God at all times, and in every thing to give thanks, and to rejoice evermore." We see Paul and Silas sang praises to God in a dark prison at midnight, when their backs were torn with scourges, and their feet fast with stocks, Acts xvi. 25. Hence it is, that believers are called "singing birds," Cant. ii. 12. They would sing in all the seasons and months in the year, even in winter, and in the dead months of affliction and desertion. When it is winter and foul weather, they should sing in remembrance of the fair seasons they have had, and in expectation of the summer-sun at the return of the year; and so rejoice in hope of better times.

2. This course may prove very successful to the removing of our grievances, and altering of our frames. For thus, some exercised souls have sung away their heart plagues and ill frames. By praising they have conquered their unbelief, distrust, and unworthy thoughts of Christ, as Jehoshaphat did the Ammonites, by sending singers before the army into the field when he was in great distress, 2 Chron. xx. 21, 22. So did David in his dejected and melancholy condition, Psal. xliii. 6, 8, 9, 11, "O my God, my soul is cast down within me, therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan and of the Hermonites, from the hill Mizar. Yet the Lord will command his loving-kindness in the daytime, and in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life. I will say unto God my rock, Why hast thou forgotten me? Why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy? Why art thou cast down, O my soul? And why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God." Where we may observe, how David sings away his discouragement and dejection, partly by reflecting and looking back on what God hath done for him before; and partly by expecting and believing what God would yet do for him. Likewise we see the church in the Lamentations, for as low as she was in distress, under which she was mourning and weeping, yet she hopes and praises in the midst of all, Lam. iii. 17, 18, 24, 25, 31, 32.

Q. But what shall those do whose case is so dark, and hopes so sunk, that look they back or forward, they can see no light? How shall they sing or praise?

A. Though they had no other matter of praise, they should try to sing of Christ's wonderful free love, his glorious undertaking and amazing condescension, in leaving his throne in heaven, to dwell with worms on earth, and bear their sins upon the accursed tree. Is there not here sufficient, nay, endless matter of praise, both for angels and men?

Q. How shall they praise who think they have no interest in that love-undertaking?

A. 1. How many things do we praise that we have no interest in, and are nothing the better of. We praise the strength of Samson, the wisdom of Solomon, and the courage of Alexander, that we are not interested in.

2. The angels admire and praise Christ's glorious undertaking for lost men, though he took not upon him the nature of angels, nor died for them; and much more ought we, whose nature he assumed, to whom he so freely offers the benefits of his death, Rev. v. 11, 12.

3. It is surely our own fault, if we have not an interest in Christ's undertaking, seeing we are so pressingly invited to come and share of it: for if we will but come and accept of Christ's love, and the benefits of his death, then all is ours. And why then should we not willingly accept of the gospel offer, and claim an interest in all that Christ hath done for sinners?

1. Let us endeavour to look to Christ, love him and praise him as we can; and he will cause our sky to break, and give us more ground of praise. For we are sure he never sent one to hell, that loved and praised him with his heart.

Q. But what shall those dejected souls do, who can say they have prayed, they have praised. gone to many communions, attended all ordinances, and all duties, and essayed all means they can think of; but they miss God in them all, still he hides his face; and so they are almost hopeless, and fear matters will never mend with them?

A. I. We have Job, that eminent saint, making that very same complaint, Job xxiii. 8, 9, "Behold, I go forward, but I cannot perceive him; on the left hand, where he doth work, but I cannot behold him; he hideth himself on the right hand that I cannot see him." Where we see, he tried all places, essayed all means, and used all diligence to find God's gracious presence, and still he is disappointed. And good Hezekiah, in his distress, says, "He mourned as a dove, and his eyes failed looking upward," Isa. xxxviii. 14. So that we see such a complaint is no singular case.

II. We should never yield in the day of adversity, whatever be our trial, but always make known our case to God by prayer, and never faint, Prov. xxiv. 10; Luke xviii. 1. As this is our commanded duty, so it is the practice of the saints in the greatest strait; they still lie at the throne of grace, and never give over duty, Psal. cxix. 81—83. Yea, Jonah, when his case seemed most hopeless, he being in the belly of a whale, and in the bottom of the ocean, yet he persists in duty, Jonah ii. 6, "When my soul fainted within me, I remembered the Lord, and my prayer came in unto thee."

III. As we should persist in seeking Christ, so we should continue to do it sorrowing and weeping, as Mary did at the sepulchre; yea, her sorrow for her loss was so great, that two angels could not dry up her tears, nor comfort her heart, without Christ.

IV. Let us see that our sorrow be of the right stamp; that it be, 1. Not only for our loss, but for our sins, that are the cause thereof; alas! it is our sins that have grieved his Spirit.

2. That it be not so much for the loss of the comfort and sweetness we have felt in communion with God, as for the loss of God himself, and his presence, which is valuable.

3. That it be not so much for the disadvantage we ourselves sustain, as that we are less capable to serve God, having no life for duty, no strength to love or praise him, as formerly.

4. In the midst of our deepest sorrows for God's absence, let us not omit to take notice of God's goodness in any thing that is favourable in our cause, and bless God for it: as, for instance, (1.) That he gives us a sense of our condition, and that we are not past all feeling, as many are. (2.) That we are living, and have yet time to search, mourn, pray, and use means for recovering his presence. (3.) That we are not in a hopeless, despairing condition, like Spira, or the damned in hell; for what better are we than they? (4.) When our reason tires and yields, then faith should take place, and we should even hope against hope, according to Rom. iv. 18. When ordinary means do not succeed, we should even look to God, that can work without means, beyond them; and can act miraculously. Let us observe Jonah's behaviour in the whale's belly, Jonah ii. 3, 4, "Thou hast cast me into the deep, in the midst of the seas, and the floods compassed me about, all thy billows and thy waves passed over me. Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight: yet I will look again toward thy holy temple." Jonah's case looked to be singular; he thought God had quite forsaken him, and would never return again; for he had no example before him of any in his case, or of any that were delivered out of a fish's belly. There was no way of escape open to him, but by a miracle; and what ground had he to expect that a miracle of mercy should be wrought for him, who was now made a monument of justice. His own conscience, no doubt, would flee in his face and tell him that he had wickedly fled from the presence of the Lord, and therefore God might justly cast him out of his presence: that he had procured all this sad distress to himself, and so had little ground to expect deliverance. And yet we see how wonderfully his faith overcame his fear and despondency, ver. 4, "Yet I will look again toward thy holy temple." Though his guilt made him ashamed to say he would dwell in God's house, either on earth or in heaven; yet he says, I will at least look toward it. Though thou shouldst cast me never so far away from thee, "Yet I will look again to thee;" yea, though thou shouldst cast me down as low as hell, yet I will look up from it to thee again; still my heart will hanker after thee, and I will look for pity at thy hand.

V. Let us plead the mercy of God's nature, and the faithfulness of his word, and stay our fainting souls on these preps; and when our darkness is great, let us send forth hope, that good messenger, to see what it can spy, and what good news it can bring in from the mercy and faithfulness of God, according to Psal. xliii. 5; exix. 81; ciii. 9; Isa. lvii. 16.

VI. It becomes us, under hidings and disappointments, at such a solemn occasion, humbly to submit to divine sovereignty, (for God knows what is best for us,) and quietly to hold his time and leisure; and still to hope for a visit from him in due time. It was a noble saying of one in such a case, "Though he came not to dine with me, yet he will come and sup, therefore I will wait on him." The Lord takes a liberty with his people while here, because he has a whole eternity to manifest himself to them; the time is near when those who groan under his absence, "shall be ever with the Lord," 1 Thess. iv. 12. O deserted believers, take comfort; for what you come short of obtaining on earth, will be abundantly made up to you in heaven; whatever doors, walls, or lattices, are now betwixt you and Christ, hereafter there shall be none. You may say, how long he will hide, I cannot positively determine; but this I am sure of, he can withdraw himself no longer from a poor believer than he is in this world. Rejoice in this, you shall drop all your complaints, fears, and jealousies at heaven's gates, and never take them up again. And in the mean time, let present hidings and disappointments have the same effect upon you they had on the spouse, Cant. iii. 3; she turns sick of love to Christ, rises from her sloth, and goes through all the streets and ways of the city, seeking him whom her soul loved.

Q. But what shall be said to those distressed souls, who apprehend that none of these counsels and comforts that belong to God's children under desertion, are applicable to them; because they fear they are totally and finally forsaken?

A. 1. Let such remember what counsel they have sometimes given to support others, in the like case, and study now to take it to themselves; lest it be applicable to them what Eliphaz said to Job, "Thy words have upholden him that was falling, and thou hast strengthened the feeble knees: but now it is come upon thee, and thou faintest; it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled," Job iv. 4, 5. It is indeed much easier to give advice than take it: people in health will advise sick folk to take this and the other thing; and yet, when the case comes to be their own, they are at a stand what to do.

2. Let such seriously consider, whether indeed they bear the characters of a total desertion, yea, or not; indeed, if their hearts be willing to quit God, give up all claim to him, be satisfied with the world, and indifferent whether he return again or no, it is a bad sign. But let them be ingenuous; is there not still some hankering desire in their souls towards God? Is there not something in their hearts that says, Let him do with me as he pleases; I am resolved to lie all my days at Christ's feet, and never go to another door for mercy: though he should never smile on me; yet I will still be uneasy and restless without his favour: I will wait for him, cleave to him, and mourn after him. Whatever the devil or my own heart suggest, I will not believe any evil report of Christ. I will not hear an ill tale of that lovely one, nor go from his door with any harsh thoughts of him. And though their case be very dark and hopeless like, yet let me ask them, if they would be willing to quit any little hope they have of Christ, for all the world's pleasures, or flattering offers that sin and Satan can make them. Nay, is there not something in their consciences that still stands up for God against sin, saying, Though I should die in darkness, yet I will never hearken to sin or Satan, I will never quit prayer, I will never hate Christ or holiness, I will never yield to temptations, nor join with the wicked, who wallow in sin's defilements, and mock at religion. Do they not see many about them, that for as ill as their case is, yet they would not exchange cases with them, for all the riches and honours in the land? Then surely they are not totally nor finally forsaken. For what is it but the Spirit of God that keeps them waking and restless without Christ, when others are sleeping in sin, and have no trouble for want of him? What is it but his grace that keeps them still waiting on God in the way of duty, and in the use of all means? And though they come little speed, yet they dare not slight ordinances, nor neglect prayer, as many do, but still would be at casting themselves in Christ and his Spirit's way, and keep as near him as possibly they can; and dare never think of saying to God with the wicked, Job xxi. 14, "Depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways." Surely this is owing to Christ's upholding grace, and not to ourselves: for were we wholly left by him, we would run as far from God and his presence as ever we could, and shun all sorts of converse with him. Let us then receive and take notice of the least crumb of Christ's goodness with thankfulness, and cordially bless him for it, for that is the way to get more, Psal. lxxvii. 5, 6; Luke xvii. 15.

OF THE CONVERSATION OF COMMUNICANTS, AFTER THEY HAVE BEEN AT THE LORD'S TABLE.

Q. What is that conversation that communicants ought to have after the sacrament?

A. It must be a conversation that is rightly ordered, and suitable to the obligations we are laid under by this ordinance: particularly it must be in some measure suitable to these things: 1. The rule of God's word. 2. The pattern of Christ's life. 3. The principles of our profession. 4. The vows we have made. 5. The sights we have seen. 6. The favours we have received. 7. The promises that are sealed to us in this ordinance. Lastly, The offices and relations which Christ hath undertaken and stands in to his people.

Q. When is our conversation suitable to the rule of God's word?

A. 1. When we conscientiously study to know God's mind revealed in his will. 2. When we put a high value on God's word, and esteem all its precepts to be just and right. 3. When we sincerely aim at an universal conformity thereto, both in heart and life, without neglecting any known duty. 4. When we carefully notice all our wanderings and aberrations from this rule, mourn for them, reform from them, and also hate and avoid every thing contrary to this holy rule, Isa. viii. 20; Psal. cxix. 128.

Q. When is our conversation suited to the pattern of Christ's life?

A. When we study to follow his steps when he lived on earth, and imitate him in all his imitable perfections; particularly in these:

1. His meekness and lowliness. 2. His mortification and deniedness to the world and its enjoyments. 3. His heavenliness and spirituality in discourse. 4. His frequency and fervency in prayer. 5. His love to holiness. 6. His zealous concern for the purity of God's worship and ordinances. 7. His readiness to do good to others. 8. His forgiving and praying for enemies. 9. His obedience to parents. 10. His peaceful and quiet deportment. 11. His temperance in diet. 12. His contentment in a mean condition. 13. His thankfulness for mercies. 14. His willingness to die.

Q. When is our conversation suited to the principles of our profession?

A. When we distinctly know them, firmly believe them, openly profess them, stedfastly adhere to them, and have our practice corresponding to our profession; particularly when we live and walk as those who fixedly believe,

1. That God is infinitely holy and just. 2. That God is the fountain and giver of all good. 3. That all things in the world are vanity, and infinitely below God. 4. That sin is the greatest evil in the world, and cannot be expiated without an infinite satisfaction. 5. That Jesus Christ is the only Saviour of sinners, and infinitely precious. 6. That Christless souls are in a lost state, under the power of sin and Satan. 7. That a holy God hath tied sin and sorrow together. 8. That repentance is absolutely necessary to the pardon of sin. 9. That faith in Jesus Christ is the only way to reconciliation with God, and the obtaining of any mercy from him. 10. That without regeneration we cannot be admitted to the communion with God, nor see the kingdom of heaven. 11. That holiness and happiness are inseparably connected together. 12. That God is a spirit, and can never be pleased with bodily service, but must needs have the heart in every duty. 13. That we have no good thing in ourselves, grace must work all in us, and without Christ we can do nothing. Now, if our practice be suitable to these principles, we must be numbered among those that glorify God and order their conversation aright, Psal. l. ult. But if our walk be contrary thereto, we will be ranked among those that "profess that they know God, but in words deny him," Tit. i. ult.

Q. When is our conversation answerable to our sacramental vows?

A. 1. When we keep up a lively sense of our vows and engagements upon our spirits, Psal. liv. 12.

2. When we distrust our own strength, for keeping and performing our vows, flee to God in Christ for strength, and back our vows with earnest prayers, Psal. cxix. 8, 57, 58.

3. When we carefully study in Christ's strength to perform our vows, by a constant watchfulness against all sin, and a constant diligence in all duty, Job xxxi. 1; Psal. cxix. 106.

4. When we make these persons witnesses to the performance of our vows, whom we made witnesses to the making of them; that is, when we behave ourselves so circumspectly and Christianly in all these parts of our conversation which are visible to the world, that the whole congregation may observe a change to the better, and take notice of us "that we have been with Jesus," Psal. cxvi. 14; Acts iv. 13.

5. When we stand upon our guard against all those temptations that may induce us to break our vows; such as evil company, and immoderate love to the world; for by these both Peter and Demas were tempted to break their vows.

6. When we improve our vows in time of temptation, for quenching the fiery darts of the tempter, and resisting all his solicitations, saying, "Thy vows are upon me, O God. And how can I do this wickedness, and sin against God?" Psal. lvi. 12; Gen. xxxix. 9.

7. When we remember our vows, so as to rouse and quicken us to duty, when we begin to grow backward to it, or slothful in performing of it, Psal. cxix. 106.

Q. When is our conversation suited to the sight which we behold in the sacrament?

A. When we are so affected with the sufferings of Christ, and the dreadfulness of God's wrath, and severity of his justice against sin here represented, as to keep up constant impressions of the evil of sin, and to hate it, and avoid it with all carefulness, 2 Cor. vii. 11.

2. When we are so affected with the greatness of Christ's love to us here displayed, as to be thereby constrained to love him again, to admire and praise him; study likeness to him; converse much with him; avoid what he hates and forbids; and practise what he loves and commands, 2 Cor. v. 14, 15.

3. When we so believe the preciousness of our souls, that Christ gave his life a ransom for; and the worth of heaven, that Christ hath shed his blood to purchase, as to be willing to quit with all sinful pleasures to gain these and make it the uptaking business of our lives to win our souls and eternal glory, Matt. xvi. 26; 2 Cor. iv. 18.

Q. When is our conversation suited to the favours which we receive at the sacrament?

A. 1. When we keep up grateful impressions, and a high sense of redeeming love upon our spirits.

2. When we labour to preserve these comforts which we have tasted at the Lord's table, and to keep these evidences unclouded, which we have got there cleared up, by our tender and humble walking with God, 2 John 8.

3. When we set ourselves with all holy care and watchfulness to guard against the snares of Satan, the charms of sin, and every thing that is displeasing to Christ, who loved us, and hath done so much for us, Ezra ix. 13, 14; Psal. lxxxv. 8.

4. When, from a principle of gratitude, we set ourselves not only to love and praise God for what he hath done for us, but also to walk before him in the land of the living, in a holy and exemplary conversation; comply with his will, consult his honour, and lay out ourselves with zeal and cheerfulness in his service; thinking nothing too much to do, too hard to suffer, or too dear to part with, for him that hath done, and suffered, and parted with so much for us, Psal. cxvi. 8, 9; 2 Cor. v. 14, 15.

Q. When is our conversation suited to the great things promised and sealed to us in the sacrament?

A. 1. When we firmly believe them, and rely on God's faithfulness for the accomplishment of them.

2. When we are thankful, and praise God for making such great and precious promises to us, 2 Sam. vi. 18, 19.

3. When we undervalue this present world, with all its pomp, treasures, and pleasures, and look for better and greater things to come, Heb. ii. 13, 14; 1 Pet. i. 13.

4. When we are patient under trials and afflictions, expecting a happy change of our circumstances sooner or later, Mic. vii. 9; Psal. xlii. 5.

5. When we wait quietly for the accomplishment of God's promises, even when he seems to stay long, believing that at last he will make abundant recompence for his stay, Mic. vii. 7; Lam. iii. 25, 26.

6. When we live as heirs of the promises, and behave ourselves as candidates for heaven, resisting temptations, conquering lusts, condemning the world, overcoming the fears of death and love of life, and studying to be holy in all manner of conversation, Heb. xi. 9, 10; 1 Pet. ii. 2; 2 Pet. iii. 11.

Q. When is our conversation suited to the offices and relations which Christ hath undertaken, and stands in to his covenanted people?

A. When we love and honour him in these offices and relations, and study to express our love and respect in our carriage and behaviour towards him. As, for instance,

1. Is Christ our Prophet, to instruct us? Then let us carefully hearken to him, and learn these lessons which he teaches us; particularly, to condemn the world, deny ourselves, and depart from all iniquity; which, he tells us, is the truest wisdom, Job xxviii. 28.

2. Is Christ our Priest, that appeases offended justice for our sins, by his precious blood? Then let us hate sin, and fear to offend that holy and dreadful God, whose justice is so inexorable, that he would not pass sin without such a satisfaction.

3. Is Christ our King to govern us? Then let us behave as loyal subjects to him, obey his laws, oppose his enemies, and give no harbour or entertainment to those traitors that seek to dethrone him, or pull the crown off his head.

4. Is Christ our Physician to heal our diseases? Then let us obey his prescriptions, apply the healing plaster of his blood to our wounds, and beware of cutting or mangling ourselves anew by sin.

5. Is Christ our Surety to pay our debts? Then let us acquaint him fully with the state of our soul-affairs, and beware of running ourselves into new arrears; for this were to turn the grace of God into wantonness.

6. Is Christ our Cleanser, that washes us in the fountain of his blood? Then let us study to keep our garments clean, and beware of going again into the defilements of sin.

7. Is Christ our Shepherd, that leads and feeds us in green pastures? Then let us follow him, and beware of straying from him, or going into the devil's fields to feed on swinish husks.

8. Is Christ our Friend and Agent in heaven, to appear in our name, and take care of our affairs? Then let us be concerned for his interest on earth; and beware of requiting his kindness with unthankfulness.

9. Is Christ our Husband, to whom we have given ourselves in a marriage covenant, and sworn to be faithful? Then let us put away other lovers, and beware of going a-whoring from him; seeing in that case we can look for nothing from him but destruction, Psal. lxxiii. 26.

Q. What is the necessity of communicants studying such a holy and well-ordered conversation?

A. 1. Negatively, it is not to merit or purchase heaven; for it is only Christ's holiness and obedience that doth this, and not ours. For, (1.) Our holiness and obedience bears no proportion to the reward of eternal life. (2.) The grace that enables us to obey, is freely given us of God. (3.) Our obedience, at best, is imperfect and mixed with sin. (4.) It is our bound duty to God, though no reward at all had been promised; upon all which accounts we can merit nothing by any of our services, Job xlii. 3; 1 Cor. iv. 7; Psal. cxliii. 2; Luke xvii. 9, 10.

2. Positively this holy and well-ordered conversation is absolutely necessary, (1.) In respect of the command of God that enjoins it as the beaten road, and pathed way to heaven, peremptorily declaring, "that no man shall see God," Heb. xii. 14. (2.) It is necessary, that we may thereby be conformed to our head, the Lord Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. i. 15. (3.) That we may testify our thankfulness to God for his mercies, especially redeeming love, Luke i. 74, 75. (4.) That we may evince and clear up our interest in God, and our title to heaven, 1 John ii. 29; Matt. xxv. 30. (5.) That we may be made meet and capable to hold communion with God, here and hereafter. Without holiness we cannot be prepared either for the employments or enjoyments above, Col. i. 12. (6.) That we may engage strangers to fall in love with Christianity and godliness, Matt. v. 16.

Q. What are the properties of this gospel conversation which communicants ought to have after the sacrament?

A. 1. It must be a good conversation, for so it is termed, 1 Pet. iii. 16, because it is a conversation with a good God, according to a good rule, viz. his word; having good company, viz. his people; and leading to a good end, viz. to be ever with the Lord.

2. It must be an honest conversation, so it is called, 1 Pet. ii. 12, which includes sincerity towards God, justice in our dealings towards men, and purity and chastity, in opposition to the filthy conversation of the wicked, mentioned 2 Pet. vii.

3. It must be a heavenly conversation, Phil. iii. 20, which includes our deniedness to earthly things, our imitating the inhabitants of heaven, our delighting in heavenly exercises, our seeking communion with God, and aiming at heaven as our home.

4. It must be a humble conversation, Micah vi. 8, which implies our having a low opinion of ourselves, our being denied to our own performances, and counting all our own righteousnesses as filthy rags.

5. It must be joined with a constant dependence on Jesus Christ for strength and acceptance in every duty, Cant. viii. 5; John xv. 5.

6. It must be adorned with meekness, patience, and contentment in every condition, 1 Pet. iii. 4; Phil. iv. 6, 11, 12.

7. It must be an even and steadfast conversation, endeavouring to hold fast what we have got at the sacrament, were it only a good resolution or purpose, and carefully guarding against all apostacy and backsliding, 1 Cor. xv. 58; Heb. x. 38.

Q. Wherefore should communicants guard so carefully against apostacy and backsliding after the sacrament?

A. 1. Because God is much delighted with his people's stedfastness, earnestly wishing it, and frequently enjoins it, Deut. v. 29; Phil. i. 27, 28; Heb. x. 23; 2 Pet. iii. 17; 2 John 8; Rev. iii. 3; Acts xi. 23.

2. Because of the solemn vows and engagements we have come under to stedfastness, Psal. cxix. 106.

3. Because we have many enemies and temptations to draw us from Christ and duty.

4. Because of the many sad evils and consequences of apostacy, Jer. ii. 19.

5. Because of our natural instability and proneness to backslidings, Hos. xi. 7; Jer. xvi. 10. Nay, the best of saints have been ready to miscarry, after vows and signal mercies, and manifestations of God's favour, as might be sadly verified by the instances of Noah, Lot, David, Hezekiah, Solomon, Peter, the Israelites, and Christ's disciples.

Q. What are the evils and sad consequences of apostacy and backsliding after the sacrament?

A. They are many; for thereby we do great and manifest injuries. 1. To Jesus Christ. 2. To ourselves. 3. To others.

Q. What injury do we to Christ by apostacy?

A. We thereby requite his kindness to us with the basest ingratitude.

2. We reflect and cast reproaches upon him as if he were a bad master; for, by our turning our back upon Christ, after we have been engaged with him, we on the matter say, that, "after trial, we find the devil the better master of the two;" and this is a greater injury than if we had given him a flat denial at the first.

3. We hereby open the mouths of atheists and the enemies of Christ to blasphemy, and say, "Where is the blessedness that ministers and professors of religion speak so much of? Where is the sweetness of Christ and his way, that is so much talked of? The report we have often heard is certainly not true," &c.

4. By apostacy from Christ we wound him to the heart, and cause him to take up most heavy complaints against us, as these in Isa. i. 2, 3; Jer. ii. 5, 11—13; Mic. vi. 3. What a heart-affecting word was that which Christ said to his disciples, in a time of common defection, John vi. 67, "Will ye also go away?"

Q. What injury do we to ourselves by apostacy?

A. 1. By forsaking the Lord, we let go our life and all our happiness at once, Deut. iv. 3, 4; xxx. 20; John vi. 68.

2. We lose all our former pains, and will get no thanks for any thing we have done, Ezek. xviii. 24; 2 John 8, 9.

3. We forfeit all fellowship and communion with God, in duties and ordinances, Jer. xvii. 5, 6; Heb. x. 38.

4. We may make ourselves incapable of ever recovering again, according to that terrible word, Heb. vi. 4—6.

5. We make ourselves the butt of God's fearful threatenings, and expose ourselves to many sad strokes and plagues, both temporal, spiritual, and eternal; particularly, apostates fall more under Satan's power than ever; like prisoners who have made their escape, and are afterwards taken, their fate is to be loaded with double irons. We know what judgments the Lord inflicted on Lot's wife, Judas, Spira, Julian, besides many other apostates; and we see what he threatens against such as backslide from him, 1 Chron. xxviii. 9; Psal. cxxv. 5; Prov. xiv. 14; Jer. v. 6; Heb. vi. 6, 8; 2 Pet. ii. 21.

Q. What injury do we to others by apostacy?

A. 1. We wrong the godly, by saddening their hearts, and offending them by our carriage.

2. We wrong the wicked, by hardening them in sin, stumbling them at the good ways of the Lord, and giving them occasion to think there is no such excellency in religion as the gospel reports.

Q. Whence is it that communicants are so ready to backslide, and break their vows after a sacrament?

A. In hypocrites it proceeds mainly from the want of a solid root and good foundation laid in the soul, by a thorough work of grace in the heart: for they that begin in hypocrisy commonly end in apostacy. But in believers themselves there is also great inconstancy and proneness to backslidings, because of these things:

1. The immoderate love and cares of the world, which are most dangerous to the soul; hence it was that both Judas and Demas apostatized from Christ. And hence we soon lose any liveliness of frame that we get at a sacrament; which should cause us to take heed how we return again to the world after such an ordinance, that it be with jealousy and holy fear.

2. Because of our unwatchfulness, self-confidence, and security, upon the back of a communion; we are too ready to be puffed up with our privileges and attainments, to think our mountain stands strong, and hence to lift ourselves up above our neighbours, and despise those that come not our length; upon which account God is provoked to leave us for a little to ourselves, as he did Peter, on the back of the first communion, for the same cause, and we know what became of him.

3. Because of Satan's malice and diligence, who seeks by all means and devices to winnow communicants upon the back of such an ordinance, that he may sift away their good frames and spiritual motions towards Christ and heavenly things, Luke xxii. 31.

4. Because of bad company that is ready to ensnare us to do that which is evil, as it did Peter after the sacrament; or have a bad influence upon us, to cause us forget or neglect that which is good: and therefore we should endeavour to shun the company of the wicked, their carnal joy, vain mirth, and worldly discourse, which tend very much to deaden the heart.

5. Because of the slavish fear of man, and of persecution for adhering to Christ and his interest. This fear had very bad influences on Peter, when he followed Christ to the high priest's hall.

Q. What course shall we take that we may prevent our apostacy or our backsliding after a sacrament?

A. 1. We must labour to keep up the constant impressions of the odiousness of sin: for if we would "cleave to that which is good," we must still "abhor that which is evil," Rom. xii. 9.

2. We must endeavour to keep up a constant high esteem of Christ, and a warm love to him; for we cannot think of parting with that which we sincerely love and esteem.

3. Let us beware of entertaining any unmortified lusts, or secret idols, for these will bid fair to loose our hearts from Christ, when religion begins to thwart with them. Herod heard John gladly till once his Herodias was struck at, but then he turned his enemy.

4. Let us beware of self-confidence, or high thoughts of ourselves; for Peter, that premised most in his own strength, was the first that denied Christ.

5. Let us study to get as much nearness and communion with Christ as possible, and to experience the power of religion in our souls, which would be a noble preservative against apostacy; for those that know most of Christ will be most unwilling to turn their backs upon him, John vi. 68.

6. Let us be often on the mount of contemplation, taking a view of the promised land, and the crown laid up for the perseverers in religion, Luke xxii. 28, 29.

7. Let us always entertain a jealousy of our treacherous hearts, and guard against the first declinings thereof; for "happy is the man that thus feareth alway," Prov. xxviii. 4. Judas was the last of his disciples that suspected himself, and said, "Master, is it I?" and yet was the first that betrayed Christ.

8. Let us be earnest in prayer, that God may hold us up by the hands of his power and mercy, which have always sustained his people, 1 Pet. i. 5; Psal. xciv. 18. As the child is never so safe as in the nurse's arms, so neither are we safe, but when we commit ourselves, by believing prayer, into the hands of divine power and mercy. And, therefore, we have still cause to pray with the psalmist, "Lord, hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not," Psal. xvii. 5.

Now to him, who only is able to guide us through the wilderness of this world, carry us over the Jordan of death, and land us safe in the Canaan of glory, be everlasting praise and glory in the highest. Amen.

APPENDIX.

CONTAINING SOME THINGS USEFUL FOR YOUNG COMMUNICANTS :
SUCH AS, AN EXAMPLE OF A PERSONAL COVENANT, WITH MEDITATIONS AND MATERIALS FOR PRAYER, BEFORE AND AFTER PARTAKING.

An example of a young communicant's secret transacting and covenanting with God, before his approach to the Lord's table.

ETERNAL and almighty God, behold me, a poor creature, lost and undone by Adam's fall, and deeply sunk into the gulph of sin and misery. O! I want words to express my miserable condition by nature. I am a poor captive under the slavery of sin, tyranny of Satan, bondage of the law, and the empire of death. My sins are great, and also many, they swarm both within and without me, and have made me black and loathsome in thy sight. I see the sword of justice drawn, the law thundering curses against me, and the clouds of wrath hanging black over my head. My soul is within a step of death and hell: yea, hell is gaping for me beneath, and my sins are like mill-stones about my neck, weighing me down into it. Lord, it is a wonder of thy mercy and patience, that I am not at this moment roaring in endless and ceaseless flames, without all help and hope.—Lord, save me, or else I perish!

Alas! I have long lived in a state of distance and enmity with thee, and have preferred Satan's drudgery to thy favour, and stopped my ears against thy calls. A wicked rebel have I been, the hottest place in hell is my due.

But glory to God for free redeeming love; for though I have destroyed myself, yet a way is found out for satisfying justice and saving sinners, by the incarnation and death of Jesus Christ. And therefore, O Lord, seeing thou hast graciously contrived, revealed, and offered help and salvation to me, a lost hell-deserving sinner, in and by the mediation and satisfaction of thy dear Son, as my High Priest and Surety, I humbly desire to fall in with this project of rich, sovereign, free grace, and venture my perishing soul upon the blood of that glorious Redeemer. I am well pleased with the Mediator and his righteousness, and acquiesce heartily in the wise and noble method of redemption through him. I consent to the free offers of Christ and salvation thou makest to me in the gospel, and accordingly I here throw my guilty soul into the open arms of a crucified Jesus, lodge it in his wounds, and clasp about him as my bleeding High Priest and Surety, to make atonement to justice for my sins, wash me in his blood, and bring me to God. I here disclaim and renounce all other saviours and methods of salvation; and lay the whole stress of my soul and salvation upon Christ alone. And seeing it is in Christ the Mediator only, that God is well pleased with any sinner, and is willing to become my God and portion through him, I here make choice of God in Christ, as my God and portion, for time and eternity. Nay, I take heaven and earth to witness that I unfeignedly accept of the whole glorious Trinity, and choose God the Father to be my Father, God the Son to be my Saviour, and God the Holy Ghost to be my Sanctifier. And I solemnly devote and give up myself, both soul and body, to this God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, my God in Christ, to pardon, wash, and sanctify me for his glory and service.

Likewise, according to thy rich gospel-offer, I here embrace my Mediator and Saviour, Jesus Christ, in all those sweet offices and relations wherein he is held forth to me; I accept of him as my High Priest, Prophet, and King, and give up myself to be saved, taught, and ruled by him. I take him for my Priest, to atone for me by his blood and merits; I rely entirely upon the virtue of his sacrifice for my justification before God. I renounce mine own duties, works, and attainments, and all mine own righteousnesses and worthiness, as filthy rags; and avow Christ alone to be the Lord my righteousness. I accept of him as my great Prophet and Counsellor, and renounce mine own wisdom: I submit to his teaching, and commit myself to his conduct, that he may lead and guide me through the wilderness, and bring me to heaven at last. Nay, he is not only my guide to find my way, but I take him for my strength to walk in it, and my rest at the end of it.

I likewise receive Jesus Christ as my King and Ruler; I make choice of his government and laws, and swear allegiance to him, and will suffer no other lord besides him to have dominion over me. What have I to do any more with idols? I renounce all other lords and lovers, and will have none but Christ. I renounce mine own will, and take thy will for my law. I esteem thy precepts concerning all things to be right, and will hate every false way. I accept of all thine ordinances, and bless thee for thy word and sacraments. I submit to all thy providences: dispose of me and mine as thou thinkest best. I am content to take up thy cross, and follow thee wheresoever thou goest.

Lord, I with all my power accept of thee, to be my Lord and my Husband. I willingly make choice of thee and all that is thine; and that for richer, for poorer; for better, for worse; for weal, for woe; for prosperity, for adversity; yea, for all times and conditions, to love, to honour, to obey thee above all. O now let the marriage-knot be cast, which death nor hell will never be able to loose. Lord, I take thy Holy Spirit for my quickener, guide, and comforter; thy blessed word for my rule; thy promises for my encouragement; thy glory for my scope; thy testimonies for my counsellors; thy sabbaths for my delight; thy people for my companions. In a word, I take Christ for my life, holiness for my way, and heaven for my home.

And, O Lord, as I accept of thee and of all that is thine; so, through thy grace, I without reserve, resign and give up to thee, myself, and all that is mine. Alas! I am poor, and have nothing to give thee; but with the poor widow, I cast in my two mites, soul and body, into the treasury. I dedicate my heart to be thy temple; my soul's faculties and affections to be thy servants and agents; my body's senses and members to be instruments of righteousness; and all mine enjoyments to be employed for thy use and service. Lord, do thou henceforth set thy mark, and stamp thy image upon me, all that is mine; that all I have may be set apart and consecrated to thy glory and honour.

I know, O Lord, thou chiefly requirest the heart; alas, the heart of man is deceitful above all things: and, O! my heart is deceitful above all hearts, so that I am ashamed to offer it to thee, and afraid it prove false to thee. O if my heart were better, and worthy of thy acceptance! had I ten thousand hearts, they were but a poor present; but such a heart as I have, I here offer it, Lord, to thee who made it at first, to make it anew: O make it as thou wouldest have it, soft, pliable, and holy; put thy fear in it, and write thy laws upon it, that I may serve thee continually, and never depart from thee. I give my hearty consent this day to thy entering in, and taking possession of the throne in my soul. Be cast open, all ye doors of my soul, that the King of glory may enter in, and dwell for ever. Lord, come in, put down lusts, subdue corruptions, and cast out all that stands in opposition to thee: and let my soul and body, and all that is within me, be formed and fashioned by thy Spirit, and sanctified by thy grace, that I may show forth thy praise.

O Lord, I here avouch thee this day to be my God, to walk in thy ways and statutes: but thou knowest my weakness, my enemies, and the manifold temptations and snares I am exposed to; nay, in me dwells no good thing: I look therefore to thee, my Surety, for covenanted grace and strength to enable me for duty and for righteousness, to cover mine imperfections therein, and to present me faultless before God.

O Lord, I depend entirely on thee for the daily assistance of thy Spirit, in order to my resisting temptations, bearing afflictions, conquering lusts, performing duties, and exercising grace. Lord, give always what thou requirest, and then demand what thou pleasest. Be still forthcoming to me in my straits, and come in with seasonable supplies according to my need. I take heaven and earth to witness, that I desire to be saved in the method of free grace; that I distrust mine own resolutions and mine own strength; that I make all purposes and promises in Christ's strength; that I rest not at all in my promise made to him, but in his unto me, that he will never leave me, nor forsake me. O Lord Jesus, in thee only have I righteousness and strength: be surety for thy servant for good, and undertake for all that God requires of me, and for all that I have promised to him.

Lord, ratify in heaven what I have done on earth, and let it be a sure and everlasting covenant, a covenant which thou hast made with me, as well as I with thee. And let this covenant be a never-failing spring of comfort to me, through all the steps of my life, and especially at the hour of death; that I may rejoice in God as my covenanted God in Christ, both in time, and through the ages of eternity. Amen.

MEDITATIONS AND MATERIALS FOR PRAYER.

PROPER FOR COMMUNICANTS BEFORE PARTAKING.

MEDITATION I.

God's mercies to me have been very great and distinguishing. I was born in a valley of vision, I dwell in a lightsome Goshen, when many others are covered with Egyptian darkness, and sit in the region of the shadow of death. I hear heaven's free market-day of grace proclaimed, when others are visited with silent sabbaths. I am invited to a rich gospel-feast, when others are visited with a famine of the word of God.

It is a great privilege that I am allowed to speak to God in prayer, or hear from him in his word; but how great is the honour he puts upon me, when he invites me to a communion with himself at his holy table, where I may feast upon the fruits of Christ's purchase, and hear him say to the guests, "Eat, O friends; drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved."

O! I am unworthy of the least crumb that falls from his table, far less of being admitted to sit with him at the table, and eat of the children's bread.

But since he is pleased to honour me so far as to call me to the marriage-supper of the Lamb, O that he would also give me the wedding-garment, prepare my unprepared heart, and grant me all the sacramental graces, that I may be in case to attend and entertain the King of glory.

O for spiritual hunger and thirst for the soul-feast, the heavenly manna, and water of life, that is to be set before me! O that I had wells digged in this valley of Baca, that heaven's rain would descend and fill the pools! That so the wilderness might be turned into a fruitful field, and the dry land of my heart into springs of water, and my barren soul might blossom as the rose, and send forth a smell as of a field which the Lord hath blessed.

I am now to ascend mount Calvary, and go to the place where Christ is to be set forth as crucified before mine eyes; O that there I may look on him whom I have pierced, and mourn for sin, that made the nails, and drove them into my Redeemer! O that I may there receive a broken Christ into a broken heart! O that the blood of Christ, which speaketh better things than the blood of Abel, may there plead with God for me, answer all the challenges of the law, and speak peace to my conscience! Let him there kiss me with the kisses of his lips, and enable me to embrace him in the arms of my faith, saying, "This is my Beloved, and this is my Friend." O for a lively and strong faith, that I may take and hold a strong grasp of my Redeemer, that, like the spouse, I may say, "I held him, and would not let him go!" Alas, for my weak and slippery-fingered faith, that often lets Christ go, when I have fair occasions of getting grasps of him. Often do I loose my grasps; Lord, fasten them better. Did not Christ take faster grasps of me than I do of him, my soul had been in the devil's grasps without relief. Ever blessed be his name for the strong grasps he took and held of elect sinners on the cross: yea, so sure and fast were they, that neither death nor devils, the wrath of God, nor curses of the law, could ever make him loose them again. Many waters could not quench his love, neither could the floods drown it. His love was stronger than death. O! where is my love to him? O that the infinite love of Christ, in dying on a cross, might kindle in my frozen heart this sacred fire of love to him, that might burn up all my lusts and idols as stubble; and make me cry out, "None but Christ, none but Christ."

MEDITATION II.

I was entered into covenant with God by baptism, and was then brought under strong engagements to be the Lord's: but O! I have broken my covenant, and backslidden from Christ. Were I under the law or covenant of works, I would be utterly undone. But, blessed be God, I am under the tenders of a covenant of grace that admits of repentance, and a surety for the guilty criminal; and graciously promiseth pardon to the penitent believer: nay, promiseth repentance to the hard-hearted, faith to the unbelieving, and pressingly inviteth backsliding children to return to God through a Mediator. I do here take hold of this gracious and well-ordered covenant; Lord, seal it to me at thy table; what shall I render to the Lord for instituting this ordinance, for leaving this precious legacy and token of love to his church, for preserving it to this age, and continuing it in this land; and particularly for sparing and allowing me to come unto it? Glory to God, that I see the seal of this covenant, that I see this welcome rainbow appearing in the clouds of wrath, as a sign and token of God's confirming his covenant to believers, and securing them against a destroying deluge. Blessed be God, that I am neither among Jews or pagans upon earth; nor devils or damned souls in hell. I thank the Lord of heaven and earth, that the things which were hid from the wise and prudent, are now revealed unto babes: and that my eyes see and ears hear that which many prophets and kings desired to see and hear; yet might not: that now life and immortality are brought to light by the gospel.

O what would fallen angels and damned spirits give for such a day and such a prospect as I have! Lo, fire and brimstone from heaven is rained upon them, while manna is rained upon me! O that the solemn day I have in view may indeed be the day of the Son of man, a day of his power, and a day of his courts, better and sweeter to me than a thousand!

O that the holy table I am going to may be richly furnished by the great Master of the feast! O that he may grace it with his own presence, and abundantly bless the provision! That by it the starving creature may be fed, the needy beggar may be satisfied, the hard heart may be softened, the cool affections warmed, the cloudy soul brightened, the straitened heart enlarged, the dim eye enlightened, the wandering mind fixed, and the doubting soul resolved. O that it may be a feast of fat things full of marrow; a meal signally blessed from heaven to me! That it may prove life to my soul, death to my sins, strength to my graces, and poison to my lusts. Lord, let my heart begin to burn when I see the elements; let my bands be loosed when I touch them; let my eyes be lightened when I taste them; and let my soul be strengthened when I partake of them.

O that in receiving the bread and wine, I may be enabled to receive Jesus Christ into my heart; and may thereby get true and real infeedment of all Christ's purchase; and a valid and unquestionable title to the everlasting inheritance, sealed and confirmed to me! Lord, make thyself known to me in the breaking of bread; manifest thyself to me as thou dost not unto the world. O bring me into the banqueting-house, and let thy banner over me be love! Lord, come to the feast; for it will be a dead and heartless feast if thou be absent. Sit thou at the head of the table, carve every one their portion, and give me a Benjamin's mess (if it be thy will), that my soul may be satisfied as with marrow and fatness, and my mouth may praise thee with joyful lips. And when the King sits at his table, let my spikenard send forth the smell thereof. "Awake, O north wind, and come, thou south, blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out: and then let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits. O let my well-beloved come and feed among the lilies, till the day break, and the shadows flee away."

MEDITATION III.

Blessed are they that hear and know the joyful sound: but O! what will the news of Christ avail me without an interest in Christ? What will it profit me, to have the Son revealed to me, if he be not revealed in me.

O for the practical and experimental knowledge of Christ! Lord, hide not thyself from me, stand not behind the wall, but show thyself to me through the lattice of ordinances. O draw aside the vail of my guilt, and make a display of thy glorious and attractive excellencies, that mine eyes may see the King in his beauty, and my soul may be engaged to flee to him upon the wings of faith and love.

I am this day called to go to the table of this great King: but I am in a strait betwixt two: if I decline to come to this table, then I disobey my dying Saviour, who commands me to show forth his death in this manner; if I come unworthily, then I fear lest I contract the guilt of his blood, and eat and drink mine own damnation. Alas! mine unworthiness makes me tremble to come; and yet my need pinches me so that I cannot stay away. To whom, Lord, shall I go, but to thee: for thou hast the words of eternal life. Thou art my sun, from whose beams I must receive the light of grace. Thou art the fountain, from which I must draw living water. Thou art the root, from which I must receive sap of increase. Thou art my head, from whom I must get life and influence. So that without thee I am nothing, I have nothing, I can do nothing. Let all my wants be upon thee, and let all my supplies come from thee. Surely, O Lord, the sea is not so full of water, nor the sun so full of light, as thou art full of grace and mercy. O fill my narrow vessels out of thine inexhaustible fountain. Cast open the doors of thy treasures, and let me have access to Christ's unsearchable riches. Are not these freely bestowed upon the needy, without money and without price? O scatter thy bounty among poor beggars, and let me be admitted to gather it. Let not such a miserable object go from thy door without an alms, for thou wilt not miss a crumb to me. O let not the needy be forgotten, let not the expectation of the poor perish for ever. Let none return ashamed from the fountain, who come expecting water. Hast thou not said, "I will pour water upon them that are thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground?" And is there any more dry, more poor and needy than I am? Lord, make me as thirsty as I am dry; as humble as I am poor; and as sensible as I am needy. Open my mouth wide, and then fill it. Alas! the voice of my prayer is weak, but O the cry of my wants is strong: Lord, hear that loud cry. Deal not with me according to my feeling and sense of need, which is small; but O deal with me according to my real necessity and thy royal bounty, which is great beyond expression.

Lord, grace thine own ordinance, and beautify the assembly of thy people with thy presence; put the wedding-garment upon the guests; let thy Spirit rest upon them, let thy power be present to heal them, and cause thy glory fill the temple.

O that God would bow the heavens and come down! O that he would touch the mountains, (viz. hard hearts, unbelief, pride, worldliness, &c.) and cause them all flow down at his presence. Let the Jordan of my lusts be driven back. Let the mountains skip like rams, and the little hills like lambs. Let the earthly heart tremble at the presence of the God of Jacob. Let the rock be turned into standing water, and the flint into a fountain of water.

O come down as rain upon the mown grass, and as showers that water the earth, and do thou revive all the withered roots of thy people. O for a shower from heaven, even a shower of the Holy Ghost, to make all their souls as a watered garden, that they might spring up as the grass, revive as the corn, grow as the lily, cast forth their roots, spread out their branches, and their beauty might be as the olive-tree, and their smell as Lebanon.

O if our Lord Jesus Christ's love and glory would come flowing like a full sea, or the rushing of a mighty wind, and fill all the corners of his house and of his table, that great grace may be on all his people. O to hear a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry-trees, a sign that God is gone forth before us to smite the hosts of our lusts, and triumph over our enemies. O that the kindly breathings and prosperous gales of God's Spirit would enliven all the drooping hearts, and fill all the empty sails of wind-bound communicants. O that this heavenly wind would blow from the right direction, that poor leaky vessels might come speed in their voyages, and sail straight forward to the shore of Immanuel's land.

MEDITATION IV.

How great is the divine goodness and condescension to me, in that he is pleased to allow me such near access to him! The men of Bethshemesh had not liberty to look into the ark: but I have a warrant, yea, a command to contemplate a crucified Jesus, who is the image of the invisible God, the brightness of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person: yea, not only to look to him, but also to touch him, handle his wounds, embrace his person, and lodge him in my soul.

O Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof; the house is so ruinous, smoky, and defiled, thou hast not a fit place with me where to lay thy head; but since thou didst not disdain to lie in a manger among beasts, nor to dine with Simon the leper; O come in and furnish the house, prepare an upper room in my soul, and there abide and keep the passover with me. A look or word from thee would do it. Lord, speak the word, and thy servant's soul shall be healed and cleansed. Look thou upon me, and be merciful unto me, as thou usest to do unto those that love thy name.

Happy would I be, if I might get a heart-melting and soul-overcoming look of Christ's face at his own table, even of his face that is white and ruddy, and fairer than the sons of men. O for such a look as he gave poor Israel, when wallowing in his blood, a look that may cause me to live. O for such a look as he gave backsliding Peter, a look that may pierce my hard heart, and cause me to weep bitterly. O for such a look as he gave the publican Zaccheus, a look that might bring me speedily down from sins and idols, from my self-conceit and self-righteousness, and cause me receive Christ joyfully into my heart.

Lord, look all my idols out of countenance, and look my wandering heart into a right frame for thy work. O come, put in thy hand by the hole of the door, and let heaven's sweet-smelling myrrh drop upon the handles of the lock, that I may awake from my drowsiness, and open all doors to the King of glory. Come in, thou blessed of the Lord; wherefore standest thou without? Come, and cast out all mine idols, of worldliness, pride, prejudice, doubtings, and unbelief. Come, lay an arrest on all my wandering thoughts, and call in my straying affections. Come, bind Satan, the enemy of my soul, and restrain him, so as I may get my Saviour entertained at his own table. Come in, Lord, and abide in my heart, as long as I abide here in the flesh. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

O thou who deliveredst Noah from drowning in the great deluge, by the ark prepared for him; do thou deliver my soul from perishing in the fearful deluge of thy wrath, by the ark of Jesus Christ, whom thou hast prepared for saving heavy-laden sinners.

O thou who deliveredst Lot from Sodom and the flames of fire; deliver my soul from the Sodom of a natural state, and from the flames of divine anger, that will consume those that abide therein.

O thou that deliveredst Isaac from being slain and offered up a sacrifice, by the ram caught in the thicket; O deliver me from being sacrificed to divine justice, by Jesus Christ, my propitiatory sacrifice, in whom thou art well pleased.

I am now to make a near approach to a crucified Christ, my ark and city of refuge: O to be safely lodged therein. How sad will it be, if I be found hovering without the ark, till the flood come and wash me off from the very side of it! And even when I see a window opened, and mercy's hand put forth to take in poor shelterless doves, how sad eternally will it be to be so near Christ, within a step of him, and never reach him, but perish like the thief upon the cross, with a Saviour on his side, and sink into hell betwixt the out-stretched arms of his mercy, and with his gracious calls sounding in mine ears. What woeful madness will it be, wilfully to starve for hunger beside a rich feast that is prepared for the hungry! To perish for thirst near a full and running fountain! Or to die in my wounds beside the Balm of Gilead, and the skilful Physician there! Let me stir up myself in time to take hold of him.

O that when I approach so near a crucified Jesus, in the Lord's supper, I may, with Thomas, thrust my hand into his side, and also throw my heart into it. Let me not only behold the wounds of his side, hands, and feet, but also, by faith, drink the water of life that runs from them, and bathe my soul therein.

MEDITATION V.

The Lord is now calling me, as he did Moses, (not out of the midst of a burning bush, but out of the middle of the flames of his love,) "Put off thy shoes from thy feet, for the place whither thou goest is holy ground!" O that I may put off the shoes of earthly affections, strip myself of worldly cares, and look narrowly to my steps, when making such a near and solemn approach to the great Jehovah. Had not I been invited and commanded to come to his holy table, such a sinful wretch as I am durst never have attempted it.

Instead of stretching forth a sceptre of mercy to invite me to his table, he might, with the rod of his wrath, justly have dashed me in pieces as a potter's vessel. Instead of entertaining me with the bread of life and the cup of blessing, he might have given me the bread and water of affliction; yea, have thrown me down there, where I should in vain cry out, for ever, for a drop of water to cool my tongue.

I am polluted and unfit to appear before God, but O they are undone who keep away from him. I come not to him because I am unworthy; but because he is rich in mercy, and has contrived a way for saving such as I am. I come as the poor starved wretch to the fire; I come as the hungry to be fed; as the naked to be clothed; as the sick and maimed to be recovered and healed; as the unclean, to be washed in "the fountain opened to the house of David."

Lord, make this a healing ordinance to my diseased soul, and the savour of life to my dead heart; make it also a sealing ordinance to clear up to me the evidences of grace. Confirm to me the pardon of sin, and the assurance of thy love. O that I may so approach to Christ at his table, that I may return from it with my heavy-laden soul disburdened and at rest, my conscience quieted, my corruption subdued, my grace increased, my soul encouraged, and my heart enlarged to run the way of his commandments.

Lord, increase my faith, excite my repentance, and warm my cold heart with affection to thyself: O that the love of God were shed abroad in my heart.

Lord, thaw my cold and icy heart with the beams of thy love, and breathings of thy Spirit; may I have grace to wait closely upon God and attend all the motions of his Spirit. And when he draws, O cause me to run; when he knocks, O make me to open; when he blows, O help me to spread the sails; and when the waters are stirred, O let me put in for cure. I am lying like the impotent man at the side of the pool, but of myself I am unable to step in, and there is no man to put me into it; nay, all the men on earth or angels in heaven cannot do it; only the man Christ Jesus can give healing virtue to the waters of the sanctuary, and apply them to me.

Lord, bless those who are to be employed as thy stewards at this solemn feast; enlarge their hearts, and open their mouths: give them both a door of utterance and of entrance: let them speak from the heart, and to the heart. O make their tongues as fined silver, that their words may be powerful and pleasant, suitably and fitly spoken, like apples of gold in pictures of silver. And while they are busied in inviting, calling, and serving others at thy table; let them not go unserved themselves.

O that thou wouldst descend, at this occasion, upon the mount, in sight of all the people. Let the Spirit of God, with his influences, be like Jordan, at this season, to overflow all its banks. O for a blessed inundation, and a high-stream-tide of that river, whose streams make glad the city of God; Lord, send a stream of it into every communicant's heart, and let mine be well-watered, and become like the garden of God. O that I had Jacob's spiritual strength, I would wrestle with thee for thy presence and blessing, to myself and others; I would even say, I will not let thee go till thou bless me: nay, Lord, I would have the blessing and keep thee too; for thy presence is the best of all blessings. And O it is a needful blessing at the solemn feast; what can the people do there without thee? They will be no better than a company of dead carcases set about thy table: O! there will be no life among them, if the Lord of life be away. If thy presence, Lord, go not with me, carry me not up hence: the desire of my soul is to thee, and the remembrance of thy name: for there is none in heaven or earth, but thou alone, who can suit my soul's necessities. Nothing less than infinite mercy can forgive my sin: nothing but infinite power can subdue my lusts: no less than infiniteness can supply my wants: and nothing but infinite wisdom can guide me through this wilderness, and bring me to Canaan above.

MEDITATION VI.

Shall such a wretched dog as I presume to come unto thy table, and eat of the children's bread; who am not worthy to gather the crumbs that fall from it! But I have heard of the mercy of the King of Israel, that he delights to show it to the unworthy, even to the chief of sinners. Lord, here is an object of thy pity; I am starving, and have no bread; naked, and have no clothing; wounded, and have no cure; polluted, and have no fountain; in debt, and have no money; burdened, and have no rest. Thus I have destroyed myself, and have no remedy in myself; but in the name of the Lord Jesus, I have a sure all-sufficient help.

Lord, I have a multitude of sins and miseries, but thou hast a multitude of tender mercies. I have deep and heinous guilt, but thou hast a deep fountain to wash it out. Behold one depth calleth to another, the depth of my misery to the depth of thy mercy. My sore is broad, but thy plaster is answerable. My wound is great, but thy balm is excellent. O Lord, be merciful to me, heal my soul, for I have sinned against thee. Come, display thy matchless excellencies, and the healing virtue of thy balm at this time: and O begin with my distempered soul, and make experiment of it upon me. I am grievously stung with sin and Satan, these fiery serpents; but blessed be God for providing the brazen serpent, and lifting it up on a pole, even Jesus Christ, wounded and lifted up on the cross. O give me faith's eyes to spy him thus lifted up, under the symbols of bread and wine: O that I may lift up my eyes and see his healing wounds, and feel healing virtue come from them to my wounded soul.

Lord, draw me, and I will run after thee; cast a cord of thy love about my heart, and hale me to thee. O! but my heart, my soul is heavy, I have great guilt, and many lusts, like lumps of lead, hanging at me; how can I run, and how shall I be drawn? But hast thou not said, Lord, "If I be lifted up from the earth, I will draw all men unto me; sinners of all sorts and sizes." Surely a crucified Jesus lift up on a cross, with his bleeding arms stretched out, to embrace lost sinners, is the most attractive and drawing sight in the world. This wonderful loadstone hath drawn thousands of iron hearts to it at once: and shall my obstinate heart refuse to be drawn? O give me faith's eyes, and let me see the glorious conqueror Jesus dying, and drawing his poor captives home to himself; and let my heart be drawn with the rest.

Now the devil is holding, and Christ is drawing: now Michael and his angels, and the dragon and his angels, are striving about communicants' souls: O that Michael may prevail, and his followers may be increased. O that the red dragon's head may be broken, and his interest get a fatal blow at this time.

Lovely Jesus, show thyself at this occasion through the lattice, for "thou art fairer than the sons of men, more glorious than mountains of prey, and the chiefest among ten thousand." Thou art white and ruddy; white, in regard of thy spotless innocence; and ruddy, in regard of thy bloody passion; and this matchless complexion makes thee altogether lovely in the eyes of all true believers. O bright morning Star! I beseech thee to show me thy glory. Make thy holy table like mount Tabor to me, the mount of transfiguration, where I may get a heart-ravishing sight of Christ's beauty, and such a view of his comeliness as may satisfy my mind, captivate my heart, and make me long to be where I shall have the full and everlasting vision of his face.

Lord, meet with me at thy own table, and show me a token for good. Deliver my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling. Rescue me from the fearful pit, bring me out of the miry clay; set my feet upon a rock, and establish my goings; and put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. Behold, O God our Shield, and look upon the face of thine Anointed, even thy beloved Son, in whom thou art well-pleased. Lord, show thyself well-pleased with me in him; and let me be accepted in the Beloved.

Lord, say unto my soul, Fear not, I am thy salvation: thy voice is sweet, O cause me to hear it. And make me hear thee, so as I may follow thee; and follow thee, so as I may find thee; and find thee, so as I may never lose sight of thee again.

MEDITATION VII.

O whither am I going? The place is holy, the table is holy, the bread that I am to eat is holy, the cup that I am to drink is holy; and God, who is infinitely holy, is terrible from his holy places.

A wrong touch or look now is criminal, and may cost me dear, as it did Uzzah and the Bethshemites. This fearful breach that was made on them, may cause me to tremble and cry out, "Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God?"

If John the Baptist (one of the greatest that was born of women, and filled with the Holy Ghost from the womb) thought himself not worthy to unloose Christ's shoes; O how much more unworthy am I (the meanest of creatures, yea, a transgressor from the womb) to be admitted to touch, nay, feed upon Christ's broken body and shed blood!

If Peter, having seen Christ's glory, and his own vileness, thought himself unworthy to be in the same ship with Christ, and cried out, "Depart from me, for I am a sinful man:" how shall I, who am the chief of sinners, adventure to sit at the same table with him, and feed upon his flesh and blood?

If the poor woman who had the bloody issue, feared to come and touch the hem of Christ's garment; how much more may I who am full of the running issues of sin, fear to touch the secret symbols of his body and blood, and to put my hand into his wounds, and feel the print of the nails? Lord, if the holy angels, those pure and unspotted seraphims, who burn in zeal for thy service, must even cover their faces before thee: O how dare I appear in thy presence, whose zeal is so languishing, whose love is so cold, whose mind is so earthly, and prayers so dull!

But what shall I then do? Shall I, with those who were bidden to the king's feast, refuse and make my excuse? O, I fear then the king would be angry, declare me unworthy to taste of his supper, and swear in his wrath, that I shall never enter into his rest.

I confess, Lord, I am fallen asleep with the foolish virgins, I find no oil in my lamp to go and meet the Bridegroom at his table. But blessed be thy name, the market of grace is not yet ended: I will therefore go presently to those that sell it, not to the merits of saints, or blood of martyrs; but to Jesus Christ himself, who graciously counselled me to buy of him tried gold, and precious oil, that will stand me in stead in time of need. O that my oil and my lamp may be lighted at the beams of the Sun of righteousness, and so it shall never be put out.

Many pieces of furniture I need: I want the girdle of sincerity, the shield of faith, the helmet of hope, the sword of the Spirit, the breastplate of righteousness, and to have my feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. But praises to my Redeemer and Captain of salvation that hath provided a full store-house and armoury to answer all my soul's necessities. O that out of his fulness I may receive grace for grace!

Lord, these things are so valuable, I have not wherewith to buy them, for I am wretched, miserable, poor, blind, and naked. But, good news! the poorest person in the world can make this purchase, for all gospel-wares and commodities are bought without money and price. O let me get to this cheap market, and be content to take all out of Christ's hand as a free gift, disclaiming any worthiness in myself.

Lord, furnish me freely with all the qualifications and grace which I need: and when I come and offer my gift at thy altar, I will say with David, "All things come of thee, and of thine own have I given thee. For what have I but what I have received?" Nay, I will join with the redeemed for ever in their song: "Not unto us, not unto us, but unto thy name be glory."

MEDITATION VIII.

If the centurion, whose faith was so strong and lively, that Christ said he had not seen such faith in Israel, yet was fain to say to Christ, "Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof," what shall I think of myself, who have so little faith, and so much unbelief? Can I think myself worthy that Christ should come into my heart? O! I am utterly unworthy of such a guest: but seeing so great a king is willing to lodge in so poor a cottage; Lord, send beforehand, and furnish it for thyself. O let thy Spirit come and adorn the upper-room, and make me all glorious within. O for a penitent soul, and a believing heart.

Moses of old, with his rod smiting the rock, brought forth running water. O if Christ, with the rod of his word, would but touch my heart, it would soon melt into tears of repentance. Alas, my hard heart will neither break nor melt, till the Spirit of Christ come and deal with it. Lord, though I have not tears enough with Mary Magdalene to wash thy feet; yet thou hast blood enough to wash my feet, heart, hands, and altogether: O bring my polluted impenitent heart to thy fountain: I know nothing will bring tears from mine eyes, and sorrow from my heart, if a believing view of that blood do it not.

O for the eyes of faith to look to Golgotha and Gethsemane, and view Christ's agony and bloody sweat, and the plentiful stream of his blood that flowed down from the cross. O that I could remember the wormwood and the gall, the cries and tears, the curses and pains, the desertion and anguish, which my sins brought upon the Son of God. O how did they pierce his head with thorns, his hands with nails, his side with spears, and his heart with sorrows! O the sharpness of that sword that pierced his soul! O the bitterness of that cup which he drank for me, a cup all mingled with the guilt of my sins, and the curses of a broken law! O can I go to his table, look to his bleeding wounds, hearken to his dying groans, see my Redeemer's heart melted like wax; and yet my heart continue hard and unbroken? O shall the rocks rend sooner than my heart?

O my soul, where is thy faith? Where thy bowels? Where thy gratitude? Where thy humanity? Come, then, behold the author of life becoming obedient unto death, the spring of blessedness underlying the curse; the fountain of happiness thrown into misery, nay, into hell, and all to save thee from it. O behold thy glorious Surety, with his head bowing on the cross, and inclined to die. Behold his innocent hands, that healed all sorts of diseases, and were still doing good, pierced and besprinkled with his own blood. Behold his feet, that never stood in the way of sinners, but always walked in the law of the Lord, with sharp and long nails fastened to the cross. Behold his side opened with a cruel spear, and all red with his own blood. Behold his bowels, that yearned for sinners, now shrunk and dried up. Behold his face, that was fairer than the sons of men, now defiled with the spittings of the ungodly. Behold his mouth, that spake as never man spake, hath no other refreshment but vinegar and gall. Behold his ears, that were wont to hear the angel's praises, now ringing with the mocks and blasphemies of the wicked. Behold the eyes that were brighter than the sun, now darkened with the shadow of death. O! now I see the Sun of righteousness under a fearful eclipse. I see his spotless soul covered with the black clouds of the Father's wrath. I see the heavens shut and darkened against him in the time of his distress. I see his royal visage turned pale, his strength dried up like a potsherd, his tongue cleaving to his jaws, and the streams of his precious blood watering his pierced feet.

O shall I thus see the innocent Lamb of God falling a sacrifice to incensed justice for my heinous guilt, and not loathe myself for all mine abominations? O cursed sin! murderer of the Son of God! shall I ever harbour it any more? O let me never look upon it without tears of grief; nor think of it without indignation and rising heart. O that henceforth the face of sin may be more frightful to me than hell, and temptations to it more terrible than death.

MEDITATION IX.

Under the law they who had touched the dead were forbidden to come near the altar upon which were offered sacrifices that were but types of Christ upon the cross; and shall I, who am by nature dead in sins and trespasses, and perform nothing but dead works, be allowed to approach that holy table, where a living Saviour and a living God is present?

Blessed be the Lord Jesus, that has come to visit the dead, though rotting and stinking in the grave. O that I may be raised up by the word of his power, as Lazarus of old was, and all my bonds loosed, that I may be at liberty to worship and serve him. And O that I may be allowed to be at the table with him, as was Lazarus, after he was raised by him from the dead.

Lord, though I be dead in sins and trespasses, yet the bread which thou hast prepared can not only strengthen the living, but can also give life to the dead. Art thou not the resurrection and the life, who can raise the dead to life, and call things that are not as though they were? O cause me to hear thy quickening voice.

Blessed be God for the encouragement he hath given me to come to this great feast. It being a feast of charity, to which are invited not only the rich, but the poor, maimed, lame, and blind, who cannot make any return to the author of it. My blessed Saviour, while he was on earth, disdained not to eat with publicans and sinners; and surely, though he be now highly exalted in glory, he still retains the bowels of a man, and all the pity and charity to perishing souls that ever he had.

Lord, I am polluted, but will not despair, for with thee is the fountain of salvation. I am poor, but I will not despond, for thou art the Lord of the whole earth, and openest thy treasures to the needy. I am naked, but I will not run away, with Adam, and hide myself from thee, because I am so; but I will come with the more speed to thee, to cover me with the wool and fleece of the Lamb of God, even the spotless righteousness and innocence of my Saviour. All my righteousness is as filthy rags; but, Lord, clothe me with the goodly raiment of my elder brother, which hath a sweet smell in thy nostrils, that therein I may obtain the blessing of my Father, and a title to the inheritance. And let me, by my Saviour's grace, be enabled to offer thee a sincere and contrite heart, which is as savoury meat, in which thou takest special delight. "A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." Lord, break my hard heart.

And will God, in very deed, dwell and converse with men, yea, sinful men? With thee, Lord, is great and terrible majesty; nay, to the wicked and Christless thou art a consuming fire. But, glory to thy name, I see thee seated upon a throne of grace, that a poor sinner like me may draw near and converse with thee: yea, I see a rainbow about thy throne, a sure token of thy mercy and willingness to be reconciled to sinners through thy Son, Jesus Christ. I see thee in the word and sacraments reaching forth thy sceptre of grace, that I may come and touch the top of it, and live. Lord, all my hope is in the mercy of thy bowels, and the merits of Christ's death. Surely thou art more ready to give than I am to ask; and more willing to forgive than I am to repent.

I am now going to a great feast; Lord, forbid it be to me like Belshazzar's feast, who, in the time of it, perceived a hand writing his condemnation. But O that I may see the finger of God writing mine eternal absolution, and assuring me that God will not enter into judgment with me. And as of old thy gracious presence in Solomon's temple was manifested by the fire which came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt-offering, so, I beseech thee, to send from heaven into my heart the fire of thy love, to consume my lusts, kindle mine affections to thee, and make my prayers more fervent.

Lord, thou usest not to send beggars always from thy house without an alms. Yea, thou hast often been found of them that sought thee not; and hast made surprising and unexpected visits to poor souls, and made them, before they were aware, like the chariots of Aminadab. O that I could win near hand Christ at his table; O that I may be allowed to kiss his feet, hear his voice, feel the smell of his garments, and the savour of his sweet ointments. Amen.

MEDITATIONS AND MATERIALS FOR PRAYER,

PROPER FOR COMMUNICANTS AFTER PARTAKING.

MEDITATION I.

WHAT shall I render to the Lord for all his gifts and benefits unto me? The royal psalmist admires divine goodness in causing the sun, moon, and stars to shine in the firmament for man's behoof; and cries, What is man, that God is mindful of him? But, surely, more cause have I to cry so, when I consider how God has caused the Sun of righteousness to shine on me in the firmament of gospel-ordinances, and made the day-spring from on high to visit me: O that I may find this heavenly light shining also into my heart.

The same psalmist also exalts God's goodness in giving the beasts of the field, fowls of the air, and fishes of the sea, to be food for man; but far greater cause have I to praise God's infinite mercy, for giving me the flesh and blood of his only Son, to feed and preserve the life of my soul.

The poor woman of Canaan asked only leave to gather the crumbs which fell from the children's table, but unworthy I have been admitted to sit at the table of the Lord, and eat of the children's bread! Nay, I have been invited to eat heartily, and drink abundantly! Seeing then I have eaten of Christ's meat, O that in the strength of it I may travel a good journey, and work a good turn for Christ! O that I may be a diligent and faithful servant to so good a Master. Lord, I have eaten of thy bread, let me never lift up the heel against thee.

Nay, Lord, I have gone to thy table, and ventured to seal a marriage-contract with Jesus Christ, as my Lord and husband: I am, indeed, a black and uncomely bride; but my glorious Husband can beautify me with his perfect comeliness put upon me. Let me for ever discharge mine old husbands and lovers, the law, mine own righteousness, the world, my lusts and idols, and never have any hankering thoughts after them. O that I may be looking, longing, and providing for the marriage-day! The bridegroom is ready long since, O that I were ready to go forth and meet him. That will be a glorious day when he will rend the clouds, come down, and meet with me in the air; and send his angels to carry me up to meet with him there. Why then doth he delay his coming? Not because he is unready, but because I am not ready, and all the elect are not yet gathered in. O that I were made meet and prepared for his coming; and my heart and thoughts were still with him.

I have now a journey to go, and a race to run, even a race to heaven, and I have great need of strength and direction in it. O if Christ would take me up into his chariot of salvation, that is all paved with love, how easily would I sit, and how safely and pleasantly would I travel in the King's high road towards Immanuel's land? What sweet views and prospects would I get from Christ's triumphal chariot! O the lovely hills, the fruitful valleys, the pleasant rivers, the fair gardens, the flourishing trees, which I might see in the heavenly Canaan! What ivory palaces, golden streets, and gates of pearl, might I see in the new Jerusalem! O could I travel in Christ's company, my journey would not be tedious to me!

MEDITATION II.

If he that wanted the wedding-garment at the king's table was cast into utter darkness, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth; what shall become of those who have come to Christ's table, not only wanting the wedding-garment, but even clad with Satan's livery, wearing the rags of the old man, and drawing the chains of iniquity about with them? Lord, hadst thou dealt with me and my fellow communicants according to our sins, nay, according to our religious services, thou hadst made the congregation an Aceldama, a field of blood: alas, we have mingled our sacrifices with our sins, no wonder though thou hadst mingled our sacrifices with our blood. But, blessed be thy name, who, instead of destroying us with the breath of thy mouth, art pleased to breathe such words of comfort to us, "I will not execute the fierceness of my wrath, because I am God, and not man. I am the Lord, I change not, therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." Merciful God, thou forbiddest men to give that which is holy to dogs, and cast pearls before swine; and yet, in thy boundless compassions, thou givest thy Son, who is the Holy One of God, and the most precious pearl in heaven, unto such miserable sinners as I am, even unto me, who hast so often promised to live holily, and to leave my sins; and yet have ever returned to my vicious course, as the dog to his vomit again and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire. But seeing God has been yet again offered, and speaking peace to me, O let me never again return to folly. Lord, save me from making peace again with these lusts, which nailed Christ's hands, and made his soul heavy unto death. May I now be helped to abandon all mine old sins, and never venture again upon that which killed my Saviour, dishonours his Father, grieves his Spirit, and damns mine own soul.

Lord Jesus, undertake for me, deliver me from my spiritual enemies, and especially from myself, and from my false and treacherous heart, which hath so often beguiled me, and yielded me a prey to sin, Satan, and the world, and will now be ready to do it over again, if it be not prevented by thy grace. I have great need to be always near thee; for without thee I can do nothing, but sin; I can do nothing but contract defilement for thee to wash, make wounds for thee to heal, and take on debt for thee to pay. O Lord, my poor soul is often like a leaky vessel which is heavy laden, and ready to sink; the tempest of wrath blows hard, and threatens to upset me. O that I may get my vessel run ashore near the rock Christ, so that if it break or shipwreck any where, it may be about the clefts of this rock, where many a shipwrecked soul hath found safety. O who ever perished at Christ's lee shore? Who ever drowned in the sea of wrath, that sincerely aimed to grasp to, and fasten upon the clefts of this rock?

MEDITATION III.

The manna in the wilderness was lodged in the tabernacle, and kept within a pure golden pot. And shall I lodge Jesus Christ, the manna that came down from heaven, in a corrupt and unclean heart? Lord, cleanse my heart from sin, and furnish it with grace, that it may be fit for thy residence. O that by my tasting of the manna I may find my soul strengthened, and lusts weakened. O that by touching the border of Christ's garment, I may feel a secret virtue gone out of him, to stop the running issue of my corruption, and heal all my soul-diseases.

Jonathan's eyes were enlightened after he had eaten a little honey dropping in a wood: but I have been eating honey dropping from the rock of salvation, Jesus Christ. O that I may find the eyes of my understanding illuminated therewith, that I may clearly perceive the vanity of the world and excellency of Christ; the deformity of sin and beauty of holiness; the emptiness of my own righteousness and the all-sufficiency of Christ's merits.

Men admire Abraham's happiness, in that he lodged angels; but how far greater is my happiness, lodging him whom the angels adore, and in whose presence they all covered their faces with their wings, and cry, "Holy, holy, Lord God Almighty," &c. O that I had suitable room and entertainment for so glorious a guest! Lord, thou must both fit the room and bring the entertainment with thee.

O be not a stranger unto me, or a way-faring man that only turns aside to lodge for a night; but let Christ dwell in my heart by faith. O that he may say of my heart, "This is my rest for ever, here will I dwell, for I have desired it." Lord, say this also of thy Zion in our land, and establish thy throne amongst us.

Lord, thou hast promised many special blessings to the utmost ends of the earth, and to the isles afar off in the sea, among whom we in this land are. O hasten the accomplishment of thy promises to these remote parts of the earth, and make the spirit of error, superstition, and formality, wholly pass out of them, that thy name may be great among us, and in every place incense may be offered to thee, and a pure offering.

Lord, send the news of Christ to the heathen nations, who have long dwelt in the region of darkness. How sad is it, that God, who made all the world, should have so little of its service; and that the devil, who ruined mankind, should have the far greater part of the world to adore and serve him! Alas, that he should have so much to justify that usurped title of his, "the god of this world." Lord destroy his kingdom, and hasten the downfall of Babylon; when shall the forty and two months be expired? Let the hills melt, and the mountains flow at the presence of the Lord, and the seven hills among the rest. O why is his chariot so long a coming? Why tarry the wheels of his chariot?

Lord, remember the poor blinded Jews, the posterity of Abraham, thy friend. O, we are many a prayer behind with them; they often minded the little sister, when she had no breasts; and now the elder sister hath none, O what shall be done to her in her desolate case! O that the Redeemer would come to Zion, and "turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Lord, lift up thy feet to these perpetual desolations, and let the receiving of them be as life from the dead.

Lord, plead for thy persecuted people all the world over; let their enemies know that their Redeemer is mighty, and will hear the sighs of the oppressed. Let the earth disclose her blood, and no more cover her slain.

MEDITATION IV.

O that I could wonder at the glorious Son of God, who descended from the highest heavens; and took not on him the nature of angels, but the nature of man, and hath crowned it with glory and immortality; yea, hath carried it above all heavens, above the seats of angels, beyond the cherubims and seraphims, and hath placed it on the right hand of his eternal Father! And hath likewise promised to exalt believers (whom he hath united to himself, as members of his body) unto the same honour and dignity! Lord, what is man, that thou art thus mindful of him: and what am I, the worst of men, that I should be admitted to share in those glorious privileges which Christ hath purchased!

O that I could sing a song of praise to my well-beloved, a song of his eternal love and glorious undertaking, a song of his passing through the Red sea, and fighting the red dragon; a song of his bruising the serpent's head, and unstinging the king of terrors; a song of his victorious resurrection, triumphant ascension, and glorious return. Lord, cheer up and tune my heart to sing a song of Zion, and rejoice in Christ as my portion. Let me speak of the glorious honour of his majesty, and declare his wondrous works.

Lord, revive the spirits and enlarge the hearts of all thy people; give them high and exalted thoughts of Christ, that their souls may glorify thy name. Open thou their lips, that their mouths may show forth thy praise. O shall the wicked go singing and rejoicing to hell, and thy people go always drooping and sorrowing to heaven: is there any master like Christ, and can any give wages like to his? Let me never, by my carriage, bring up a bad report, as the unfaithful spies, upon Christ's way, or the land that is afar off. Thou hast recorded many encouraging words for thy people's comfort. Thou hast said, "That light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart," O for a shower from heaven to make that seed to spring. Blessed be thy name, God's seed will not rot beneath the clods, it will spring up sooner or later. Let me support myself with the psalmist's cordial, "The Lord liveth, and blessed be my rock." Why should believers look like dead men, while their Lord liveth, and their rock standeth? Their hopes may die, their comforts die, their frames die, their relations, their gifts, and outward means, may all die; but, good news! their Lord will not die, their rock will not fall. No wonder though the disciples drooped and looked as dead men, when Christ was dead and lying in the grave. But blessed be God, he is risen, he liveth, and will die no more. I have these good news from his own mouth: "I am he that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and death." Is my Redeemer jailor of the prison of hell and the grave? Good news! he will not lock in any of his friends or lovers: none but his enemies and haters shall be made prisoners there.

Many are the comforts thou givest. Lord, unto thy people; but let me not adore thy comforts more than thyself, or love the apples of life more than the tree of life; let Christ himself have still the chief room in my soul.

MEDITATION V.

Who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord? Who can show forth all his praise? From all eternity thou didst mercifully foresee man's misery, and contrived a remedy for it: thou providest a surety for him before the debt was contracted, and a Saviour before he was lost. Thy wrath soon broke out against the angels that fell; thou waitedst not for their repentance, but presently condemned them to everlasting chains of darkness. But long hast thou waited on me; yea, followed me with mercy, and that even after I had manytimes undervalued and trampled upon the greatest gift and richest jewel of heaven, Jesus Christ.

Heavenly Father, though I have been a prodigal and runaway from thy house, yet graciously own me again upon my return, for thy child. I am a poor destitute orphan, that can do nothing for myself, but in thee the fatherless findeth mercy. I am a helpless and needy child, hanging at the breasts of ordinances. O let them not prove dry breasts to me, nor let me suck wind or poison from them, as many do to their destruction: but let me suck the sincere milk of the word, for my growth and enlargement in thy ways.

Lord thou hast directed thy people "in malice to be children, but in understanding to be men;" many, alas, are found the very reverse of this, "in understanding they are children, but in malice they are men." Lord, free me from the leaven of malice, of pride, and envy. A child I am, alas, in knowledge, O that I were such in duty and affection. Lord, make me like a little child, meek and humble, obedient and tractable, affectionate and full of regard to thee, my heavenly Father. O that I were born again, and had the Spirit of adoption in me, enabling me to cry "Abba, Father;" and inclining me to be much about my Father's hand. My needs are very great, but blessed be thy name, thou hast erected a throne of grace for me to come to, in the time of need.

Many are the needs which thou hast left upon me, that I might have the more errands to thy throne, and thou mayest the oftener hear my voice. Lord, pour out upon me a spirit of grace and supplication, and cause me to delight in approaching to thee.

Lord, help me to remember the vows and solemn engagements I have been taking on. I have been giving thee my bond at a communion-table, for thankfulness, love, and obedience; O let me have Christ's back-bond for my relief, that he will strengthen me by his powerful grace to pay my vows to God; for I entirely distrust my own strength. O that my obedience may be universal, cheerful, constant, and growing like the morning light.

Give me grace always to believe and remember the end of my creation, and the vanity of this world, the shortness of my life, and the uncertainty of the time of my death; the miseries of such as die in their sins, and the unspeakable joys of those who die in their Lord.

MEDITATION VI.

I have been swearing allegiance to the King of heaven, over the broken body and the shed blood of his dear Son. And seeing I have now opened my mouth unto the Lord, O save me from going back. Yea, I have been enlisting myself as a soldier to fight under the banner of Jesus Christ, as the Captain of my salvation; and my Captain has been giving me a feast to hearten and encourage me against all difficulties. O that I may be strengthened by it, to fight manfully against all his and my enemies; yea, to prevail over them, and put to flight the army of the aliens. Alas! I must confess to my shame, that I have often fainted and turned back in the day of battle. I have gone from Christ's standard to the enemy's camp. O for the shield of faith! O for grace to depend more upon my Captain for strength and furniture, whether for work or warfare, duty or difficulty. Lord, leave me not to tug at the oar of unassisted endeavours, or to struggle with duty in my own strength; but help me always to look to my covenanted Lord for covenanted strength. O let covenanted grace be sufficient for me.

May I now be going on from strength to strength, from one degree of grace to another; from one evidence, experience, and manifestation, to another, till at length I appear before God in Zion. Let me forget these things that are behind, and reach forth to these things which are before, and so press on toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. And let me count all things but dung and loss, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having my own righteousness, but his, to clothe me.

My days are flying away as a swift post, eternity is hastening on with wings; much of my hand-breadth of days is worn away, and soon will my sun be turned, and be very low. O that I may be near my lodging against night. The blast of the last trumpet is at hand, and a proclamation will shortly be made by one standing in the clouds, that time shall be no more. O that I may improve precious time while it lasts, and run fast with my eyes towards heaven, as my home and everlasting lodging-place. It is an encouragement to run, that Christ is in heaven before me; God send us a joyful meeting. Lord, give me the traveller's charges by the way, something to sweeten my journey, and make it light-some. O where are the grapes of Eshcol, the cordials of faith, the prospects of Canaan from Pisgah-hill? O that I were frequently sending faith and hope, those two faithful spies, to survey the promised land, or at least to visit the borders and outer-coast of my Lord's country; that they might bring me back some encouraging reports, to support and cheer my heart in the wilderness.

Lord, my wants are many, and I need daily supplies from thee, but blessed be God that I have such an agent in heaven as Christ, to present my bills, petitions, and supplications. I put all my requests in his hand, and leave them to his care and management, who knows the fit time to present them, and send me an answer of them. I desire to put him on all my secrets, and trust him with all my concerns.

Lord, stay not away from me, but let me have some gracious visits now and then in thy ordinances. Give me thy Holy Spirit to teach me, when I am ignorant; to quicken me when I am dull; to awaken me, when I am secure; to revive me, when I am faint. Let thy good Spirit be still suggesting things to me, and bringing thy words and promises to my remembrance, that my hard heart may now and then gush forth in streams of love and desire toward thee. O divine Shepherd, thou hast refreshment for my weariness, guidance for my wanderings, and balm for my wounds. O lead me into the pleasant pastures that are watered by the fruitful streams of thy Spirit, that so this tempest-beaten soul may at last be brought into the harbour of rest, and laid up securely with thee.

MEDITATION VII.

Glory to God, who hath not withheld his Son, even his only Son, from me, but hath given him to be a propitiation for my sins, yea, and to be the life and food of my soul. Blessed be his name, that he who offered himself for me upon the cross, also offers himself for me at his table. O that the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, which he offered on the cross, and which I have been commemorating at his table, may atone for all the failings and miscarriages both in my preparations and performances. O blessed for ever be the Lord Jesus for the wounds which he received on the cross for my sins. O print them deeply on my heart, that I may still remember them, and continually bear about with me "the dying of the Lord Jesus;" that the life also of Jesus may be manifested in me.

I have been eating the bread of my Father's house, O let me not return to feed on the husks of the world and sin. But as I have the Lord Jesus, so help me to walk in him. Uphold me by thy right hand, and let none pluck me out of it; and, according to the well-ordered covenant, O put thy fear in my heart, that I may never depart from thee. O thou that givest power to the faint, and increasest strength to them that have no might, and who only art able to keep me from falling; O establish, strengthen, and settle me. Lord, never leave nor abandon me to myself, otherwise I will be as a reed shaken with the wind, and a leaf driven to and fro. Alas, my heart is like Reuben, unstable as water; O if it were liquid as water, that I might, like Hannah, pour it out in prayer before the Lord.

Lord, preserve any degree of softness of heart, or liveliness of frame, which thou hast wrought in me by thine own ordinance, and help me to improve it: otherwise the devil and the world will soon come and lull me asleep, take away the living child, and leave a dead one in its room. Screen me from the cold chilling blasts that come from the devil and the world, that my love be not frozen up: but let the south winds of the Spirit come, and kindly breathe upon any spark of grace thou hast kindled, cherish convictions, preserve good motions, and encourage desires. O maintain the fire of thy love in me, by the oil of thy gracious influences. Let the name of Jesus be always to me as precious ointment poured forth, that I may remember his love more than wine. And let the remembrance of his love be still efficacious to melt my hard heart, enliven my dead soul, and inflame my cold breast with a burning affection to him. O let the charms of my Redeemer's love triumph over all the charms of sin's pleasures and Satan's devices, and cause me to reject all their solicitations with disdain and abhorrence. I have seen Christ's love in bleeding to death on the cursed tree, to deliver me from lying in hell; O let me never again wilfully walk in the road that leads to it. I have seen him wrestling in an agony to open heaven's gates for me, let me never turn back on heaven, and tell him, by mine unworthy carriage, he might have saved his labours. O let me never requite the kindness of my glorious Friend at this rate.

O that I could spend my life in admiring Christ's love, and contemplating his beauty! Surely he is the rose of Sharon, yea, the most beautiful rose in all the garden of God, and that rose which beauteifies all the flowers in the garden. How charming is his beauty, and how fragrant is his smell! One leaf of this fragrant rose is sufficient to perfume the whole creation. O let the rose come and perfume my ill-smelled heart, and ill-savoured performances, that God may not reject both me and them. Let the sweet savour of Christ's sacrifice, and the odour of his intercession, so diffuse itself and fill heaven, that the evil savour of my sins and my duties may not enter. Surely, if it were not for that sweet perfume, God would not suffer such a stinking dung-hill as I am, to approach so near him, and be as a smoke in his nostrils all the day. O if the wind of the Spirit would but blow the sweet smell of Sharon's rose on mine unsavoury affections and withered soul, it would soon revive and blossom as the rose, and the scent thereof be as the wine of Lebanon.

MEDITATION VIII.

How marvellous is it, that the glorious Bridegroom Christ, whose beauty is surpassing, his kingdom mighty, and his riches infinite;—that such an one should offer to match with uncomely souls, and court a bride naturally as black as hell; yea, seek her through a sea of blood, through the pains of death, the torments of hell, and the horrors of the grave: that he should follow me in my wanderings through the wilderness of sin, with his alluring invitations and gospel-offers: yea, present me with rings and bracelets of his precious promises and Spirit's consolations, and all to win my heart, and gain my consent to him. "He is my Lord and my God." Can my heart be but ravished with his love; he took shame, and gave me glory; he took the curse, and gave me the blessing; he took death, and gave me life; he took my sins, and gave me his righteousness. O wonderful and happy exchange for my soul, that was ready to perish; my soul's blessing be evermore upon his head, that made this exchange with me. O that I may be more and more acquainted with him, and the way of salvation through his righteousness and strength. Let me still desire to go out of myself, that I may be found in him, not having my own righteousness, but that which is through the faith of him. Let me always sit under the shadow of this tree of life, which yields the richest fruits, and O let these fruits be sweet to my taste. Blessed Jesus, thou art my life, my strength, my wisdom, my riches, my light, my health, my joy, my glory, and mine all. Be thou never far from me; but give me faith always to live in thee, and depend on thee.

Lord, pity these poor souls who have been watching on the Son of David as he passed by in the ordinances; and yet are complaining their eyes have not seen the King in his beauty: O draw by the veil, and show thyself to them. Lord, when thou showest thyself, let me love thee; and when thou withdrawest thyself, let me follow thee and lament after thee.

Lord, multiply the children of Zion, the sons born in thy house, even them who are begotten again to a lively hope. And when the Lord shall count and write up the people, may it be written of many in this land, this man and that woman was born there.

Alas, for the unsuccessfulness of sermons and sacraments in this age! O where is the power and life that used to accompany solemn ordinances? Where are these breathings, pantings, mournings, meltings, longings, and heavenly frames, that were wont to be seen at such occasions. The day was, that one sermon had pricked some thousands to the heart; but now, many sermons are preached and sacraments dispensed, and scarcely any pricked to the heart for sin.

Lord, hasten antichrist's downfall. Remove that mother and mistress of abominations in the earth. Take graven images and superstition out of the way; and bring in the Jews in troops. Let the time come when this church shall sing for joy; the sun, and her sun, like the light of seven days in one. Come and lay her stones with fair colours, and her foundations with sapphires: make her windows of agates, and her gates carbuncles. Let the name of our cities be Jehovah Shammah,

"The Lord is there;" and the inscription of the people's lives be, "Holiness to the Lord." O that the pleasant flowers may appear, and the time of the singing of birds may come. Amen.

AND SACRAMENTAL SPEECHES,

BEFORE, AT, AND AFTER SERVING THE LORD'S TABLE.

Let him that is a-thirst, say Come: and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely,
Rev. xxii. 17.

WE have here Christ, in the close of this book, owning himself to be the author thereof, verse 16. Moreover, he gives a description of himself, "the root and offspring of David;" the first, as he is God; the second, as he is man; also the bright and Morning Star. As the morning star first brings light to the world, so Christ is the light of the world, the first publisher of the light of the gospel. And now, by this revelation, he gives a superadded light to his people, informing them what shall befall his church till his coming to judgment. He is the Morning Star that will shine bright in the morning of the resurrection, when he comes to gather all his saints, as so many stars round about him. And he hath twice told already in this chapter, verses 7, 12, and the third time he closes with it, assuring us that he was coming quickly. Here, in verse 17, we have the Spirit and Church answering, saying, Come. The Spirit or Holy Ghost in the bride, and the bride by the Spirit, bids Christ welcome.

Observation. All true believers long for Christ's second coming, for finishing the days of sinning, destroying the works of Satan, accomplishing the number of the elect, manifesting the glory of justice and mercy, and putting saints into the full and final possession of the kingdom. 2. We have a command to every one that hears and believes these things, to say, Come: we should all be in case to desire it. Every chaste spouse will long for her husband's coming. 3. We have Christ's call to us, in order to prepare us for his coming, and to put us in case to desire it, i. e. first to come to him. We must first come to Christ by faith, ere we can on good grounds desire and invite Christ to come in the clouds; and if ye once do this, ye need not care though his coming were to be this very day, but ye might cheerfully answer, as John doth, verse 20, "Amen," &c.

In these words we have a free and gracious invitation given, and welcome offered, to all poor sinner to come to Christ for mercy: where we have, 1. The mercy offered, and that is the water of life, i. e. Christ and all his benefits.

2. The persons invited, (1.) The thirsty, i. e. those who are sensible of their wants and necessities, and have an earnest desire to come. (2.) Whosoever will, which makes the offer more large and extensive. Some poor soul might say, Alas! I am not thirsty, my desires are not vehement. Well, then, are you but willing? O hast thou will? Come away. You must be willing. Salvation and mercy is not to be forced upon you against your wills.

3. We have the terms upon which this offer is made to us, upon our coming and taking freely. Christ is not selling himself and his purchase; for if he did, such is our poverty and want, that we could never buy them: wherefore he says, Come and take freely, pay nothing, I am seeking no work or merit in you, only take it freely. O could the terms be contrived easier, when he says not, take of the water, but take the water, as if he had said, it is all at your will.

Doctrine. That it is the royal will and pleasure of God, that Christ, and all the rich blessings of his covenant, revealed in the gospel, should be freely offered to all needy sinners that will come to take them. See Isa. lv. 1.

Method. 1. I shall give a glance of these benefits and blessings here offered freely in the gospel. 2. Why they are called the water of life. 3. What the gospel would have us to do, in order to our having a right to them. 4. Give reasons. 5. Apply.

As to the first, O! the blessings are unspeakable, though we could speak with the tongues of men and angels. Consider, 1. The same blessings that ever were bestowed on any saint since Adam's time, the same essential blessings offered to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, Peter, Paul, &c., are offered to you; the same God that was Abraham's God shall be your God, the same Christ, the same Spirit, the same covenant, the same heaven, shall be yours. Ye shall come up to Abraham's bosom, and sit down to the same table and food with him. O it is in your offer, poor beggar, to be as rich, great, and happy as Abraham.

2. There are here in your offer all the blessings and benefits which are comprehended in the wide bosom of God's promises, which are rich, great, and precious. O we cannot number or weigh them; time would fail to repeat them; we cannot tell how to begin; or, if begun, where to make an end. Read the scriptures from end to end, and behold a dazzling and glorious sight: as the heaven is bespangled with stars in a winter's night, so is the word with shining promises: and we may allude to that passage in God's covenant with Abraham, "If these stars can be numbered, so may thy seed be numbered." So may I say, if the promises can be numbered or weighed, so can the blessings here offered.

3. All that the blood and merits of the eternal Son of God could purchase and obtain, is here offered; and you may guess at the greatness of the benefits by the greatness of the sum paid for them. They must needs be rich, for Christ bespoke them for us very early, even in the morning of eternity: and O dear have they cost him! He must come down from his throne, cover himself with our dust, sweat blood, shed blood, suffer hell's torments, and die! Surely all this was not for a thing of nought; no, there is a great purchase like the price, called here the "water of life;" there is everlasting righteousness, deliverance from hell, pardon, reconciliation, access to God, peace of conscience, adoption into God's family, grace for renovation and sanctification. There is a heavenly kingdom, the uninterrupted vision and fruition of God to all eternity; there is Christ's purchase, all offered here: yea, he offers not only his purchase, but his person; you have Christ himself in your offer, and with him all things.

Finally, In Christ you have all the persons of the blessed Trinity in your offer, and that is more than heaven and earth; and all is included in the "water of life." God the Father is hereby understood; we find him so calling himself, Jer. ii. 13, "a fountain of living waters;" where he summons heaven and earth to wonder at the distraction of men in forsaking him. Jesus Christ is also "a fountain opened," Zech. xiii. 1. He is the rock smitten by the sword of justice that the water of life might gush out. The Holy Ghost is also called a "river of water of life," Rev. xxii. 1. So that here in this water of life, we have God Jehovah in our offer, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and what can ye wish for more? You have God himself to be your God; so stands the covenant, Jer. xxxii. 33, "I will be their God, and they shall be my people." You have God to be your God, your inheritance, your stock, your portion; and may not ye say as David, Psal. xvi. 1, "I have got a goodly heritage?" God shall be your Father, your friend, your counsellor; thy Maker is thy husband, and every thing thou canst desire.

As to the second head, Why called the water of life? Ans. I. Because of its properties and qualifications. 1. Water hath a purging and cleansing virtue, for taking away filth and pollution; O, but the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin. 2. Water is of a cooling and refreshing nature to the poor scorched traveller; O, but the benefits of Christ's death are refreshing to the poor thirsty soul that is saying, I pant, I languish, and die without thee; see Psal. xlii. 1.

3. Water is good to quench fire; so this blood quenches the fire of God's wrath, also of lust, pride, passion, &c. 4. Water is a softening thing to the hardened earth; O, but many a hard heart has been mollified into tears, and melted into compliance with God's will, saying with Paul, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" 5. Water is of a fructifying nature; it makes the dry withered herbs to be green and fragrant. O, how many barren withered souls have been made hereby to bring forth the fruit of righteousness? Without water nothing would grow; what made Egypt so fruitful but the inundation of the Nile? And what makes a soul a watered garden, and a field the Lord hath blessed, but this water of life? O that there were many such in this place. 6. Water is the most necessary thing in the world; without it we could not live. O how miserably would we perish, if we wanted the water of life. 7. Water is cheap, and free to both poor and rich; it costs us nothing, all are welcome. So here, come without money and without price.

II. It is called the water of life, either, 1. Because it affords spiritual life to dead souls; it is the wine that makes the lips of those that are asleep to speak. Yea, and it nourishes and preserves the soul to eternal life. Eternal life is a sure effect of it; the soul that drinks here shall never die. 2. It is so called, because it excels all other water. Why? It is better than common water, it is fountain water, as called, Rev. xxi. 6, "The fountain of the water of life." O what a choice fountain is it! O it has a noble vent, many pleasant passages and conduits. O, the side, head, heart, and hands of Christ, were pierced to let this water distil more freely and plentifully to the world. It hath choice conduits and pipes. O do not mistake them; it runs only in the conduit of the promises, the channels of the sanctuary. O how pleasantly doth it flow between the banks of ordinances? But mind these are only the ordinances of his own appointment, see Joel iii. 18, "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk, and all the rivers of Judah shall flow with waters, and a fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord, and shall water the valley of Shittim." It comes only from the house of the Lord. 3. It hath many pleasant crystal streams that make glad the city of God, Psal. xli. 4, reviving, purifying, softening, sanctifying, fructifying, and medicinal streams, for healing all diseases and plagues whatsoever. Are there any diseased souls? Come to these medicinal streams and bathe. What is your disorder and wound, and it shall be cured? Is it spiritual blindness? O this opens the eyes of those who are born blind. Is it deafness? it makes a man quick to hear God's call and counsel. Is it lameness? it causes the lame man leap as an hart. Is it weakness of hands, feebleness of knees? O this endows with life, strength, and courage for duty. Is it a tympany, a swelling of pride? O it makes him low in his own eyes. Is it a spiritual consumption and decay of faith, love, repentance, zeal, &c. Is it the plague of the heart, earthly-mindedness, backsliding, wandering, deadness? Is it hardness of heart? O come here, this water will soften the flinty rock, and make the hard heart tender and pliable. O come, lay open all your wounds and sores, and you shall be healed. 4. Other fountains may be locked or dried up, but here the wells of salvation never run dry in any season, and are open continually. Christ hath taken the stone away from the well's mouth, so that we may take of the water of life freely. 5. Other fountains are measureable and fathomable; but this is a deep, everflowing, and overflowing fountain, like the water in Ezek. xlvii. 5.

As to the third head, How shall we get this water of life? See what is required here, "come and take," that is the condition required, faith in Christ. Consider, 1. When we say this is a condition required, we do not mean there is any thing necessary, in point of worth and merit, but only in point of order and of means. This is not a covenant of works, but of grace, a free covenant, all things are given here freely. And who will say he pays any thing for water, when he comes to the well to take it, gets it for the taking, or putting out the hand? Will a beggar say he merits any thing by putting out his hand for his alms? Acceptance is a necessary and intrinsic condition in all gifts; if I take not a gift, it can never be mine. 2. This condition of coming on our part, doth not denote any power or grace in us to stretch out our hand, or open our mouth. No: though God requires it of us, yet it is his special grace that enables us; and he requires it, to let us know what is our duty, and to make us sensible of our insufficiency.

To "come and take," denotes and implies several things: 1. Our natural distance from this water. Some folks look on themselves as having these things by birthright; but ye are all mistaken; for naturally you are strangers and enemies to God, and heirs of hell, aliens to the commonwealth of Israel, having no interest in Christ.

2. It denotes our sense of that distance and lost case by nature without Christ; that we are undone without this water. O did you ever see your distance, danger, and ruin, by reason of clouds of guilt and wrath hanging over your head? O mind, Christ came to seek and save that which was lost.

3. It supposes that the way is now patent to the tree of life. No angel, with a flaming sword, to keep the way. Christ now is not a well shut up or scaled. No; the fountains of life are broke up, the wells of salvation are now opened, the stone rolled from the well's mouth. The well is deep, but here is a bucket to draw with; the breasts of consolation are drawn out, wisdom's gates are cast wide open. O there is a free market of grace proclaimed, if ye hinder not yourselves, there is no hindrance on Christ's part. O needy souls, will ye starve in the house and the market so near, and a free market too? O will ye perish for thirst, and the well at hand?

4. It imports a discovery of the fitness and excellency of Christ for the soul; he is able, sufficient, suitable, and willing. You will never come till you see this, that Christ can satisfy all your wants, and answer all your objections. Art thou deeply indebted to justice, even drowned in debt? Christ hath a ransom that can satisfy. Art thou under the heavy curse of God? Christ has become a curse. Art thou condemned to die? O here is sufficient righteousness to justify you. Art thou filthy and polluted with sin? O here is an open fountain for thy washing. Art thou poor? here is fine gold, the riches of grace and glory. Art thou starving? here is wine and milk, manna, the fatted calf, a full feast. Art thou blind? here is eye-salve. Art thou naked? here is white raiment. Art thou sick? here is a physician. Wounded? here is the balm of Gilead. Art thou a slave? O here is the Redeemer and Ransomer. Art thou in prison? here is the jailor that hath the keys of David, that opens prison-doors. Art thou under iron fetters? here is the mighty lion, that can break the iron fetters, and cut asunder the gates of brass. O what canst thou say more? Object. I am a poor vile sinner, will he accept of me? I have no confidence to think he will. O he answers, "I come not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Object. My sins are red as crimson. Ans. I will make them white as wool. Object. I am a leper and full of plagues. Ans. The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. Object. O there is little hope of me, I am quite lost and undone. Ans. I came to seek and save that which was lost. Object. O there is no hope, for I seem to be past cure, I am dead in sin, rotten in the grave. Ans. "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believes on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." Object. I have lain long at the pool. Ans. Did he not heal an impotent man, that had an infirmity thirty-eight years? Though you have lain bound under sin, not only these thirty-eight years, but even these eighty years, yet come, though it were at the last hour, as the thief on the cross, and he will heal you, and not cast you out. Object. O but I have raised many high mountains in Christ's way. Ans. I am he that comes skipping upon the mountains. Object. I am deaf, I cannot hear his voice. Ans. I will open thine ears, and cause thee to hear the voice of thy Beloved. Object. I am lame, I will never be able to walk. Ans. The covenant runs thus, "I will write my laws in thy heart, and cause thee to walk in my ways." Object. But his ways are difficult, I cannot keep his laws. Ans. "Take my yoke upon you; for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light," Matt. xi. 29, 30. "Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace," Prov. iii. 19. Object. I will break the covenant, and apostatize from Christ. Ans. The covenant runs, Jer. iii. 19, "Thou shalt call me thy Father, and shalt not turn away from me." Object. O but I will never hold out against Satan. Ans. "My grace is sufficient for thee." Object. But I will perish in the wilderness. Ans. I am given to be thy leader, and thou shalt go up through it, leaning on me.

5. It imports the going out of the soul after the water of life, with spiritual desires and longings, saying, as David, O for a drink of the water of Bethel well, who will fetch me it? O who will bring me into the strong city? O when wilt thou come unto me? O that I knew where to find him. O my soul follows hard after him. O where will the well spring up in this dry valley of Baca. None but Christ can satisfy the desires of my soul.

6. The soul turns its back upon every thing inconsistent with Christ; particularly, on our sins, the world, and their pleasures. O, saith the soul, there is no happiness there for me, these muddy streams will not quench my thirst; it is the water of life only can do it. Also on our own righteousness, duties, prayers, tears, repentance, reformation. O these will not do my business with the justice of God. Mine eye is only on Christ; this is his name, "The Lord our Righteousness." In the Lord only have I righteousness and strength.

7. It implies a man's activity in bestirring himself in the use of all commanded means, to win at the water of life. O bestir yourselves, let not Christ complain of you, as Isa. lxiv. 7, "There is none that calleth on my name, or stirreth up himself to take hold of me." O cry, Awake faith? "Awake, O north wind; come, thou south wind: awake, O arm of the Lord!"

8. It mainly implies a going beyond all means and ordinances, and taking hold of Christ himself, the soul's receiving and embracing this bleeding High Priest on a cross, as our surety and propitiation, taking his blessed sacrifice in our arms, sprinkling our souls with the blood, dipping our guilty souls in the fountain, pleading this with God, and presenting it to justice as our only shield and shelter. O come now under the covert of this blood, and shadow of this rock. Comply with and acquiesce in this noble device. O where is the eye of faith to look to the water! O where the wings of faith to carry it! Where the hand of faith to reach it! The bucket of faith, the mouth of faith opened wide! O communicants, you must this day come near the foot of the cross, the clefts of the rock, close by the wounds; you must do as Thomas did, "Reach hither your hand, feel the prints of the nails;" thrust it into his side, into the fountain, and cry with him, "My Lord, and my God;" and with Paul, "My Christ, who loved me, and gave himself for me."

There must be particular appropriating and applying acts of faith this day, like the spouse, "My Beloved is mine, and I am his." This bargain must be transacted covenant-ways; it must be sealed and confirmed with heaven's broad seal, and with a solemn oath in the sacrament. You must take Christ as a priest and atoning sacrifice, and also as a Master whom ye will serve.

As to the fourth head, Why is the water of life offered to all freely?

Ans. It is offered to all, to show that it is the duty of all to accept. The gospel-trumpet sounds a jubilee to all that will accept. This general offer is like a rope let down among drowning men, all are called to catch to it, and he that lays hold on it shall be pulled up. He offers to them freely, 1. To make all unwilling persons wholly inexcusable. It is without money and without price: what can you object against it? 2. The gospel-market is free, because all things are the purchase of Christ's blood; Christ has bought all these things at the adequate price; Christ has been at the market before us, and that makes all things the cheaper to us. 3. Because we are wholly unable to buy, we can give nothing for them; if there were nothing but one good word or thought required of us to purchase salvation, we could not perform it; we have totally lost our stock, and turned bankrupt. 4. To exclude all boasting or glory in the creature, Rom. iii. 27, "Where is boasting then?" It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay; but by the law of faith." 5. To glorify God's grace hereby. God will have believers in heaven for ever to exalt free grace, and cry, All is free, glory to free grace for all, our election, regeneration, sanctification, justification, communion, ordinances, sacraments, heaven, &c. All is free. Praise to none but God for these inestimable blessings.

Application 1. Let us fall in a rapture of wonder and admiration, because of the adorable mysteries and miracles of free love discovered here in the gospel. O worship and adore this contrivance! Do as the Israelites did, Exod.

iv. 31. When they heard that a Saviour was come among them, "They bowed down their heads and worshipped." So do ye this day, O communicants. Do as Moses commanded the Israelites, Exod. xiv. 13, "Stand still and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will show you this day." O see it with wonder. You are fearfully and wonderfully made, but far more fearfully and wonderfully redeemed. O glorify him for the contrivance of salvation, for the eternal purposes of love, for the covenant of grace, and the revelation of it in the gospel. The terms of the covenant are wondrous, reasonable, and easy. The treasures of the covenant are wondrous, rich, and valuable. The whole covenant is wonderfully well ordered and sure. But, for the glory of God and the comfort of believers, here God shows his marvellous loving-kindness, Psal. xvii. 7. Wonderful to poor rebel worms, traitor dust and ashes. O it might have been expected that God, after the fall, would have sent a fearful message to the world, like that Rev. viii. "Wo, wo, wo to the inhabitants of the earth." But behold a surprising message, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent.—And whosoever will, let him come, and take of the water of life freely."

Exhortation to come. Here I offer to you, the worst of sinners, the water of life, the blood of Christ, and all his purchase. Here I make a general proclamation, in the King of glory's name, of the freedom of his grace, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." And whosoever will, communicants and spectators, be what ye will, as if I did call every man and woman's name.

1. O carnal earthly soul, that has been a drudge to the world all thy days, "come to the water." 2. O thou profane drunkard, swearer, sabbath-breaker, unclean sinner, black as hell! O will ye "come to the water of life, and be cleansed?" O are ye minded to die in your polluted case, and be purged no other way than by hell's flames? "O turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die?" O liars, cheaters, railers, revengeful, malicious, backbiters, that have been wallowing in sin's defilements, O will ye die in your sins, and the fountain so near? 3. O blind soul, born blind, that never saw thy sins, lost state, and sinking condition, and all the heavy curses of the law hanging over your head, O come to this healing and enlightening water. O cry, with the poor blind men, Mat. xx. 31—33, "Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou son of David. And Jesus stood still, and called them and said, What will ye that I shall do unto you? They say unto him, Lord, that our eyes be opened." See how importunate and sensible; their complaint is in their mouth, their petition is in their hand; they tell their distress. 4. O prayerless-sinner, that never sought God's grace in earnest, scarce bowed a knee, or read a chapter, O will ye come? O ye that never had any serious desire after Christ before, ye that never had any concern for heaven and salvation before, I invite you to come. 5. O careless sinner, that never had any heart-love to God or his ordinances, to his way and service, O will ye come? 6. O sinners, that have slighted Christ all your days and the calls of the gospel; refused all his offers, and trampled on his blood hitherto, "come to the water." 7. O obstinate sinners, that would never be prevailed with to leave sin, that would never be persuaded by all the calls, warnings, and pains, God has used to reclaim you, by his rod, conscience, afflictions, &c. O will ye come? I call you once more to come. 8. O condemned rebels, in the hands of justice, and sentenced to die; will ye come? 9. O slaves to sin and Satan, that have been drudging after him all your lives, will ye come? 10. O ye that never kept one word to God since ye came into the world, though ye have sworn to him at baptism, in sickness, and at the Lord's table, will ye come? 11. O poor dry withered souls, that have been long watered by the ordinances, and yet bring forth no fruit, O come here, get your roots and branches watered. 12. O poor dead-hearted souls, that have long laboured under deadness, O come with your cold, lifeless, benumbed souls to the water of life. 13. O diseased soul, that hast many heart-plagues, here is healing. 14. Poor formal souls, lame sinners, that could not walk, unbelieving souls, backsliders, hypocrites, O come for once, and deal sincerely with God and your own souls. O take of the water of life.

Motive 1. O consider what is this day in your offer; all that the blood and merits of the eternal Son of God could purchase, everlasting righteousness, pardon, reconciliation, access to God, peace of conscience, sanctifying grace, adoption into God's family, a heavenly kingdom, and the vision and fruition of God for ever. In a word, you have all that can make you good, all that can make you great, and all that can make you happy. Some are so rich they know not what they have. O believer, you know not how rich you are, and how great your privileges are.

2. Consider the extreme need you stand in of Christ. O poor soul, the fire of God's wrath is burning against thee; if you get not this water to quench it, you must be a faggot for this fire through eternity, and "Who can dwell with everlasting burnings?" What will you do at a judgment-seat? You will stand speechless and Christless, helpless and hopeless, the executioner will drag thee to the pit without mercy. It will be in vain then to cry, Lord, mercy, mercy, if the blood of Christ be now despised. O if thou hast no need, come not: but a starving man needs not meat, a wounded man a physician, a dying man breath, so much as thou needs the water of life. O for a stream to polluted souls.

3. Consider how fit and suitable Christ is for you. Art thou scorched and thirsty? here is drink. Art thou poor, miserable, blind and naked? here is blood to justify and water to cleanse. Hast thou plagues, leprosy? &c. here are noble baths. O ye need not say, "Who will ascend to heaven and bring the water? It is here on earth, in this church." Say not who will roll away the stone: for thy fountain is opened. O here is water that will restore thy soul again, renew thy youth like the eagle's, heal all thy diseases, and cure all thy wounds. O will ye be so near the well's mouth, and not step in? O will ye come to this healing water?

4. There is an offer made to you that was never made to fallen angels, Heb. i. 16, "He took not on him the nature of angels." Originally it may be rendered, he took not hold of them when falling, as a man takes hold of a glass, or any brittle thing falling, and keeps it from destruction. O put not yourselves, by your refusal, in the same case with them. If ye lose this opportunity, consider the remembrance of lost opportunities will be terrible to you in hell, like oil to your flames. O what would damned spirits give for this offer?

5. If ye come not presently, a sentence may be passed which shall not be altered, as Luke xiv. 24, "For I say unto you, that none of these men which were bidden shall taste of my supper." Ye shall not taste of the water of life, but drink of the cup of wrath. Perhaps many that saw the last communion here, and would not come to Christ, are now sinking or swimming in the brimless and bottomless ocean of God's wrath. And some, who joined with us formerly, are now drinking it new with Christ in his kingdom. O what a sweet song are they presently singing, and will continue to sing eternally, Rev. i. 5, "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood." O will ye choose to sing this song, or howl in the ocean of wrath. It is likely many of you will never see another communion here, and many never get another offer of the water of life. O choose presently what ye will do. The offer comes close home to you, ye must either say ye will take Christ or reject him.

6. Consider the vanity of all other fountains; the world is a poor rent cistern. Why will ye forsake the fountain of living waters that will never fail you?

7. Consider what way the offer is made to you, by loud and open proclamation, with great earnestness, repeating his offers frequently, he is laying out all his wares to tempt you, his wounds are speaking to and pleading with you, he is commending the waters of life to you, telling that they are good and suitable for you! O! we are unskilful factors for Christ, O that he would commend himself to you, and say, "I am the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley." O consider now, Christ is ready, the Master is calling, and he has sent me out to call, "All things are ready." Come, Christ is just now waiting for an answer, I am peremptory with you, I cannot give you a day or an hour longer to advise. "It is to-day that you hear his voice." What then sayest thou? O give your answer presently. Whether will you come to the water of life or lie in the defilements of sin? In Christ my Master's name, I charge you, man, woman, old and young, to give a present answer. O what shall I report to my Master? O are there some saying, I will not answer thee but Christ himself. Well, you deal kindly with my Master. O do I see any thirsting, coming, anxious with desire, and saying, Lord, give me Christ, or else I die: none but Christ. On the other hand, will ye make light of it, and say, We care not for the water of life; then we may stop, sit down, and cause draw the table. O but I am sure you cannot find in your heart to treat your Redeemer so, that hath come so far, and paid so dear for this water. Well, do as you will, I take God to record, and call heaven and earth to witness against you, that I have offered Christ freely, and set life and death before you. Choose whom ye will serve, and what pool ye will drink of. If ye accept not the offer, it had better that ye had never heard of it, for it will witness against you. You will say, Cursed be the day that ever I heard a gospel sermon. Cursed be the day that ever I witnessed a communion. Would to God I had been the son of a pagan; would to God I had been the daughter of a Mahometan.

Direct. O say ye, shall I win? and how shall I come to this fountain? The streams are running close by my door, O I am afraid I miss.

Ans. 1. Come humbly, under a deep sense of your pollution. Say that ye are the chief of sinners, and the least of saints. "He sends the springs into the valleys," Psal. civ. 10. O humble yourselves very low, take a hack look of all your breaches of vows and old sins, how numerous and black they are; and O behold their colour and hue in the red glass of Christ's sufferings, and then the water of life will be welcome to you.

2. Cry that the Spirit of God may move on the water, that then ye may step in and be healed. Cry that the water of life may rise and overflow its banks, that multitudes may be cured.

3. Come thirsting and panting for the water of life; "let every one that is athirst come." O are there any saying, I will die if I get not a drink, one stream of this water, for Christ's sake: then you shall be sure of this water, for you have the word of a king for it here, and Psal. lxxxi. 10, "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it."

4. Come with raised expectations; you need not fear that these waters, when you come thirsty to them, will prove like the summer brooks which disappoint the weary traveller, Job vi. 15. They are not like the flattering empty cisterns of the creature, that perform not what they promise. No, these are inexhaustible fountains of living waters, that never can run dry. O mind he is a great and rich King thou art coming to, he gives liberally and grudges not. O raise your expectations, not on account of any thing in yourselves, but on account only of Christ's merits, and God's mercy; then you have a good foundation. As we often wrong ourselves by expecting too much from the world; so we often wrong ourselves, by expecting too little from God, "whose mercy is upon us according as we hope in him," Psal. xxxiii. 22. Christ, in conferring his goods, still saith, "According to your faith, so be it unto you." The king of Israel lost his advantage against the Syrians by smiting thrice, and then staying, when he should have smitten five or six times, 2 Kings xiii. So we often prejudice ourselves by the weakness of our faith; we receive little because we expect little; and are like those among whom Christ would not do many mighty works, because of their unbelief.

5. Come with joy and praise. O sinner, die not for thirst, when there is such a fountain of living water so near thee: but come with joy, and draw water out of the wells of salvation, Isa. xii. 3. Do as David did; when he went to the altar of God, he went to God as his exceeding joy, Psal. xliii. 4. O this is the day which the Lord hath made; let us rejoice, and be glad in it. O bless God for Christ, bless him for his ordinances; bless him for the feast, the invitation you have to it, that you have not a feast of eternal torments in hell. Bless God that has made you willing to come, and has set so great things in your offer and view, and that he is willing to bestow them on such worms. Raise your hearts, O communicants, and say with David, Psal. ciii. 1, 2, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, and forget not all his benefits."

Object. 1. Alas! I am a sinful creature, shall I come? Ans. The greater is thy need, O come with thy crimson sins. Object. 2. I have slighted these waters so long, I have no confidence. Ans. Be humbled for it, and make a present amendment by coming. Object. 3. I am afraid I will be disappointed though I come. Ans. No, you have the word of a King for it; those "that come unto me,

I will in no wise cast out." Object. 4. Alas! I have no strength to come, I have a dead heart. Ans. O come, make an effort; groan under thy deadness, lay a dead soul before God's promises. O hoist up the sails, and wait for the gales; look up to God for the accomplishment of his promise. O plead it, and put him to his word; act faith in God's promise in the text, and look up. Do as the Israelites did in the wilderness, Num. xxi. 16—18. God hath called them to the place, and promised them water which was very welcome in that dry desert. Well, did they sit still and wait till it sprung? No, they digged, put to their staves, in expectation of God's accomplishing his promise, and sang, "spring up, O well." So do ye; O come, make the attempt, put to your staves, weak and short as they are, and dig in expectation, and look up, pray, and sing, "spring, O well." Come, bring all your empty vessels to this fountain, in expectation of a fill. Do as the poor widow did, 2 Kings iv. Bring not a few; have ye not many wants to be supplied? And I am persuaded the vessel will fail, ere ever the oil fail. Object. 5. Alas! I am blind, I cannot see the well springing, and O it is high time now. Ans. It may be, poor soul, the well is nearer than you apprehend; you may be, like Hagar, ready to fall on a desperate resolution, when the well was just at hand, Gen. xxi.; the Lord "opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water," &c. O that God may do so with you. O poor soul, take courage, rely on God's promise, and come thirsty, with raised expectations, and there is no fear. See that word, Isa. xli. 17, 18, "When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the Lord will hear them, I the God of Israel will not forsake them." And that other word, Psal. ix. 18, "For the needy shall not always be forgotten; the expectation of the poor shall not perish for ever." O come with faith and hope, and God will be as good as his word.

SPEECH BEFORE GOING DOWN TO THE TABLE.

Now we come to offer you the water of life, not only doctrinally, but in a visible sacramental manner: and ye are now to approach to the fountain of the water of life in this ordinance, which is the most solemn and august ordinance under heaven, and requires the most profound awe and reverence from us. But, before we go about it, we shall read our warrant from the eternal God for doing it, that so we may show that it is no invention of men or angels: and that we may keep as close to Christ's institution as we can, read with me, 1 Cor. ix. 23. "For I have received of the Lord, that which I also delivered unto you, that the Lord Jesus, the same night in which he was betrayed, took bread; and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat; this is my body which is broken for you; this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood; this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as oft as ye eat this bread, and drink of this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come."

Here we have one of heaven's broad seals appended to the covenant of grace, wherein you have not only Christ crucified, signified, and represented to your view, but also exhibited, offered, sealed, and applied to your souls, with all the purchase of his cross, and benefits of his blood. Christ left this ordinance as a special love-token behind him, when he was to die and leave us. Observe the time when he did it; in "the same night in which he was betrayed," even the last night of his life, when he saw his all at the stake; when he saw heaven, earth, and hell combining; justice, wicked men, and devils, ready to fall upon him; the black cloud of his Father's wrath just at the breaking over his head; and his bitter agony in the garden and on the cross just at hand. Was it not high time now to be providing for his own safety, when he had so short time for it? O but, in the first place, he will mind believers, and prepare a feast and a cordial for them to the world's end, when he was gone. O a famous night never to be forgotten; a sad night to Christ, but a sweet night to us, without which the day-light of the gospel and eternal glory had never dawned upon us. Christ would have you never forget that night; wherefore he leaves us these love-tokens and memorials of himself, to keep us in mind, bread and wine, which you are to eat and drink. These are no costly things; Christ would not be burdensome to his people with any of his ordinances. These fitly resemble the body and blood of our Redeemer, in respect of their qualities and effects. Bread, ere it be fit to nourish us, must be first sown and die in the earth; then it must be threshed, grinded, baked in the oven, broken, and eaten; and O it is a most nourishing thing for us. It is bread that strengthens man's heart, Psal. civ. 15. So Christ's body strengthens and nourishes the believing soul. Wine, ere it be fit for use, must be squeezed out of the grape, trodden and bruised in the wine press; and there is no liquor so fit for cheering fainting spirits: so with Christ crucified, his blood cheers the drooping soul. This bread must be broken, that we may see his wounds, the print of the nails, and the spear, and may see into Christ's bleeding heart and yearning bowels of tender mercy, and hear them sounding towards you; and also see the clefts of the rock opened, which alone can shelter you. Again, this wine must be poured forth, that ye may see the fountain of the water of life opened, his blood running freely to save you. O the wells of salvation are now opened, and the stone rolled away. Come, dead, hard-hearted, blind, lame, diseased souls, to the healing waters. Again, this bread and wine are to be offered to you, "Take, eat, drink," to let you see that Christ is not only to be represented, but to be offered and accepted. You must now strip yourselves to take hold of him, receive Christ, and all his benefits. O now is the time when you must flee in to Christ crucified, and close with him, and grasp fast to him. O this is the main work of communicating. When ye hear these words, "Take, eat, drink," think with yourselves that ye see Christ at the head of the table, and ye hear him say, Take me and all my benefits. O if ye do not this, ye will eat and drink damnation. This is your main work; come believing, confiding in, and relying on, Jesus Christ for life and salvation. Come confiding in his authority, ability, and promise to save. O come leaning and staying yourselves upon this rock. O come, weary soul, and cast thy burden here, and he shall sustain thee. O shelterless sinner, come thou and all thy concerns, into this ark, and here shalt thou be safe when the deluge comes. O terrified and pursued soul, flee to this city of refuge, and thou shalt be secured from the avenger of blood. O quit all other shelters and refuges, poor trembling dove, and take to the clefts of the rock alone, for there is no salvation in any other. O faithless soul, wilt thou come here, reach hither thy finger, and in this ordinance behold his hands, reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into his side, and feel the print of the nails, and the mark of the spear, and then say, with Thomas, "My Lord, and my God." Here I cast mine anchor, here I rest my soul. "It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again," to him I give up myself, as my Prophet, Priest, and King. "Lord, I believe, help mine unbelief." And thus say to thy soul, O my soul, thou hast said unto the Lord, He is my God; then return, O my soul, unto thy rest, and be easy and safe. O communicants, consider that you are (if ye would communicate worthily) to cast your guilty sinful souls into the open bleeding arms of a crucified Saviour, and give up yourselves, soul and body, to him to be saved, taught, and ruled by him. You are to close a bargain, and seal a covenant with him, before angels and men. You must receive Christ to save, and give up yourselves to be saved by him, and to serve him. God offering the elements, and Christ in them, is a seal on God's part; and your taking them is a seal on your part. Now mind, when ye take the elements, that ye, with the arms of your faith, embrace and clasp about the bleeding High Priest, rest and rely wholly on his merits and ransom, apply his blood for washing away all your guilt; present it in faith's hand, and plead it with God. Say, Lord, I deserve to be sent to hell from this table. But, Lord, here is a ransom, a righteousness; a loud-speaking meritorious blood. When you are eating and drinking, thankfully remember his dying love, and suffering for your sins. And look on him whom ye have pierced: and here covenant, vow, and resolve, that ye will pierce and grieve him no more, and my soul for yours ye shall not be unworthy communicants. Think with yourselves, in communicating, that ye hear Christ saying, "Do this in remembrance of me." O now think on me, your best friend in the world, who remembered you in your low estate, when there was none to do it. Think on me that came down from my glorious throne, and laid down my head on a block, for you, a poor rebellious worm. Think on me who paid all your debt, suffered death for you, and left you mine inheritance. Think on me that I am now absent from you, but am negotiating your affairs, pleading your cause, and preparing your mansion. Think on me that am coming quickly again in the clouds to meet you, and take you to my palace, and put you in possession of all. O remember me who am still remembering you, and have engraven you on the palms of my hands, and have you still in my heart and eye. And O when ye thus mind, see that it be with grief for, and abhorrence of, your sins, that pierced and slew the Lord of life; and with love and thankfulness to him that came so cheerfully to be your ransom, "Lo, I come, in the volume of thy book it is written of me; to do thy will I take delight." O blessed be he that consented to the work. O had he refused, none other would have accepted, and we had all been sinking in the ocean of wrath. O bless him, bless him; O my soul, he had no better to give than himself and his heart's blood. O sinner, will that do thee good, thou shalt not want a drop of it. O communicants, come, take. Christ crucified is now ready for you; all things are ready, come away to the marriage and to the marriage-feast. The bridegroom is ready, the servants and friends of the bridegroom are ready to attend you, the blessing to the feast is ready, the marriage-robes are ready, Christ's righteousness; the Master of the feast is ready to bid you welcome; yea, the whole provision is ready. The Spirit is ready to apply the benefits, a pardon is ready, a laver for sanctification is ready, the wells of consolation are ready, our High Priest is ready to atone, our advocate is ready to plead, the mansions are ready to receive us, the crown is ready, the angels ready to convey us, all things are ready but your hearts and souls. O will ye make ready and come; the Spirit saith, Come, the Bride saith, Come, Rev. xxii. 17. Come first to Christ, and then come to the sacrament. The table of the great God is covered, the water of life is ready, the fountain of life is broken up, the well is open, the stone is rolled away, the breasts of consolation are drawn out: O for hungering and thirsting this day. O for many a long piercing look through these clouds, that the Master of the feast may come and feed us with the heavenly manna and water of life. He is the heavenly Pelican that feeds his young ones with his blood, and we are starving supplicants, Lord, about thy hand. May we, therefore, come forward, exercising faith and love, that so we may be made partakers of Christ's broken body and shed blood, together with all his benefits, to our spiritual nourishment and growth in grace.

But, my friends, I must first set a rail about the table, that none who have no right to the table, and children's bread, may come near it. And, therefore, I, in Christ's name, my Master, and the Master of this feast, excommunicate and debar from this holy table, 1. All strangers to God, and enemies to Christ, all those who are not content with the way contrived of salvation through a Redeemer; all who are not willing to accept of Christ as a Prophet, Priest, and King, and give up themselves to be saved, taught, and ruled by him. All who are lively in any known sin, against light, and resolve not to part with it—particularly, all atheists, who deny God in heart or life. All ignorant persons, who knew not God, their lost state by nature, their need of Christ, and what he has done for them. All prayerless persons, who worship not God in their families, nor in secret. Ye who forget Christ all the year over, are not fit to remember him at a communion-table. All who are slaves to the world, and put it in God's room. All who are slaves to the devil and the flesh, and all those who deny God's providences, I debar.

2. All worshippers of images, or those who invent any other way of worship than God has appointed, or approve of corruptions in God's worship, ordinances, and sacraments, which Christ the great King of the church hath not instituted.

3. All blasphemers and profaners of God's name, all cursers, swearers, tearers of God's name, whether in oaths or vain prayers; all who invoke the devil in imprecating against themselves or neighbours, habitual swearers by faith, conscience, or their souls, presume not to take the bread of God in your polluted lips. All mockers of religion, or the scriptures, all perjurers, covenant-breakers, hypocrites, and apostates from God, come not near.

4. All open and avowed sabbath-breakers, who obstinately continue to do unnecessary things on this day, walking unnecessarily in the fields, sitting and standing in the streets, when ye might be better employed in the church, or your houses.

4. All persons disobedient to lawful magistrates, to parents and ministers; all who disregard their parents, and give them no reverence, nor maintenance, when they are poor, &c. All parents who take no care of their children's education, and learn them not to read, pray, &c.

6. All murderers, envious, malicious, and revengeful persons.

7. All gluttons, drunkards; all adulterers, fornicators, unclean persons; all who have an immodest carriage, who speak obscene language.

8. All thieves, robbers, oppressors, unjust persons, cheaters of their neighbours.

9. All liars, backbiters, and slanderers.

10. All those who are not content with the lot God has carved out to them, but grudge at their neighbours' prosperity, &c. Any who live in those sins unrepented of, I debar from the Lord's table.

On the other hand, I, in the same name and authority, invite all that are sincerely willing to part with their sins, turn their back on the devil and hell, and take on with a new Master, Jesus Christ, and join in covenant with him.

2. All who are truly sensible of their lost and perishing state without him, and see a burden of sin and wrath ready to sink them. O drowning men, take hold of this plank of mercy, and come safe to land. All thirsty panting souls for Christ, that would give all the world for Christ, that would rather have an interest in his blood, and a blink of his face, than the best estates or dwellings on earth. All that truly love Christ, whose souls' desires are towards him, and the remembrance of his name, come away.

3. All poor cloudy believers, who have many doubts and fears, come away to your Lord and Saviour. Reach hither your finger with Thomas, fear not ye, for I know ye seek Jesus.

4. All who are greening under heart-plagues, and soul-diseases, come away to the Physician. All shelterless souls, come away to the ark. All heavy-laden souls, come to your rest. All humble beggars, come away to the King's feast; all that would have more strength of grace, faith, love, repentance, desires, thankfulness. All that would have their sins and lusts killed. O here is a feast and medicine, come to it, for it will prove life to your souls, strength to your graces, poison to your sins, and death to your lusts. In a word, all that are heartily willing to take Christ for their only Saviour, and bleeding High Priest, to ransom you from hell and wrath, and are willing to give up yourselves to the blessed Son of God, to be saved, ruled, and taught by him, and to take Christ and his cross, with a resolution that life nor death shall never part him and you. O come, come, lift up faith's hands, and the doors of your souls, to let in the King of glory, with the voice of joy and praise. O let your hearts flutter with desire and joy, and make him a welcome guest.

SPEECHES AT THE TABLES.

SPEECH 1.

You have seen our commission and warrant, and we are come to our Redeemer's table; bread and wine are now set before us: but before they can be made use of, they must be solemnly set apart, and consecrated by prayer and thanksgiving, as our Saviour did. And that we may hold close to the institution, we, after our Saviour's example, first take the bread. And now let us join in our address to the King of heaven for the blessing thereon.

"Glorious Jehovah, we do here own ourselves, by Adam's fall, to be sunk in sin, and miserable heirs of wrath, slaves to Satan, and enemies to thee. Mountains of guilt and wrath lay heavy on us, the devils were waiting, and hell gaping for us, and none could help us in our misery: yea, we have still been going on in rebellion against thee since we were born, so that the hottest place in hell is our due. We have forfeited all happiness and favour; but, glory to free grace and redeeming love, that, though we have destroyed ourselves, in thee is our help; that God has found out a way for satisfying justice, and saving sinners, by the incarnation and death of his dear Son. Glory to God the Son, for undertaking to be our surety, and to leave his throne, to wade through a sea of wrath, a sea of blood, a sea of sufferings, yea, through hell, to save us from perishing. O the height, O the depth, breadth, and length, of the love of Christ, which passeth all knowledge. Glory to God, that hath both sent the news and offer of this glorious salvation to us, and by this sacrament hath set his bow in the clouds, as a token he will not drown us in the sea of wrath. O what would damned souls and fallen angels give for such a day as we have! Thou art raining manna on us, while thou art raining fire and brimstone on them. Glory to thee, this day, that we are not among pagans on earth, or the damned in hell. What shall we render to thee, O Lord, for all thy benefits? O Lord, we here profess before heaven and earth, angels and men, the hearty acquiescence of our souls in this wise and noble contrivance of redemption, and look to be saved by no other name than that of Jesus. Lord, we are content to take him as our Surety and Saviour, as offered; and to give up ourselves to him. Lord, come here and seal the covenant with us, poor lost sinners, and backsliding wretches. Lord, come to thine own table, and bless our provision. Sanctify these elements of bread and wine, (which thou took, blessed, and brake, and distributed to thy disciples,) that they may be the symbols of thy body and blood. O that we, in receiving them, may partake of Christ's body and blood, and share in all his benefits.

Lord, stamp and consecrate these creatures of bread and wine that they may be the means of conveying life and salvation to our souls. Lord, grant that this ordinance may be a glass to let us see the evil of sin, the terribleness of divine wrath, and the love of Christ, and the worth of our souls. Lord, let it be a knock to waken the sleepy, a spur to quicken the secure, a cordial to revive the faint, and food to strengthen the weak, physic to cure the sick, and a plaster to heal the wounded. Lord, bless the ordinance, and let wondrous changes be made on all. Let here the empty soul be filled, the starving creature fed, the poor beggar enriched, the hard heart softened, the cold heart inflamed, the dead soul quickened, the paralytic hand cured, the blind eye enlightened, the thirsty heart satisfied, the feeble knees strengthened, the straitened heart enlarged, the wandering heart fixed, the creeping desires elevated, the cloudy soul brightened, and the doubting soul resolved. Lord, let it be a blessed meal, let it prove life to our souls, death to our sins, strength to our graces, and poison to our lusts. Let here the smoking flax be kindled into a flame, and the bruised reed find support. Let our souls be hereby fortified and prepared for trials and sufferings for Christ. Let us be fitted and prepared for passing through the valley of the shadow of death. Lord, let us meet with Christ in this ordinance, otherwise it will be a heartless feast. O there will be no life among us, unless the Lord of life be present. Lord, what better will we be than a company of dead carcases about thy table without thee? Lord, come into our hearts, King of glory come in. We here throw out of doors all the nails, thorns, gall, and vinegar, that afflicted Christ. Lord, come in, and make a rid house, room for thyself. Had we ten thousand hearts, they were all too little. Lord, help us to plead the body and blood of Christ with thee. Lord, we are undone if thou mark iniquity, thou mayst justly send us from thy table to hell, or pour out a flood of curses upon us. Lord, we have no screen but Christ; we offer Christ to thee, and present thy beloved Son in whom thou art well pleased. O Lord, how shall such wretches as we dare to approach this holy table? We are dogs, how shall we presume to take the children's bread? We have been feeding on husks with the swine, how shall we presume to take the spiritual manna, this food of angels? We have trampled these pearls under our feet, and yet are they in our offer. O Lord, our fearful guiltiness makes us tremble to come, and yet it also makes us not dare to stay away; for whither shall the sick come but to the Physician, who has promised, that him that cometh, (be who he will,) thou wilt in no wise cast out? But, Lord, who so leprous and polluted as we? O will Christ come and feast with the like of us? Lord, we are not worthy or fit that thou shouldst come under the roof of the house of our hearts, it is so shattered, ruinous, and defiled. Thou hast not a fit place with us to lay thy head. But O thou, who didst not disdain to lie in a manger among beasts, and to be entertained in the house of Simon the leper, Lord, come into our souls, and there repair and prepare an upper room for thyself, that we may keep the passover with thee. Speak the word, and thy servant's heart shall be healed, cleansed, and made lively, soft, and pliable. Lord, clothe all the guests with the wedding-garment, and let them be accepted, that they do not eat and drink their own damnation, but that our pardon may be sealed, our weakness repaired, our wants supplied, our corruptions subdued, and our souls so inseparably united to thee, that neither temptations nor death may ever be able to dissolve the union. Lord, grant that in these holy mysteries we may not only commemorate, but effectually receive Christ and all his benefits. O let Christ's infinite love in dying on a cross for us, kindle in our frozen hearts that sacred fire of love to him that no waters may quench, no floods drown it, and such as may burn up all our lusts and idols."

SPEECH II.

O communicants, I would ask, Where are you? Ans. At the table of the Lord. Quest. What are you come for? what is your errand? O forget not this. Are you come to subscribe and seal a marriage-covenant with Christ, before the glorious Trinity and elect angels? Are ye come to join hands with him? O remember then, ye are just now upon the most awful and solemn transaction that ever passed betwixt God and the creature. And if ever you was in a concerned frame, now should be the time of it. Eternity depends on what ye are doing. O be as serious as if ye were just going to death and judgment; as if the trumpet were sounding, and your heart-strings breaking. O what would ye do, if God should cry from heaven just now, Rise, man or woman, come before my tribunal, and get your sentence? O what would ye do? Would not tears run down? Would not your groans pierce heaven? Would ye not say, Now if I want Christ's friendship, his blood to plead, I am lost and undone for ever? If I want faith, if I get not a sprinkling of Christ's blood for my pardon and paying my debt, I must presently go with the damned and devils, and be barred up in hell's prison. In such a case, what would be the sin ye would most bitterly bewail? would it be long slighting of Christ, giving the world his room, your forgetting eternity, and praying so seldom, and so formally? What mercy would you beg from God? Would it not be faith, an interest in Christ, pardon, evidence of grace, assurance of his love, a title to the kingdom? O would ye not cry, O that God would pardon me, and tell me that he hath pardoned my sins? O that he would take me into his covenant, and tell me that he is my covenanted God? O mourn and cry with the same earnestness now as if you were immediately to pass into eternity. Or what would ye do if God should cry, I will strike down every unworthy communicant with the bread in his mouth and the cup in his hand? I will make them monuments of my wrath where they sit. Would not every one cry, Lord, forbid I be the person? God save me from communicating unworthily. O sirs, if your hearts be dead, dull, and formal; if they be hard, carnal, wandering, filled with lusts, the nails that pierced Christ, ye will be unworthy, and so be guilty of Christ's blood, and eat and drink damnation. O say ye, How shall I be a worthy communicant? O cry to your graces, "Awake, O north wind, and come thou south, blow upon my garden," &c. Are your graces awake, are your hearts flaming with love? Are the arms of faith stretched wide out to clasp hard and fast about a crucified Redeemer? and are you willing and ready to throw yourselves into his open bleeding arms? Are you clear to make and close the bargain, to give and receive; and say, "My Beloved is mine, and I am his?" Let us put heaven's broad seal to the contract, before heaven and earth, angels and men, witnessing the same.

Bread given. Believing soul, I now deliver to thee the body of Christ; O now receive a broken Christ, and apply him by faith. Behold his wounds opened, and deep clefts made in the Rock of our salvation, to hide and shelter a pursued trembling dove, that had no place for the sole of her foot, either in heaven or earth, to rest upon. O poor dove, come into the ark, that the floods drown thee not: mercy has opened a window in the side of the ark, and is putting out a hand to pull thee in. O stay not out now, lest a wave of vengeance wash you from the sides thereof, and ye plunge in hell for ever.

Cup given. O see as the fountain runs, and follows poor sinners. O are ye not desirous to be bathed therein? O have ye no pollutions, no plagues, soul-diseases? Is there no blind or cripple here? weak hands, or feeble knees; no cold or hard hearts? Is there any doubting sinner here? O come, drink and bathe, and be made whole. Thou hast now a cure for all thy diseases and wants. O it is your own fault if ye miss a cure. O will ye not clasp about the Physician, when he is within reach of you; you will perhaps never be so near him again; keep fast hold, and quit him not: tell him all that is ill with you; table all your complaints before him: put up your requests: have ye no lusts that ye would have killed? no weak grace to be strengthened? Your King will not deny you any thing. Deep calleth unto deep, the depth of our misery for the depth of thy mercy. O now, communicants, ye have dedicated yourselves to the Lord; ye are now consecrated, as well as the elements were; ye are consecrated by Christ's body and blood, Christ has now taken infetment of your soul and body, as his consecrated temple, for his service and residence. O keep his temple clean. You know how Solomon consecrated the temple of Jerusalem. Think with yourselves, what if Solomon, after his solemn prayer, and God's taking infetment of it by the bright cloud, had driven in a herd of swine. O how provoking would this have been! So it is if ye bring a herd of swine, devils, and lusts, into Christ's temple. O watch against temptations; ye will meet with many, but may God's grace be sufficient for you.

SPEECH III.

O communicants, what brings you here? What came ye forth to see? I suppose some will answer with the Greeks that came up to worship at the temple, John xii. 21, "We would see Jesus." It is a good errand, I make you sincerely welcome. I give you an answer in Pilate's words, John xix. 5, "Behold the man." O here is a glass to let you see him. O behold a crucified Jesus, buffeted, scourged Jesus, a bleeding wounded Jesus; see him smitten and bruised for your iniquities. Behold the great gash and wide breach God made in his soul, and poured in a whole ocean of wrath upon him. He prays once, he prayed again, he prays a third time, till covered all over with his own blood in the garden. But for all this he must die; his enemies apprehend him, scourge him with iron chains, pierce his temples with thorns, bind a heavy cross upon his back; he bears till his strength is spent, and he faints under the burden of it, and another must help. O wonderful! he that upholds the universe, strengthens his people, overcomes his enemies, and doth valiantly, is now become so weak! O communicants, mourn and weep bitterly for the heavy cross ye laid on his back; your sins were the cursed load and dead weight. O behold how he bears till he faints, and at length must bow his head and give up the ghost. The storm was great, and this tall cedar must fall. Why? God broke him with breach upon breach, with one wave upon the back of another, until the whole sea billows of his wrath went over him; and your Lord was so mindful of you, O believing communicants, he would leave nothing for you to suffer. Had there been but one drop left in the cup for you, it would have poisoned and destroyed you all. O behold the man, this living and lovely Jesus. I doubt not but there are several sorts of eyes here: 1. Some carnal eyes, like the Jews, who beheld him, reviled and cried, Crucify him. Some like Herod and his men of war, who desired to see Christ; but when they saw him, they vilify and set him at nought. So I fear some of you think nothing of Christ when you see him, and are saying as Isa. liii, you see no beauty in him why he should be desired. O, see ye no love nor loveliness in Christ? then you should not be here; ye are unfit guests. 2. There are eyes of faith that some have opened to see his beauty and loveliness, and their eye affects their hearts, their souls are full of love and desire to him; ye are welcome ones. O behold him with an eye of faith; and there are many things ye may see in him; ye may see a flame of love to sinners in his breast. I remember it was a very pleasant reflection the Jews had on Christ's carriage at Lazarus's sepulchre, "He wept." And O, say they, "Behold how he loved him." Christ's tears were a sign of his love; and if it be so, how much more is the shedding his heart's blood, a sign of his love: O, may we not cry, behold how he loved us, in taking his body and blood to quench the raging flames that would devour us? O do ye see his heart panting with love, and his affection streaming out in blood? and are ye wondering, prizing, loving and adoring him for it, and saying, "Whom have I in heaven but thee?" Then this feast is appointed for you, and so receive Christ and all his purchase.

Bread given.—Now take hold of the covenant and embrace Christ in it. Accept of a bruised Lord, a bruised friend: open your hearts to him, as he opened his side to you. O keep him not at the door now, when he knocks with his nailed hands, and his cross upon his back, and saying to you, Look to my hands, my head, my feet; look to my wounded body and bruised soul; look to my bowels laid open; look into my panting heart; look what justice hath done, what thy sins and the devil have done; look what the Romans, Jews, and bloody butchers have done; look what my own disciples have done, one betrayed me, another denied me, and all the rest forsook me. And O, wilt thou not give me harbour in thy heart, when I am thus shamefully used for thee.

Cup given.—Will you see his blood shed? You are now upon mount Calvary, at the foot of the cross, near the wounds: he is saying, "Pray, believing soul, reach hither thy hand, feel the prints of the nails; yea, thrust into my pierced side, and feel my warm bleeding heart, and see if I love you not." Do it, and cry out with Thomas, "My Lord and my God;" and with Paul, "This is Christ, the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." O how shall I express my love to thee; O angels and saints bless him. O if ye now get faith's sight of him, there is another eye wherewith ye shall behold the man ere long, an eye of immediate vision. Thus the angels and saints see him, even as he is. O believer, it doth not appear now what he is; but ye shall one day see him as he is, and how mightily surprised will ye be with the sight? Ye will say, as the Queen of Sheba said of Solomon, "The half was not told me when in my own country." O long for this sight, and now live and walk as those who are daily looking for the coming of the Lord, and improve the present view for strengthening grace, and nourishing your soul. Elijah is twice awakened to take a double meal; so should you feed plentifully; ye know not what a journey ye have, and what storms ye must meet with; ye know not but the wind may blow to winnow the corn, and blow away the chaff. O flee to covenanting grace, to uphold and strengthen you in your pilgrimage through this wilderness, to the heavenly Canaan above, where the weary are at rest, and the wicked cease from troubling the just.

SPEECH IV.

O communicant, you are set down at the table of God, mind the place where you are is holy. O do as Moses did, when he saw the bush burning Exod. iii. 3. Turn aside and see this great sight, ye cannot see a greater. See the rock of your salvation smitten by the rod of justice; behold the spear piercing into his heart. O rock of ages, what made thee to rent and cleave so? O brightness of thy Father's glory, who hath thus disfigured thee? Alas! my sins are the tormentors, my pride, covetousness, lying, malice, swearing, &c. When he was smitten, it was I should have been pierced. Alas! for my hard heart and dry eyes, shall the rocks rend, and not I? I, the guilty criminal that should have suffered all! And shall I see my Saviour smitten, and not mourn? Shall I see his heart streaming with blood, and my eyes not stream with tears? O cursed sin! and O hard heart! that will not break nor kindle into a flame of love to Christ. O take a view of what he has done; he has quenched the flames of hell for you, stopt the lion's mouth, pulled out the serpent's sting, silenced the claim of the law, paid your debt, delivered you out of prison. O see that promise made by Jehovah to the Mediator, Zech. ix. 11, "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant, I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water." O communicant, do you think this promise is yet accomplished in you, or not? Have you got the blood of the covenant applied to you, to draw you out of the pit, which is a state of nature, wrath, and damnation? O, if ye be not drawn out, if ye have not laid hold on the Lord of free grace, and on the blood of the covenant, ye are not fit to be here. O but, say ye, how shall we know if we be these prisoners that are brought out of the pit? 1. Wast thou ever a prisoner in thy own eyes? Did you ever feel your bonds, and was weary of your slavery? 2. Did you ever experience a strong power, determining you to shake off the yoke of sin, and take on Christ's yoke? 3. Did ye ever give longing looks to Christ through your prison-gates for relief? Did you cry, who will deliver me? 4. Is your deliverance precious to you? Do you highly value the blood of sprinkling, that has opened the prison-doors. 5. Did you ever embrace and lay hold on your deliverer by the arms of faith? 6. Did you ever devote yourselves to him and his service and obedience, upon the loosing of your bonds? as Psal. cxvi. 16, 17. 7. Do ye sing the praises of your Deliverer? 8. Are ye willing to suffer outward captivity and bondage for him? 9. Do ye long for an eternal and complete deliverance from captivity?

SPEECH V.

O communicants, bless God that has set you down at his table; bless him for a covenant of grace, and bless him for this seal of it. O be glad and rejoice to see the rainbow in the clouds, which was a sign of his covenant and promise to secure the world against a destructive deluge. O shall we not joy to see the sign of God confirming his covenant? If it still rained, and a rainbow never appeared, we might have reason to fear. So if we never saw this ordinance and seal, we might have reason to be afraid. Well, you see God is willing to keep covenant, there is the rainbow appearing, are you willing to enter into covenant, or renew covenant, and take hold of the Mediator and Surety of it? Are your souls burning with desire to seal the covenant, and to get Christ in your arms like old Simeon? What hinders our concluding this bargain? O young communicants, this is the day of your espousals to the Lord Jesus; now are ye to join hands, and to be married to him. O happy day! O stretch out the hand of faith to him, and say, even so I take him, "my Lord and my God. My beloved is mine and I am his." O let the marriage knot be cast sure, that death may not dissolve it. O the Bridegroom is ready, and waiting for your hearty consent, and if ye grant it, it will be a day of the gladness of his heart; yea there will be gladness in heaven for it. I hope there are some sinners saying with Rebekah, when they called her to know her mind, with respect to her match with Isaac, Gen. xxiv. 58, "And they called, and said unto her, Wilt thou go with this man? And she said, I will go." If ye be willing to go with him, then he is willing to take you; and in token of his willingness and faithfulness, here he has sent you his seal from heaven, whereon is written LOVE. Come, take the seal, and Christ with it.

Bread given. Heaven and earth, angels and men, are witnesses, the subscribers to this marriage-contract, and sealing this bargain. O, with this bread receive a broken Christ, and open your hearts to your bruised friend, that met with all this for you. O here is brave food, excellent nourishment; here bread that strengthens man's heart. Bread is called the staff of life: this is indeed the staff of life; a staff that supports you, a staff that will defend you, a staff that will beat your enemies, if eaten by faith; it will be life to your souls, and poison to your lusts; yea it will rout them, and put them all to the flight. Cry with these, John vi. 34, "Lord, evermore give us this bread." I mind a strange dream that one of the Midianitish host had, Judges vii. 13, when God was coming on them, "Behold a cake of barley bread came tumbling into the host of Midian, and smote a tent." Strange! a piece of bread overturn a tent! Lo! hear this dream interpreted in this sacrament; here a piece of bread, if eaten by faith, that will tumble into the host of thy enemies, strike down all their tents, and put them to flight. Surely a sight by faith of Christ's body, pierced and nailed by sin, will turn a believer's heart against it; let sin flatter as it will, he will never forget what it has done to his dear Saviour. O believers, will ye have any further evidence of Christ's love? Well, here is his blood. "In like manner, after supper, he took the cup, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood, drink ye all of it."

Cup given. O behold the water of life run and follow poor sinners. O believers, come and drink, and live for evermore. O is not this a rare feast? Be busy while you have it. O now be applying Christ's blood for strengthening weak graces, killing strong lusts, curing diseases, removing plagues. Ye have a wilderness to go through and know not what trials are before you. Would you have strength for your journey, and preparation for your suffering and trials? O here you may have it. Here is food more substantial, durable, and nourishing than Elijah's cake baked on the coals, and his cruse of water, who went in the strength of it forty days and forty nights, till he came to Horeb the mount of God, of which see 1 Kings xix. 6, 8. Elijah was twice awakened there to take a double meal. So should ye feed plentifully; ye know not if ye get another feast like this, till ye come to the mount of God above; and ye know not what winds and storms may blow by the way. A feast time is a time granting requests. Have you nothing to table before Christ at this feast? See what Ahasuerus said to Esther at the banquet of wine, Esther v. 3, "What wilt thou, Queen Esther? and what is thy request, it shall be given thee?" Have ye no lust to kill, nor grace to cherish. O table your complaints, your wants, before Christ. Seek a cast of grace for your own friends, and a cast of power to this corner of the land, and relief to the poor churches abroad, that want such a covered table. Mind the afflictions of Joseph: O put up a groan for Zion, "Lord, wilt thou yet arise, and have mercy on Zion? pity her rubbish, and favour her stones."

O young communicants, mind what you have been doing; you have ratified your baptismal vows; ye are Christians by your own consent. It has been put to your own choice whom you will serve. And ye have said, nay, but we will serve the Lord. Ye have given up your names to Christ, and enlisted yourselves under his banner. O it is a sweet banner, a love banner. O desert not your Captain, draw not back. Tell Satan and sin, when they tempt you, that you have changed masters; you are no more what you was, you have opened your mouth to the Lord, and you cannot go back. You cannot swear, get drunk, lie, break the sabbath, neglect prayer. No, that is the devil's drudgery, you have chosen a new master. O communicants, you have the sweetest work, the greatest wages, and the best of masters. O lean on his strength, and plead for covenanted grace to bear you up through the wilderness, that at last you may enter the promised land, and receive the reward of inheritance.

SPEECH VI.

Christ has undertaken a long journey to purchase salvation to you, dear hath it cost him, and now he hath brought it to your door. Can you refuse him? O is he knocking at my door? 1. Whose door is it? That of a poor nasty beggar, as full of filthy ulcers and boils as Lazarus's body was, whose sores the dogs licked, or Job's body when he sat in ashes and scraped himself. O is he come to his mortal enemy, who hates him, and has lodged traitors in his room? yea a mean creature, a worm, a moth, a grasshopper, worth nothing, and worse than nothing; poor, deformed, hated of all, rebels, and Satan's slaves?

2. Who is it that stands and knocks? The King of glory, the Sun of righteousness, and brightness of his Father's glory, who is infinitely happy, self-sufficient, and needs us not; has all power in heaven and earth, has the keys of hell and death, in comparison of whom the sun is a lump of darkness, the heavens are but a span, and the inhabitants are but as grasshoppers. A word, a look from him, could send us to nothing or hell.

3. What doth he offer? He offers his precious blood; his blood that is more than crowns; his blood, and all the purchase of it. It answers all thy complaints and grievances. Is wrath kindled against thee? My blood shall quench it. Is justice incensed? My blood shall pacify it. Is heaven shut against thee? My blood shall open it. Is conscience a terror to thee? My blood shall sprinkle and speak peace to it. Fearest thou any thing? My blood shall secure thee. Wantest thou any thing? My blood shall procure it for thee. Yea, if his blood be not enough, he offers himself to thee, and that is more than ten thousand worlds, to be thine in covenant; thy God, thy Friend, thy Husband, thy Jesus, thy Saviour, thy Christ, thy King, thy Prince, thy Physician, thy Shepherd, thy Captain, thy Cautioner, thine Advocate. Art thou poor? The owner of heaven and earth will enrich thee. Art thou despicable? The King of glory will be thine to honour thee. Art thou deformed? The Sun of righteousness will be thine to beautify thee. Art thou distressed? He will be thy Redeemer to relieve thee. Art thou weak? The Lord of hosts will be thine to strengthen thee. Art thou diseased? The great Physician will be thine to cure thee. Art thou disconsolate? The God of all consolation will be thine to comfort thee. Art thou in darkness? The bright Morning Star will be thine to enlighten thee. Art thou miserable? The fountain of bliss will be thine to make thee happy. Art thou dead? The fountain of life will enliven thee. Thou shalt not only be his servant, but thou shalt be his son; not only sit at his table, but sit on his throne.

4. How offers he himself? With great patience and long-suffering. Some shift him, and others deny him, and yet he stands and knocks. How wonderful! he that has a throne of glory to sit on, to stand at your door; he to whom angels and saints bow their knees, and cast down their crowns; to stand at your door, and you sitting in Satan's seat, yea, lying in the bosom of your lusts, and sleeping securely in the ways of sin: yea, standing without, while lusts and Christ's enemies are welcomed in: standing at the door, while Satan has the best room: yea, standing after many repulses and affronts, till his locks be wet with dew. Wonder at Christ's patience, that he fires not the house about your ears! 1. Mind he is standing on his feet, ready to depart. 2. He is standing with great compassion. He lifted up his voice and wept over obstinate Jerusalem, bewailing their unkindness to him, and cruelty to their own souls, Luke xix. 41. O if one should have asked Christ as he did the woman, John xx. 15, "Blessed Lord, what seekest thou? Why weepest thou?" He might possibly have answered, "I seek not myself, I weep not for myself, I shall be infinitely and eternally glorious, though sinners be not gathered; but this is my grief, that sinners will rather cast themselves into hell, than into my arms, and rather part with me than part with their lusts; it is bitter to me, because I see it will be more bitter to them in the end. I weep, because it will cost them weeping and gnashing of teeth for ever." 3. He offers importunately and stoops, as it were, on his knee, to beseech and entreat them to accept of pardon, salvation, and happiness, 2 Cor. v. 20. He repeats his entreaties, Luke xiii. 54, "How often would I have gathered thy children, and ye would not?" He is loth finally to give us up, he knows not how to do it. Hos. xi. 8, "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? How shall I deliver thee, Israel? How shall I make thee as Admah? How shall I set thee as Zeboim? Mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together."

5. Consider the danger of not opening to Christ: (1.) Till then ye are shut up in darkness, the next room to hell. (2.) Till then the heart is in possession of Satan. (3.) The wrath of God is shut in, the house is on fire, and Christ shut out, who only can quench it. (4.) If you open not to Christ now, he will shut you out hereafter.

6. Consider the advantage of opening to Christ. He will come in, for what end? (1.) To marry thee. (2.) To express his love to thee. (3.) To shine in the soul; the soul is but a dark dungeon, while Christ is shut out. (4.) To adorn the soul; leathsome is thy soul while Christ is shut out.

(5.) To enrich the soul; Christ comes not empty handed; for "length of days is in his right hand, and in his left hand riches and honour," Prov. iii. 16. He would come in to pour out his treasures into the sinner's bosom; and his treasures are better than riches, and all the things that may be desired, are not to be compared to them. (6.) To reign in the soul, to erect his throne there, and expel the tyrants who have so long oppressed the soul with cruel bondage. (7.) To abide there, and dwell with thee for ever. (8.) To feast with thee; and behold he brings his entertainment along with him.

7. Consider what a feast it is that Christ provides for his guests; it is not ordinary fare, it is not only satisfying, but creates appetite; it not only preserves life where it is, but begets it where it is not; it is hidden manna, angels' food, bread from heaven, even the fruit of the tree of life, that grows in the midst of the paradise of God. This tree is himself, he that eats of it shall never die spiritually nor eternally. He is also the water of life, if ye get but a drop of it, it shall prove an everlasting spring in your soul, you need not thirst after creature comforts nor carnal refreshments. You shall get the grapes of Canaan, the fruits that grow in the land of promise. Behold clusters of these grapes at this table. Indeed they are hidden manna to natural persons, strangers intermeddle not with their joy, Rev. ii. 17. Here the earnest of the Spirit, the peace of God, the riches of assurance, that joy that is unspeakable and full of glory, the hidden manna and water of life; and these enjoyments differ but in degree from heaven. You are now set at the table with Christ. O what saith Mephibosheth of such a Saviour, 2 Sam. ix. 8, "And he bowed himself, and said, What is thy servant, that thou shouldst look on such a dead dog as I am?" O what blessed intimacy and familiarity does Christ allow his people, like his beloved disciple, John xv. 23. You may lay your head on Christ's bosom.

8. Make Christ welcome into your soul, rejoice in him, as Hannah did, 1 Sam. xi. 1, "Mine heart rejoiceth in the Lord, mine horn is exalted in the Lord, my mouth is enlarged over mine enemies, because I rejoice in thy salvation." O entertain Christ with that which he loves, (1.) With a humble heart. O these that are vile in their own eyes, shall be exalted. (2.) With a broken heart: a heart broken from sin, and broken for sin, a heart that melts and bleeds when it remembers how it has wounded and dishonoured Christ. A heart stony, insensible, and hard against the word, is an abomination to God. (3.) With a loving heart. (4.) With a sincere heart, Psal. li. 6, Christ loves not a divided heart.

9. Let him have good attendance, be not careless nor disrespectful of him, depart not from his presence, wander not after others, let him always have your company, lest he depart from you. Let your mind be with him, your thoughts be of him, your inclinations towards him, your affections on him, as the most lovely, desirable, and delightful object. Walk with him in your daily converse, and entertain sweet thoughts of sweet Jesus. O give him your heart.

O communicants, ye are to say, I am the Lord's, and to subscribe this with your hand. O see that ye put on Christ. O that God would give commission now to take off your filthy garments, and give you change of raiment. Are ye returning prodigals, that were once lost, and now are found? O then the best robe will be brought forth to you. O there is great entertainment here, not only the wedding-garment, but the fatted calf killed; also a ring to your finger, which is the manifestation of his love; he will put it on your finger, and ye may look to it when he is absent from you. Not only so, but there are shoes brought forth, the preparation of the gospel of peace, ye know not what rough steps ye have to go through; and not only so, but you shall have the whole armour of God, the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, that ye may be able to stand in the evil day, and quench all the fiery darts of the wicked.

SPEECH VII.

O communicant, thou art now come to the communion-table, I would ask thee, Hast thou a communion-frame? And you will readily say, What is that frame? I answer, 1. It is a humble frame. 2. A wondering frame. 3. A believing frame, assenting to the truth of the gospel, looking to Christ crucified for healing, fleeing to Christ's wounds for shelter, washing in his blood for cleansing, pleading his blood for pardon, and sitting down under his shadow. 4. A mourning penitential frame, for piercing Christ by your sins, and especially those against light. 5. A covenanting frame, firmly resolving to take hold of the covenant of free grace. Quest. What is a true covenanting frame? Ans. 1. Are ye grieved for long distance and estrangement from Christ, and for long slighting his calls and offers, and for preferring Satan's drudgery to Christ's service? 2. Have ye got a discovery of your sinking perishing state, while on the bottom of the covenant of works, and resting on self-righteousness; and seen an absolute need of a borrowed righteousness; and that this is the only foundation of your hope? Have ye fled from the one bottom to the other? 3. Are ye sensible of your treacherous dealing in the matter of your baptismal covenant, and that ye have left Christ's colours, and gone over to the devil's camp? 4. Are ye now come to an open rupture with all God's enemies? 5. Do ye now accept of Christ in all his offices? Do ye accept of the propitiation and atonement set forth, as the only ground of your justification, pardon, and acceptance? 6. Do ye come to give up yourselves to the Lord, all that you are and have? 7. Are ye come to engage in Christ's strength, to walk in newness of life all your days? Well, if this be the disposition of your soul, you may assure yourself that you are coming to the table of the Lord in a right covenanting frame.

I put it to thy choice, O communicant, O young man, young woman, as Joshua did to the children of Israel, "Choose you this day whom you will serve." Choose ye whom ye will take for your master, Christ or the devil, and whose disciples ye will be. Both are courting your hearts, which of them will ye yield to? Lay your hands to your hearts, and consider whether you will grant Christ's or the devil's desire? Whether shall the devil have you, soul and body, to all eternity; or shall Christ have you? O, are there any here so foolish or mad as to halt betwixt two opinions in this case? any so mad as to stand in doubt, or hesitate whether to dwell with Christ or the devil for ever? whether to sing hallelujahs to the Lamb, or roar with the devils for ever? Now Michael and his angels, and the dragon and his angels, are fighting about your hearts. A cunning devil is holding, and a dying Saviour is drawing. Which of them do you incline to? The eyes of God and Christ are on you, the eyes of men and angels are on you, to see what will be the issue. O precious souls, never-dying souls, I summon you to yield up to Christ; open the doors, lift up the gates of your hearts to the King of glory, who is ready to enter; open your mouths wide, and Christ is ready to fill them.

SPEECH AFTER THE TABLES.

I SHALL address myself to several sorts of persons. 1. To those who have slighted the ordinance, and Christ's dying charge. Consider what ye have done, ye have slighted the blood of sprinkling, and despised the richest and choicest feast in the world; ye have been a grief to Christ's heart, and ye have given him cause to lament over you, as over poor Jerusalem, Luke xix. 41. You have lost an excellent opportunity. It may be you will never see another communion again, nor ever get another call or knock like this again. And ye may fear he pass that sentence on you, Hos. iv. 17. "Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone—He that is filthy, let him be filthy still;" and that he say unto you, as to his drowsy disciples, "Sleep on." The gospel shall enter into your ear, but never into your heart. Well, you have refused this call, but there is another call you shall not be able to refuse. O but, say some, we are not prepared for it. Ans. Neither are ye prepared for dying; and will ye wilfully go on in sin, and make your sin your excuse? O, say they, it is dangerous to come unworthily. But is there no danger in staying away? Consider that threatening, Zech. xiv. 16—19, against contemnors of the feast of tabernacles, that is, gospel-feasts.

2. To those who, I fear, have been profaning the ordinance, and wounding Christ by unworthy communicating; who have been pretending to join in covenant with God, while they are fast in league with the devil and the world. O your guilt is greater than ever it was; you have added this to the former, you have been drawing down more plagues on your head. O mourn and repent for piercing Christ. Can ye weep for the loss of worldly goods and enjoyments, and not weep for the loss of your soul, and your Saviour? O, flee straight to that blood which ye shed, and plead mercy for the sake of it.

3. To those discouraged souls who came to the table, but are saying, Alas, I was not taken into the banqueting-house; I have not met with Jesus, as I expected. Ans. 1. Blame not Christ for it, but yourselves. He is, perhaps, chastising you for some secret sins which ye are not humbled for. You have been either defective in preparation, or have slighted former calls. For these reasons he now hides himself, that you may seek him more earnestly. O lie still at his feet, and say, I will not go away, I will not let thee go till thou bless me. Hast thou but one blessing, O my Father? nay, thou hast many. 2. Wait on all the after diets, the banqueting house is not yet shut, your feast may be coming this evening, or to-morrow; or ye may find the advantage of this feast some days hereafter. 3. You may be mistaken, and say ye have not got an alms, when ye have really got it. Do not think ye get nothing but when ye get sensible joy, peace, and smiles of his face. Have ye got a greater sight of the evil of sin than ye had? Have ye got any more sorrow for it? Any more esteem of Christ, or hunger after him? Can ye say, when ye came to the table, I was very dead, and had but little sense of my wants, but I came away hungry and pained for my want? Then it is a good sign; a fill of hunger and thirst is excellent communion cheer. The Lord bless that hunger. O that ye may never be at rest, till ye get a fill. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."

4. To those who have been taken into the banqueting-house, have got a Benjamin's meal, a sight of Christ, and tasted that the Lord is gracious, a word to you. Wonder at God's kindness in treating an enemy and child of Satan so. Bless God for it, that he hath visited you, and taken you in, when others were kept at the door. Endeavour to keep what ye have gotten, walk humbly, watch against Satan and the world, that will seek to rob you. O go to Christ, to be surety for you, and beg that your hearts cool not, that ye fall not into a dull and sleepy frame. Be putting in a good word for others that have not got your length, be filled with compassion for them; and be inviting and encouraging strangers to come to Christ, by saying, "Come, taste and see that the Lord is good." Sit not down satisfied in what ye have got, but be longing for heaven, where the full feast is; these are but the first-fruits and foretastes. Ye must work for Christ in the strength of this feast. Go on in duty more vigorously, in strength of this meal; be more active in his service, and fight more courageously.

Remember, all of you that have been at the table, the vows of God are upon you; you have entered into an oath and curse to walk in God's way, as in Neh. x. 29. You have all sworn allegiance to the King of heaven, over the broken body and shed blood of Christ; so that if ye perjure yourselves, you will incur all the curses of the law, and vengeance of the gospel also. If ye return to your ways, and say, Welcome, drunken cups, bloody oaths, lying, backbiting, neglect of prayer, &c. O ye will sink deeper in hell than many others; you will bring the curse of God and the Lamb upon you; it will make you say, Would to God I had been the Son of a pagan. O when will ye mind your vows, and walk worthy of the Lord? Let there be such a shining brightness in your life and conversation, that all may take knowledge of you, that ye have been with Jesus. Remember ye have covenanted against swearing, drunkenness, Sabbath-breaking, neglect of prayer and family worship. Remember your engagements to prayer. Mind, the eyes of men and devils are upon you, and that more is expected from you than from others; and that if you join hands again with the wicked, you will thereby harden them the more in their sinful courses.

I would recommend to all of you to remember the sights ye have seen this day of the love of Christ, that passeth knowledge. And the influence it should have on you is to think, How shall I requite it? The question that all of you should be putting up to God at this time, on the back of a communion, is that, Psal. cxi. 12, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits towards me?" How shall I walk suitable to this love? O I am jealous I be unthankful. O base wretch, wilt thou forget his goodness? O what shall I render unto the Lord? I have David's answer and resolves to that question in that psalm, which I hope are yours. What saith David?

1. He saith, ver. 1, "I will love the Lord, because he hath heard my voice and my supplication." The world and sin shall never have my love any more. "Whom have I in heaven but thee?"

2. "Return unto God as your rest," ver. 7. O let your souls centre in God as your portion and rest: be well satisfied and contented herewith.

3. Resolve to "walk before God in the land of the living," ver. 9. Quickened your soul to the performance of every known duty, and abstain from every known sin. Walk always under the sense of divine omniscience.

4. Resolve to "call upon the name of the Lord," ver. 13. As soon as ye can get occasion, O retire for solemn prayer, and continue in prayer. O what shall we pray for now? Can God give any more than what he hath given in the sacrament? Ans. Pray that God may fulfil all the promises, and bestow all the privileges and blessings he hath sealed to you in this ordinance. So does David, 1 Chron. xvii. 23, "Now, therefore, Lord, let the things that thou hast spoken concerning thy servant, and concerning his house, be established for ever, and do as thou hast said." Also pray that God would enable you to keep your promise to God, and keep the sense of your vows and obligations on your spirits, and preserve your present frame, motions, and resolutions, as David prays, 1 Chron. xxix. 18, "O Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel our fathers, keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people." Satan has a design upon you; you had need to pray.

5. Tender yourselves wholly to God, as his servants, ver. 6, "O Lord, truly I am thy servant." He repeats, "I am thy servant;" I give up myself, soul, body, time, strength, talents, means, &c. all to serve thee.

6. Offer "the sacrifice of thanksgiving," ver. 17. Say with David to your soul, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name." (1.) Admire God's condescension to thee who art a worm, that he should give thee angels' food; and though thou art a vile worm, that should be sent to hell with devils, art yet set at the table with his children. (2.) Let the high praises of God be in your mouths, as Deut. viii. 10, "When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God for the good land which he hath given thee." Allude to it, bless him for a Goshen on earth, that ye have a land of light, and valley of vision to dwell in, and bless him for the prospect of a Canaan above. The song above is, "To him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his blood," Rev. i. 5. O begin this song here. (3.) Be encouraged to go on cheerfully in your Christian course, and go about all duties with pleasure.

7. Pay your vows, as in ver. 18. Ye have vowed against swearing, drinking, sabbath-breaking, neglect of prayer, &c.; dishonour not God, by proving perfidious to him.

8. Set the Lord always before you as your Judge, your Pattern, your Witness, and your Portion, Psal. xvi. 8.

9. Watch against Satan's wiles and temptations.

10. Long for heaven, to be with Christ.

11. Guard against divisions, love one another as brethren, and banish malice. Mind Christ praying on the cross for his enemies.

12. Be more charitable to the poor.

THE

YOUNG COMMUNICANT'S CATECHISM.

Q. In what estate was you born?

A. In a woeful miserable estate, wanting the image and favour of God which man at first had; and a sinful nature, prone to what is evil, backward to what is good, and exposed to the wrath of God both here and hereafter.

Q. How came you to be born in this estate?

A. Because of my descent from sinful Adam, who fell from his happiness, by breaking covenant with God, and incurring the penalty thereof; whereby he lost all his grace, and was wholly unable to recover himself.

Q. Is fallen man left without hope in this miserable estate?

A. No; there is a noble remedy provided: for though the old covenant be broken and dissolved, there is an excellent new covenant contrived, yea, revealed and tendered unto lost sinners of mankind.

CONCERNING THE TWO COVENANTS.

Q. What are these covenants which God hath made with man?

A. The covenant of works and the covenant of grace.

Q. By which of these two covenants is it that you can be saved?

A. Only by the covenant of grace which is called the new covenant.

Q. What is the covenant of works?

A. It is God's agreement with Adam and Eve, wherein he promised them life upon their perfect obedience to his laws, and threatened death upon their disobedience.

Q. Why cannot you be saved by the covenant of works?

A. Because I am neither able to fulfil the condition, nor lie under the penalty of it; that is, I can neither give perfect obedience to God's law, nor bear his wrath which is due for breaking it.

Q. What is the covenant of grace by which you are to be saved?

A. It is God's gracious paction with elect sinners in Christ, in which he is pleased mercifully to offer and promise salvation to all poor fallen sinners of Adam's race who believe in his Son Jesus Christ.

Q. Who are these that truly believe in him?

A. They are such who being made sensible of their lost estate, are content to receive Jesus Christ as their Surety and Saviour, and to depend upon his righteousness and satisfaction to divine justice, as the only ground of their justification before God, and are resolved, in his strength, to show forth their faith by a sincere love and obedience to God.

Q. Why is this new covenant called a covenant of grace?

A. To distinguish it from the covenant of works, wherein the ground of man's justification is something done by a Surety in his room: and also because the Surety himself and all the blessings of this covenant are most gracious and free gifts bestowed by God upon deserving and ill-deserving creatures, who could do nothing to obtain them.

Q. How can this covenant be altogether of grace, when faith is required of us as the condition to interest us in the blessings of it, and likewise good works to show forth our faith?

A. Though both these be required of us, yet the grace for producing that faith and those works is promised to us in this covenant as freely as any other blessing in it; upon which account this covenant is called in scripture a testament.

Q. Why is this covenant called a testament?

A. Because all the blessings and good things promised therein, are freely bequeathed and made over to the elect as legacies left and made sure to them by the death of Jesus Christ the Testator: and also, in it there is grace left them to perform all the duties required of them.

Q. What are the principal legacies of this testament?

A. Pardon of sin, deliverance from wrath, peace with God, all the graces of the Spirit, with perseverance therein to the end; safety through death, resurrection to life, and eternal glory.

Q. How is it that this covenant or testament is established and confirmed to us?

A. By the death and blood of Jesus Christ the Mediator and Testator of it; and by the outward signs and seals which he hath instituted to be dispensed to us, with the preaching of the gospel.

CONCERNING THE SEALS OF THE COVENANT.

Q. What are the seals of the covenant of grace?

A. The two sacraments, baptism and the Lord's supper.

Q. For what end hath God appointed these sacraments or seals?

A. To be sacred signs, memorials, and pledges of his mercy to us through a crucified Jesus, he being the great Surety and sacrifice to which we are appointed constantly to look for pardon, grace, and glory.

Q. Why are baptism and the Lord's supper called seals of the covenant of grace?

A. Because, like sealed charters, they confirm and assure us of the certainty of the covenant, and all its promised blessings; and particularly, that God is willing in and through Christ to be a God to us, and to take us for his people.

Q. What is baptism?

A. It is the sacred washing or sprinkling with water in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

Q. What doth the sprinkling signify?

A. The cleansing of our souls from sin by Christ's blood and Spirit, and our entering in among the disciples and followers of Christ.

Q. Why are you baptized in the name of the Father?

A. In testimony of my choosing and owning God the Father, as my Father and great contriver of the gospel-method of salvation through Christ.

Q. Why are you baptized in the name of the Son?

A. In token of my choosing and accepting of the Son of God as my great Redeemer and Saviour in all his offices, Prophet, Priest, and King.

Q. Why is he especially styled our Saviour?

A. Because of the eminent hand he hath in the salvation we look for; he preached it to us as our great Prophet, he procured it for us as our high Priest, bestows it on us as our Lord and King.

Q. Why are you baptized in the name of the Holy Ghost?

A. In testimony of my owning and accepting of the Holy Ghost as my sanctifier, and the great applier of Christ's purchase to me, whose office is to work saving faith and all grace in the elect.

Q. What engagement have you come under by your baptism?

A. To believe and obey the Holy Trinity, and to renounce the three great enemies thereof, namely, the devil, the world, and the flesh; and to live as a Christian indeed, always remembering the name by which I am called.

Q. How is it that a Christian or baptized person ought to live?

A. As one that is solemnly consecrated to the faith and obedience of the Holy Trinity; and particularly, as one that is washed in the blood of the Lamb, who will not again adventure to defile himself with sin, but will study to make Christ his pattern.

Q. Are you not bound to renew your baptismal engagements, and to take them upon yourself?

A. Yes, I am, and I do it expressly, when I go to take the second seal of the covenant, and partake of the Lord's supper.

Q. What is the difference betwixt baptism and the Lord's supper?

A. The first is to be administered to us but once, but the second often: the first signifies our spiritual birth, the second our spiritual nourishment; baptism is the door of Christ's house by which we must enter, but the Lord's supper is the table at which Christ's children must feed and get strength.

Q. What should be your great design in attending and partaking of these sacraments?

A. That thereby I may show my regard and obedience to the Author of them, and that I may find a crucified Jesus in them, and get myself assured of his love and purchase.

CONCERNING THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Q. What is the Lord's supper?

A. It is a religious eating of bread, and drinking of wine, according to Christ's institution and example, in remembrance of his death and sufferings for us.

Q. When did Christ institute this sacrament?

A. In the same night wherein he was betrayed, and immediately after he had eaten the Jewish passover with his disciples.

Q. Why did he institute it at that time?

A. To show that the passover was abrogated by this new ordinance, and the Lord's supper came in its room; and also to lay all his people under the stronger obligations to observe and attend it.

Q. Why doth the time of the institution lay us under such obligations to observe it?

A. Because the command and directions which he gave us at that time, are to be regarded as the solemn dying charge of a crucified Jesus, who was going to do more for us than all the world could do.

Q. Did Christ enjoin this ordinance as any task or burden on his people?

A. Not at all, but left it as a rare privilege and a precious legacy to the church, seeing it is a bright memorial of his dying love, a sure pledge of his second coming, and a quickener of all the graces.

Q. What are the elements or signs appointed in this sacrament?

A. Bread and wine.

Q. What do they represent unto us?

A. Christ's body and blood, with all the benefits and blessings thereby purchased to us.

Q. What is signified by the breaking of bread, and pouring of the wine?

A. All Christ's sufferings, and particularly the breaking and wounding of his body on the cross, and the shedding of his blood, to take away our sins.

Q. What is signified by giving the broken bread and poured out wine to the communicants?

A. God's actual making over and giving a crucified Christ, with all the benefits of his purchase, to believing partakers.

Q. What are these benefits here made over and sealed unto them?

A. Remission of sin, freedom from wrath, peace with God, peace of conscience, adoption into God's family, increase of grace, perseverance therein, sanctified mercies and crosses, and a title to eternal life.

Q. What is signified by communicants taking the bread and cup in their hand?

A. Their putting forth the hand of faith to receive a crucified Christ for their Saviour in all his offices, and with all his benefits, as offered to them in the gospel.

Q. In what manner ought you to receive a crucified Christ at his table?

A. With much humility, self-denial, thankfulness, and with close and particular application of his offices and fulness to my soul's necessities.

Q. What is signified by communicants eating of the bread and drinking of the wine?

A. Their near union with Christ, their actual partaking of the benefits of his death, the great satisfaction they have in him, and the spiritual strength and nourishment they get from him.

Q. Why ought communicants to partake of the cup, as well as of the bread?

A. For the more full confirmation of their faith, and because Christ said to his disciples, "Drink ye all of it."

Q. Why did Christ make choice of bread and wine as the symbols of his body and blood?

A. To hold forth their refreshing and strengthening virtue to believing communicants; for, as bread strengthens man's heart, so wine makes it glad.

Q. What were Christ's words when he instituted the sacraments?

A. He spoke something concerning the bread, something concerning the cup, and something concerning the whole sacrament.

Q. What spoke he concerning the bread?

A. He said, Take, eat, this is my body which is broken for you, this do in remembrance of me.

Q. What said he concerning the wine?

A. This cup is the New Testament in my blood, which is shed for many, for the remission of sins.

Q. What said he concerning the whole sacrament?

A. He said, As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come.

Q. Do we partake of Christ's body and blood here in a carnal manner?

A. No; but only in a spiritual way.

Q. What is the meaning of these words, Take, eat, this is my body broken for you?

A. The plain meaning is, that the broken bread signifies and represents Christ's body as it was broken and bruised for his people.

Q. Is not Christ really present in the sacrament?

A. Yes, he is so; but yet he is not bodily but spiritually present there.

Q. How is it we partake spiritually of Christ's broken body?

A. We do it when our souls do share of the benefits and fruits of his broken body, such as pardon of sin, increase of grace, access to God, spiritual discoveries, loosing of bands, and the like.

Q. How long did Christ intend his sacraments should continue?

A. Until his coming.

Q. Why no longer?

A. Because in heaven there will be no need of sacraments to represent Christ, he being always present there in a bodily way.

SOMETHING MORE PARTICULARLY OF THE NATURE AND ENDS OF THE HOLY SUPPER.

Q. What further account can you give of the nature and design of this sacrament?

A. It doth evidently partake of the nature of a seal, of a feast and also of an oath.

Q. What hath it of the nature of a seal?

A. It is justly called a seal of the covenant of grace; because like a sealed charter put into our hands, it makes over, seals, and confirms to us, a right and title to all the benefits and fruits of Christ's purchase, which are therein promised to believers.

Q. What kind of a seal is this sacrament?

A. It is a spiritual seal, and of great value, seeing it is a seal of Christ's own devising and engraving, whose inscription is, Christ loving us; and whose image is, Christ dying for us.

Q. What hath this sacrament in it of the nature of a feast?

A. It is justly called a feast, as it brings food, nourishment, and delight to the souls of worthy communicants, the invited guests.

Q. What sort of a feast is it?

A. It is a spiritual feast, a marriage feast, a feast upon the sacrifice of the Son of God; a feast of Christ's making, of a strange nature, in which Christ is both master and matter of the feast, the provider and provision, the feeder and the food; for his flesh is meat indeed, and his blood is drink indeed.

Q. In what respect is this sacrament of the nature of an oath?

A. In respect the word sacrament was used among the Romans, from whence it is borrowed for a military oath, whereby they bound themselves to be true and faithful soldiers to their general; so in this ordinance we in effect swear allegiance to the King of heaven over the broken body and shed blood of the Son of God, and also bind ourselves to be true and faithful soldiers to Christ our Captain-general in the spiritual war.

Q. What are these main ends you have in view in coming to this ordinance?

A. To keep up the remembrance of Christ's death and sufferings, to get communion with him, to renew my baptismal covenant, to get my faith strengthened and confirmed, and all my graces quickened.

Q. What are these sufferings of Christ, which you are to remember at his table?

A. These which are recorded in his word.

Q. What do you remember of these just now?

A. I remember the assaults and temptations he met with from the devil; the reproaches and persecutions he endured from wicked men; his soul sufferings and agonies in the garden of Gethsemane; the cruel mockings, buffetings, crownings, spittings, and scourgings he endured in the high priest's palace, and in Pilate's judgment-hall; and lastly, his bloody sufferings and bitter death on mount Calvary, when he was nailed to the cross, forsaken by his friends, derided by his enemies, and deserted of God.

Q. What was the cause of all these sufferings?

A. Christ's own love, and our sins: for having of his astonishing free love, undertaken to satisfy divine justice for us, "He was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities."

Q. Are we not under the strongest obligations always to keep up the sacramental remembrance of Christ?

A. Surely we are; for he is matchless in his love to us poor sinful worms, having remembered us in our low estate, and done and suffered more for us than all the world could or would have done. And likewise, he hath strictly enjoined us, among his last words, to continue to celebrate the memorial of his death.

Q. Why do we need this memorial? Are we in any hazard of forgetting his matchless love?

A. Yes; for so worldly are our hearts, so unbelieving our minds, so treacherous our memories, and so wavering our affections, that we are apt to be ensnared by the world's allurements, and to let Christ and his love slip out of our thoughts.

Q. Is not the fresh and frequent remembrance of a crucified Christ in the sacrament very useful and advantageous to us? A. Yes.

Q. In what respect is it useful?

A. For weakening and killing of sin, for melting a hard heart, for overcoming of Satan's temptations, for quickening and increasing grace, and for giving comfort in all tribulation.

Q. What kind of a remembrance ought we to have of the sufferings and death of Christ at his table?

A. It should be an affectionate and believing, a mournful and sin-loathing, and yet a joyful and thankful remembrance.

Q. How can we both mourn and rejoice at the same time?

A. We may upon different accounts: for as we should mourn for our sins that pierced Christ, and put him to death; so we ought to rejoice in his wonderful goodness, that undertook to be our Surety and sacrifice to save us from sin and wrath: and the more we are helped to mourn, we have still the greater ground to rejoice and be glad in him.

Q. How so?

A. Because a mourning heart for sin is a good evidence of a person's interest in Christ and his purchase.

OF WORTHY AND UNWORTHY PARTAKERS.

Q. Are all partakers to be reckoned welcome guests at this holy feast? A. No.

Q. Who then are such?

A. Only believers, and worthy partakers of it.

Q. Who are these?

A. They are such who by faith do cordially consent to the covenant of grace; sincerely aim to do honour to Christ at his table, by showing forth his death, and study preparation for it.

Q. Who are the unwelcome guests?

A. Those who never closed with the offers of the gospel, and neglect preparation for this feast; and particularly those who continue in love and league with sin, while they pretend kindness to Christ, and to renew covenant with him.

Q. What is to be understood by the worthiness of these who are called worthy partakers?

A. Not any worthiness in a legal sense, for we are all unworthy before God of the least mercy; but only a gospel-suitableness and meetness of the soul's state and frame to attend this holy institution.

Q. May not even a believer be guilty of partaking unworthily?

A. Yes, he may, if he neglect self-examination, harbour any known sin, or want grace in exercise.

Q. What is the duty of worthy partaking, and wherein doth it lie?

A. It is, in short, to eat and drink at Christ's table, with a believing and thankful remembrance of his dying love, looking by faith to him that we have pierced, for salvation, and lodging our souls in his wounds, mourning for sin that pierced him, and solemnly resolving in his strength that we will pierce him no more.

Q. What is the advantage of worthy partaking?

A. Hereby the remission of our sins through Christ's blood is assured, the power of sin is weakened, the graces of the Spirit are strengthened, the soul's diseases are cured, the doubts of the mind are resolved, and sweet views of Christ and glory are obtained.

Q. What is the sin of unworthy communicating, and wherein doth it lie?

A. It is to partake without due preparation and right ends, to eat and drink without suitable knowledge and reverence, without reconciliation to God and our neighbour, or without the exercise of the sacramental graces, such as faith, love, and repentance; or to approach while we entertain any known sin.

Q. What is the danger of unworthy partaking?

A. Hereby the guilt of Christ's body and blood is contracted, and God highly provoked; and the guilty person draws down judgments and damnation upon himself, if it be not timely prevented by repentance and free mercy.

Q. Why is a man's unworthy partaking charged mainly upon his not discerning the Lord's body in the sacrament?

A. Because the unworthy communicant doth not consider that the bread here is solemnly consecrated to represent the Lord's body, but eats it as carelessly as if it were common bread; and because he puts not due respect and honour upon the body of our crucified Lord here set forth; but treats it as if it were the body of a mere man or common person.

Q. How shall we prevent the guilt and danger?

A. By entering into God's covenant, and making due preparation for approaching to his holy table, both habitual and actual.

OF PREPARATION FOR THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Q. What is the necessity of making such preparation for attending this ordinance?

A. Because the approach we make to God in it is very near and awful; and the Author of it is a holy, jealous, and heart-searching God, who will shortly call us to account: and because we are assured there is great benefit by a worthy approach, and as great danger by an unworthy.

Q. What is our habitual preparation?

A. Our being in a gracious state.

Q. What is the actual preparation requisite for approaching to the Lord's table?

A. It mainly lies in these two; examination of ourselves, and excitation of our graces.

Q. What sort of examination is needful before our partaking?

A. There is a public church examination necessary by church-officers, that the Lord's table be not abused by the ignorant and profane; and there is a private self-examination necessary by our own consciences, that the Lord's supper be not unworthily received through unbelief, impenitency, formality, earthliness, pride, malice, or any secret sin entertained by us.

Q. What things must we examine ourselves about before we approach?

A. Principally concerning these three; our right to the Lord's supper, our need of it, and our actual fitness for it.

Q. Why about these three?

A. Because, if we have no right to it, we shall but usurp it; if we feel no need of it, we shall but despise it; if we be unfit for it, we shall but abuse it, and hurt ourselves.

EXAMINATION OF OUR RIGHT TO THE LORD'S TABLE.

Q. What is this right to the Lord's table?

A. It is twofold; 1. There is an outward and visible right before the church. 2. There is an inward and invisible right before God.

Q. Who are these that have the outward and visible right to this ordinance?

A. These who are baptized, and have a competent measure of Christian knowledge, profess their faith in Christ, and are blameless in their lives before men.

Q. Are all such persons worthy partakers?

A. No; but they have such an outward and visible right before the church, that they cannot be excluded: for of this outward right only the church is to judge.

Q. Who are these who have not this right?

A. Neither the ignorant nor profane have it, and therefore they are to be excluded from the Lord's table.

Q. Why are the ignorant to be excluded?

A. Because they are not capable to examine themselves nor to discern the Lord's body; and so behaved in this case to eat and drink unworthily.

Q. Why are the profane to be excluded?

A. Because they who allow themselves to live in sin, can have no communion with a holy God: nay, they expose themselves to his judgments, by coming with defiled hands to his holy table.

Q. Who are these that have the inward and invisible right to this holy ordinance?

A. These who not only have knowledge, and profession, and blameless walk; but are really within the covenant by a true faith in Jesus Christ, even a faith that works by love, and purifies the heart as well as the life; they are really in heart before God what they seem to be outwardly before men.

Q. Who are the judges of this right?

A. Of this inward right the church cannot judge; but every man is to inquire, examine, and judge of it with respect to himself.

Q. By what evidence may a man know that he is really within the new covenant, and thereupon judge that he hath an inward and invisible right to its seal before God.

A. If he can say, that he hath seen himself perishing, while upon the old bottom of a covenant of works, and that he hath fled from it to the new covenant, heartily approving the whole frame and contrivance of it; accepting of Christ the Mediator of it in all his offices, and giving up himself to be the Lord's, to live for him, and walk with him in newness of life; and that it is his earnest desire, that his inward man, as well as his outward, may be conformed to the laws and image of God.

EXAMINATION OF OUR NEED OF THE LORD'S SUPPER, AND OF THE WANTS WE SHOULD SEEK TO BE SUPPLIED THEREAT.

Q. What need have you of the Lord's supper?

A. I need it upon many accounts; as, 1. To bring a crucified Jesus in a lively manner to my remembrance. 2. To renew my baptismal vow, and lay me under stronger engagements to be the Lord's. 3. To nourish and strengthen my weak graces. 4. To fortify me against Satan's temptations, and all other discouragements. 5. To renew the sense and assurance of my pardon, which is frequently obscured and darkened.

Q. What are these things which obscure the evidence of pardon?

A. Sins both of omission and commission, and especially sins against light.

Q. Why should you examine your wants before you approach to the Lord's table?

A. Because there Christ is set forth with all his fulness for the supply of my spiritual wants and necessities; and it is necessary that I should have a lively sense of these needs, that I may know what to apply for to this full Saviour, when at his table.

Q. What are those wants you ought to inquire into before partaking?

A. I ought to examine those chiefly: 1. What sins I want most to be subdued. 2. What graces I want most to be strengthened. 3. What mercies I want most to be bestowed. 4. What faculties of my soul I want most to be sanctified. 5. What offices of Christ I want most to be executed in my soul.

Q. How may you discover the sins you want most to be subdued?

A. By examining what are the sins or corruptions which most prevail in me, if it be atheistical thoughts, unbelief, pride, passion, heart-hardness, earthliness, wandering, formality, backsliding, or any other; and these I must keep in eye, that I may apply to a full Saviour at his table for strength to wrestle against and overcome them.

Q. How may you discover the graces you want most to be strengthened?

A. By examining which of the graces are weakest and lowest in me, if it be faith, hope, love, meekness, humility, or any other; and these I must bring to a full Christ at his table, to be cherished, strengthened, and increased.

Q. How may you find out the mercies you need most to be bestowed?

A. By examining which are my present complaints, pinches, and difficulties; and what are the mercies which would be most suitable and relieving to me under them; if such as these, intimations of pardon, spirituality of affections, liveliness in duty, patience under crosses, conduct in intricate cases, strength against corruptions and temptations, deliverance from atheistical or blasphemous thoughts, or the like; and these mercies I must remember to ask from Christ when at his table.

Q. How may you find out the faculty of your soul you want most to be sanctified?

A. By examining what is the power or faculty that is least renewed, and needs most the Spirit's influences to be poured out upon it; if upon my understanding, to cure its blindness, and enlighten it with saving views of spiritual things; or if upon my will, to cure its perverseness, and make it pliable to God's will; or upon my memory, to cure its treachery and weakness, and to strengthen it to retain God's word; or upon my conscience, to cure its searedness, and make it tender and watchful; or upon my affections, to cure their coldness to Christ and spiritual things, and to fix them upon right objects.

Q. How may you discover the office of Christ you want most to be executed in you?

A. By inquiring into the case of my soul, and plagues of my heart, saying, Whether do I need Christ most as a prophet to teach me and cure my ignorance? or as a priest to cover me with his righteousness, and intercede with God for me? or as a king to subdue my heart to himself, and conquer my indwelling corruptions? And being sensible of my soul's need, I must go to my full Redeemer at his table, and say, Lord, come and execute such an office in my soul.

EXAMINATION OF OUR SINS NECESSARY BEFORE PARTAKING.

Q. Why must you inquire so narrowly about your sins before partaking?

A. Upon several accounts: 1. That there may be no Achan lodged to hinder the presence of God with me. 2. That, by discovering them, I may be helped the better to look upon him whom I have pierced, and mourn. 3. That I may be the more capable to point out my wound and sore unto my Physician for cure. 4. That I may behold the evil of them in the glass of Christ's sufferings, and be thereby moved to hate them, and turn from them all unto God, and walk with him in newness of life.

Q. How ought you to manage this part of your preparation-work, so as to accomplish a diligent search of your sins?

A. 1. I must set time apart for it, and before I begin it, pray earnestly for the illumination of the Spirit of God to discover sin unto me. 2. I must think upon the sins of my heart and my life, my sins of omission and commission, and these both open and secret, of ignorance and against light, and the sins of my station and character in the world. 3. For my help, I will read our Larger Catechism and the ten commandments, and the sins therein enumerated, with their many aggravations, and inquire how far I am chargeable therewith. 4. I will never give over searching and thinking, until I see my indispensable need of the blood of the Lamb of God, which cleanseth us from all sin.

EXAMINATION OF OUR ACTUAL FITNESS FOR THE LORD'S TABLE.

Q. What is that fitness which every communicant ought to have before partaking?

A. It is twofold, both habitual and actual; and both must be had by every one.

Q. What is this habitual fitness or preparation which every partaker must have?

A. He must be a believer, a man in a gracious state, with the habits of grace planted in his soul.

Q. What is that actual fitness you must have?

A. It is when a man is not only in a gracious state, but in a gracious frame: when grace is not only in the habit, but in the lively exercise.

Q. What are these graces which must be examined, quickened, and brought to exercise before partaking?

A. They are chiefly knowledge, faith, repentance, love, humility, thankfulness, spiritual appetite, and resolution for new obedience.

EXAMINATION OF KNOWLEDGE.

Q. What is that knowledge you must have to qualify you for worthy partaking?

A. It is a gracious discovery and uptaking of God and divine truths, as they are revealed in his word.

Q. What are these things particularly, which you must know in order to partaking aright?

A. I must have a competent knowledge of these five things: 1. Of God in his essential perfections and Trinity of persons. 2. Of man, and his estate both before and since his fall. 3. Of Jesus Christ the Mediator, in his twofold nature, and threefold office. 4. Of the new covenant, or gospel-method of justification by the Surety's righteousness, apprehended by faith. 5. Of the seal of this covenant, and particularly of the holy supper, in its nature, ends, and uses.

Q. Is a literal knowledge of these things sufficient for a communicant?

A. No; it must be a true, sanctified, and saving knowledge.

Q. How may we discover if our knowledge be sanctified and saving?

A. We may know it by its properties and effects; as, 1. If it be experimental, and gives us a sweet taste and relish of the truths we know. 2. If it be humbling, and makes us, like Paul, look upon ourselves as the least of saints, and the chief of sinners. 3. If it leads us to Christ and his righteousness, as the only ground of our hope. Lastly, If it be communicative, practical, obdiential, and fruitful, and puts us on to desire a greater conformity to Jesus Christ our Head.

EXAMINATION OF FAITH.

Q. What is true saving faith?

A. It is a grace of the Holy Spirit, whereby a man, knowing his sin and misery, and assenting to the truth of God's record concerning Christ, doth cordially receive and rest upon Christ and his righteousness for pardon and salvation, according to the gospel offer.

Q. What need is there for the exercise of faith at the Lord's table?

A. It is needful, 1. For discerning the Lord's body, and the spiritual mysteries here represented; seeing faith is the spiritual eye whereby the soul sees Christ and things invisible. 2. For applying Christ and his benefits here set forth to our souls, seeing faith is the spiritual hand for taking hold of a crucified Jesus, and the mouth and stomach that feeds upon him.

Q. How may we know if our faith be true and saving?

A. True faith hath these effects: 1. It softens the heart and makes it bleed for sin that pierced Christ. 2. It makes the soul approve and admire the gospel-contrivance of salvation through the righteousness of Christ. 3. It works by love, and carries out the soul to love Christ above all things, and to do all duties from a principle of love. 4. It makes a man sincerely obedient and fruitful in good works. 5. It looses the heart from the world and all earthly felicities, and carries it to things above.

EXAMINATION OF REPENTANCE.

Q. What is the true repentance which worthy partakers must have?

A. It is a grace of the Holy Spirit, whereby we are convinced of the evil of sin, sincerely mourn for it, and turn from it unto God, through Jesus Christ, resolving to serve him in newness of life.

Q. What parts are there in new repentance?

A. Chiefly three; conviction, contrition, and conversion.

Q. What is conviction?

A. It is a right sight and sense of the evil and sinfulness of sin.

Q. What is contrition?

A. It is a true and godly sorrow and grief of heart for sin, chiefly because God is offended, and Christ pierced thereby.

Q. What is conversion?

A. It is the soul's turning from all sin to God in Christ for mercy and pardon, and to all the ways of holiness and new obedience.

Q. What need is there for the exercise of repentance and of godly sorrow at the Lord's table?

A. Because here we are to renew covenant with God, and certainly penitent mourning for former breaches and backsliding is very suitable upon that occasion. Again, we are here to behold Christ bruised for our sin, and to receive him into our hearts; and nothing suits a broken Christ so well as a broken heart; nay, this is what he prefers to all sacrifices.

Q. How may we know if our repentance be of the right sort?

A. We may judge it to be right, if, 1. We lay the axe to the root of sin, the corruption of the heart and nature, and long to be delivered from it. 2. If we hate all sin, and resolve to harbour no known evil, either in heart or life. 3. If we have recourse to Christ's blood and Spirit, for freedom from the filth as well as the guilt of sin, and breathe after universal holiness.

EXAMINATION OF LOVE.

Q. Why is the exercise of love so necessary at the Lord's table?

A. Because it is a love-feast and ordinance where we have the highest representation of divine love to sinners that ever was given; which necessarily requires the exercise of love in us.

Q. What do you understand by the love which is required of communicants? and what are the objects upon which it must be placed?

A. It is a saving grace or spiritual affection wrought in believers by the Holy Spirit, which terminates upon various objects, namely, upon God, upon Jesus Christ, upon the brethren, and every thing that bears his image, and in some sense upon all mankind; even our very enemies.

Q. Why do you make God and Jesus Christ different objects of your love?

A. I love Jesus Christ as he is God, and the same God with the other Persons of the glorious Trinity; but seeing the second Person is for us become God-man, our Mediator, and the great sacrifice to justice for our sins, in this respect I view him as a special object of my love.

Q. By what marks may you examine if your love to God be true?

A. By such as these; my care to please him, my fear to offend him, my desire after his presence, my regard to his laws, and concern for his glory.

Q. By what marks may you examine your love to Jesus Christ?

A. By the same before-mentioned, to which I may add, true love to Christ far exceeds all our love to relations and dearest worldly enjoyments; it terminates upon him in all his offices, as a prince upon the throne, as well as a priest upon the cross; in his life as a pattern, as well as in his death as a sacrifice, and embraceth him as altogether lovely: also, it prompts the soul to have many thoughts of him, and even to look and long for his second coming.

Q. How may we know if we love him above all things in the world?

A. By these marks: if we value his favour more than that of any creature; if the loss of his countenance affect us more than any worldly loss; if we would rather displease all the world than offend him; and if it be our greatest grief that we cannot love him more.

Q. By what marks are you to examine if your love to the brethren be true?

A. By such as these; if I love them, not for outward or temporal things, but upon spiritual accounts, because they are God's children, and bear his image; if my love be to all saints poor and rich, hated and honoured, strangers and friends; if I sympathise with them both in their joys and sorrows, and prefer their company to all others.

Q. How doth your love to God's people differ from your love to the rest of mankind, and these who are your enemies?

A. I love the rest of mankind, and even my enemies, with a love of benevolence and beneficence, being inclined to wish them well, pray for them, do them good, and even return them good for evil; but I love the people of God with a love of delight and complacency, and esteem them as the excellent ones of the earth, the friends of God, and the pillars of the land.

EXAMINATION OF HUMILITY.

Q. Why is the grace of humility so needful in your approach to the table of the Lord?

A. Because I am a most unworthy creature, and he is a great and holy God with whom I have to do, and he hath a special respect unto the lowly: besides, this grace is necessary to make me resemble my Saviour, whose love I commemorate; for, as he was meek and lowly in his disposition, so he humbled himself deeply for my good.

Q. How may you know if your humility be of the right stamp?

A. By such marks as these; 1. If I have low and mean thoughts of myself under a sense of unworthiness, and be ready to say, with the prodigal, "I am no more worthy to be called thy son;" and with the Canaanitish woman, "Truth, Lord, I am a dog." 2. If I be grieved for the motions of pride and self-conceit within me. 3. If I renounce all confidence in my duties, and betake myself entirely to Christ for righteousness and acceptance with God.

EXAMINATION OF THANKFULNESS.

Q. Why is thankfulness necessary to worthy partaking?

A. Because it is the chief design of the ordinance to keep up a thankful remembrance of redeeming love, and to give thanks to God for the unspeakable gift of a crucified Christ; and hence it is called Eucharist, or thanksgiving.

Q. How may you discern if your thankfulness be of the right sort?

A. By these marks: 1. If I account myself unworthy of the least mercy, and admire God's undeserved goodness. 2. If I look upon Jesus Christ as the mercy of mercies, and the channel of all other mercies. 3. If I sincerely love my benefactor, and study to please him. 4. If I be often meditating how to express my thankfulness to him, saying with the Psalmist, "What shall I render to the Lord for all his gifts and benefits towards me?"

Q. But what can you, or should you render for a crucified Jesus?

A. Though all I have be nothing in comparison of the benefit received, yet I should be willing to render it to the Lord; such as, 1. My endeared affections. 2. My triumphant praises. 3. My unfeigned repentance and reformation. 4. My faithful performance of vows. 5. My zealous acting for his glory. 6. My cheerful resolution to suffer for Christ, who so willingly suffered for me.

EXAMINATION OF SPIRITUAL APPETITE.

Q. Why is a spiritual appetite so requisite at this time?

A. Because a feast is not relished but by those who have an appetite for it; and it is the hungry and the thirsty that God hath promised to satisfy with good things.

Q. How may you know if your appetite or spiritual desires be of the right sort?

A. By these marks: 1. If I be glad of the news of Christ's feast, and an invitation to it. 2. If I count the cost, and be willing to be at all pains to obtain soul-food; such as, to pray, to search, to humble myself, and part with my dearest sins. 3. If I be satisfied with no food for my soul but a crucified Christ. 4. If I find this food sweet and pleasant to my soul's taste.

EXAMINATION OF RESOLUTIONS FOR NEW OBEDIENCE.

Q. Why is a believer's obedience called new obedience?

A. 1. Because it proceeds from new principles, faith, and love. 2. It is performed in a new manner, namely, by faith leaning upon Christ's strength for enabling him to do it, and upon Christ's righteousness for his acceptance with God. 3. It is done for new ends, not to advance his own secular interest, but to please God, and promote his glory.

Q. How may you know if your resolutions for new obedience be of the right stamp?

A. By these marks: 1. If I count the cost, and be deliberate in making them. 2. If they be absolute, without any reserve for a beloved sin. 3. If I make them in a deep sense of my insufficiency to keep them, and in a humble dependence upon Christ my Surety for strength.

CONCERNING THE EXCITATION OF GRACES.

Q. How shall you get all these graces before-mentioned excited and brought to lively exercise, before you come to the table?

A. I must use all the means which God hath appointed for this end; such as, reading and hearing the word, Christian conference, retired meditation, fervent prayer, and frequent ejaculations to God for the awakening influences of his Holy Spirit; and cry with the spouse, "Awake, O north wind, and come, thou south, blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out."

Q. What ought you to do when spiritual deadness continues after you have used all the aforesaid means?

A. I must go a little further in humiliation and prayer, and meditate more closely upon the sufferings of Christ, and also act faith upon him, as my head of influences for life and quickening to my dead graces, and resolve still to depend upon him for needful supplies of life according to his promise.

Q. How ought you to pray at this time, so as to prevail?

A. I must pray with humility, faith, fervency, and importunity, as knowing how much is at stake, both with respect to the glory of God, and the salvation of my soul; I must plead the power, the mercy, and free promise of God, and merits of Jesus Christ his beloved Son.

Q. For what things ought you mainly to pray before the solemn approach?

A. For these things: 1. For the preparation of the heart, and chiefly for sanctifying grace, and a spiritual frame of soul. 2. For life and liveliness to all the sacramental graces, and for the assistance of the Spirit of God in all the parts of the work. 3. For the cure of all my soul-distempers, and the pardon of all defects. 4. For much nearness and communion with God at his table. 5. For the Lord's gracious presence both with ministers and people through the whole solemnity.

Q. How ought you to be employed upon the Saturday evening and Sabbath morning, before partaking?

A. Besides the work of self-examination, and excitation of grace, I resolve to spend much of that precious time in direct covenanting with God on my knees, taking and accepting of him for my God in Christ, and of Christ the Mediator in all his offices, and giving up myself, soul and body, to be the Lord's, to be disposed of by him in time and to eternity. Also, I will make it a particular piece of my preparation, to consider, beforehand, how I will act when I go to the Lord's table; how my faith and love shall then be employed; what objects I will think of, and what sins I will mourn over; that so I may not spend my short time here in confusion.

CONCERNING OUR EMPLOYMENT WHEN AT THE LORD'S TABLE.

Q. What is that suitable communion frame and disposition with which you would desire to go to the Lord's holy table?

A. I would desire to go to it with a humble, believing, and affectionate frame of soul, having in it a mixture of holy mourning and rejoicing, which I look upon as a noble communion frame; I mean, mourning for my sins that were the cause of Christ's sufferings, and rejoicing in Christ Jesus that came to satisfy justice for me.

Q. How are you to be employed when sitting at the table, and when beholding and making use of the elements there?

A. 1. I must take a view of the sufferings of Christ both in soul and body for me; and particularly, I must remember the anguish of his soul when he lay under the pressure of God's wrath for my sins. 2. I must take a view both of the mercy and justice of God, and of Christ's love, displayed in these sufferings. 3. I must exert faith in embracing a crucified Jesus, and my faith is to be attended with the exercise of all the sacramental graces, repentance, love, thankfulness, &c. 4. I am to be suitably affected with the amazing sights set before me. 5. I am to make vows and prayers after the partaking, and before I rise from the table.

Q. Seeing faith is the principal grace in communicating, how is it to be exercised and employed at this time?

A. Faith being the soul's eye to discern Christ, the soul's hand to receive him, and the soul's mouth to feed upon him, it is to be employed at this time in the most active manner, in looking to Christ lifted upon the cross for healing our soul's maladies, in embracing Christ our great Surety and Ransomer, in fleeing into his wounds for shelter, in applying his blood for cleansing, and in pleading his blood with God for all we want.

Q. What are the amazing sights set before you at the Lord's table, which ought so much to affect you?

A. They are, 1. The unspeakable evil of sin, and God's infinite displeasure against it. 2. The inexorableness of divine justice in demanding satisfaction for sin. 3. The infinite greatness of the love of God to lost sinners, in providing a Surety and sacrifice for them, and of Christ in becoming both. 4. The great worth and preciousness of immortal souls, and the costliness of pardon, and of eternal glory. 5. Christ dying, and yet, in the mean time, conquering principalities and powers, and triumphing over them upon the cross.

Q. What ought you to vow when at the Lord's table?

A. That in the strength of Christ my Surety, I will abstain from all known sin, and make conscience of every known duty; that I will mind religion as the one thing needful, and make the pleasing of God the chief business of my life.

Q. For what things are you to offer your request at this time?

A. For grace to preserve my liveness of frame; for strength to pay my vows; for wisdom and skill to improve a crucified Christ in my after life; for furniture for future trials, for victory over Satan's temptations and indwelling sin; for mercy to my near relations, to my mother-church, and for the enlargement of the kingdom of Christ through the world.

Q. In what frame ought you to rise and go from the Lord's table?

A. 1. In an admiring and thankful frame, upon account of redeeming love. 2. In an humble and watchful frame, because of the snares and dangers I am still exposed to. 3. In a believing and depending frame, leaning on Christ for conduct through the wilderness.

CONCERNING OUR BEHAVIOUR AFTER PARTAKING.

Q. How are we to behave when the public work is over?

A. 1. I will retire in secret, and solemnly on my knees re-act what I was doing at the Lord's table; I will renew my choice of God as my God, and my acceptance of Christ in all his offices, and my engagement to be the Lord's. 2. I ought to pray for the continuance of a communion-frame with me when the communion is over. 3. I must set about self-examination concerning my behaviour and success at the Lord's table.

Q. How may we keep up something of a lively frame when the communion is over?

A. In order thereto, we must, 1. Be jealous of Satan, the world, and heart lusts, that lie in wait to rob us of it. 2. Learn the art of living by faith, and of deriving life from Jesus Christ our Head for maintaining our life. 3. Still plead for the quickening influences of the Holy Spirit, which must, like the bellows, blow up the fire, and maintain it against all the cold blasts of the devil and the world. 4. Delight in the company of lively Christians.

Q. How may we examine our behaviour at the Lord's table, and discover if it was suitable?

A. We may take comfort, if we can say, 1. We had there very low and abasing thoughts of ourselves and our own righteousness. Or, 2. We had something of a heart-melting remembrance of Christ's death and sufferings, when the signs and memorials of them were presented to us. Or, 3. We were filled with abhorrence of sin that pierced him. Or, 4. We went in cheerfully with the terms of the covenant of grace.

Q. How may we examine our success, and know if we have got any good by this ordinance?

A. We may discern it by such effects as these:

1. If we have got any further assurance of God's love. Or, 2. If we have a higher esteem of Christ. Or, 3. If we have greater delight in duty. Or, 4. If we have a better relish of ordinances and their usefulness, so as to make us resolve to hang still on about God's hand.

Q. What should be our conversation after this solemn ordinance?

A. We should walk circumspectly, and carry suitably to the Lord's dealings and dispensations towards us, whether we had success at it or not.

Q. How ought they to carry, who have got no good by this ordinance?

A. 1. They must search into the cause, if it was unbelief, sloth, self-conceit, or any sin reserved, and mourn over it. 2. They must flee to the blood of Christ for pardon and cleansing. 3. They should look out for another communion occasion; and prepare for it more diligently and self-deniedly; and watch especially against that evil or defect in their management which conscience suggests was the cause of their bad success of the former.

Q. How should they carry who have got good at the sacrament?

A. 1. They should be thankful to the author, and, like the children of Zion, be joyful in their King. 2. Record what they have got, that it may be of use to them in a day of clouds. 3. Study to preserve it, by committing it to God, and walking humbly and tenderly before him. 4. Pity and pray for others under discouragement, and be ready to communicate their experiences to them for their support. 5. Study to recommend Christ and religion to strangers, by a holy and shining conversation before all men.

Q. What is that holy becoming conversation which communicants should study?

A. It is a conversation ordered aright and suitable to the rule of God's word, to the principles they profess, the sights they have seen, the benefits they have received, and the vows they have made.

Q. What is it that makes our conversation to shine before the world?

A. When we have it adorned with humility, purity, justice, charity, meekness, patience, resignation to God's will, and contentment in every condition.

Q. Are not the best of God's people in danger of miscarrying after such a solemn ordinance?

A. Yes; as appears from the instance of Peter and the rest of the disciples, after the first communion.

Q. Whence is it that we are in such hazards?

A. It proceeds from such things: 1. From the natural inconstancy of our hearts. 2. From that security and self-confidence we are prone to, after favour received from God. 3. From the malice and activity of Satan, who seeks by all means to ensnare us into sin after the sacrament, that he may widen the breach between God and us.

Q. How shall we prevent backsliding and yielding to Satan's temptations after the sacrament?

A. 1. We must labour to preserve a warm sense of the love of Christ in our souls. 2. Maintain an everlasting jealousy over our treacherous hearts, and never trust them at any time. 3. Keep Christ our ascended Forerunner still in our eye, and beware of losing sight or thought of him. 4. We must commit our souls, by humble and believing prayer, into the hands of God's power and mercy, as the child doth itself into the nurse's arms.

QUESTIONS FOR SELF-EXAMINATION,

PROPER FOR YOUNG COMMUNICANTS IN EXAMINING THE STATE AND CONDITION OF THEIR SOULS IN SECRET, BEFORE THEIR APPROACH UNTO THE LORD'S TABLE: THE WHICH IF THEY CAN ANSWER IN THE AFFIRMATIVE, OR SOME FEW OF THEM, THEY HAVE GROUND TO HOPE THEY ARE IN A GRACIOUS STATE, AND HAVE A RIGHT BEFORE GOD TO THIS SEALING ORDINANCE.

Q. 1. Can I say, that I am deeply affected about my soul, and my eternal state, so that my great and leading questions are, What must I do to be saved? What shall I do to be born again? What shall I do for the Holy Spirit to come and work a saving change on me, and make me a new creature?

Q. 2. Have I been spiritually enlightened to see the depravity of my nature, and the sinfulness of my heart and life, so as to be convinced that I am all as an unclean thing before God?

Q. 3. Have I been made to see sin as the greatest evil, and feel it as the greatest burden in the world, so as to account deliverance from it the greatest happiness?

Q. 4. Is my spirit very humble and lowly before God? Am I truly vile and low in my own eyes, under a deep sense of my unworthiness and ill-deservings, so as to cry, with the centurion, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof; and with the publican, God be merciful to me a sinner?

Q. 5. Have I seen my absolute need of Jesus Christ to save me from sin and wrath, to restore the lost image of God, and to give me grace and glory, so that I am truly willing to part with all things for Christ?

Q. 6. Have I been made heartily to approve of the gospel-method of salvation through the satisfaction of Christ? And is my soul well pleased with the self-abasing and grace-exalting way of saving sinners by the righteousness of another?

Q. 7. Have I made choice of God in Christ the Mediator as my God and portion? And can I say, that which moved me to make this choice was a sight of the vanity of seeking a rest for my soul among the creatures, and that its happiness lies in the enjoyment of God, which is only to be had through Christ?

Q. 8. Have I a high opinion of Jesus Christ the Mediator? Is he very precious to my soul? Have I seen a matchless beauty in his person, in his offices, and fulness, and that the fulness of the Godhead is in him, and all freely exhibited for the use of those that come to him?

Q. 9. Have I been helped to close with God's offer unto me in the gospel, and to accept of the well-qualified Surety and Saviour in his fulness, and in his offices of Prophet, Priest, and King, and to embrace him as altogether lovely?

Q. 10. Have I been determined to resign and surrender myself unto the Lord, to be taught, ruled, and saved by him? And have I given up all I have, to be disposed of by him at his pleasure? Or, am I willing presently to do so?

Q. 11. Am I willing to renounce my own righteousness in justification, and my own strength in sanctification, and to look to Christ as my Surety and Head for both, saying, In the Lord Jesus only have I righteousness and strength?

Q. 12. Is Jesus Christ welcome to my soul as a King, as well as a Priest, so that I am as willing to be governed by his laws, as to be justified by his righteousness?

Q. 13. Have I got new discoveries of spiritual and heavenly things, which I had not before? Do I see a reality in a future life and glory, an awfulness in eternity, an emptiness in this world, a worth in my soul, an evil in sin, and a beauty in Christ and holiness, which I saw not before?

Q. 14. Do I seek more earnestly after the favour of God through Christ, than after any earthly comfort or enjoyment whatsoever?

Q. 15. Do I study the things which please God and make for his glory? And do I prefer his interest above the interest of the world, or of the flesh?

Q. 16. Is indwelling sin, and the corruption and plagues of my heart my daily grief and burden? Do I struggle and strive against them, and long for a deliverance, crying with the apostle, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death?

Q. 17. Can I say, that I have respect to all God's commandments? and conscientiously practise whatever I discover to be my duty? that I dare neither omit duty when I know it, nor dare I venture upon any sin against my light?

Q. 18. Can I say, as I dare not omit duty, as little dare I rest upon it? that I see my prayers have need of pardon, and my tears need to be washed in Christ's blood. And therefore I can find no rest to the sole of my foot, but in my Cautioneer's perfect righteousness?

Q. 19. Can I say, I am truly grieved in heart for sin that pierced Christ, and am ready to put a bill of divorce into the hand of every lust, yea, the most beloved idol, resolving never to give harbour to any of these traitors or enemies of my Lord?

Q. 20. Can I say, that I love Christ with my heart, and that I can appeal to himself for the truth and reality of it, though it be but weak? and that it is my great grief that I cannot love him more?

Q. 21. Can I say, that I breathe after great conformity to God, both in heart and in life, and that I desire heart-holiness more than any temporal thing whatsoever? and that I cry often, with the psalmist, O that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes?

Q. 22. Can I say, that I am truly desirous of converse and fellowship with God in the duties of religion? and that I look upon that prayer, that sermon, that sabbath, as lost, where I find nothing of his gracious presence?

Now, let young communicants retire in secret for putting these questions to their souls, as in the presence of God, and let them wait till conscience give answer to them: but see that they do this, when they are in the best frame.

A PROPOSAL FOR YOUNG COMMUNICANTS.

THEIR EXPRESS RENEWING THE BAPTISMAL ENGAGEMENTS BEFORE THEIR FIRST ADMISSION TO THE LORD'S TABLE: WHICH PRACTICE MIGHT BE MUCH FOR EDIFICATION: ESPECIALLY IF DULY MANAGED AND DONE WITH SOME SOLEMNITY BEFORE WITNESSES, SUCH AS MINISTERS, ELDERS, AND OTHER YOUNG PERSONS.

Q. 1. What moves you to seek access to the Lord's table?

A. The Lord's command, and because I desire to renew my baptismal engagements, and declare myself a Christian by my own free choice and consent, and would join myself unto the Lord by my own voluntary act and deed.

Q. 2. Why do you desire to do so?

A. Because, when I got the first seal of the covenant, viz., baptism, I knew not what was done for me, nor was I capable to consent to my parents' deed; but now, when I am come to some knowledge and capacity, I am willing to declare that I make religion my free choice and reasonable service.

Q. 3. Why do you come so early? will it not be soon enough to mind religion in old age?

A. No; for besides that I may die young, those who neglect religion, and give themselves up to the world, or the flesh, in their youth, fall into hardness of heart, from which few recover.

Q. 4. What is the most proper season to seek acquaintance with Christ and religion?

A. The time of youth, because in this age the heart is more easily melted, and the habits of vice are not so riveted as afterward; and because God has a special delight in early piety.

Q. 5. What views then have you got of your natural state and condition?

A. I see it to be a most sinful, wretched, and helpless case; I am condemned to perish under a load of guilt and wrath, having broken the covenant of works, which I cannot fulfil, offended the justice of God, which I cannot satisfy, and lost the image of God, and my precious soul, which I cannot recover. O what shall I do to be saved?

Q. 6. To what quarter do you look for relief?

A. Only to Jesus Christ, who hath, in his free love to lost sinners, undertaken as Surety and Mediator in the new covenant, which is exhibited and sealed to believers at the Lord's table.

Q. 7. What views have you got of that covenant which is there sealed?

A. I see the way of salvation laid down in it through the Suretyship and righteousness of Jesus Christ, to be an excellent contrivance, well-ordered in all things and sure. I look upon it as a device every way worthy of God, and of infinite wisdom, and I heartily approve of it, consent to it, and desire to come and venture my soul and eternal salvation upon it.

Q. 8. What think you of the love of God that was the spring of this new covenant?

A. I view it as wonderful and amazing; I admire the love of the Father, in contriving and sending his beloved Son to execute it; I admire the love of the Son of God, in undertaking to be a Surety and sacrifice for lost sinners of Adam's race, when the sinning angels were past by, and left to perish for ever; and I admire the love of the Holy Ghost, in undertaking to apply that redemption to lost elect sinners, by working in them conviction, conversion, and faith in Jesus Christ.

Q. 9. With what frame and disposition do you come to renew your baptismal covenant?

A. I desire to be sensible of my guilt in breaking this covenant, in running away from Christ's colours, in going over to Satan's camp, and in standing so long out against Christ's calls and offers; and I desire now to return to the Lord as a penitent prodigal, and a mourning backslider, with my face Zion-ward, weeping as I go, willing to renew my baptismal vows with others, saying, Come, let us join ourselves to the Lord in an everlasting covenant never to be forgotten. And, in a word, I desire to go to a broken Christ with a broken heart.

Q. 10. What is that baptismal vow or covenant which you design to renew?

A. According to my engagement and dedication in baptism, I desire expressly to own and acknowledge the only living and true God as my God in Christ, as he offers himself in the covenant of grace; and to give up myself, soul and body, to him, to be for him and not for another. And I design, in the most solemn manner, to go and renounce all the enemies of the Holy Trinity, namely, the devil, the world, and the flesh; and to declare my acceptance of God the Father as my Father, of God the Son as my Redeemer, and of God the Holy Ghost as my sanctifier; in whose blessed name I was baptized, and to whose service and glory I was dedicated.

Q. 11. What do you think of Jesus Christ, the Mediator of the covenant?

A. I think him a matchless Person, and an excellent and all-sufficient Saviour; and I am content to accept of him in all his offices, namely, as a Prophet to instruct and teach me, as a Priest to atone and intercede for me, and as a King to rule in me and over me.

Q. 12. What do you think of your own righteousness and strength with respect to your salvation?

A. I look upon my own righteousness and strength as insufficient to answer the demands of God's law, and therefore I renounce them, and flee to a Surety for both, saying, In the Lord Jesus only have I righteousness and strength; and I am content and resolved to make use of a borrowed strength for my performing of duty, and of a borrowed righteousness for my acceptance in duty.

Q. 13. How do you like this self-denying way of saving lost souls?

A. I am well pleased with it, as it makes me an eternal debtor to free grace, as it excludes all boasting glorying in the creature, and ascribes all the glory of my salvation to Christ only; as it takes the crown off the head of self, and puts it upon the head of glorious Christ.

Q. 14. How do you relish the kingly office of Jesus Christ?

A. I am well pleased therewith, and content to take Christ as a King to govern me by his laws, as well as a Priest to save me by his blood; nay, I am desirous he may come in as a King, and execute his kingly office in my soul; that he may set up his throne in my heart, subdue indwelling sin, and conquer all my rebellious lusts and corruption.

Q. 15. What view have you of the Holy Ghost, the third person in the Trinity, and of his office in the business of saving souls?

A. I look upon him as the blessed applier of Christ's purchase unto me, and accept of him as such; and I am willing to give up myself to him, to convince, enlighten, renew, sanctify, and guide me; and I believe he is as willing and ready to make the application as Christ was to make the purchase; and therefore I desire to trust him for this blessed effect.

Q. 16. What think you of the things of this world as a portion to the soul?

A. I look upon all its profits, honours, and pleasures, to be insufficient to suit the soul's desires, and that they are nothing but vanity and vexation of spirit; and therefore I will never set my heart upon the world as my portion: it is only the enjoyment of God reconciled in Christ, that can afford complete satisfaction to my soul; and this only I choose for my happiness and portion.

Q. 17. What do you think of the world to come?

A. I look upon it, and the things thereof, as awful, certain, and very near. I look upon hell as the eternal habitation of unbelievers; but I view heaven as the country and dwelling-place of the followers of the Lamb, with whom I desire to join, to seek that country, and dwell with them for ever.

Q. 18. What do you think of a holy and religious life?

A. I think a religious life, or a life spent in the service of God, and in communion with him, the most pleasant and comfortable life that a man can live in the world.

Q. 19. How do you think to attain to holiness for living this life?

A. I look upon Jesus Christ as the Purchaser of holiness as well as of happiness, as he, who, by his death, hath obtained the Holy Spirit to effectuate the new-birth, and form the image of God in his people; and therefore desire to come to Christ and his blood for sanctification, as well as for justification; for conformity and likeness to God, as well as for access to fellowship and communion with God, and I will plead, that he may send his Holy Spirit unto my soul, for producing holiness and all the graces of the Spirit.

Q. 20. What view have you got of the promises of the covenant, and their usefulness?

A. I look upon them as the ground of all my faith and hope, and I desire to make daily use of them, and to plead them with God for furniture and strength to perform every duty, and for perseverance and throughbearing in all the steps of my pilgrimage; and I resolve to have recourse to him in every strait and difficulty.

Q. 21. As you profess willingness to accept of God in Christ as your God, are ye not also willing to dedicate yourself to him for his use and service?

A. Yes, I am willing (I hope through grace) to give up and surrender unto the Lord, myself, and all that belongs unto me, my soul and body, with all their powers, faculties, senses, members, and enjoyments, to be instruments of his glory, and to be disposed of by him for his use and service at his pleasure.

Q. 22. How do you instruct your willingness to give up and surrender the powers and faculties of your soul unto the Lord?

A. I think I am willing to dedicate and give up my understanding to the Lord, to contemplate his perfections, and know his will; my memory to him, to retain and treasure up his gracious promises and counsels; my will to him, to choose and refuse every thing, according to his will, and to comply therewith in all things; and my conscience to him, to be his deputy, to accuse and excuse according to his direction.

Q. 23. Do you also resign and give up the passions and affections of your soul unto the Lord?

A. Yes, I give up and dedicate my passion of grief to the Lord, to mourn for every thing that is offensive to him; my hatred, to abhor every thing that is hateful to him; my desires, to long for his presence; my love, to embrace and entertain him; my delight and joy, to solace myself, and to acquiesce cheerfully in him as my soul's portion and happiness.

Q. 24. In what respects do you resign your bodily senses and members to the Lord?

A. I give up my eyes to read his word, and behold his wondrous works; my ears to hear his word, and attend to his counsels; my taste, smell, and feeling, to discern and relish his sweetness and excellency in the creatures; my tongue, to proclaim his praise, and commend his ways and service; my hands to help his people; and my feet to walk in paths pleasing to him.

Q. 25. How do you resign your enjoyments and comforts to the Lord?

A. I resign my time, my health, my talents, my opportunities, my relations, my gifts, my interest, my power, my wisdom, my substance, my honour, my reputation, and all I have in the world, unto the Lord, to be employed and disposed of by him for his glory, as he thinks proper.

Q. 26. What view have you now of sin, and of these sins you once esteemed as your right hand and right eye?

A. I see and abhor them as the enemies and crucifiers of my Lord Jesus, and as the very nails and spear that pierced him, and desire to throw them out of my heart, and to cut off every right hand and pluck out every right eye, and to renounce all ungodliness and all beloved lusts, and count no sin too dear to part with for Jesus Christ my Lord.

Q. 27. What do you think now of companions in sin and their solicitations?

A. I am convinced of their folly, and resolve never to follow the multitude to do evil, nor to join them in any of the common sins of the age, and stedfastly (through grace) to avoid the snares and resist the temptations of evil company; saying, with David, Depart from me, ye evil doers, for I will keep the commandments of my God.

Q. 28. What thoughts have you of the people of God and those who bear his image?

A. I look upon them as God's precious jewels, the excellent ones of the earth, and the most desirable company in the world.

Q. 29. But what will you think of them when you see them few and despised?

A. I resolve through grace to join Christ's little flock, his praying, and sin-hating flock, though they be few in number; desire to love them above all others, and to accept of them as my fellow-travellers to the heavenly Zion, and that notwithstanding of their being despised or reproached by the world.

Q. 30. But what do you think of the cross, and of sharp persecution, that sometimes attend the owning of Christ?

A. I desire to take Christ with his cross, as well as with his crown; and to welcome the world's hatred, reproaches, injuries, or any kind of trouble or persecution I may meet with for owning of Christ, his truth, and ways.

Q. 31. What think ye of the holy scriptures?

A. I believe they are indited by God's holy Spirit, I value them above all books, I accept of them thankfully as a guide through the wilderness, a light to my feet, and a lamp to my paths, and a treasure of comforts and cordials suitable for me in all cases and difficulties, which I desire always to search into, and study to be acquainted with.

Q. 32. What do you think of the Lord's day?

A. I regard it as holy and honourable; and as a standing testimony of the perfection of Christ's sacrifice; I look upon it as the best day of the week, as being Christ's weekly market-day for needy souls, which I resolve to improve carefully for getting provision for my soul through the rest of the week.

Q. 33. What do you think of gospel-ordinances?

A. I look upon the word, sacraments, prayer, and praise, to be God's institutions, and means of conveying grace to souls. I thankfully accept of them as needful helps in the way to heaven, and as meeting-places betwixt God and my soul; and I desire to make it my main errand in attending them to meet with him therein.

Q. 34. What do you think of the Lord's supper that you have in view?

A. I look upon it as Christ's banqueting-house and spiritual feast, which in his love he hath provided for refreshing and strengthening his people's souls, while travelling through this wilderness: desire to bless God for it, and to accept of it as a rare privilege, a quickener of grace, a memorial of redeeming love, and a pledge of Christ's second coming.

Q. 35. What do you think of the duty of prayer?

A. I look upon it not only as my great duty, but also as an honourable privilege, seeing hereby I have access to converse with God; and therefore I resolve, through grace, to live a life of prayer and acquaintance with God, in and through Christ, all my days, and that I will always go to God and consult with him in all cases and difficulties.

Q. 36. What do you think of the rest of the duties of Christianity, and of all these which the moral law enjoins?

A. I look upon the law (which Christ hath adopted into the covenant of grace, as a rule of life to his people) to be holy, just, and good; and the duties enjoined by it to be most reasonable, calculated for the glory of God and his people's good. The gospel, which is the doctrine of grace, strongly enforces this law, by teaching us sobriety with respect to ourselves, righteousness with respect to our neighbour, and godliness with respect to God; and the love of Christ mightily constrains us to the diligent performance of all these moral duties.

Q. 37. What do you think of the rods and afflictions which attend the children of God?

A. I believe they are fatherly chastisements for our good; and that they are wisely and seasonably ordered by him, who hedges up his people's way with thorns, that they may not find their crooked paths, and therefore I desire to submit to the rod, as the needful discipline of Christ's house, and to welcome his convictions and reproofs, as well as his comforts and smiles; and to bless him for afflictions as well as for mercies.

Q. 38. What do you think of the life of faith?

A. I believe it to be the most happy life, and that it ought to be the daily life of God's people while in this world. And I desire to study and learn this noble life of faith, and of dependence upon the Son of God, and to make daily use of his blood and righteousness to cover my guilt, and of his grace and strength to enable me to perform duty, conquer sin, resist temptation, and bear affliction.

Q. 39. What do you think of the spiritual welfare which Christ calls you to?

A. I look upon that war as just and honourable; and therefore do come in a volunteer at the sound of the gospel-trumpet, to list myself a soldier under Christ's banner. I for ever abandon the devil's camp, and am willing to swear allegiance to Christ Jesus, to take up arms for him, and to fight against his enemies, the world, the devil, and the flesh, all the days of my life. I resolve never to make peace with these enemies, nor agree to a cessation of arms. I will never wittingly nor willingly reset, nor give harbour to, the bosom traitors of indwelling lusts and corruptions; but under the conduct of my glorious Captain, and in his strength, I will carry on the war, till I attain to that complete victory which is promised to all believers in Christ.

Q. 40. What do you think of those who are deserters and runaways from Christ's standard?

A. I look upon them as guilty of the greatest madness, and exposed to the greatest wrath, seeing Christ's soul can take no pleasure in those who draw back from him; and therefore I purpose, through grace, to keep close by my Captain, and to adhere to his cause and interest all the days of my life.

Q. 41. In whose strength is it that you engage to all these parts and articles of the covenant?

A. Only in the strength of Jesus Christ my Head and Surety, who hath undertaken for me, and promised to make his grace forthcoming to me. Wherefore I altogether distrust my own strength and resolution, and betake myself to borrowed strength. I resolve never to trust in my promise to Christ, but in Christ's promise to me, that he will never leave me, nor forsake me.

Q. 42. Will you satisfy yourself with a public profession and engaging to these things before men?

A. No; I will, through grace, profess and declare all these things also in secret before God. And I will give my consent to all the parts and articles of God's covenant of grace, in the most serious and self-denied manner: and I will, by grace, bind and engage myself to them, by entering into secret transaction, or personal covenant with God, through Christ, before I come to take the seal of God's covenant. And afterwards I will adventure, in his strength, to approach to his holy table, to ratify and seal this bargain before men and angels.

EXAMPLE OF PLAIN CATECHISING.

PREFACE.

IN Scotland the ministers are obliged, by their church rules and constitutions, to be much employed in the work of catechising; and the good fruits of it appear; for there the people (comparatively speaking) are generally intelligent and orthodox: whereas, in those places where catechising is neglected, ignorance and error wofully prevail. It is found by experience, that there is more knowledge diffused among the ignorant and younger sort by one hour's catechising than by many hours' preaching: for by the method of catechising, the attention is provoked, as well as the understanding instructed, and memory gratified; whilst many excellent sermons are lost through the non-attention of the hearers, or the weakness of their memories.

In the primitive church, catechising was very much their work. They had many ministers set apart for it, called Catechists; and sundry of their most eminent lights were so called, for their excellencing and diligence in this good work. Before persons were admitted to the full communion of the church, they were from time to time to be catechised, and kept under trial; and till such time as they were judged fit to partake of the sacrament, they were called Catechumeni.

Our Lord enjoins all his ministers to be careful to feed the lambs of his flock, as well as the older sheep, John xxi. 15. And accordingly we find his apostles took care to feed the babes with milk before they were able to receive stronger meat, 1 Cor. iii. 1, 2; Heb. v. 12. As we have our catechisms, so they had forms of instruction, in which the young and weak were catechised, called a "form of knowledge," Rom. ii. 20; "a form of doctrine," Rom. vi. 17; "the firm of sound words," 2 Tim. i. 13; "the first principles of the oracles of God," Heb. v. 12; and "the principles of the doctrine of Christ," Heb. vi. 1. In these were both Theophilus and Apollos catechised, Luke i. 4; Acts xviii. 25; in both which texts the word in the Greek is catechised, which we have here rendered instructed. The apostle

Paul requires the people of Galatia to give all encouragement and support to those who laboured in the work of catechising among them, Gal. vi. 6, "Let him that is taught in the word communicate to him that teacheth in all good things." In the original it is, Let him that is catechised communicate to him that catechiseth. This office is not below the most learned divines, seeing Christ sets himself a pattern to us in it, by catechising his disciples, Matt. xvi. 15, 16.

We in this national church, through the Lord's mercy, are provided with excellent Catechisms, both Larger and Shorter, for our help in catechising. And the Assembly's Shorter Catechism, established in this church about ninety years ago, (which both we and the body of Protestant dissenters in our neighbour nations receive, and teach our children by,) is judged the most excellent summary we ever had, in so small a compass, of the great principles of the Christian religion, extracted from the word of God. It hath been greatly esteemed in foreign parts also, and upon that account hath been translated into Latin and Greek. In the hand of divine providence, it proves a noble fence against error, wherever it is received; and therefore the adversaries of truth are not a little displeased with it.

There was a very wild attempt lately made by an anonymous author to alter our Shorter Catechism, which was printed at London in the year 1735, under the title of "The Assembly's Shorter Catechism Revised." But the alterations therein made, being visibly designed to favour several errors now spread among us, several of the judicatories of this church judged themselves bound to give warning against the poison of it. Besides, there were remarks made upon it by a very judicious author at London, (to whom we stand much obliged,) which have been dispersed both there and here, as an antidote against it.

By the foresaid attempt I have been excited to consider our Shorter Catechism more closely than before, and must now own, the more I view it, I am the better pleased with it, and desire to bless God for raising up such noble instruments in the last age to frame it for us, and settle it among us; and reckon it a great mercy that we have not a Catechism of this kind to settle and frame among us in this degenerate and licentious age.

This Shorter Catechism being evidently founded upon the word of God, and a part of our standards to which we stand solemnly engaged; it becomes the lovers of truth to adhere firmly to it, and contend for it as a most valuable attainment in our Reformation, and always to wish and pray that it may be preserved entire to us and our posterity, and that generations to come may be trained up in the use of it to the latest ages.

We have had many Explanatory Catechisms upon it published, which have been most useful for increasing knowledge among us; but having observed, in those which I have seen, that either the answers are too prolix for the memories of learners, or else too short to explain the nature and reason of things, I have humbly made an essay in the following Catechism, to observe a medium between the foresaid extremes, and likewise to take in many things omitted by others.

It is highly the concern of us all to be well versed in the knowledge, and fixed in the belief, of the great truths of our holy religion, summed up in the Shorter Catechism; especially in this shaking time, when the winds of error are blowing, and the most sacred fundamental truths are openly attacked by Deists, Socinians, Arians, and others. As it is surprising to observe how fast erroneous books are spread and bought up at this day, so it is astonishing to behold to what height infidelity and damnable heresies are arrived in our age; while we who profess Christianity wrangle with one another, alas, infidelity prevails against us all; and it may cause us tremble to think what shall be the issue, if the God of truth do not in mercy arise and stop its career.

Whence is it that infidelity abounds, and the Christian revelation hath so many enemies? Alas! many are so bent to indulge themselves in vicious practices, that they cannot endure Christ's holy laws, which check them therein; and, therefore, study by all means to darken those truths and facts upon which these laws are founded, that they may render revelation doubtful and uncertain; and, further, that they may make it quite needless, they labour to advance reason as a sufficient guide in matters of religion, and as that which may conduct us in the way to happiness.

But if the bias of such persons to sensual lusts and pleasures would allow them freely to think upon this subject, and impartially to view the noble design and convincing proofs of Christianity, the more fully would they be satisfied of the necessity and excellency, as well as of the truth and certainty, of the gospel-revelation, and of its divine original. And if my testimony thereunto could have any weight, I can say, after the most serious inquiry, I have full freedom to give it, and which I here offer, with all humility, upon the following grounds:

Although my natural light or reason be sadly corrupted, yet the remains of it tell me that there is a God, and that he ought to be believed in what he saith, and obeyed in what he commands. And by the clearest evidences I am assured, that the mind of God, with respect to my salvation, is only now discovered to me in the Christian revelation, which I see is the completion of the Jewish institution. And this revelation, I find, doth confirm and perfect the religion of nature, seeing it corresponds with the dictates of natural reason and religion, and comes seasonably unto me to supply the great defects thereof.

Though the light of nature intimates to me, that my life should be just and virtuous, and that I should shun what is offensive to God, and that he ought to be worshipped and glorified by me his creature, yet it leaves me ignorant of the right way and manner of doing it: but the Christian revelation both informs me how God is to be worshipped and served, and also with the strongest arguments enforces that which is the design of natural religion, namely, the abandoning of sin and vice, and the practice of virtue and piety. This is the scope and aim of all its mysteries, precepts, promises, threatenings, examples, miracles, &c.

I find those who have had no more but reason to guide them, had but faint discoveries of divine things, and these notices had but small influence on their minds and practices; hence they generally entertained unworthy notions of God, and ran into gross idolatry, and the practice of the greatest abominations: but the Christian revelation gives us a noble description of the perfections of God, and of the worship and service he requires as suitable thereunto; and withal offers us grace to conform our souls unto them.

Natural reason can give no satisfying account of the creation of the world, the original of mankind, nor in what state our first parents came out of their Maker's hands; nor can it tell us how human nature fell from its original rectitude into the present state of guilt and impurity, nor how it can be recovered from it; nor can it account for the conduct of divine providence in the government of the world: but in the Christian revelation we find all these duly accounted for.

Natural religion, which is altogether founded upon reason, or the light of nature, cannot find out a way to ease the conscience of a convicted sinner, nor can it assure us that there is forgiveness with God for criminal creatures: it cannot show us how God may exercise mercy to them without the violation of his justice; nor point out any thing that can be a proper propitiation to God's justice, when injured and provoked by men: nature's light cannot tell how to make the pardon of sin consist with the wisdom of his government, the honour of his laws, and his hatred of sin. But we see how all this can be done by the Christian institution.

Again, it is but dark and uncertain views which natural religion gives us of the immortality of the soul, and of a future life. Sense and reason bring us to the grave, but cannot penetrate into the regions beyond it: but the gospel-revelation discovers to us the eternal mansions prepared in the heavens for the spirits of just men made perfect, and also the way leading to them.

In the Bible, which contains this revelation, we see the defects of natural religion nobly made up: we have a great Mediator set forth, that satisfies offended justice, removes the guilt and power of sin, and brings sinners into favour with God, and to eternal felicity; and in him all men are called to believe and trust for obtaining these blessed ends. And this is the Lord Jesus Christ. In the Old Testament he is foretold and promised as the Messiah that was to come; in the New Testament he is revealed as come, and the time and manner of his coming narrated. He came in due time, according to the Old Testament predictions, exactly answering all its types, prophecies, and promises, in his divinity and humanity; in his threefold office of prophet, priest, and king; and in his twofold state of humiliation and exaltation. So that, if Jesus Christ were not the true Messiah and Saviour of men, the glorious promises of the Old Testament, concerning the Messiah, must be all delusion, seeing their fulfilment was limited within periods of time which are long since past.

Our Messiah came not in the grandeur of an earthly monarch, as the carnal Jews expected, but as King of Zion, intending a spiritual monarchy in the world; and to instruct of his sovereignty and power in the kingdom of grace, he showed his dominion in the kingdom of nature, (which earthly kings cannot do) by opening the eyes of the blind, the ears of the deaf, and the mouth of the dumb; by raising the dead, casting out devils, and miraculously healing all sorts of diseases: yea, he gave power to his disciples to do the like, and to speak all languages of a sudden, without learning them; and to preach in them with such promptness and convincing energy, that their words pierced the consciences, and changed the minds and lives of men. Their doctrine did not favour the lusts and corruptions of men, nor had the force of human laws or arms to promote it, like the Mahometan religion; but, on the contrary, Christianity had all these against it: yet, in opposition to all these, it spread with astonishing success and rapidity through the world; so that, before the death of the apostles, there was not a corner of the Roman empire but had store of its professors. And though all the powers of earth and hell contended with fire and sword against the Christian religion, yet within less than three hundred years the whole known world was conquered by it. And seeing this triumphant success was not owing to the might, art, or eloquence of man, we must conclude it was brought about by the extraordinary power of that mighty God, who is the Author of this holy religion.

Such was the evidence of the apostles' testimony, and their successors in the primitive times, that not only the vulgar, but many of the best sense, wisdom, and learning, were overcome by it, and heartily embraced their doctrine, even when they had no prospect but of the greatest sufferings for so doing: such were Dionysius, Polycarp, Justin Martyr, Athenagoras, Tertullian, Origen, Clemens Alexandrinus, and many others. Surely nothing but the power of truth, which they evidently saw was countenanced by heaven, and confirmed by miracles, could have prevailed with such learned and curious inquirers, to hazard the loss of all things dear unto them, by embracing Christianity.

But, that I may come more closely to that proof which is most convincing of all, let it be considered, that the truth and verity of the Christian religion (of which our catechism is a compound) depends on the truth of a matter of fact, which (blessed be God) is better vouched and attested to us than any fact in the world, that we have not seen with our eyes. Wherefore, if the fact be true and certain, that such a person as Jesus Christ was born at Bethlehem in the reign of Augustus the Roman emperor, when the sceptre of power was departing from Judah; and that about thirty years afterwards, in the reign of the emperor Tiberius, this person Jesus Christ began to preach in Judea, where he travelled some years, lived a most holy life, wrought great miracles, foretold many events, and amongst others his own death and resurrection; and, according as he said, so he died, and rose again upon the third day: I say, if all this be certain fact, what reason have we to question but this person had a divine mission, and was the very person he gave out himself to be, and that the doctrine he taught, and instructed his disciples to teach, was the very truth?

That the facts above related are certain, we have the best evidence: for they are attested by many persons of great probity and candour, who were eye-witnesses to what they assert; and these witnesses all agree in the same testimony, and continued adhering thereto unto their last breath, notwithstanding of the sufferings and cruel deaths they were exposed to for owning these things. And not only they, but also several Jewish and Pagan writers, who lived in or near these times, confirm the truth of the principal facts concerning Jesus Christ which we have recorded in the New Testament: nay, the fiercest enemies of Christ, in the ancient ages, never presumed to deny the facts. So that for any person to call in question the truth of facts so well attested, would be to destroy the truth and credibility of all history.

As the facts contained in the New Testament have the fullest testimony that any ancient history can have, so it is very confirming to us, that all the eight writers of the New Testament agree so exactly in their testimony without variation or contradiction. Though those of them who wrote the historical parts relate different circumstances of facts and of miracles not mentioned by others, (which only shows they did not write by concert) yet they all agree in the matter: they give all the same account of Christ's birth, life, death, resurrection, and ascension: they agree with all the rest in their account of Christ's doctrine, and of the way of sinners' salvation by faith in Christ's righteousness, and by the virtue of his blood.

To confirm this doctrine, many miracles were wrought by Christ and his apostles; and that there might be no suspicion of fraud, these were done openly in sight of all the people, and in presence of learned men, Christ's enemies: and these miracles were often repeated, and that for many years, and had lasting effects on those upon whom they were wrought. And as for that great confirming miracle which Christ frequently referred to in his life, for proof of his Messiahship, viz. his rising from the dead—it was well attested by his many appearances after it to his disciples assembled together, yea, to five hundred of them at once, to whom the apostle Paul in his writings appealed for the truth of it, whilst most of them were alive. Yea, he not only appeared to them, but also taught them after his resurrection; and for their fuller satisfaction, he ate and drank with them, nay, he showed them the print of his wounds, and caused them to touch and handle his body.

It is to be observed, that Christ's disciples began openly to preach his resurrection, within a few weeks thereafter, in that very city where it happened, and even in face of those who put him to death; and no man attempted to disprove what they said, which his violent enemies wanted not will to do if they could. Nay, the truth of Christ's resurrection was so notorious in that country, that many thousands presently believed the disciples' testimony, embraced their doctrine, and became Christians. And as the disciples proclaimed Christ's resurrection every where, so they confirmed the truth of it with miracles wherever they came, and kept always the first day of the week in remembrance of it. These things being certain facts, clearly demonstrate to me, not only the truth of Christianity, but also the amazing unreasonableness of infidelity; and that, instead of free or just thinking, it argues the greatest thoughtlessness in those who give place to it.

Object. We in this age never saw Christ or his apostles, nor any of their miracles; no man now has the gift of tongues; we have none of these miracles now repeated for our confirmation.

Ans. 1. The only wise God thought Christ's bodily presence and these miracles to be necessary at the first planting of Christianity, when its doctrines were new to the world, and things opposite to it were to be abolished; but doth not think fit to continue them now, when no new doctrine or way of worship is proposed, but only the very same inculcated which Christ and his apostles had taught.

2. If miracles were ordinarily repeated, they would lose the use and force of miracles, which lies in their being extraordinary; for, if they were frequently repeated, they would become God's ordinary works, and not be much regarded by us.

3. Though Christ at his ascension left the earth, and his apostles are gone, so that we see them not, nor the miracles they wrought for the confirmation of our faith; yet by the evidences which remain, we may be as well assured of them as if we had seen them; and, in regard we are so much attached to things visible, our ascended Jesus, in his gracious condescension to the weakness of our faith, hath left us seven or eight visible testimonies or ocular demonstrations of the truth and certainty of these doctrines and facts, which are the foundations of our faith; as Christ's incarnation, his living and teaching in this world, with his crucifixion and resurrection. And to confirm us the more in the belief of these blessed truths, God in his mercy continues still before our eyes several standing witnesses of them; namely, 1. The writings of the apostles and evangelists, who were eye and ear witnesses of what they testify. 2. The honourable name which we bear of Christians, being that which the followers of Christ soon got after his leaving the world. 3. The beginning of the Christian era, or computation of years from the incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ, is directed by wise providence to put us in mind, every time we write, read, or mention the present year, 1744, or any other year, that it is just so many years since our glorious Redeemer came in the flesh to save lost sinners. 4. The continuance of a gospel-ministry, according to Christ's institution, to declare the foresaid truths and facts to the world. 5. The frequent dispensing of baptism, for the initiation of his disciples, as Christ hath appointed. 6. The administration of the Lord's supper, in commemoration of his death and sufferings. 7. The weekly observation of the Lord's day, in remembrance of his resurrection. These seven lasting monuments, being as old as the profession of Christianity, have continued, by the providence of God, descending through all ages for these seventeen hundred years past, as visible witnesses of the truth of it, that all men, having them daily before their eyes, may consider them as so many pledges of the facts, doctrines, and institutions of the New Testament.

To all which I may add an eighth visible witness, viz.; the present scattered condition of the Jewish nation over all the world, and yet never mixed with other nations so as to be lost among them. This strange preservation of them these 1700 years as a distinct people, amidst their many direful calamities, sufferings, and scatterings, is a wonderful instance of the interposition of divine providence, that keeps them as a standing memorial every where to the world, of the certainty of scripture prophecies and miracles, and particularly, of the New Testament history of the incarnation, life, and death of Jesus Christ, and of the truth of his prediction concerning that people. Likewise the long continuance of the Jewish nation, in such a dismal distinguished situation, points them out to the world as a lasting monument of the divine anger, for their woful rejecting and crucifying of the blessed Messiah and Saviour of the world. Now, all these outward visible things God in his wisdom and mercy hath placed before our eyes, to confirm us the more in the belief of the facts and doctrines contained in the books of the New Testament.

QUEST. How do we know that the books of the New Testament are written by the apostles and evangelists, and that they are still the same as they wrote them, without alteration?

Ans. We are well assured these books are written by those whose names they bear, and that they are still the same they were at first, not only because of God's watchful providence over them, but in regard of those clear evidences: 1. The writers of the first and second centuries, as Justin, Irenaeus, Clemens, &c., cite these books under the names they still bear; they quote texts from them as they stand in our bibles, and make use of them in the same sense that we do; yea, Tertullian sometimes appeals to the original manuscripts of these books, which were preserved to his time (being then about the two hundredth year of Christ) and long after, as other writers attest. 2. These books could not be altered, because of the vast number of copies that were transcribed, and that in different languages, and soon dispersed with Christianity itself through all parts of the known world; and yet still we find all these copies, however distant in place, or different in language, exactly agreeing together in sense. 3. Soon after the apostles' death, there arose many different sects of Christians of opposite sentiments, who yet all appealed to these writings for the support of their opinions: and to be sure these would never agree together to falsify them; neither did one side ever accuse the other of doing it.

And for the books of the Old Testament, which greatly support the facts and doctrines of the New, and were themselves also confirmed by miracles, the Jews were careful, even to superstition, to preserve these pure and uncorrupted, placing much of their religion in numbering how often such and such words and letters recurred in the particular books. And though Christ reproved that people for many things wrong among them, yet he never accused them of falsifying any thing in these writings.

Moreover, we have such visible marks of the divine original of the whole bible, in the antiquity of its histories, the accomplishment of its prophecies, the purity of its precepts, the harmony of its different parts, and the excellency of its design, as cannot but be very convincing and satisfying to all thinking persons. Whence could we have had such a book as the bible, written by so many different hands, and yet all aiming at the same design, namely, to glorify God, to lead souls to Christ, to promote holiness, and to root out all sin and vice? Who else but God could be its author? A bad man or angel it could not be, seeing all the books and parts of it declare most warmly for truth and virtue, and against all lying and dissimulation: a good man or good angel it could not be, seeing it could never consist with their grace and goodness to dissemble and counterfeit God's name in such a way, by putting "Thus saith the Lord," to a book of their own devising.

Lastly, Beside these convincing external evidences, there are many thousands in the world who have satisfying inward evidence, and experimental demonstration of the truth and excellency of the gospel-revelation, from the effects of it in their souls, through the concurrence of the Spirit of God; for thereby their proud minds have been made humble: their revengeful spirits made meek and forgiving, their carnal hearts made to love

God and mind heaven above all things, their loose and uncircumspect lives have become just, holy, pious, and devout; and, in attending upon Christ's institutions, they have attained to great peace and joy in believing on him. And, for mine own part, I would not exchange the inward satisfaction and complacency I have sometimes had in going with the gospel-method of salvation, and resting my soul upon a crucified Jesus, with any king's crown in the world. And what can be more confirming than feeling or taste? It will not be easy to persuade a man that honey is not sweet, who hath tasted it once and again. If the Holy Spirit would please to come and concur with the gospel-revelation by his gracious operations on the soul, it would be the most effectual way to establish us in the belief of the truth of Christian religion, and to fortify us against all temptations to infidelity. Wherefore, that truth may prevail and ever vanish, may the Spirit be poured out from on high, as in former times. Amen.

A WORD TO CHRISTIAN PARENTS, AND ALL WHO HAVE THE CHARGE OF CHILDREN OR SERVANTS, ESPECIALLY THOSE IN DUNDEE.

MY DEAR FRIENDS,

THE care of precious souls is a great trust committed to you by God, and to him you are accountable for it. The instruction of youth is not to be left wholly to ministers, to school-masters or mistresses. No; parents ought to be instilling good principles into children, and masters into servants, as they have occasion, which might serve to leave abiding impressions on them many years thereafter; and so ye would become "fellow-helpers of the truth," as in 3 John viii. Pray do not think this is left to your option, to do it or not as you please: no; you are under an express divine command, O parents, to bring up your children "in the admonition of the Lord;" that is, in teaching them the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, Eph. iv. 4. The word translated "admonition," properly signifies "catechising." Likewise, the word which is rendered "train up," Prov. xxii. 6, signifies to "catechise" a child when he is young. The command which God gave to the Israelites, to teach his will and statutes to their children, is still binding on you, Deut. vi. 7, "Thou shalt teach them unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." Abraham had a strong sense of his duty in this respect; and therefore he not only taught, but commanded, both his children and servants, to keep the ways of the Lord, Gen. xviii. 19. And can we expect to land in Abraham's bosom, if we tread not in Abraham's footsteps?

O fellow Christians! your enlisting yourselves and your children at baptism, under Christ's banner, obligeth you to use your best endeavours to enlarge the borders of his kingdom, and to ruin the empire of darkness. You pray that his kingdom may come; and this binds you to choose the best means to obtain what you pray for, namely, to instruct the rising generation in the knowledge of Christ. This would make your piety extend to ages to come; for your example herein may be a motive to them to tread in the same steps, and so one generation will thus teach another. Do you yourselves know the joyful sound of salvation through our glorious Surety, and will ye not desire to make others know it too? You ought to say with the four lepers, when they found plenty in the Syrian camp, "It is a day of good tidings, we do not well to hold our peace," 2 Kings vii. 9. This is a godlike disposition, and would make you resemble God himself; for when he saw the world perishing in darkness, he pitied them, and came himself in our nature to teach them the way of salvation.

For your help in this work you have the Shorter Catechism of this church, which contains an excellent scheme, both of the principles of religion which you are to believe, and of the duties of religion which you are to practise. And though the smaller one, such as the Mother's Catechism, may be useful as introductory to it, yet, when children and servants are capable, it is necessary that they get our Shorter Catechism by heart, which you may cause them to do, by prescribing so much of it to them every week, until they come to have it throughout. And because it is short and most comprehensive, I have framed the following Explanatory Catechism upon it, for your assistance in catechising those under your charge, whereby you may be helped to open up to them at large the precious truths of our holy religion, and so prepare them the better for the public catechising, which would make the work of ministers pleasant and delightful to them.

And because the answers in the following Catechism are generally short, it will not be a very hard task for young persons of good memories to get the most of them by heart, and to repeat them. And for those whose memories are weaker, it would be very instructing to them frequently to read over this book; for thereby they might soon be capable to answer satisfactorily most of the questions in it, though in other words than those in the book. It would also make children better acquainted with the scriptures, if their teachers would require them to give account of some of these texts cited therein, which have not the words set down.

If heads of families would convene their children and servants every Sabbath evening, and make use of this book, or the like explication, going over at one time two questions of the Shorter Catechism, or thereby, with the explanatory catechising thereupon, you would go over the whole book thus once every year. And the following method may be observed: Let the master or the mistress of the family ask the question of the Shorter Catechism, and let the answer be returned, without book, by one of the family; and then let that person take the book, and ask the first explanatory question upon it at his next neighbour, who may read the answer from the book, if he cannot repeat it; and then let him who answered ask the second explanatory question at his neighbour, who is to answer it as before; and then ask the next question at his neighbour, and so on; the rest in the mean time attending and going along with the person reading or repeating, with their several books, if they have them, or else making use of their neighbour's, by which means their thoughts, which are apt to wander, will be the more fixed and intent upon what they are about.

And to conclude, let me likewise humbly entreat young persons, diligently to improve all such helps and means of instruction in the season of youth, and carefully to prepare for and attend all diets of catechising, whether in private or public, and hearken with delight to parents, masters, or ministers, who would teach them the things which concern their everlasting peace. O consider how many young people are hurried into eternity before they know and lay these things to heart! Believe it, dear sirs, there is no heaven without Christ, no interest in Christ without faith, and no faith without knowledge. May therefore "the earth be filled with the knowledge of Christ, as the waters cover the sea!" Amen.

DUNDEE, 12th April, 1737.

QUESTION I.

Q. What is the chief end of man?

A. Man's chief end is to glorify God, and to enjoy him for ever.

Q. What do we mean by man's chief end?

A. The main thing which a man should intend and aim at in his living in the world, and look upon as the great design of his creation.

Q. What is that great and chief end?

A. In the answer it is branched out into two parts, the principal end being to glorify God, and the less principal to enjoy him for ever.

Q. Can man add any thing to God's essential glory?

A. No; for that being infinite, no addition can be made to it.

Q. How then can we glorify God?

A. By declaring and showing forth his glory before the world.

Q. How may we do that?

A. By acknowledging God's perfections; by adoring and trusting in him; by praising him with our lips, and ordering our conversation according to his word, Psal. l. 23.

Q. How are we said to give glory to God by confessing our sins? as in Josh. vii. 19.

A. Because, by so doing, we own God to be infinite in knowledge, from whom no secrets can be hid; and in justice, though he should proceed to punish us for our sins.

Q. Wherefore should we make it our chief end to glorify God?

A. Because of the infinite obligations we are under to God, as being our almighty Creator, our gracious Preserver, and merciful Redeemer.

Q. When is it that we eat and drink for the glory of God, as the apostle directs, 1 Cor. x. 31?

A. When we do it in obedience to God's command, for preserving life and health, that we may be capable to honour and serve God here below.

Q. May not other creatures declare the glory of God, as well as man?

A. Yes; the heavens do it, Psal. xix. 1, as they show forth the glory of God's wisdom and power in an objective and passive manner; but none can do it actively but rational creatures.

Q. Do all men make it their chief end to glorify God?

A. No; for many men, instead of glorifying God, woefully dishonour him.

Q. Who are those?

A. Those who forget God, or disobey his laws.

Q. Who are they that forget God?

A. They who do not pray to God, nor praise him for his mercies; and they who are formal in his worship, and do not remember his word.

Q. What will become of those who forget God?

A. It is said, Psal. ix. 17, they "shall be turned into hell."

Q. Did God make all things for his own glory?

A. Yes.

Q. If men do not make this their end, will God lose his end in making them?

A. No; for if God be not glorified by them, he will glorify himself upon them, even his justice, in their destruction, Prov. xvi. 4.

Q. Is it not lawful to aim at lower ends than God's glory, as for a man to be diligent in his calling, for the end that he may provide for himself and his family?

A. Yes; but these lower ends must be intended in subordination to man's chief and ultimate end, the glory of God.

Q. Do we promote our own happiness, by making God's glory our chief end?

A. Yes; and therefore glorifying God, and enjoying him for ever, are connected in the answer.

Q. Must we study to glorify God on earth, if we would enjoy him in heaven?—A. Yes.

Q. Are we able of ourselves to glorify God?

A. No; the fall hath disabled us; but by Christ and his grace we may be strengthened to do it in some measure.

Q. What is it to enjoy God?

A. It is to possess God's love and favour, or to be blessed with his gracious presence.

Q. And doth man's true happiness lie in this?

A. Yes.

Q. May not a man thus enjoy God upon earth?

A. Yes; the saints have God's gracious presence in some measure in his ordinances here below, but they will enjoy God in another manner in heaven.

Q. What is the difference betwixt our enjoying God here and hereafter?

A. Our enjoyment of God here is very short and imperfect; but in heaven it will be everlasting, full, and immediate. It is there the saints shall "see him as he is," and "be like him," and "be ever with the Lord," 1 John iii. 2; 1 Thess. iv. 17.

Q. Why doth our chief happiness lie in the enjoyment of God?

A. Because God, being the chiefest good, and infinite in his perfections, can only satisfy the boundless desires of our immortal souls. He is a portion that suits both their spiritual nature, and perpetual duration, Psal. lxxiii. 25, 26.

Q. How shall we attain to the enjoyment of God?

A. We must receive Christ the mediator, live the life of faith and self-denial, study purity of heart and life, and be much in the exercise of prayer and praise.

Q. What is the chief end or design of wicked men?

A. To gratify their sensual appetites, and to enjoy the best things this world affords.

Q. Can the enjoyment of the world's good things make us happy?

A. No; for, as they suit not the soul's demands, so they are too short and uncertain to afford us any solid satisfaction.

Q. Can wicked men expect to enjoy God hereafter?

A. No; for they who shall enjoy God above must be made meet for it here below.

Q. Who are meet to enjoy God?

A. Those who are sanctified.

Q. What will become of those who miss the enjoyment of God in heaven?

A. Their portion will be in hell with hypocrites and unbelievers.

Q. When should a man begin to think seriously of his chief end?

A. In the days of youth, Eccl. xii. 1.

Q. May we not delay it until some convenient time afterwards?

A. No; for there is no time so convenient; and the time which we propose may never come, seeing death surpriseth very many, Luke xii. 20.

Q. When must we have done glorifying God?

A. Never.

Q. Will that ever be thought a tedious task?

A. No; for it is the delight of gracious souls to do the will of God; and therefore in the most happy place, it is said, "There his servants shall serve him," Psal. xl. 8; Rev. xxii. 3.

QUESTION II.

Q. What rule hath God given to direct us, how we may glorify and enjoy him?

A. The word of God (which is contained in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament,) is the only rule to direct us, how we may glorify and enjoy him.

Q. How is this question connected with the preceding?

A. As the former shows the end of our creation, so this points out the rule or means for attaining to that end, viz. the Scriptures.

Q. Why do we call the word of God the Scriptures?

A. We call God's word the Scriptures, that is, writings, by way of eminence; as they are the most valuable and useful writings in the world.

Q. Why are these writings called the word of God?

A. Because God either spake them himself, or ordered men to write them.

Q. Is not Christ called the Word likewise?

A. Yes; but Christ is the essential Word of God, and the Bible is only the written Word of God?

Q. Why is Christ called the Word of God?

A. Because he is the express image of the Father, as our words are the image or picture of our hearts.

Q. Seeing the Bible is mostly spoken and written by men, is it not more properly the words of men than of God?

A. No; for though it be spoken and written by holy men, yet they did it, not according to their own will or wisdom, but as they were inspired and moved thereto by the Holy Ghost; 2 Peter i. 21.

Q. Who was the first penman of the holy Scriptures?

A. Moses.

Q. What part of them did he write?

A. The first five books, to wit, Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy.

Q. What remarkable things doth his first book contain?

A. The history of the creation of the world, of man's fall, of the world's destruction by the flood, and many signal transactions with respect to the church for above two thousand years before Moses was born.

Q. If there were no writings before him, how could he be certified of the truth of these things?

A. By divine revelation, as well as human tradition.

Q. Why did God order his word to be written?

A. That his church might have a fixed and standing rule of faith and practice for all future ages, and might not be imposed on by uncertain traditions.

Q. How could the church subsist, and religion be kept pure for so long a time before Moses, when there was no written word?

A. By reason of the few families to which the church was then confined, the long lives of the godly patriarchs, and the frequent appearances of God unto them in dreams, visions, and audible voices; and also by sending his angels unto them.

Q. By what arguments do you prove that the scriptures are the word of God, and that they are written by divine inspiration?

A. By the holiness of the matter of them, the heavenliness of the style, the harmony of the different parts, the efficacy of the doctrine on the soul, the many miracles wrought in confirmation of them, and the joyful sufferings of martyrs for them.

Q. Is there not something else that is more effectual to persuade us of the divinity of the Scriptures than all these arguments?

A. Though these be sufficient to convince men of reason, and to stop the mouths of gainsayers; yet it is the Spirit of God bearing witness by and with the scriptures in our hearts, that only can establish us in the belief of the scriptures being the very word of God, John xvi. 13.

Q. How are the scriptures divided?

A. Into two parts; to wit, the scriptures of the Old and New Testament.

Q. Why are they called a Testament?

A. Because they contain God's will concerning the salvation of sinners, as it was revealed and confirmed by Christ the Testator. And this will is either called a Testament or Covenant.

Q. Do the scriptures of the Old and New Testament contain two different testaments or covenants?

A. No; they both hold forth one and the same covenant of grace for substance, seeing we find the same Mediator, and the same way of salvation through faith in him, pointed at in both. But the circumstances and forms of administering this covenant being so very different, it is distinguished into the Old and New Testament, or the Old and New Covenant of Grace.

Q. Why are the scriptures in the former part of the Bible called the Old Testament?

A. Because they contain the old dispensation of the covenant of grace before Christ's coming in the flesh, which was by manifold rites, prophecies, types, and sacrifices, all prefiguring the Messiah then to come.

Q. Why are the scriptures in the latter part of the Bible called the New Testament?

A. Because they set forth the new dispensation of the covenant, by Christ's coming in the flesh to fulfil the types and figures of the Old Testament, and instituting a more spiritual worship in the room thereof, and revealing his grace more clearly and extensively to the world.

Q. How could the first part of the Bible have the force of a Testament, while it was not confirmed by the death of the Testator?

A. It was confirmed by Christ's death typically in slain sacrifices, on which account Christ is called the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." And the blessings of the Old Testament, being disposed to believers, in view of the actual death of the Testator prefigured by the slaying of the sacrifices, were upon their believing made good to them.

Q. Are the scriptures of the Old Testament a part of our rule as well as the New?

A. Yes; for they express much of Christ and his gospel; they contain the moral law, and are often cited in the New Testament, Mat. xxii. 29, &c.; John v. 39; Acts xvii. 11; Rom. xv. 4; 1 Cor. x. 6; Heb. iv. 2; Gal. iii. 8.

Q. Are the writings in the Apocryphal books to be read and received as the word of God?

A. No; for though they are useful, as many other human writings, yet they are no part of holy scripture; seeing we find they are not written in the original language of the Old Testament, nor by any of the inspired prophets, but after Malachi, who was the last of them: nor were they owned as canonical by the Jews, to whom of old were committed the oracles of God.

Q. Doth the authority of the scriptures depend upon the testimony of the church?

A. No; for the church herself is built on the scriptures as her foundation, and whatever the church teaches is to be tried by them, Eph. ii. 19, 20; Isa. viii. 20; Acts xvii. 11.

Q. Is there nothing else to be received as a rule to direct us in the way to happiness, but the Holy Scriptures?

A. No; not our natural reason, as Deists assert; not unwritten traditions, as Papists teach; not the light within, or spirit without the scriptures, as Quakers and enthusiasts pretend to, Isa. viii. 20; Gal. vi. 16; 1 John iv. 1, 6.

Q. Why is not the light of nature or reason sufficient to direct us in the way to happiness?

A. Because, though it teach us that there is a God, and that he is to be worshipped; yet it cannot discover to us the wonderful work of redemption through Jesus Christ.

Q. But is the word of God sufficiently plain, full, and perfect, to be a rule to us?

A. Whatever Papists object against it, to make way for their traditions and papal decrees; yet, the rule of God's word is sufficiently plain and complete, as it contains the whole counsel of God concerning all things necessary for us to know or believe for promoting God's glory and our salvation. And this we have, either in express words, or in just and necessary consequences, obvious to the weakest understanding, 2 Tim. iii. 15—17; Psal. xvi. 7—9; Psal. cxix. 105, 130.

Q. Do the scriptures then contain the whole revealed will of God to the world?—A. Yes.

Q. Are we to believe nothing but what we have written in the word of God?

A. Yes, many things, though not as necessary to salvation.

Q. Is the word of God to be observed as our rule of worship, as well as of faith?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it not lawful for us to add some decent inventions to the worship of God, as the sign of the cross in baptism, kneeling at the Lord's supper, bowing to the altar, the organ in praise, &c.

A. No: not a pin should be added to the tabernacle but what is of God's own appointment, Heb. viii. 5.

Q. What doth the apostle call such inventions and additions?

A. Beggarly elements and will-worship, Gal. iv. 19; Col. ii. 23.

Q. What will God say to those who add them?

A. He will say to them, as to the Jews, Isa. i. 12, "Who hath required these things from your hand?"

Q. How should we value the scriptures?

A. We should reckon it a great mercy and privilege that we have God's will revealed in them, as a light to guide us in the way to heaven; and therefore we should dearly love them, and dearly use them.

Q. Are they not in a miserable case who want the scriptures?

A. Yes; for where there is no vision, the people perish, Prov. xxix. 18.

Q. Will the word save any without the Spirit's influence?—A. No.

Q. What will become of those who have the word, and yet despise it?

A. They will be destroyed, Prov. xiii. 14.

QUESTION III.

Q. What do the scriptures principally teach?

A. The scriptures principally teach what man is to believe concerning God, and what duty God requires of man?

Q. What are the two great lessons which the scriptures teach us?

A. The scriptures teach us, 1. The truths we must believe. 2. The duties we must perform.

Q. Why is faith put before obedience?

A. Because faith is the spring and principle of all true obedience, and no duty can be performed acceptably without it, Heb. xi. 6.

Q. What do the scriptures teach us to believe concerning God?

A. Three things; as, 1. That God is. 2. What God is. 3. What God doth. And therefore we should aim to grow in the knowledge and belief of the being, the nature, and the works of God.

Q. Ought we not, in the first place, to study to be established in the belief of the being of a God?—A. Yes.

Q. How doth it appear that there is a God?

A. This is evident, not only from the bible, but also from the light of nature, the works of creation, the being of the heavens, earth, and sea, with the various creatures therein; the beautiful order and motion of the luminaries of heaven, the regular ebbing and flowing of the sea, the wonderful frame of man's body and soul, the miracles which have been wrought, the prophecies which have been fulfilled, the consent of all nations to this truth, and the conscience of man, which accuses him when guilty, and excuses him when innocent. All these plainly declare the being of God, to the confounding of all those who would oppose this most clear and evident truth.

Q. How do we call those who think there is no God?

A. We call them Atheists.

Q. What doth the Spirit of God call them?

A. Fools, Psal. xiv. 1.

Q. Why are they called fools?

A. Because what they imagine is contrary to the rational dictates of their own souls, and the common sentiments of all the wise and sober part of mankind, and also against the testimony of every creature; seeing the being and wisdom of God may evidently be seen in every thing we set our eyes upon; as a bird, a fly, a tree, a flower, and every pile of grass.

QUESTION IV.

Q. What is God?

A. God is a Spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable, in his being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth.

Q. Is it possible for creatures to give any perfect definition of God?—A. No.

Q. Are not all our uptakings of the nature and essence of God most imperfect.—A. Yes.

Q. Why are they so?

A. Because the nature of God, being spiritual and infinite, is so exalted above us, that he cannot be declared by human speech, perceived by human sense, or conceived by human understanding, Job xi. 7—9.

Q. What sort of substance is God?

A. God is a Spirit, John iv. 24.

Q. What is a spirit?

A. An invisible being, or substance, that hath understanding and will, without a body or bodily parts, Luke xxiv. 39.

Q. Are not angels and the souls of men spirits too?—A. Yes.

Q. What difference is there between God and these spirits?

A. These are but finite spirits, created by God, and dependent upon him; but God is an uncreated Spirit, infinite and independent, who made all things according to his pleasure.

Q. If God be a Spirit, how doth the scripture ascribe face, eyes, ears, mouth, hands, and other bodily parts unto God?

A. These are not proper, but only figurative expressions of God: for if God should speak in his own language, and describe himself to us, as he really is, we could not understand him; therefore he is pleased to speak of himself to us after the manner of men, in condescension to our weak capacities, who cannot conceive of the divine perfections and operations without such shadows and resemblances. Wherefore we must understand all these bodily parts in a spiritual sense.

Q. What ought we to understand by them?

A. By the face of God we are to understand the manifestation of his favour; by his eyes, his omniscience, and watchful providence; by his ears, his readiness to hear our prayers; by his mouth, the revelation of his will; by his hand or arm, the greatness of his power; by his heart, the sincerity of his affection; by his bowels, the tenderness of his compassions; by his feet, the ubiquity of his presence.

Q. If God be a Spirit, how was man said to be created after the image of God?

A. The image of God in man did not consist in any bodily shape or likeness, but in the spiritual faculties and excellencies of his soul, in regard of its being a spirit, invisible, immortal, knowing, righteous, and holy.

Q. Is it lawful to represent God, who is a Spirit, by any image or picture, as the papists pretend to do, for a help in worship?

A. No: for, as it is impossible to do it, so it is most sinful to attempt it; seeing such mean representations are a great disparagement to the majesty of an infinitely glorious God, and also a manifest contempt of his laws, which strictly forbid any such practice, Deut. iv. 15, 16; Isa. xl. 18; Acts xvii. 29.

Q. How is it that God is described to us in the catechism?

A. By his essential properties, or excellencies, which we find ascribed to God in scripture, commonly called his attributes.

Q. How are the attributes of God divided?

A. Into two sorts; some being incommunicable, and others called communicable.

Q. What are the incommunicable attributes of God, mentioned in the answer?

A. They are three, to wit, his infinity, eternity, and unchangeableness.

Q. Why are these called incommunicable?

A. Because they cannot be communicated to any creature; and there is no resemblance of them to be found in creatures.

Q. What are those attributes of God which are called communicable?

A. They are six, to wit, his wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth.

Q. Why are these called communicable?

A. Because there are some faint rays or resemblances of them to be seen in some creatures, as in good men and good angels; and hence they are called wise, holy, just, good, &c.

Q. What is it to be infinite?

A. It is to be without all measure, bounds, or limits.

Q. In what respect is God said to be infinite?

A. 1. In respect of his essence, greatness, and glory; and so he is immense, unsearchable, and incomprehensible. 2. He is infinite in his wisdom, power, and all the other perfections of his nature; no bounds can be set unto them. 3. In respect of place, being everywhere present, and unbounded by any place. 4. In respect of duration, being eternal, and bounded by no time.

Q. What understand you by God's being eternal?

A. That he is without beginning, and without end; which no creature can pretend to; for though angels and men's souls have no end, yet they had a beginning; but God, who made them, is "from everlasting to everlasting," Psal. xc. 2.

Q. What do ye understand by God's being unchangeable?

A. That he is still the same, and subject to no variableness or change, either with respect to his essential perfections, or his counsels and designs, or his love and favour towards his people, Psal. cii. 27; Isa. xlv. 10; Rom. xi. 22; Jam. i. 17.

Q. If God be unchangeable, how is repentance attributed to him in scripture, as Jer. xviii. 8, and other places?

A. Not properly, but improperly. God there speaks of himself after the manner of men, because he doth the same thing which men do when they repent and change their minds; he alters the course of his dispensations, but still without any change of counsels. For, whatever change appear in God's outward conduct, it is exactly according to his infallible prescience and immutable will; and doth not import any change of mind in God, as it doth in us.

Q. What is meant by the wisdom of God?

A. That essential perfection whereby he perfectly knows all things, and skilfully orders and disposes all things to their proper ends, for his own glory.

Q. Wherein doth the wisdom of God most brightly appear?

A. God's wisdom shines forth both in his works of creation and providence; but the brightest discovery we have of it is in the contrivance of our redemption by Jesus Christ, in a way that both satisfies justice in the punishment of sin, and magnifies mercy in the salvation of the sinner, Psal. civ. 24; Col. ii. 3.

Q. What is the power of God?

A. The essential property of God, whereby he is almighty, or able to do all things that he pleaseth to have done, Gen. xvii. 1; Jer. xxxii. 17.

Q. We read of God, that he cannot lie, repent, or deny himself: how then is he able to do all things?

A. These things are not objects of power. The doing of them, being contrary to God's holy nature and veracity, would argue imperfection and weakness, but not power.

Q. Wherein is God's almighty power discovered to us?

A. In creating the world by his word, and upholding all things in it, in conquering the power of hell by Christ's death, in working miracles, raising the dead, converting sinners to himself, preserving his church, and subduing his enemies, Rom. i. 20; Heb. i. 3; 1 Cor. i. 24; Eph. i. 19; Mat. xvi. 18.

Q. What is the holiness of God?

A. That essential perfection, whereby he is infinitely pure, and free from all iniquity, loveth righteousness, and abhorreth all sin and impurity, Heb. i. 13.

Q. Wherein doth God's holiness, and hatred of sin appear?

A. In making pure and holy laws, encouraging men to obey them; threatening and punishing sin, which is contrary to them; and especially in sending his eternal Son to assume our nature, and live in it, to be a pattern of holiness to us; and also to die, that he might root out sin and impurity, and purchase perfect holiness for us, Rom. vii. 12; 1 Thess. iv. 3; Eph. v. 25—27.

Q. What is the justice of God?

A. It is the perfect equity of his nature, which inclines him to will what is just and right, to render to every man his due, and to deal righteously with all his creatures.

Q. What discoveries have we of the justice of God?

A. In sending terrible judgments upon men for their sins in this world, and executing eternal vengeance upon the wicked in hell; and in rewarding the righteous upon the account of Christ's merits, Rom. ii. 5, 6, &c.; 2 Thess. i. 7—9; 2 Tim. iv. 8.

Q. What is the greatest evidence of the justice of God, that ever he gave to the world?

A. His pouring out the vials of his wrath upon his own Son, when he stood Surety for us; and exacting full satisfaction from him for all the debts or sins of an elect world, without abating him one farthing, Isa. liii. 4; Rom. iii. 25, 26; viii. 32.

Q. Doth God's infinite justice hinder him from being merciful?

A. No; for, through Christ's mediation, he exerts his infinite mercy and goodness to the world, as well as his justice.

Q. Wherein doth the goodness and mercy of God appear?

A. In our daily preservation, and supplying the wants of all his creatures; in sparing his enemies, and chiefly in providing Christ to be a Surety for them; in offering them salvation through him, and particularly in pardoning, sanctifying, and giving eternal glory to all who believe in him.

Q. What is the truth of God?

A. That essential property which always inclines him to be sincere and true in what he saith, and to be faithful in fulfilling his word.

Q. Wherein doth the truth and faithfulness of God appear?

A. In accomplishing the predictions recorded in his word, in executing his threatenings against the wicked, and in fulfilling all his promises to his people, Matt. xxiv. 35; Zech. i. 6; Heb. x. 23.

Q. Wherein do these perfections of wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth, which belong to God, differ from these we find in angels or men?

A. These perfections being essential to God, he is infinite, eternal, and unchangeable in them; but any inferior degree of these perfections we see in creatures the same is communicated from God to them, and is subject to change.

QUESTION V.

Q. Are there more Gods than one?

A. There is but one only, the living and true God.

Q. In what respect is God said to be one?

A. God is one, 1. In opposition to mixture and composition, he being a most pure and simple essence. 2. In opposition to multitude, he being numerically one in essence and nature, and no other like him.

Q. Why is God said to be the one only God?

A. To show that, though there be others that bear the name of gods in the world, yet there is none really God, but he alone, 1 Cor. viii. 4—6.

Q. Why is this one God called the living God?

A. To distinguish him from the dead idols of the nations, and to show that all life, natural, spiritual, and eternal, is originally in him, and from him only, Psal. cxv. 4, 5; John v. 26; 1 Tim. vi. 13.

Q. Why is he called the true God?

A. To distinguish him from all the false and imaginary deities that are in the world, Jer. x. 10, 11, 15.

Q. Who are these mentioned in scripture that bear the name of god, besides the true God?

A. We find several called gods, as the heathen idols, the devil, antichrist, and magistrates, 1 Cor. viii. 5; 2 Cor. iv. 4; 2 Thess. ii. 4; Psal. lxxxii. 6.

Q. Why are the heathen idols called gods?

A. Not that there is any thing of true divinity in them, but because their deluded worshippers fancied that they were gods, and reputed them so.

Q. Can any of the heathen gods give rain?

A. No; Jer. xiv. 22.

Q. Can they create a world, or know the heart?

A. No; they cannot, and therefore ought not to be worshipped, Jer. x. 11.

Q. How is the devil called god?

A. He is called the god of this world, because he rules over the unregenerate world; he usurps divine homage, and is actually worshipped in many parts by the heathen, 2 Cor. iv. 4; Deut. xxxii. 17; Rev. ix. 20.

Q. How is antichrist called god?

A. In respect of his usurping the titles, homage, and prerogatives, which are only due to God, 2 Thess. ii. 4.

Q. How are magistrates called gods?

A. Only improperly, and by participation; they being God's vicegerents on earth, to minister justice to others, Psal. lxxxii. 6.

Q. Do not some make the world their god?

A. Yes; and hence covetous men are called idolaters, Eph. v. 5; Col. iii. 5.

Q. Why are they called so?

A. Because they set their hearts upon the world more than upon God.

Q. Do not some make a god of their belly?

A. Yes; Phil. iii. 19.

Q. How are they guilty of this?

A. By studying to serve and please their belly more than God.

Q. How do ye prove that there is but one God and no more?

A. 1. From holy scripture, that frequently asserts this; as in Deut. vi. 4; Mal. ii. 10; Matt. xix. 17; 1 Cor. viii. 4, 6. 2. From reason; for seeing God is an infinite, omnipotent, independent, and most perfect Being, and also the first cause of all things; reason must certainly conclude that there can be but one such being, and no more, and that there cannot be a plurality of infinites and first causes.

Q. Who are they that are guilty of multiplying gods to themselves?

A. Both the pagans and the papists; seeing they actually worship and pray to others besides the one true God; so do the papists to saints and angels.

Q. But may not professed Protestants be chargeable with multiplying gods to themselves?

A. Yes; for though they profess to own and worship the one true God only, yet many set up idols in their hearts, and study to serve and please other things more than God, Ezek. xiv. 3; Phil. iii. 19.

Q. What is incumbent on us, when others will not worship and serve this one true God?

A. We should, with Joshua, resolve and say, that we and ours will serve the Lord, Josh. xxiv. 15.

Q. Doth any man serve God for nought?

A. No; for he rewards all his faithful servants with a crown of life, Rev. ii. 10.

QUESTION VI.

Q. How many persons are there in the Godhead?

A. There are three persons in the Godhead, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one God, the same in substance, equal in power and glory.

Q. What is meant by the Godhead?

A. The divine nature or essence.

Q. Is this word "Godhead" to be found in scripture?

A. Yes; in Acts xvii. 29, "We ought not to think the Godhead is like unto gold or silver," &c.

Q. Are there three essences or natures in the Godhead?

A. No; but only three persons in one divine essence.

Q. How do ye prove that there are three persons in the Godhead?

A. 1. From that express assertion, 1 John v. 7, "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one." 2. From the institution of baptism, Matt. xxviii. 19, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." 3. From the apostolical benediction, 2 Cor. xiii. 14, "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen."

Q. What do ye think of that proof of the Trinity which is brought from Christ's baptism at Jordan? Matt. iii. 16, 17.

A. It is most clear; for there the Father is manifested by a voice from heaven, the Son by his bodily appearance upon earth, and the Holy Ghost by lighting on him in shape of a dove.

Q. Well then, is the Father God; the Son God; and the Holy Ghost God?

A. Yes; each one of them is God.

Q. Will not that make three Gods?

A. No; these three persons are but one God; because the same divine nature or essence is in all the three.

Q. What mean you by a person in the Godhead?

A. It is the divine nature subsisting in a different way, and distinguished by different personal properties.

Q. What are the different personal properties of the three persons in the Godhead?

A. It is proper to the Father to beget the Son, and send out the Holy Ghost. It is proper to the Son to be begotten of the Father, and to send out the Holy Ghost. It is proper to the Holy Ghost to proceed by emanation from the Father and the Son. All which appears from these scriptures, Psal. ii. 7; Heb. i. 5, 6, 8; John i. 14, 18; xv. 26; Gal. iv. 6.

Q. Is none of these persons before another in order of time?

A. No; for they are all co-eternal?

Q. Is one of them before another in order of dignity or greatness?

A. No; for they are all equal in power and glory.

Q. Why then are they named in this order, the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghost?

A. To denote the order of subsisting and working which they have among themselves: the Father subsisting and working from himself; the Son subsisting and working from the Father; and the Holy Ghost subsisting and working from the Father and the Son, John v. 19; xvi. 4.

Q. Which of these three persons made the world?

A. Each of them made it, as is evident from the scriptures, which ascribe the works of creation to all the three, Gen. i. 1, 2, 26; Isa. lxii. 5; xl. 12, 13; Heb. i. 2; John i. 3; Col. i. 16; Job xxxiii. 4; Psal. xxxiii. 6.

Q. Which of the three persons became man?

A. The Son, who is the second person of the glorious Trinity; and since his incarnation he is called the Lord Jesus Christ.

Q. How doth it appear that Christ the Son is God equal with the Father?

A. From the holy scriptures, in which we find the same names, titles, attributes, works, worship, and honour ascribed to the Son, as they are to the Father.

Q. What are those essential names and title, which are ascribed to the Son equally with the Father?

A. Even those which are most eminent and glorious, such as, God, The Lord God of the prophets, King of kings and Lord of lords, The great God, The mighty God, The true God, The only wise God, God over all, blessed for ever. And also, he is called Jehovah, which is the peculiar incommunicable name of the only true God. For all which, see these plain texts, John i. 1; 1 Tim. iii. 16; Rev. xxii. 6; xix. 16; Tit. ii. 13; Isa. ix. 6; 1 John v. 20; Jude 25; Rom. ix. 5; Zech. ii. 10; Jer. xxiii. 6; Psal. lxxxiii. 18.

Q. What are the divine attributes which are ascribed to the Son equally with the Father?

A. The holy scripture asserts that he is the Eternal, Unchangeable, Almighty, Omniscient, Omnipresent, Infinite in holiness, justice, goodness, and truth; as in these texts, Mic. v. 2; Heb. vii. 3; xiii. 8; Rev. i. 5, 8; ii. 25; iii. 7; John ii. 24, 25; xxi. 17; Matt. xviii. 20; Isa. vi. 3; 2 Tim. iv. 8; Eph. iii. 19.

Q. What are those divine works ascribed to Christ the Son, which prove him to be the true God?

A. The scripture ascribes to him the creation of the world, the preservation and upholding of all things, the working of miracles by his own power, the forgiving of sins, the working of faith and repentance, the quickening of dead souls, the opening of the understanding, bestowing of the Spirit, raising the dead at the last day, judging of the world, and giving of eternal life, John i. 3, 10; v. 21, 25, 28, 29; x. 28; xx. 22; Col. i. 16, 17; Heb. i. 3; xii. 2; Mark v. 41; ii. 5; Acts v. 31; ii. 33; Luke xxiv. 25; 2 Tim. iv. 1.

Q. What is that worship and honour ascribed to Christ the Son, which prove him to be the true God?

A. We find the same religious divine worship and adoration given to him as to the Father, both by angels and men. As also, he is made the object of faith, of prayer, of praise, and of sacramental dedication, equally with the Father; as we see in these texts, Heb. i. 6; Matt. viii. 2; xiv. 13; xxviii. 19; John xiv. 1; Acts vii. 59, 60; ix. 14; 1 Cor. i. 2; xix. 5; Rev. v. 12, 13.

Q. Is it not the Father's express will that all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father?

A. Yes; as in John v. 22, 23.

Q. Doth not God the Father call Jesus Christ his fellow or equal?

A. Yes; as in Zech. xiii. 7.

Q. Did not Christ think himself to be equal with him?

A. Yes; for it is said, "He thought it no robbery to be equal with God," Phil. ii. 6.

Q. If the Son be God with the Father, how saith Christ, "My Father is greater than I?" John xiv. 28.

A. Christ doth not speak there of his divine nature, for in respect of that, he and his Father are equally great: and therefore he saith, "I and my Father are one." And it cannot be otherwise, since one and the same infinitely great Godhead is the undivided nature of them both. But in the place objected, as the context shows, Christ speaks of his mediatorial office to which he is appointed by the Father, and in which respect he is the Father's servant.

Q. Is there not great absurdity in maintaining the Son to be inferior to the Father in respect of his divine nature?

A. Yes; for it would lead us into polytheism, or the setting up of two gods, and two objects of worship, the one supreme, and the other subordinate; besides, it would make Christ no God in a proper sense: for inferiority or dependency is inconsistent with the notion of the Deity.

Q. How doth it appear from the Scriptures that the Holy Ghost is God equal with the Father and the Son?

A. By the same arguments that prove the divinity of the Son: for the Holy Ghost hath the same names, attributes, works, worship and honour ascribed to him, which the Father and the Son have: he is called God, Jehovah: he is eternal, omniscient, omnipresent: he created the world, miraculously formed and furnished Christ's human nature, and inspired the prophets and apostles: he raises the dead, regenerates and sanctifies his people: and he is the object of divine worship, of prayer, and sacramental dedication. For all which, see these texts, Acts v. 3, 4; Ezek. iii. 24, 26; Heb. ix. 14; 1 Cor. ii. 10; Luke ii. 26; Psal. cxxxix. 7, 8; Psal. xxxiii. 6; Job xxvi. 13; Mat. i. 18; Luke iv. 18; 2 Pet. i. 21; Rom. viii. 11; John iii. 6; 2 Thes. ii. 13; Cant. iv. 16; 2 Cor. xiii. 14; Mat. xxviii. 19.

Q. Do we not receive distinct blessings and benefits from these glorious Persons?

A. Yes; the Father contrived the ransom, and sent the Ransomer; the Son undertook and came to be our Redeemer; and the Holy Ghost applies the redemption to us.

Q. Ought not then a distinct glory to be given to each of the blessed Three?

A. Yes; and this will be the work of the redeemed with the angels for ever, Rev. i. 4—6; Rev. iv. 8; &c.; Rev. v. 9, &c.

Q. How are we to worship one God in three persons?

A. We are to worship God in Christ the Son, by the Spirit. We must ask of the Father in the name of the Son, and by the assistance of the Holy Ghost, John xvi. 23; Eph. v. 20; Jude 20.

Q. Could ever the doctrine of the Holy Trinity be known by the light of nature?

A. No; and this should make us thankful for the light of revelation.

Q. Can this mystery of One in Three, and Three in One, be comprehended by human reason?

A. No; the shallow capacities of men cannot fathom the deep things of God. This great mystery is what we should believe, reverence, and adore, seeing we have the most plain and positive assertions in God's word of a Trinity of persons in a unity of essence.

Q. Is there any thing in religion contrary to reason?—A. No.

Q. Are there not many things in it above the reach of human nature?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it just to reject what our nature cannot account for?

A. No; for then we should deny every one of God's essential perfections, for each of them infinitely transcends our thoughts; nay, we should deny that we have immortal souls, and many other things in nature that our reason cannot search out, such as the motion of the wind and tide, &c.

Q. What shall we think of those who deny the Trinity, or refuse the divinity of the Son or Holy Ghost?

A. That they are blasphemers and damnable heretics, seeing they deny such great and fundamental truths of God so clearly revealed in his word.

QUESTION VII.

Q. What are the decrees of God?

A. The decrees of God are, his eternal purpose, according to the counsel of his will, whereby for his own glory, he hath fore-ordained whatsoever comes to pass.

Q. What do you understand by God's decrees?

A. His eternal purpose and appointments concerning the things that shall be in time and through eternity.

Q. Were all God's decrees framed from eternity?—A. Yes.

Q. Doth God purpose nothing, upon new emergencies in time, but what he has previously decreed?

A. No; Acts xv. 18; Isa. xlv. 10.

Q. And doth nothing fall out in time but according to these external decrees?

A. No, Eph. i. 11.

Q. Would it be blasphemy in one to say that God is the author of sin?—A. Yes.

Q. Would it make God the author of sin to say that he had decreed sinful actions?

A. It would indeed be blasphemy to say that he had decreed to effectuate sin; but it is not so to say that he hath decreed to permit sinful actions, and to over-rule them to his own glorious purposes.

Q. How doth it appear that God may have such a holy hand about the sinful actions of men?

A. From several instances of scripture; particularly that in Acts ii. 3, where Peter chargeth homo upon the Jews their crucifying of Christ with wicked hands, and yet at the same time says, that he was delivered up for that end by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. See also Acts iv. 27, 28, where we may see that God's designing the crucifixion of Christ from eternity, and bringing the greatest good out of it to mankind, was no manner of excuse for the wicked part that the Jews acted in it; seeing it flowed from a wicked principle in them, and was their own voluntary act and deed.

Q. What counsel had God in fore-ordaining all things?

A. The counsel of his own will, which was according to infinite wisdom, and the highest reason, Eph. i. 11; Isa. xl. 13.

Q. For what end did God decree all things?

A. For his own glory, Rom. xi. 36.

Q. What perfections of his did he design thereby to glorify?

A. His wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth?

Q. Can nothing fall out in time to alter God's decrees?—A. No.

Q. How appears it that his decrees are unchangeable?

A. Because changing would import weakness, and that he did not foresee the lets and stops in the way of his purposes.

Q. Do the many changes that fall out in time, such as God's making the world, and afterwards destroying it, import any alteration in God's counsels or decrees?

A. No; for God from eternity, by his immutable decree, fore-ordained all these alterations.

Q. Doth the immutability of God's decrees take away the free will of rational creatures in performing their actions?

A. No; but rather establishes it; because God hath decreed to bring about his purposes in a way agreeable to the nature and liberty of free agents without any constraint upon their will, it being easy for infinite knowledge to foresee how they will incline and determine in every different situation.

Q. Are there not many casual things that fall out in the world, which may be ascribed to chance?

A. No; for though there be many things casual or contingent in respect of second causes or instruments, as falling out without or beyond their design; yet there is nothing that falls out by chance, or is casual in respect of God, that foresees and determines everything that comes to pass.

Q. Hath not God predestinated some to eternal life?

A. This is plainly asserted in scripture, Eph. i. 4—6; 2 Thess. ii. 13.

Q. Was their foreseen faith, repentance, or good works, the cause of this decree?

A. No, but only the effect of it: for God decreed all these as necessary means to eternal life, as is clear from the forecited texts, Eph. i. 4—6; 2 Thess. ii. 13; and from Acts xiii. 48, "We are chosen that we should be holy, not because we are holy."

Q. What then was the cause of God's decree of election?

A. Nothing but his good pleasure and free love, Rom. ix. 11, 13, 18. No man hath any ground of boasting; for God hath past by one, and pitched upon another, according to his sovereign will and pleasure.

QUESTION VIII.

Q. How doth God execute his decrees?

A. God executeth his decrees in the works of creation and providence.

Q. What do you understand by God's executing his decrees?

A. His bringing to pass the things which he had before-ordained.

Q. Are God's decrees brought to pass in his works in time?—A. Yes.

Q. What are these works of God?

A. His works of creation and providence.

Q. Are these all the works of God, which he hath decreed to bring to pass?—A. Yes

Q. Is not the work of redemption a part of God's works which he had decreed from eternity?

A. Yes; but this is here included in God's work of providence; and indeed his work of redeeming lost sinners is the most glorious part of his providence towards men.

Q. What is the difference between God's executing or bringing to pass his works of creation, and his works of providence?

A. The former he executed in six days, but the latter he continues still to execute; the one without means, but the other usually by means.

Q. Are there not many of God's decrees yet to be executed?

A. Yes; but they all shall be executed in due time, in the order God hath appointed, Isa. xli. 10; Rev. i. 1; xxii. 6; Rom. xi. 25, 26.

QUESTION IX.

Q. What is the work of creation?

A. The work of creation is God's making all things of nothing, by the word of his power, in the space of six days, and all very good.

Q. What is it to create?

A. It is to make something out of nothing; and likewise the making of a thing out of matter wholly unfit for it, as man's body of the dust of the ground is termed creating.

Q. Who is the Creator of all things?—A. God.

Q. Out of what did God make all things?

A. Of nothing.

Q. How can that be said, seeing man was made of the dust of the earth?

A. Because God made that dust out of nothing.

Q. Can none else create, or make a thing out of nothing, but God?

A. No; neither man or angel can create the least atom.

Q. Cannot an angel make a living creature?

A. No, not so much as a fly.

Q. Can an angel turn any thing into nothing?

A. No.

Q. Can God do this?

A. Yes, he could annihilate the whole world as easily as he created it.

A. Did God employ angels as his instruments in the work of creation?—A. No.

Q. By what means then did God make all things?

A. By the word of his power: "He spake, and it was done," Psal. xxxiii. 9.

Q. What was the word of power he made use of?

A. That in Gen. i., LET IT BE; as, "Let there be light, Let there be a firmament," and the like.

Q. In what time did God make all things?

A. In six days.

Q. Could not God have made them in less time?

A. Yes.

Q. Why then did he take so long time to do it?

A. To give us a more distinct view of the order of the creation, and to set us an example of working six days, and resting the seventh.

Q. In what state did God make all things?

A. God made all things at first very good, Gen. i. 31.

Q. What is the meaning of these words, "All very good?"

A. That, of all the things that were made, there was none of them marred in the making; all of them answered the Creator's design, and were fit to show forth his glory.

Q. If all God's works are very good, then whose work is sin, that is so very evil?

A. Sin is none of God's works; it is only the work of the devil, and of man that was tempted by him.

Q. And whose workmanship are the devils, or who made them?

A. God made them angels of light, but they made themselves devils by sin.

Q. When were the angels created?

A. Certainly within the space of the six days mentioned by Moses; for in that time we are told that God finished the creating of the heavens with their hosts, Gen. ii. 1, 2, which must include the angels, which are expressly called the heavenly host, Luke ii. 13. And many think they were created on the first day, with the empyreal heaven, Gen. i. 1; Job xxxviii. 6, 7.

Q. Why was not Moses more express and particular with respect to the creation of angels?

A. Because, it being his great design to give a history of the church, and its original, from the creation of the world, he judged it sufficient for this purpose to give us no more but a short account of the visible creation, to which angels do not belong.

Q. For what end did God make the world?

A. The Lord hath made all things for himself, and for the manifesting of his glorious perfections, Prov. xvi. 4.

Q. What are the attributes of God which most gloriously shine forth in the works of creation?

A. His infinite power, wisdom, and goodness.

Q. How is the glory of God's power displayed in making the world?

A. In his bringing all things of a sudden out of the womb of nothing by his bare word, Rom. i. 20.

Q. How doth the glory of God's wisdom shine forth herein?

A. In the amazing variety of creatures, and the beautiful order and harmony of all things; the view whereof made the psalmist cry out, Psal. civ. 24, "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! In wisdom hast thou made them all."

Q. How is the glory of God's goodness manifested in creation?

A. In providing such a commodious habitation for man before he gave him a being, and making all the creatures subservient to him, Psal. viii. 3, 4, &c.; xxxiii. 5.

Q. On which day of the creation did God make light to shine?

A. Upon the first day.

Q. Were the sun, the moon, and stars, made the first day?

A. No; they were not made till the fourth day of the creation.

Q. How could there be light made before the sun?

A. It was easy for the great Creator to form a bright luminous body, and carry it about to enlighten the world for the three first days, and afterwards place that light in the sun, moon, and stars, when they were created.

Q. When were the fishes created?

A. On the fifth day.

Q. When was man created?

A. On the sixth day.

Q. What did God do on the seventh day?

A. He rested from all his works, and sanctified it for his Sabbath.

Q. Was God weary with his work, that he rested after it?

A. No; the Creator of the ends of the earth fainteth not, neither is weary, Isa. xl. 28.

Q. What is to be understood then by God's resting?

A. His ceasing from work.

Q. What doth God teach us by this example?

A. To cease from the labour of the week, and keep a seventh part of our time holy to the Lord.

Q. Is it not evident, from sense and reason, as well as scripture, that the world did not exist from eternity, but was created some few thousand years ago, according to Moses's account?

A. Yes; it is clearly evident from the lateness of the invention of arts, the foundation of cities, the erecting of states, and the writing of histories, none of which we find so ancient as the time of the creation fixed by Moses. Besides, the being of mountains and valleys is a plain demonstration that the earth was not from eternity; for, seeing the rain still washeth down some earth from the heights, if the smallest quantity should but come down once in a thousand years, it is certain the mountains would have been entirely levelled in an infinite course of years, so that no height had now appeared.

Q. Would it not be profitable for us to meditate much upon the beautiful and stupendous creation?

A. Yes; it would make us little in our own eyes, raise in us an awful sense and veneration of God's power and majesty, cause us hate sin, that brings disorder into this beautiful frame, and help us to trust to our Maker's power and goodness in all our straits and difficulties.

QUESTION X.

Q. How did God create man?

A. God created man male and female, after his own image, in knowledge, righteousness, and holiness, with dominion over the creatures.

Q. What is the principal creature upon this earth?—A. Man.

Q. Why then was he made after all other creatures?

A. Because God thought fit to make the world as an house ready furnished for him, before he would create man to inhabit it.

Q. What sort of a creature is man?

A. A compound being of soul and body, created male and female.

Q. What is male and female?

A. Man and woman.

Q. How many men did God create at first?

A. Only one man and one woman.

Q. What are the two constituent parts of man?

A. Soul and body.

Q. What is the soul of man?

A. It is a spirit, rational, invisible, and immortal, by which a man exerts all vital and intelligent acts, lives, moves, understands, and wills.

Q. How was man's soul made?

A. God breathed into him and he became a living soul.

Q. Of what was man's body made?

A. Adam's body was made of the dust of the ground, and Eve's was made of a rib from Adam's side.

Q. Can the body live without the soul?

A. No.

Q. Can the soul live without the body?

A. Yes.

Q. After whose image did God create man?

A. After his own image.

Q. Did this lie in man's body, or in any bodily shape or likeness?

A. No, but in man's soul, which is a spirit endowed with natural faculties, and moral qualities, that bear some resemblance of its Maker.

Q. Wherein doth the soul resemble God in its natural faculties?

A. As it is an immortal spirit, endowed with understanding, will, and memory.

Q. Wherein did man at first resemble God in immortal qualities?

A. In his knowledge, righteousness, holiness, and dominion over the creatures.

Q. What knowledge was man endowed with at his first creation?

A. He had a vast knowledge of God, of his law and will, of his works and creatures; and these in the lower world he knew well how to use and govern. And, as an instance of his knowledge, he gave names to all the living creatures, suitable to their natures, at the first sight of them, Gen. ii. 19, 20.

Q. What was that righteousness which man had at his first creation?

A. He had an upright and righteous will, which inclined him to do justice to all his fellow-creatures.

Q. Wherein did his holiness lie?

A. In the purity of his soul and its affections, whereby he was inclined to hate all sin, love what was pure and pleasant to God, and study a perfect conformity to his holy law, both in heart and life.

Q. Did not this holiness of nature fit man for communion with God, and enable him to keep his law perfectly?—A. Yes.

Q. Was not holiness the principal part of God's image in man?

A. Yes; and still it is the excellency of man in any state, whether in earth or heaven, seeing it is by this that he resembles God.

Q. Doth not knowledge beautify a man too?

A. Yes; very much, if attended with holiness; but knowledge without holiness is rather the resemblance of the devil than of God, Gen. iii. 1; Acts xiii. 10.

Q. Was the dominion man at first had over the creatures any part of God's image in man?

A. Yes; for by it he resembled God in his authority and government.

Q. What was that dominion which man had at first over the creatures?

A. It was that authority which was given him over the fish of the sea, fowls of the air, and beasts of the earth; with power to rule, use, and dispose of them at his pleasure, they all being subject to his orders.

Q. Hath not man now lost his dominion in a great measure?

A. Yes; for, with respect to the most part of creatures, man now is either a terror to them, or they to him, which is one of the bitter fruits of the fall. Since man hath rebelled against God, no wonder the creatures prove rebellious and disobedient to him.

QUESTION XI.

Q. What are God's works of providence?

A. God's works of providence are his most holy, wise, and powerful, preserving and governing all his creatures, and all their actions.

Q. How doth it appear that there is a providence that governs the world?

A. From plain scripture assertions, and from the exact accomplishment of scripture prophecies; as also from natural things obvious to all; such as the exactness of the sun's motions, diurnal and annual, that produce the most uniform revolutions of day and night, the different seasons of the year, in order to provide us of the necessities and comforts of life; and likewise the regular ebbing and flowing of the sea; the remarkable care for preserving and propagating all the different species of living creatures, whether rational, sensitive, or vegetable. Besides many other surprising observations and occurrences; all which convince us of the being of a wise providence that rules the world.

Q. What are the objects of God's providence, or the things about which it is concerned?

A. It reacheth all the creatures, and all their actions, Pal. ciii. 19; John xv. 5; Acts xvii. 28.

Q. Is God's providence concerned about the meanest as well as the highest creatures?

A. Yes; there is nothing so high that is without its reach, and nothing so mean that it is below its notice; for, as he rules in the armies of heaven, so he takes care of the very ravens, sparrows, lilies, grass, and hairs of our head, Dan. iv. 35; Matt. x. 29, 30; vi. 30; Luke xii. 24.

Q. If God take care of such mean creatures, will he not much more take care of the household of faith?—A. Yes.

Q. What are the acts of God's providence about his creatures, and their actions?

A. They are chiefly two, to wit, his preserving and governing of them.

Q. How doth he preserve his creatures?

A. By upholding them in being defending them from evil, and providing them means of sustenance, Heb. i. 3; Psal. cxix. 91; cxlv. 15, 16.

Q. Will not the creatures continue in their beings without God's upholding of them?

A. No; they would sink into nothing again without it; and, in this respect, Providence is as a continued creation, Acts xvii. 28.

Q. Could not such creatures as the angels live and subsist without God's providence?

A. No; no more than a fly, or any such creature.

Q. How doth God govern all his creatures and their actions?

A. By directing them to their proper ends according to their natures, producing events by them according to his pleasure, and over-ruling all their actions to his own glory, Psal. cxlvii. 15, 16, &c; Prov. xvi. 9, 33.

Q. Did not God sometimes make his creatures act contrary to their natural course and force?

A. Yes, when he pleaseth to act miraculously; as in dividing of the waters, causing iron to swim, and in restraining the force of fire, the fury of lions, &c.

Q. Doth the providence of God extend to all the actions of men?

A. Yes, to them all, whether they be good or bad, natural, moral, or casual, Acts xvii. 28; John xv. 5; Exod. xxi. 12, 13.

Q. What hand hath divine Providence about sinful actions?

A. He hath a holy hand, in permitting them, limiting and restraining them, and directing them to holy and wise ends beyond the intentions of the actors, Acts xiv. 16; Psal. lxxvi. 10; Isa. x. 5—7.

Q. How doth God permit men to fall into sin?

A. He, in his just judgment, leaves them or gives them up to their own hearts' lusts, and the instigations of Satan, Psal. lxxxi. 11, 12.

Q. Why doth God permit sin, when he can hinder it?

A. In this he acts as a holy and just judge; when men refuse his calls, and despise light and love, he justly punisheth them by leaving them to themselves. And yet he is pleased to temper justice with much mercy and wisdom; for hereby he shows men what evil is in their hearts for their conviction and humiliation, and how wonderfully he can turn about the worst things to his own glory and the good of his church, 2 Chron. xxxii. 31; Neh. ix. 28.

Q. Can you illustrate this by any instances from scripture?

A. Yes; it is evident, not only in the betraying and crucifying of Christ mentioned before upon the seventh question, but also in the selling of Joseph into Egypt: the actors meant it for evil, but God turned it about for great good, Gen. l. 20.

Q. Who are those about whom the providence of God is most especially concerned?

A. The church, and all who are true believers; when others have only God's common and general providence to look to, these have his special providence to depend upon, seeing he hath promised to make all things work together for their good, Rom. viii. 28.

Q. What are the properties of God's providential acts?

A. There are three mentioned in the answer :
1. They are most holy, without spot or blemish.
2. Most wise, without mistake or error. 3. Most powerful; they cannot be stopped or resisted, Psal. cxlv. 17; Rom. ix. 33; Dan. iv. 35.

Q. If God doth govern the world so wisely, why doth he let his people be afflicted, and his enemies prosper in the world?

A. God's wisdom is hereby glorified: for these dispensations, however crooked they seem to us, are wisely ordered to carry on the salvation of his people, and destruction of his enemies.

Q. Are there not many who practically deny God's providence?

A. Yes; such as those who do not consult with God in their undertakings, nor seek his blessing thereupon; and those who ascribe their success more to second causes than unto God; and those who are impatient under afflictions, distrust God in their straits, or betake themselves to unlawful shifts to obtain what they want.

Q. What regard ought we to show to the providence of God?

A. We ought by prayer to interest providence in all our affairs, and depend upon its care: we ought seriously to observe its steps, and humbly submit to its determinations.

Q. Ought we not to put a remark on all the gracious steps of God's providence towards us?

A. Yes.

Q. What are those we ought especially to remark?

A. Such as the care of providence in preserving us in the womb and from the womb. watching over us in our helpless infancy; ordering our lot to fall in a land of gospel light, and not among infidels; allowing us a religious education, and good examples; giving us wakening ordinances and dispensations for our conversion to God; preserving our lives so long amidst so many dangerous diseases and accidents; and keeping us from many snares and temptations to sin.

QUESTION XII.

Q. What special acts of providence did God exercise towards man in the estate wherein he was created?

A. When God had created man, he entered into a covenant of life with him, upon condition of perfect obedience; forbidding him to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, upon pain of death.

Q. What did God with man after he had created him?

A. He entered into a covenant with him.

Q. What do you mean by a covenant?

A. A mutual paction or agreement between two parties.

Q. How many covenants hath God entered into with man?

A. Two; viz. the covenant of works and the covenant of grace.

Q. Which of these two covenants did God make with Adam at first?

A. It was the covenant of works, which in the answer is called a "covenant of life."

Q. Why is it called both a "covenant of works" and a "covenant of life?"

A. It is called a covenant of works, from the condition of it; and a covenant of life, from the promise or reward of it.

Q. How did it appear that God and Adam did really enter into covenant?

A. From this, that God required Adam to obey his will, promising him life if he should do it, and threatening death to him if he did not. And doubtless Adam, who was made after the image of God, consented to this his Creator's will, when first intimated to him.

Q. Had this covenant a condition in it?

A. Yes; viz., works, or obedience to the will of God.

Q. What do you mean by the condition of a covenant?

A. A special article or term, upon the fulfilling of which the promised blessings of the covenant only are to be bestowed.

Q. What sort of obedience did this covenant require as the condition of it?

A. Perfect obedience to the whole will of God.

Q. When may obedience be reckoned perfect?

A. It is so when a man continues in doing all things commanded by God, without any defect in matter or manner, principle or ends.

Q. Was there no grace in the covenant of works?

A. Yes, there was much grace in God's condescending to enter into covenant with his own creature, and promising him great rewards to encourage him to obedience, when he was absolutely obliged to it by his creation, though nothing had been promised at all.

Q. What was the reward promised in this covenant for man's obedience?—A. Life.

Q. What sort of life was it?

A. A threefold life, natural, spiritual, and eternal. The natural and spiritual life, given to man at his creation, was to be continued with him; and in due time he was to be translated to eternal life in heaven, without dying.

Q. What account can you give of the nature of that threefold life?

A. The natural life consists in the union of soul and body; the spiritual life in the union of the soul with God; the eternal life in the happiness of the whole man in the immediate vision and fruition of God in heaven for ever.

Q. Was this covenant made with Adam for himself alone?

A. No; it was made with him, not only for himself, but in the name of all his posterity.

Q. Had Adam sufficiency of strength and grace given him at first, to perform the condition of this covenant?—A. Yes.

Q. Did not this covenant require obedience to the whole moral law?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was that law written?

A. In the hearts of our first parents.

Q. Was there not something else that God required of them as a present trial of their obedience?

A. Yes, namely, that they should not eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

Q. Why did God deny them that one tree?

A. To try their subjection and obedience to their sovereign Lord, of whom they held all comforts; and to teach them that their chief happiness did not lie in the enjoyment of temporal things, but of God's favour; and that they ought to prefer his will and pleasure to all the delights of sense.

Q. Had that tree any virtue in it to make men knowing and wise?

A. No, it had none, though Satan deluded them with his temptation.

Q. Why then was it called the tree of knowledge of good and evil?

A. It was so called, to assure them, that, if they did eat of it, they should know, to their sad experience, both what good they would forfeit, and what evil they would bring upon themselves and their posterity.

Q. What good were they to forfeit and lose?

A. Both the image and favour of God.

Q. What evil were they to feel?

A. The wrath and curse of God.

Q. Was this penalty plainly intimated to them, when the covenant was made with them?

A. Yes; for God said, "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

Q. What sort of death did God threaten them with?

A. A threefold death, answerable to the life promised; to wit, death temporal, spiritual, and eternal.

Q. What account can you give of the nature of that threefold death?

A. Temporal or natural death consists in the separation of the soul from the body; spiritual death in the separation of the soul from God, and the loss of his image; eternal death lies in the separation of both soul and body from the comfortable presence of God for ever.

Q. Did Adam die naturally that very day he ate this fruit?

A. No; for he lived till he was 930 years old.

Q. How then was the threatening of God accomplished?

A. On the day he did eat, he died spiritually, and became liable to temporal and eternal death.

Q. What do you understand by these words, "He died spiritually," &c.

A. I understand, that Adam lost the image and favour of God; that he became mortal, and liable to all afflictions in this life, and to the torments of hell hereafter.

Q. Why was not the sentence fully executed upon him personally?

A. We have ground to believe he was saved from eternal death by the mediation of Christ; and, for the elect's sake, who were to spring from him, he got a reprieve as to natural death for a time: yet sin gave his body the death's wound, of which he died at length.

Q. May we not read much of sin's evil in that awful threatening?

A. Yes; for sin is an evil that deprives man of the happiness of a threefold life, and exposes him to the misery of a threefold death.

Q. Was there any place in that covenant for a mediator or Surety?

A. No; for it required personal obedience or suffering from every man, for himself.

Q. Would it not accept of repentance from sinners, and sincere endeavours after obedience, though imperfect?

A. No; for it required obedience absolutely perfect, and sentenced the transgressor to wrath for the least failure, without any hope of mercy to the penitent.

Q. Ought not all believers to bless God that they are not under this covenant?—A. Yes.

Q. Is not the case of unbelievers sad, who still remain under it?—A. Yes.

QUESTION XIII.

Q. Did our first parents continue in the estate wherein they were created?

A. Our first parents, being left to the freedom of their own will, fell from the estate wherein they were created, by sinning against God.

Q. What was the estate wherein our first parents were created?

A. It was a state of innocence, and of great happiness.

Q. Wherein did their happiness lie?

A. They were free of all sin and misery; they had all earthly felicity in paradise, and enjoyed sweet communion with God.

Q. How did they fall from this happy state?

A. By sinning against God.

Q. Were they not made upright, after the image of God, and how then could they sin?

A. Though they were made upright, yet they were not confirmed in that estate like the elect angels; but created mutable, being left to the freedom of their own will.

Q. Were they created with any will or inclination to sin?—A. No.

Q. What do you mean by the freedom of will that they were left to?

A. That they were not under constraint from any, but had a liberty in their will to choose either good or evil.

Q. Had they not a sufficient liberty in their will, and power to have obeyed God in all things, and to have resisted all temptations to sin?

A. Yes, if they had used it well, as they might have done: but, having their stock in their own hand, without any confirming grace from God, they might also fall, if they would.

Q. Hath fallen man the same freedom of will to what is good, that Adam had at first?

A. No: though some relics of that freedom to things naturally or morally good be found in unregenerate men, in some more, in some less; yet they have no freedom of will to things spiritually good, being dead in sins and trespasses, Eph. ii. 1.

Q. Do regenerate persons attain to Adam's freedom of will to do good?

A. Not altogether in this life, though they recover it in a good measure; but being only renewed in part, and the image of God imperfect in them while here, their wills are not entirely free to what is good, there being still a sad mixture in them of inclination to what is evil.

Q. What freedom of will have the saints in glory?

A. They have a freedom of will only to what is good, and a perfect freedom too, and, by virtue of confirming grace, they cannot will any thing that is evil.

Q. What do you mean by God's leaving our first parents to the freedom of their will?

A. His suffering them to make their choice, when both good and evil were in their offer, and not giving them any new supplies of grace to prevent their will from yielding to temptations to sin.

Q. Why did he not give these new supplies?

A. Because he was not bound to do it, and he had glorious designs to bring about by not doing it.

Q. What temptation had our first parents to sin against God?

A. First, the devil tempted the woman to eat of the forbidden tree; and, next, he put her on to tempt Adam to do the same.

Q. Could Satan have used any violence to cause them to sin?

A. No; all he could do was to tempt them to it in a subtle manner.

Q. What method did he take in doing it?

A. He made use of the serpent, and spake out of it; he showed them the desirableness of the fruit, and persuaded them that by eating it they should become wise as God, and should escape the punishment threatened; he attacked Eve when she was alone, and then made use of her to prevail with her husband.

Q. Is it not upon this account that Christ calls the devil a liar and a murderer from the beginning?

A. Yes; for it was by lies and falsehoods that he murdered our first parents and their posterity.

Q. Was it not a dreadful sin in them to believe the devil more than God?

A. Yes; and it is what Adam's children are much inclined to do still, according to their example.

Q. What would become of the best of men now, if God should leave them to themselves and to Satan's temptations?

A. They would surely be ruined, considering that we have lost our strength by the fall. No man here attains to Adam's perfection in grace, there is still a mixture of corruption in the best.

Q. Should we not always pray against God's leaving us to our free will?

A. Yes; for if perfect holiness without new aids and confirming grace from God, be no security against total apostacy, as is evident from the example of the angels and our first parents; our ruin must be inevitable, if God should leave us, who are weak and corrupt, to ourselves.

Q. Are not believers now safe from any such fall?

A. Yes, though that is not owing to themselves, but to the gracious promise of God through Jesus Christ.

Q. What were God's wise and gracious ends in permitting Adam's fall?

A. He designed to glorify his infinite wisdom, and likewise his justice and mercy, in saving lost sinners of mankind by a surety of his own providing.

QUESTION XIV.

Q. What is sin?

A. Sin is any want of conformity unto, or transgression of the law of God.

Q. What mean you by the law of God?

A. The commands or precepts which God hath given to man to be his rule to walk by.

Q. Where is this law written?

A. At first it was clearly written on Adam's heart, but by the fall this writing became dark, and therefore God has written it most plainly to us in his word.

Q. How many kinds of laws hath God written there?

A. Three; the judicial, the ceremonial, and the moral law.

Q. What is the judicial law?

A. That which related to the civil constitution, and contained the municipal statutes of the Jewish nation; which do not bind other nations any farther than they are founded upon moral equity.

Q. What is the ceremonial law?

A. The statutes relating to the Jewish worship, their sacrifices, washings, and rites, which were typical of Christ and his benefits, and are now fulfilled and abrogated by Christ's coming.

Q. What is the moral law?

A. That which is the rule of our manners and practice, and is perpetually binding upon all men, which we have briefly summed up to us by God himself in the ten commandments.

Q. Ought all men to study a conformity to this law?

A. Yes; for every want of it is a sin.

Q. What do you understand by conformity to the law?

A. A suitableness in us to what it requires.

Q. What sort of conformity is due by us to God's law?

A. Both an internal conformity of the heart and thoughts, and an external conformity of the words and actions: and, if the first be wanting, we are guilty of sin, be the latter never so exact.

Q. What is meant by the transgression of the law?

A. It is a going beyond the bounds and limits which God sets to us by his law, or doing that which is contrary to it.

Q. Why are both these expressions made use of to describe sin, namely, want of conformity to the law, and transgression of the law?

A. The first of these is made use of to include original sin, which is a want of conformity of nature; and sins of omission, which are a want of conformity of life to God's law. The second is used to comprehend all sins of commission, either in thought, word, or deed.

Q. Must not sin be a great evil, which breaks such a holy, just, and good law?—A. Yes.

Q. Wherein doth the prodigious greatness of this evil appear?

A. In these; that sin shakes off the sovereignty of God, despiseth his power, offends his holiness, grieves his Spirit, defaceth his image in the soul, and brings damnation to it.

Q. What is the glass that represents the evil of sin in the most lively colours?

A. We see much of sin's evil in the glass of God's holy law, and very much of it in the glass of hell's torments, but most of all in the glass of Christ's sufferings and death.

Q. Can we ever repair the injury that sin doth to God's holy law?

A. No; but Christ our Surety hath given full satisfaction for all the sins of those who believe in him.

QUESTION XV.

Q. What was the sin whereby our first parents fell from the estate wherein they were created?

A. The sin whereby our first parents fell from the estate wherein they were created, was their eating the forbidden fruit.

Q. Why did God forbid the eating of this fruit?

A. To show his dominion over man, and to make trial of man's obedience to his Maker's will and authority, in keeping a command for which he saw no reason but purely the will of God.

Q. Was there no evil in eating this fruit if God had not forbid it?—A. No.

Q. Were our first parents guilty of no sin before actual eating of this fruit?

A. Yes; they sinned in hearkening to the devil, and believing him, before they did eat.

Q. Why is their eating the fruit called then their first sin?

A. Because it was their first sin finished, as expressed in James i. 14, 15.

Q. Who was first in the transgression?

A. The woman.

Q. Was our first parents' eating of the forbidden fruit a great sin?

A. In several respects, it was the most heinous sin ever was committed.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. In regard it was a complicated wickedness, including many atrocious sins in it, such as renouncing the authority of their Creator, unthankfulness for his great bounty, aspiring to be equal with God, believing the devil before God, and joining in rebellion with him, murdering themselves and all their offspring: and all this guilt was attended with the most terrible aggravations that ever were heard of.

Q. What are these aggravations?

A. They committed this sin soon after they were made after the image of God, when they had no corruption within to incline them to it, nor temptation from without, but what they could easily resist: yea, they were guilty of it in paradise, in the presence of God, and in the place where they had been lately taken into covenant with God: they well knew the glorious advantages of keeping this covenant, and the fearful consequences of breaking it; nay, they sinned against the clearest light and illumination of God's Spirit, that ever any mere man had: so that we should not think of this sin without horror.

Q. Did it not heighten their sin, that they durst offend so great a God for so small a temptation as a little fruit?

A. Yes, very much.

Q. By what door got sin access to our first parents' hearts?

A. By the door of the eyes, Gen. iii. 6, "The fruit was pleasant to the eye."

Q. Should we not learn from this to set a watch upon this door, that sin may not enter by it?

A. Yes.

Q. Have we not the example of saints set before us who did so?

A. Yes: we have the example of Job, who made a covenant with his eyes, and of David, who prayed to turn away his eyes from beholding vanity, Job xxxi. 1; Psal. cxix. 37.

QUESTION XVI.

Q. Did all mankind fall in Adam's first transgression?

A. The covenant being made with Adam, not only for himself, but for his posterity, all mankind descending from him by ordinary generation, sinned in him, and fell with him in his first transgression.

Q. Was the covenant of works made with Adam for himself only?

A. No; it was made with him for his posterity also.

Q. What mean you by Adam's posterity also?

A. His children or offspring that should come after him, to the end of the world.

Q. Are we included in that covenant, who live now near six thousand years since it was made?

A. Yes, seeing we are of Adam's posterity.

Q. How could the covenant be made with us who had not then a being?

A. We had a being virtually in Adam's loins; and Adam transacted with God, not as a single person, but as a common head and representative of all his posterity; and so the covenant was made with Adam in our name.

Q. Is it upon that account we are said to sin in him and fall with him?

A. Yes, according to Rom. v. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 22.

Q. How came Adam to be our head and representative in this covenant?

A. God appointed him.

Q. How can Adam be held as our representative, seeing we never consented to it?

A. Could we have existed, we would have consented to so just a choice, Adam being our natural head and affectionate parent, made after God's image, with sufficient power to obey him. And seeing it was God's will, we are bound to consent to it as a holy and just law. Besides, it is warrantable, in human transactions and covenants, for parents to represent children unborn; as in making bargains, selling lands, contracting debts, &c. And why then was it not just for Adam to represent us in transacting with God?

Q. Is it just that parents should make covenants for their children, whereby they may be involved into guilt and misery, and made to suffer for what they never committed?

A. If a man make a covenant for himself and his posterity, in a thing just and lawful, men judge his children bound: as in the case of our allegiance to a king: the rebellion of a father may justly affect his posterity, stain their whole blood, and forfeit their inheritance. And if this be reckoned just among men, why is it not also just betwixt God and man?

Q. Was it right to put our stock into the hands of those who improved it so ill?

A. They might have improved it well if they had pleased, and none of their children could have been thought better hands than they were. Neither is there place for us to complain, who approve of their ill management and apostacy from God, by our sinning daily after the similitude of Adam's transgression.

Q. If Adam had stood, would we not have been happy with him?

A. Yes; and therefore, seeing he fell, it is just we should be miserable with him.

Q. Are we partakers with Adam in all his sins?

A. No, but in his first sin only.

Q. Why only in his first sin?

A. Because then he represented all his posterity as a federal head; but after he once brake the covenant, he was no more trusted as such, but reckoned to act as a single person only for himself.

Q. Is it not as just to impute Adam's first sin to his posterity for their condemnation, as it is to impute Christ's righteousness to us for our justification?

A. Yes, it is equally just, because of the covenants there being made both with the first and second Adam in our name, Rom. v. 18, 19.

Q. How soon is Adam's sin imputed to his posterity?

A. As soon as they have a being, and stand in relation to Adam.

Q. If one sin hath thus defiled and destroyed all mankind, should we not look upon sin as of a most mischievous nature?

A. Yes, and avoid it more carefully than we would do the plague.

Q. Should not our woeful fall by the first Adam, stir us up to seek recovery by Christ the second Adam?

A. Yes, we should be restless till we get it, that as we have borne the image of the earthly Adam, we may also bear the image of the heavenly Adam, and be taken to dwell with him at last.

Q. Did never any of Adam's posterity escape the imputation of Adam's first sin?

A. None, but Jesus Christ only.

Q. Was Christ one of Adam's posterity?

A. Yes.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. In regard he is the seed of the woman, and had the substance of his flesh from Mary that descended from Adam.

Q. If Christ descended from Adam, how could he escape Adam's sin?

A. By descending from Adam not by ordinary generation, but in an extraordinary way.

Q. What was that?

A. He was conceived by the power of the Holy Ghost, in the womb of a virgin, without any earthly father.

Q. Why was Christ conceived in this wonderful manner?

A. That he might be kept free of the guilt and pollution of Adam's sin.

Q. Was this sufficient to keep him free of it?

A. Yes, because the Holy Ghost, by his infinite power, sanctified and kept pure and spotless so much of the virgin's substance as was needful to form our Saviour's body, Luke i. 35.

Q. Are all the rest of mankind defiled with Adam's sin?

A. Yes, and infants as well as others.

Q. Are all men equally guilty and sinful before God?

A. Yes, they are so in respect of nature, but not in respect of practice.

Q. How comes there to be any difference in respect of practice?

A. Because some are more left of God, and some are more beholden to free grace than others, 1 Cor. iv. 7.

QUESTION XVII.

Q. Into what estate did the fall bring mankind?

A. The fall brought mankind into an estate of sin and misery.

Q. Who of Adam's race were brought into a state of sin by his fall?

A. All mankind, excepting Jesus Christ.

Q. Did the fall bring mankind into a state of sin only?

A. Into a state of misery also.

Q. Can man be in a state of sin, and not in a state of misery?

A. No; for the one still followeth upon the other; misery is the necessary consequence of sin.

Q. Was there ever such a fall as that of the first man?—A. No.

Q. How so?

A. Because so many men fell with him, and fell from such a height of happiness to such a depth of misery?

Q. Was Adam able to raise himself to his former state after his fall?—A. No.

Q. Why so?

A. Because Adam and all his posterity were so bruised and disabled by that woeful fall, that they could do nothing to raise themselves up, but must lie in their miserable case till divine mercy move for their relief.

Q. Are we not defiled as well as disabled by the fall?

A. Yes; our fall is like that of a man into a pit among stones and mire, which both bruises and defiles him at once.

QUESTION XVIII.

Q. Wherein consists the sinfulness of that estate whereinto man fell?

A. The sinfulness of that estate whereinto man fell consists in the guilt of Adam's first sin, the want of original righteousness, and the corruption of his whole nature, which is commonly called original sin, together with all actual transgressions which proceed from it.

Q. What are these two evils mentioned in the answer, which make up the sinfulness of our fallen estate?

A. They are original and actual sin.

Q. What are these evils which make up original sin?

A. They are three, to wit, the guilt of Adam's first sin, the want of original righteousness, and the corruption of our whole nature.

A. What do you mean by the guilt of Adam's first sin?

A. Our liableness to wrath or punishment by reason of that sin of Adam's.

Q. How doth that guilt become ours?

A. By the imputing of Adam's sin to us; he having been our representative in the covenant of works which he brake.

Q. What is meant by the want of original righteousness, which we now lie under by the fall?

A. It imports that we are now deprived of that perfect rectitude, purity, and holiness, implanted in man's nature at his first creation, which was the image of God upon his soul.

Q. How is it that we have lost that original righteousness, or the image of God in our souls?

A. God is now provoked to withhold it, as a just punishment of Adam's fall.

Q. Doth it make God the author of sin, to say that he withholds original righteousness from us?

A. No; for he is not bound to restore that to us which we have lost through our own fault, but may justly deny it as a punishment of Adam's first sin. We are bound to have it, but God is not bound to give it.

Q. Doth not the want of original righteousness make way for the corruption of our whole nature?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you mean by the corruption of our whole nature?

A. That our whole constitution, both in soul and body, is infected, defiled, and depraved by sin, and that from the very womb.

Q. Wherein doth this corruption of nature appear?

A. In our impotency and enmity to what is good, and in our proneness and inclination to what is evil.

Q. What parts of our nature doth this corruption infect?

A. Our whole nature and constitution, every sense and member of our bodies, and every power and faculty of our souls; to wit, our understandings, will, consciences, memories, affections, and thoughts.

Q. How are our senses and members corrupted by original sin?

A. They are now become ready weapons and instruments of unrighteousness, Rom. vi. 13.

Q. How is the mind or understanding corrupted thereby?

A. It is so blinded and darkened that it cannot discern spiritual things.

Q. How is the will corrupted?

A. It is turned crooked, and perverse, backward to good, and inclined to evil.

Q. How is the conscience corrupted?

A. It is become sleepy, dead, partial, biassed, and unfaithful: it doth not perform its office uprightly, by warning, challenging, and speaking for God, as his deputy ought to do; but is either silent or faint in God's cause.

Q. How is the memory corrupted?

A. It is become weak, deceitful, and false: it is apt to forget what is good and necessary for us, and to retain what is evil, vain, and unprofitable to us.

Q. How are the affections corrupted?

A. They have gone into sad disorder, and are naturally set upon improper and wrong objects; we love what we should hate, and hate what we should love; we rejoice in things which are matter of sorrow, and we sorrow for things that are ground of joy.

Q. How are the thoughts of the heart corrupted?

A. God is not in our thoughts, but they are apt to run out upon the vanities of the world, or sinful objects.

Q. How is this corruption of the nature conveyed from Adam to our posterity? Is it from the Author of our being?

A. It is not from God, who is the Author of all holiness and purity, but of no sin or corruption: God justly withholds original righteousness from us, but doth not communicate sin or corruption to any of his creatures: but it is conveyed to us by natural generation, Psal. li. 5; Job xiv. 4; xv. 14.

Q. How is original sin conveyed by natural generation?

A. By sinful parents producing sinful children like themselves; as we see the parent's leprosy infects the child, and treason stains the blood of posterity.

Q. Though the body be corrupted by this way, how can the soul be thus infected, that is not begot by natural generation?

A. By reason of the intimate union and close conjunction of the soul with the body; the soul, being destitute of original righteousness when joined with the corrupt body, is also tainted with corruption, as liquor is tainted by the vessel it is put into. Though the manner of propagating original sin to the soul be difficult to explain, yet the certainty of the thing itself is most evident.

Q. How doth the certainty of this appear?

A. From the word of God, and our woeful experience.

Q. How doth it appear from the word of God?

A. From many passages in it; such as those which assert that we are conceived and born in sin; that a clean thing cannot be brought out of an unclean; that what is born of the flesh is flesh, that we are dead in sins and trespasses, and transgressors from the very womb. And likewise it is asserted of Adam, who was made after the likeness of God, that, after his fall, he begat a son in his own likeness, after his image: for all which see the following plain texts, Psal. li. 5; Job xiv. 4; John iii. 6; Eph. ii. 1; Isa. xlvi. 8; Gen. v. 3.

Q. How doth the truth of original corruption appear from experience?

A. In regard every man may feel that there is in him a natural antipathy to what is spiritually good, and a woful proneness to what is evil, besides many other bitter fruits of it.

Q. What are these bitter fruits of original corruption?

A. Such as these; our blindness of mind, hardness of heart, hatred of God and goodness, misplacing of our affections upon wrong objects, and falling into daily sins.

Q. Doth not this original sin and corruption make us odious to God, and deserving of hell, before the commission of actual sin?—A. Yes.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. By these two things: 1. The infinite purity of God's nature, that cannot but abhor sin and corruption, especially such corrupt natures as we have, which contain the seeds and principles of all sorts of sins that ever were, or shall be, committed in the world. 2. By the miseries, sufferings, and death, which we see inflicted on infants, which never committed actual sin, Rom. v. 14.

Q. Is it not reasonable to think that children pre-created by sanctified parents, should be free of original corruption?

A. No; for the natures of the best saints are not perfectly sanctified, but remain still corrupt in part. And this corruption is natural to them, whereas grace is supernatural and adventitious.

Q. Cannot gracious parents convey grace to their children?

A. No; for it is freely bestowed by God upon whom he pleaseth.

Q. Are they not bound to pray much for grace to their children?

A. Yes, because they have propagated much corruption to them.

Q. Is there any remedy for this original sin or corruption?

A. Yes; there is the blood and the Spirit of Christ, the one to pardon it, the other to change the nature by a work of regeneration.

Q. Doth the work of regeneration remove it wholly in this life?

A. Not wholly; for we find the best complaining while they are here, Rom. vii. 14, 18, 23; Jam. iii. 2; iv. 5.

Q. What names doth original sin get in scripture?

A. It is called the old man, the flesh, lust, and indwelling sin, Rom. vi. 6; viii. 5; vii. 17; Jam. i. 15.

Q. Why is it called original sin, seeing this word is not in scripture?

A. To denote three things: 1. That we derive it from Adam, who is the origin of all mankind. 2. That it is in us from our origin or first having a being. 3. That it is the origin of all actual sins or transgressions.

Q. What is the difference between original and actual sin?

A. Original sin is the sin inherent to our nature, which we bring into the world with us; but actual sin is that which we commit after we come to the use of reason.

Q. What do you mean by an actual sin or transgression?

A. Every breach of the law of God, whether by omitting duty commanded, or committing sin forbidden by it.

Q. Are there not many different kinds of actual sin?

A. Yes, very many; such as sins of omission and of commission; sins against the first table, and sins against the second; sins of the heart, and of the life; of the world, and of the actions; of ignorance, and against light; of infirmity, and of presumption, &c.

Q. Whence do all these actual sins proceed?

A. From original sin, or the corruption of our natures.

Q. May it not be thought that they proceed more from the evil example set before us?

A. No; for we see Cain's murdering his brother proceeded out of his heart, and not from any such example; according to Matt. xv. 19.

Q. How do the sins of life proceed from the evil heart or nature?

A. Even as evil fruit from a corrupt tree, or unclean streams from a polluted fountain, Matt. vii. 17; Jam. iii. 11.

QUESTION XIX.

Q. What is the misery of that estate wherewith men fell?

A. All mankind, by their fall, lost communion with God as under his wrath and curse, and so made liable to all the miseries of this life, to death itself, and to the pains of hell for ever.

Q. What are the three heads of man's misery by the fall, pointed at in the answer?

A. There is, 1. The happiness we have lost by it. 2. The evils we are presently under. 3. The miseries we are further liable to.

Q. What are these three more particularly?

A. The happiness we have lost in communion with God: the evils we are presently under are God's wrath and curse, and all the afflictions of this life; the miseries we are further liable to, are both the first and second death.

Q. Hath man lost no more happiness than communion with God?

A. He hath also lost the image of God upon his soul; but that was mentioned in the former answer, under the want of original righteousness, which is the same thing with the image of God.

Q. What do you mean by that communion with God which man hath lost by his fall?

A. It is that sweet intimacy, acquaintance, and fellowship with God, which man had in the enjoyment of God's gracious presence, and comforts in the garden of Eden.

Q. How doth it appear that man enjoyed such sweet communion with God there before his fall?

A. From this, that there was no sin or guilt then to stop man's free access to God, or to eclipse the light of God's countenance towards man; and therefore he was under the continual smiles of his Creator. God conversed familiarly with him, conferred high favours upon him, transacted with him by covenant, brought all the living creatures to own their subjection to him, and receive names from him, Gen. i. 28—30 ; ii. 15, 16, 19, 22.

Q. How did our first parents lose all that sweet communion with God?

A. By their sinning against God, and breaking his holy laws.

Q. Is not the loss of communion with God a very great misery?

A. Yes; for, seeing the happiness of heaven lies in having communion with God, who is the soul's chief good and portion, the want of that communion must be our greatest loss and misery, and therefore it is justly put before all the rest of our miseries mentioned in the answer.

Q. Is not the eternal loss of communion with God the chief part of the damned's misery in hell?

A. Yes; for, depart from me is the first word of the sentence against them.

Q. Did not man first forsake God, before God withdrew his gracious presence from man?

A. Yes; it is evident that man fell from God before he lost communion with him.

Q. How doth it appear that our first parents were deprived of communion with God after their fall?

A. By their hiding themselves, and fleeing from God, in whose presence they formerly rejoiced; and by God's frowning upon them, driving them out of paradise, and placing a flaming sword to guard the entry to it, Gen. iii. 8, 17, 23, 24.

Q. How doth it appear that all Adam's posterity have also lost communion with God by the fall?

A. From this: that we have a natural aversion to God's presence, and to the means of attaining to it, such as meditation, prayer, and attending upon the word and sacraments.

Q. Must not sin be a great evil that deprives us of so great a happiness as communion with God?—A. Yes.

Q. Why cannot sinful creatures have communion with God?

A. Because he is a holy God, and of purer eyes than to behold iniquity; he cannot look upon sin where it is harboured or allowed.

Q. Have unregenerate sinners any desire after communion with God?

A. No; for the presence of God is both hateful and frightful to them: and hence it is they say unto God, "depart from us," Job xxi. 14.

Q. Why do they hate God's presence and communion with him?

A. Because, being unregenerate and sensual, their carnal mind is enmity against God; and, being guilty criminals, they dread the presence of their judge, who has power to condemn them.

Q. Is the loss of communion with God by Adam's fall, an irrecoverable loss to us?

A. No; for God hath found out a way for recovering lost sinners to a state of communion with himself again.

Q. What is that way?

A. By appointing Jesus Christ to be our Redeemer; for taking away our guilt, and purchasing communion with God for us, by his blood; that so believers may have free access to his throne of grace here, and to his throne of glory hereafter.

Q. Will not the believer's communion with God in heaven, be far more sweet than Adam's was in paradise?

A. Yes; for the believer will have greater discoveries of the love of God, than Adam had; he will have God dwelling with him in his own nature, and be immutably fixed in a state of bliss for ever, Eph. ii. 5, 6.

Q. Are we not infinitely bound to Christ for recovering to us what Adam lost?—A. Yes.

Q. Where is communion with God to be enjoyed here?

A. In the use of these ordinances which God hath appointed; namely, the word, sacraments, prayer, and praises.

Q. When is it that we have communion with God in his ordinances?

A. When he allows us the gracious influences of his Spirit upon our souls: that is, when we have the communications of light, life, strength, or comfort from God; and when our graces of faith, love, repentance, or spiritual desires, are drawn forth to a lively exercise.

Q. Besides loss of communion with God, are we not likewise brought under his wrath and curse by the fall?

A. Yes; we are all by nature children of wrath, and under God's curse; according to these plain texts, Eph. ii. 3; Gal. iii. 10.

Q. What is meant by the wrath of God?

A. God's anger, or sin-revenging justice, which burns fiercely against sin, and is still ready to break forth in terrible judgments against sinners.

Q. What is meant by the curse of God?

A. The sentence of God's law, denouncing wrath and judgment upon the transgressors of it.

Q. Does the wrath and curse of God lie upon all men whatsoever?

A. Yes, as long as they are in the state of unbelief: but by Jesus Christ all true believers are delivered from God's wrath and curse, and inherit his favour and blessing, 1 Thess. i. 10; Gal. iii. 9.

Q. Are not those, who are under the wrath and curse of God, liable to all sorts of miseries?

A. Yes, and particularly to these named in the answer; namely, all the miseries of this life, death itself, and the pains of hell for ever.

Q. What are the miseries of this life which the fall makes us liable to?

A. They are very many both in soul and body.

Q. What are the soul miseries which we are liable to ?

A. Such as unbelief, blindness of mind, strong delusions, hardness of heart, weakness of memory, the bondage of sin and Satan, evil imaginations and vile affections, stupidity and searedness of conscience; or else, horror and despair, Rom. xi. 8 ; ii. 5 ; i. 26, 28 ; Eph. iv. 18, 19 ; 2 Thess. ii. 11 ; 1 Tim. iv. 2 ; 2 Tim. ii. 26 ; Gen. vi. 5 ; Isa. xxxiii. 14 ; Heb. x. 7.

Q. What are the bodily or external miseries we are liable to by the fall in this life ?

A. Both private afflictions and public calamities, such as diseases in our bodies, reproach in our names, decay in our estates, loss of relations, poverty, crosses, disappointments, sore toil and labour; as also, famine, sword, pestilence, captivity, exile, persecution, and the like, Deut. xxviii. 15, 16, 17, 18, 22, 30, 37 ; Gen. iii. 17 ; Ezek. v. 17.

Q. Should a living man complain of these his miseries ?

A. No; for they are justly inflicted, and his sins deserve worse, Lam. iii. 39.

Q. What worse miseries are we liable to by sin ?

A. Death and hell.

Q. What is meant by death in the answer ?

A. The separation of soul and body, at the end of this life.

Q. Hath the fall brought death upon all men that ever lived in the world ?

A. By the fall it is appointed for all men once to die ; and never were any exempted from that sentence, save Enoch and Elijah, who were translated into heaven without tasting of death.

Q. Is death the same thing both to the wicked and the godly ?

A. No; for it is a punishment to the one, and a purgation to the other.

Q. What kind of punishment is death to the wicked ?

A. It is the king of terrors, or beginning of hell to them: it is a serpent with a fearful sting, or a messenger sent to seize and carry them to everlasting torments.

Q. Is not death a punishment to the godly also ?

A. Not properly: for though it be the consequent of sin, yet to believers, through Christ, its nature is changed, and its sting and terror removed; yea, it becomes a friend and servant to them, to pluck up sin by the roots, and carry them home to their Father's house.

Q. Doth not death put an end to the miseries of all men ?

A. No; for though it put an end to all the godly's misery, yet in some respect it only begins the miseries of the wicked.

Q. What miseries are they liable to after this life ?

A. To the pains of hell for ever.

Q. What do ye mean by hell ?

A. A place of torment, which God hath prepared for devils and wicked men; where they shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, 2 Thess. i. 19.

Q. Wherein do the pains of hell consist ?

A. In the pain of loss, and the pain of sense.

Q. What is it you call the pain of loss in hell ?

A. The loss of heaven, with God's glorious presence and the society of saints and angels there for ever, Mat. xxv. 41; Psal. xvi. 11; Luke xiii. 28.

Q. What do you call the pain of sense of hell ?

A. The dreadful pains and torments which the damned will suffer there, both in their bodies and souls.

Q. What will be the torments of their bodies in hell ?

A. They will be cast into a lake burning with fire and brimstone, where there shall be weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth, Mat. xiii. 42; Rev. xxi. 8.

Q. Why are these torments called the second death? Rev. xxi. 8.

A. Because the damned there will still be, as it were, in the agonies of death; but that death will differ from the first in this, that they will be ever dying, but never able to die.

Q. What will be the torments of the soul in hell ?

A. The souls of the wicked there will be immediately liable to the strokes and lashes of God's wrath, and the worm that never dieth, which will fill them with eternal anguish and horror, Heb. x. 31; Mark ix. 44.

Q. What is meant by the worm that dieth not ?

A. An awakened conscience, that will gnaw, bite, and sting them for ever.

Q. How will it do that ?

A. By upbraiding them for their bypast sins, and for slighting the remedy offered to them: by throwing up to them the happiness they have lost, and the miseries brought upon them by their folly; and ever telling them what more is coming. God's wrath in hell will be still "wrath to come." All which reflections, improved by a despairing conscience, cannot but distress the guilty soul with such cutting thoughts, bitter anguish, and tormenting stings, as cannot now be imagined, Luke xvi. 25; Heb. x. 26, 27, 29.

Q. What sort of wrath is the wrath of God, which will be poured out upon the wicked in hell ?

A. It is called in scripture great wrath, anger, fury, and vengeance, which will be fierce, powerful, irresistible, insufferable, unmingled, eternal, and unquenchable; and is often expressed by fire, which is the most terrible element, Zech. vii. 12; Rev. vi. 17; 2 Kings xxiii. 26; Neh. i. 9; Psal.

xc. 11; Psal. lxxvi. 7; Ezek. xxii. 14; Isa. xxxiii. 14; Rev. xiv. 10; Mark ix. 43—45, &c.; Heb. x. 30, 31.

Q. How doth it appear that the wrath poured out on the damned is so great and terrible?

A. In regard it is poured out upon every power and faculty of the soul, and upon every sense and member of the body; and both their souls and bodies are made capacious and strong to receive and undergo much of it; and hence they are called "vessels of wrath fitted for destruction," Rom. ix. 22.

Q. Why is it called unmixed wrath?

A. Because it is without any mixture of mercy. They have no sympathy or pity from any hand, no drop of comfort to relieve them, no ground of hope to support them, no interval of rest under it day nor night; but "the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever," Rev. xiv. 10, 11; Mark ix. 44; Luke xvi. 24, 25; John iii. 36.

Q. How is it agreeable to justice to punish the wicked with eternal sufferings for temporary sinning.

A. It is just, because they provoke an eternal God, and despise an infinite good, for which finite or temporary sufferings can never satisfy. It is just for God to punish the wicked as long as he can, seeing they sin as long as they can; and, when they can sin no longer here, they carry their sins to hell with them, and continue sinning there for ever, whereby they still add oil to the flame, and keep it burning for ever.

Q. Is not this wrath so terrible, that the very devils are afraid of it?

A. Yes; for the dread they have of it makes them to tremble and cry out at the approach of their Judge, James ii. 19; Mat. viii. 29.

Q. Did the Man Christ Jesus suffer this terrible wrath in the room of an elect world?

A. Yes.

Q. How was he able to bear all that was due to them?

A. His Godhead supported the human nature under it.

Q. Had it not terrible effects upon him while he was suffering it?

A. Yes; it cast him into dreadful agonies, caused him to sweat forth blood in great drops, and make that fearful outcry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

Q. Will not one spark of this wrath let fly into the conscience, drive a sinner to despair amidst all the world's comforts?

A. Yes; as hath been verified in the instances of Cain, Judas, Spira, and many others.

Q. Do all the wicked in hell suffer equal punishment there?

A. No; some have hotter places in hell than others, according to the different measures of their guilt, Mat. xxiv. 51; Luke xii. 47, 48.

Q. Must not there be an unspeakable evil in sin, that exposeth men to all this wrath and misery?

A. Yes; we may see much of sin's evil in the glass of hell's torments.

Q. What ought we to learn from the scripture-doctrine concerning the wrath to come?

A. To bless God for contriving a way, and providing a Saviour, to redeem us both from sin and hell; and highly to esteem and love Jesus Christ, that willingly undertook and came to bear our sins, and suffer all this wrath for us, 2 Cor. ix. 15; 1 Thess. i. 10; 1 Peter ii. 7, 24; John i. 29.

QUESTION XX.

Q. Did God leave all mankind to perish in the estate of sin and misery?

A. God having, out of his mere good pleasure, from all eternity elected some to everlasting life, did enter into a covenant of grace, to deliver them out of the estate of sin and misery, and to bring them into an estate of salvation by a Redeemer.

Q. Are all men left to perish in their fallen estate?

A. No: blessed be God, who hath provided a remedy for us.

Q. Doth God deliver all men from perishing in their fallen estate?

A. No, but only some.

Q. Who are these?—A. The elect.

Q. Who are these you call the elect?

A. These whom God hath chosen out of Adam's fallen race.

Q. What hath God elected them to?

A. To everlasting life.

Q. When did God make this choice of these persons?

A. From all eternity.

Q. What was the cause of God's choosing some, and passing by others?

A. God's own mere good pleasure, Luke xii. 32.

Q. Did God elect any to eternal life, because of their foreseen faith or holiness?

A. No: these are not the cause, but fruits, of election: for God hath chosen all his people to faith and holiness as the necessary means of salvation, Eph. i. 4—6.

Q. Ought we not to try and examine our election by such fruits as these of faith and holiness?

A. Yes, 2 Pet. i. 10; 2 Thess. ii. 13.

Q. By what other plain evidences may we know whether God hath chosen us to eternal life?

A. If we have chosen God to be our God and portion, and given ourselves away to him, we may conclude that he hath first chosen us; for, if we love him, it is "because he first loved us," 1 John iv. 19.

Q. In what way and method doth God bring his elect into an estate of salvation?

A. In the way of a covenant, and by a Redeemer.

Q. Is it in the way of a covenant of works that he saves them?

A. No; but in the way of a covenant of grace.

Q. What is meant by the covenant of grace in the answer?

A. It may either point at, 1. The covenant of grace as made from eternity with Christ in name of the elect, called frequently the covenant of redemption: Or, 2. The covenant of grace, as made in time with the elect themselves upon their believing in Christ.

Q. What is that covenant of grace or redemption, which was made with Christ from eternity?

A. It is a gracious agreement made between the Father and Christ as the second Adam and representative of the elect; wherein God promised to him, that, upon condition of his mediatorial obedience and satisfaction in their stead, he should be gloriously assisted and rewarded himself, and have grace and glory to all his seed. And all this Christ accepted of, Isa. liii. 10, 11; Psal. lxxxix. 3, 4, 19, 20, &c.; Heb. x. 5—7, &c.

Q. How can that covenant made with Christ be called a covenant of grace, seeing it required perfect obedience to the law?

A. It was a covenant of grace with respect to the elect whom Christ represented, seeing in God it passeth from their personal obedience, and accepteth obedience from their surety in their stead. Likewise it contains all the blessings and good things which are freely and gratuitously bestowed upon the elect, these being first promised in that covenant to Christ as their head and representative, 2 Tim. i. 19; Tit. i. 2; Gal. iii. 16.

Q. What is the covenant of grace, as made in time with the elect themselves?

A. It is the execution or application of the covenant made with Christ, as to what immediately concerns the elect themselves; and may be defined, God's gracious paction with elect sinners in Christ, wherein he offereth and promiseth pardon and salvation to them, and to all who hear the gospel, upon their believing in his Son Jesus Christ, John iii. 36; Acts xvi. 31.

Q. When was this covenant first tendered to fallen sinners?

A. Immediately after the fall to our first parents in that great gospel-promise, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent," Gen. iii. 15.

Q. Can you show what is meant by that promise?

A. By the seed of the woman is meant Christ, that was to be born of a virgin. By the serpent is meant the devil, called so for his subtilty. By breaking his head, is meant Christ's disappointing his counsels, and destroying his works.

Q. What are the blessings promised to us in this covenant?

A. All the blessings of Christ's purchase, such as, illumination, pardon of sin, peace with God, freedom from the law's curses, sanctification, access to God, the conduct of the Spirit, victory over death, resurrection to life, and eternal glory, Ezek. xxxvi. 25, &c.; Heb. viii. 10, &c.; John iii. 18, 36; Psal. lxxxiv. 11; 1 Cor. xv. 22, 37

Q. What is the condition required of us to interest us in these promised blessings?

A. Faith in Jesus Christ, Acts xvi. 51.*

Q. Can we fulfil this condition, or believe of ourselves?

A. No; but Jesus Christ hath both purchased faith for us, and promised it to us in this covenant, John iv. 37; Phil. i. 29; Eph. ii. 7, 8; Rom. viii. 32.

Q. How then is a condition required of us?

A. Though faith be both purchased and promised, yet God still requires it of us as a duty, and that to humble us, and to put us on the use of means; to make unbelievers inexcusable, and to teach us the order and connection in which he will bestow the blessings of this covenant.

Q. Hath faith the same place in the covenant of grace that obedience had in the covenant of works?

A. No; for Adam's obedience, had he performed it, was a condition in a proper sense, which gave him a right to life, and was pleadable before God for that effect; which cannot be said of faith, seeing it is not our faith, but Christ's surety-righteousness, that gives us a right to eternal life. This, and this only, is the ground of justification that a sinner can plead before God.

Q. Can faith then be called the condition of the covenant of grace in a strict and proper sense?

A. No, but in a more general sense, as it is

* The Westminster Assembly, and our Assembly 1648, in Lar. Cat. Quest. 32, also assert this, in express words, that God requireth faith as the condition to interest sinners in Christ, proving it from John i. 12, and iii. 16. Now our Larger Catechism, that bath these words, was approved by the Westminster Assembly, and the Assembly 1648, after the most exact trial and examination, both by themselves, and by the respective presbyteries of this church; as appears from the Act of Assembly 1648, sess. 10. If these noble reforming Assemblies had not thought fit to use the word condition to guard against the Antinomians, who say, the elect are justified before they believe, probably I might have dropped it, as being abused by some. But I continue to use it, in order to explain the words of our standards, to prevent mistakes, and to show in what sense the word condition may be safely used, when applied to faith, as our Reformers understood it, viz. that it is nowise a meritorious or pleadable condition, but only an instrumental or applying condition, mean, or qualification, (these being all one and the same,) required in us, in order to our getting an actual interest in Christ, and the possession of the other benefits of his purchase, (for faith is also his purchase, though required of us;) and that Christ's righteousness and satisfaction alone is the meritorious and pleadable condition of a sinner's justification before God, and of his eternal salvation, and nothing else.

the only mean or instrument for applying the righteousness of Christ to us, and without which Christ and his benefits cannot be ours. The righteousness by which we are justified is often called the righteousness of faith, or by faith; to teach us, that as the righteousness of Christ is the only meritorious and pleadable condition of our justification, so faith is the instrumental and applying condition of it, Heb. xi. 6, 7; Rom. iv. 13, 16; iii. 22, 24, 26, &c.; xi. 30, 32; x. 4, 6.

Q. What is the difference betwixt the covenant of works and the covenant of grace?

A. The first covenant makes the ground or condition of a man's justification before God to be the righteousness performed by the man himself; but the second makes it to be the righteousness performed by Christ the Surety, apprehended by our faith. The first covenant had no surety to answer for Adam's performing what was required of him; but the second hath Christ engaged for what is required of us.

Q. Doth not the covenant of grace require obedience to God's law, as well as the covenant of works?

A. Yes, but not for the same ends, or in the same manner: for the first covenant required our obedience as the proper condition of life; but the second requires it as the evidence of our faith, and of our conformity to Christ. The first, for the justifying of our persons; the second, for testifying our thankfulness for redeeming love. The first required perfect obedience in our own strength; but the second accepts of sincere aims to obey in Christ's strength, and imputes his perfect obedience to us, to cover our defects, to atone for our guilt, and to obtain grace and glory for us.

Q. May not repentance, love, self-denial, and holiness, be called conditions of the covenant of grace, as much as faith, seeing these are also required of us in it?

A. Though they be required, yet they have not the same conditionality with faith; in regard that, among all the graces, faith hath a peculiar aptitude and fitness for taking hold of and applying Christ and his righteousness, and also for emptying the creature of self, and exalting of God's free grace: therefore God puts honour upon faith above all the rest of the graces, by ascribing our justification and salvation so frequently to it, Rom. iii. 26, 27; iv. 16; v. 1; John iii. 16, 18, 36; vi. 40; Eph. ii. 8, 9; Phil. iii. 9; Luke vii. 50; 1 Pet. i. 5.

Q. What names doth the covenant of grace get in scripture?

A. It is called a testament, a covenant of peace, a covenant of promise, a new covenant, a holy covenant, an everlasting, well-ordered, and sure covenant, Heb. ix. 15; xii. 24; Isa. liv. 10; Eph. ii. 12; Luke i. 27; 2 Sam. xxiii. 5.

Q. Is the covenant of grace a scripture-term?

A. Though we find it not in the express words, yet we often have it in words of the same import: and it being a most significant term, it is fitly appropriated to this covenant.

Q. Why is it called the covenant of grace?

A. To show that free grace only, or the undeserved merey and goodness of God, moved him to contrive it; that free grace only determines the elect to take hold of it; and that the exalting of free grace is the great end of it. Likewise it is termed the covenant of grace, because even faith itself, which is called the condition of it, is God's gracious and free gift to us, as well as all the rest of the blessings and benefits promised in it, Eph. i. 4, 6, 7; ii. 7—9; Tit. iii. 5—7; Rom. xi. 5, 6; 2 Tim. i. 9, 10; Phil. i. 29.

Q. Why is this covenant called a testament?

A. Because all the blessings and good things promised in it are freely bequeathed and made over to the elect, as legacies left and made sure to them by the death of Christ the testator; and in it he hath left them grace to enable them to perform every duty required of them.

Q. What is the greatest promise in the covenant of grace?

A. The whole covenant of grace, with all the blessings in it, is summed up in that great and comprehensive promise, "I will be your God, and ye shall be my people," Jer. xxxi. 33; Heb. viii. 10. "I will be your God," hath more in it than giving us the possession of both heaven and earth.

Q. How may we know whether we be included in this promise?

A. If we have been enabled to take God to be our God, and to surrender and give up ourselves unto him, we may claim an interest in it; according to Zech. xiii. 9; 2 Cor. viii. 5.

Q. Is the covenant of grace made with all mankind as the covenant of works was?

A. No; for though it be tendered and offered to all who hear the gospel, yet it is really made with none but those who take hold of it.

Q. Have not all sinners, even the worst of them, a call and warrant to come and take hold of this covenant?

A. Yes; as appears from Isa. lvi. 3—6, &c.; Mark xvi. 15, 16; Rev. xxii. 17.

Q. Was ever any man saved another way than by the covenant of grace?

A. No; Acts iv. 12; Gal. ii. 16.

Q. Were all the faithful under the Old Testament saved by this covenant?

A. Yes; for they had it discovered and tendered to them, though not so clearly as we have.

Q. Was the covenant which God made with the Israelites, when he brought them out of Egypt, a covenant of works or of grace?

A. Though that covenant was delivered in a legal form, and intermixed with terror, for humbling of that people; yet it was the same covenant of grace in substance with that proposed to us in the gospel: for they had the same Mediator and Surety with us, typified to them by Moses and the sacrifices; they had the same promises of remission, and of grace and glory, through the blood of the Messiah, to which they were required to look by faith, through the types and sacrifices, for both their justification and salvation, Psal. ii. 12; Isa. xlv. 22; xliii. 1, 3, 6, 7; Ezek. xi. 19, 20; xxxvi. 25, 26, 27; Exod. xii. 22, 23; Num. xxi. 7, 8; Lev. i. 4; Exod. xxiv. 7, 8; Heb. iv. 2.

Q. Ought we not to praise the Lord with our souls, that we have a far more spiritual, plain, and clear dispensation of the covenant of grace than the Old Testament believers had?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the estate out of which God delivers his elect by the covenant of grace?

A. Out of an estate of sin and misery.

Q. Do the elect lie in a state of sin and misery, as well as others, till God is mercifully pleased to take them into the bond of his covenant?

A. Yes; for we are told, that at the time when God looks upon them with an eye of pity, and enters into covenant with them, he finds them in a loathsome state, wallowing in their blood and pollution, and by nature children of wrath, even as others, Ezek. xvi. 5, 6, 8; Eph. ii. 1—3.

Q. What is the estate that God brings them into by this covenant?

A. Into an estate of salvation.

Q. What estate is that?

A. It is an estate of safety and growing felicity, wherein they shall persevere, till in due time they arrive at full and perfect happiness.

Q. By whom doth he bring them into this estate of salvation?—A. By a Redeemer.

QUESTION XXI.

Q. Who is the Redeemer of God's elect?

A. The only Redeemer of God's elect is the Lord Jesus Christ, who, being the eternal Son of God, became man; and so was, and continued to be, God and man, in two distinct natures, and one Person, for ever.

Q. What do ye mean by a Redeemer?

A. A ransom, or a person that delivers others out of captivity or bondage, as Christ doth elect sinners.

Q. How doth it appear that Christ is such a Redeemer?

A. Because he is frequently so called in scripture, and is said to give his life a ransom for many, Job xix. 25; Isa. liv. 5; lx. 16; Jer. l. 34; Mat. xx. 28.

Q. Are God's own elect in bondage by nature?—A. Yes.

Q. What sort of bondage is it that the elect are in?

A. It is a spiritual bondage: they are prisoners in the hands of justice, condemned to the prison of hell; they are also captives and bondmen to sin and Satan.

Q. How doth Christ redeem his people from their bondage?

A. Partly by price or purchase, and partly by power or conquest.

Q. How doth Christ redeem them out of the hands of God's justice?

A. Not by silver or gold, but by his precious blood, 1 Pet. i. 18, 19.

Q. How doth Christ redeem his elect from the captivity of Satan and sin?

A. By his mighty power, conquering their enemies, and subduing their hearts to himself, Eph. iv. 8; Col. ii. 15; Psal. cx. 3.

Q. Is not Christ the stronger man that overcomes the strong man, and spoils him of his goods?

A. Yes, Luke xi. 21, 22.

Q. Is it not Christ that recovers his people out of the snare of the devil, who before had taken and led them captive at his will?

A. Yes, 2 Tim. ii. 26.

Q. How were the elect redeemed from sin and hell who died before Christ shed his blood?

A. By virtue of the compact between the Father and the Son from all eternity; the virtue of Christ's blood did reach back to believers from the beginning of the world, as well as it doth extend forward to believers to the end of the world; even as a cautioner by his bond will deliver a man from prison long before he actually pay the debt.

Q. Could either angels or men have provided such a Redeemer for us.

A. No; none could do it but the infinitely wise God; it was his own arm that brought about this salvation, Isa. lix. 16.

Q. What is our Redeemer's name?

A. The Lord JESUS CHRIST.

Q. Why is he called the LORD?

A. Because he is JEHOVAH, as he is God. And as Mediator, he hath by his death acquired an universal lordship and dominion over all things in heaven and earth, Mat. xxviii. 18; Phil. ii. 8—10.

Q. Why is he called JESUS?

A. Because he saves his people from their sins, Mat. i. 21. The word signifies a Saviour, being the name given him by the angel that foretold his birth.

Q. What is in sin, that this glorious Jesus saves his people from?

A. He saves them from the pollution and power of their sins, from the guilt and punishment of them, and at last from the very inbeing of sin.

Q. Why is he called CHRIST?

A. Because he is the anointed of God. The Greek word Christ is the same with the Hebrew word Messiah, both signifying anointed.

Q. Wherefore gets he that name?

A. Because he was consecrated to a threefold office as Mediator, viz. the office of a Prophet, of a Priest, and of a King; to which offices men under the law were solemnly set apart and anointed with oil.

Q. Was Christ anointed with oil to these offices?

A. No; but with the Holy Ghost above measure, whereby he was set apart, authorised, and fully furnished to discharge these three offices to the church, Psal. xlv. 7; John iii. 34.

Q. Is there no other Redeemer of souls besides the Lord Jesus Christ?

A. No, he is the only Redeemer.

Q. But though he be the only Mediator for redemption, may there not be other Mediators for intercession?

A. The Papists have coined this distinction, to bring in angels and saints to share of Christ's glory, if not in that of redemption, yet in that of intercession. But as he is the only Redeemer, so he is the only Advocate with the Father; for his infinite blood is necessary to be the foundation of the one as well as the other.

Q. Whose Son is Christ?

A. The Son of God.

Q. Are there not others called the sons of God in scripture besides Christ?

A. Yes; we find angels, Adam, and believers, so called, Job xxxviii. 7; Luke iii. 38; 1 John iii. 1, and that either in respect of their immediate creation by God, or their adoption into his family.

Q. How then is Christ the Son of God, as no other is so?

A. Christ is the Son of God by nature, and from all eternity, and so called the eternal Son of God.

Q. Why would God have no less a person to be our Redeemer.

A. That the glory of his justice might be displayed, and our redemption made effectual. Infinite justice could not have been glorified by a finite ransom: therefore it is said that Christ's blood was shed to declare God's righteousness, Rom. iii. 25.

Q. How many natures hath Christ?

A. Two; to wit, his divine nature and his human nature.

Q. How many persons hath he?

A. But one.

Q. Are these two natures in Christ mixed or confounded together?

A. No; they are distinct, without any mixture or confusion, as some ancient heretics asserted.

Q. What are the ancient heresies about Christ's natures and person, which are obviated in the answer?

A. There are four heresies which were condemned by four general councils. 1. Arius and his followers denied the eternity of Christ's Godhead: and therefore it is asserted he is God, and that from all eternity. 2. Marcian and his followers denied the verity of Christ's human nature, saying he was only man in appearance: but the answer asserts, He became man, and real man. 3. Eutyches and his followers would have the two natures mixed and confounded, so as to make but one: therefore it is asserted, that he hath two distinct natures. 4. Nestorius and his followers divided the two natures of Christ, so as to make him two persons: therefore it is asserted, that these two natures are so united as to make him but one person.

Q. Is Christ true God, co-essential, co-eternal, and co-equal with the Father?

A. Yes; as is evident from the scriptures, John x. 30; Phil. ii. 6. (See this fully proven before, in the explication of Quest. vi. p. 605—607.)

Q. How do you prove that Christ is true man as well as true God?

A. He hath the essential constituent parts of a man, a true body, and a rational soul; he was hungry, he ate, drank, slept, swate, suffered, bled, and died.

Q. Was he man from all eternity?

A. No; Heb. ii. 14.

Q. When became he man?

A. In the fulness of time, when the sceptre was departed from Judah. Then a body was prepared for him; being conceived in the womb of the Virgin Mary, and born of her, in an extraordinary way, Gal. iv. 4; Heb. x. 5; Luke ii. 1, 2, &c.

Q. How long time was there between Christ's coming in the flesh, and the first promise made thereof to our first parents

A. About four thousand years.

Q. Why did he delay the accomplishing of this promise so long?

A. To convince fallen sinners of God's indignation against sin, and of the wretched state sin had plunged them into, and that their deliverance could never arise from themselves: and also to teach us to wait patiently for the fulfilment of others of God's promises to his church.

Q. How many years is it since Christ came into the world?

A. We may know that from the present year of God, which is 1843 years; for that is the reckoning of years among Christians, since God became man.

Q. Why was it necessary that our Redeemer should be true man?

A. That he might be our near kinsman, and have the right of redemption lodged in him; and that he might be capable to shed blood and suffer death in our room; for without the shedding of blood there was no remission, Ruth iv. 3, 4; Heb. ix. 22.

Q. Why was it necessary that our Redeemer should be God?

A. To support the human nature, and keep it from sinking under the wrath of God and power of death; and to give sufficient value and efficacy to his blood and sufferings, for satisfying justice, and purchasing life for us.

Q. Do these two natures in Christ make two persons?—A. No.

Q. How can he be but one person, seeing he is both God and man?

A. By the human nature's subsisting in union with the second Person of the glorious Trinity.

Q. Why was it necessary that the second Person should have taken the human nature to subsist in his own personality, so that our Redeemer should be but one Person?

A. That his sufferings, though only in his human nature, might be reckoned the sufferings of one that was truly God, and so be of infinite value to redeem a lost world.

Q. How is this union called?

A. A hypostatical or personal union; but it is such a mystery as neither men nor angels can comprehend, 1 Tim. iii. 16; 1 Pet. i. 12.

Q. How long will this union last?

A. For ever.

Q. Doth Christ continue to be God and man still in heaven?—A. Yes.

Q. Is not the human nature highly exalted by this hypostatical union?—A. Yes.

Q. Have we not ground to say, with wonder, "Lord, what is man, that thou art mindful of him", in such a manner?

A. Yes; for it is most amazing conduct to show such respect to fallen men, when fallen angels are past by.

Q. Is it not a strong argument to avoid brutish lusts and sensual pleasures, that these would debase the human nature which Christ hath so highly advanced?—A. Yes.

Q. Ought we not cheerfully to act, suffer, and be abased for Christ, that stooped so low as to become man for us?—A. Yes.

QUESTION XXII.

Q. How did Christ, being the Son of God, become man?

A. Christ the Son of God became man, by taking to himself a true body and a reasonable soul; being conceived by the power of the Holy Ghost, in the womb of the Virgin Mary, and born of her, yet without sin.

Q. Did Christ, in assuming our nature, take all the necessary essential parts of a man?

A. Yes, he took a true body, and a reasonable soul.

Q. Why is it called a true body?

A. To show that it was not a fantastic body, or only the shade and appearance of a body, as some old heretics maintained; but that he took a real body of flesh and blood, as we have, Luke xxiv. 39; Heb. ii. 14.

Q. Did Christ's divine nature supply the place of a soul to him?

A. No; though some heretics taught so. He took a reasonable soul, as well as a true body, Isa. liii. 10; Mat. xxvi. 38.

Q. Did Christ bring his body or flesh from heaven?

A. No; he was the seed of the woman, Gen. iii. 15.

Q. Was Christ's birth like that of other men?

A. No; for he was born of a virgin, without any earthly father, Isa. vii. 14; Mat. i. 24, 25.

Q. How could that be?

A. He was miraculously conceived by the power of the Holy Ghost, in the womb of the Virgin Mary, Luke i. 34, 35.

Q. Of what nation, tribe, or family, did Christ descend as he was a man?

A. By his mother Mary he came of the nation of the Jews, of the tribe of Judah, and of the family of David, Luke i. 69.

Q. If Christ had a mother, how is Melchizedec a type of him, as being recorded "without father, and without mother?" Heb. vii. 3.

A. In regard Christ is without any human Father as man, and without mother as God.

Q. Why was he conceived and born of a virgin?

A. To fulfil scripture prophecies concerning him, and to keep him pure from original sin, which is conveyed to all Adam's posterity by natural generation.

Q. How could he be free of sin, seeing he was born of a sinful woman?

A. The Holy Ghost did miraculously sanctify so much of the virgin's substance as formed Christ's body, which therefore is called "that Holy Thing," which shall be born of her, Luk. i. 35.

Q. Why was it necessary that Christ should be conceived and born without sin?

A. If he had not been without all spot or blemish, he could not have been a sacrifice for sin acceptable to God: neither could his righteousness, which was to be imputed to all believers, have been infinitely perfect, as was necessary for our redemption, Lev. iii. 1, 6; Jer. xxiii. 6; 2 Cor. v. 21; Heb. vii. 26, 27; Num. xxviii. 3; 1 Pet. i. 19.

Q. Do not we read that Christ was sent in the likeness of sinful flesh? Rom. viii. 3.

A. That doth not import that he was really tainted with sin, but only that he had the likeness or appearance of sinful flesh, in partaking of these infirmities of our nature, which were the consequences of sin, though they were sinless in themselves.

Q. What were these sinless infirmities?

A. Such as weariness, sleeping, weeping, sorrowing, suffering, bleeding, sweating, and dying.

Q. Did not Christ suffer for sin?

A. Yes, but not for any sin of his own; for "he was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities," Isa. liii. 5.

Q. Should we not all desire to be like our head, and, as much as possible, to be without sin?

A. Yes, 1 Pet ii. 21—24.

QUESTION XXIII.

Q. What offices doth Christ execute as our Redeemer?

A. Christ, as our Redeemer, executeth the office of a Prophet, of a Priest, and of a King, both in his estate of humiliation and exaltation.

Q. Are not these three offices called Christ's mediatory offices?

A. Yes; or they are three branches of Christ's mediatory office, in each of which Christ performs what he undertook, by mediating and acting, either for God with us, or for us with God.

Q. Why is Christ's mediatory office threefold?

A. To answer his people's threefold misery, ignorance, guilt, and bondage: for, as our Prophet, he cures our ignorance by his divine teaching; as a Priest, he atones for our guilt by his sacrifice; as a King, he rescues us from bondage by his power, and settles us under a good government.

Q. What mean you by Christ's executing of his offices?

A. His doing or performing these things which properly belong to such office or charge.

Q. Did Christ take upon him those offices without a call?

A. No; he was lawfully called to every one of them by the Father, who hath put all power and judgment in his hand. And therefore he is called the Lord's Christ, Mat. xxviii. 18; Luke ii. 26; John v. 27.

Q. How doth it appear from scripture, that Christ is called and appointed by the Father to his threefold office of Prophet, Priest, and King?

A. It appears from these three following plain texts, Acts iii. 22; Heb. v. 6; Psal. ii. 6.

Q. Was ever any man honoured with all the three offices of Prophet, Priest, and King, but the man Christ?

A. No; for though Melchizedec was a king and a priest, yet he was not a prophet; David was a king and a prophet, yet he was not a priest; Samuel was a priest and a prophet, yet he was not a king. Which shows us how far short the types and shadows came of the substance.

Q. Do not all the promises of the new covenant flow from Christ's several offices as their proper fountain?

A. Yes; the promises of instruction, illumination, and conduct, flow from his prophetic office; the promises of pardon, peace, and healing, from his priestly office; and the promise of deliverance, protection, grace, and glory, flow from his kingly office.

Q. Do not these three offices of Christ render him a most suitable help and complete remedy for all the grievances and necessities of his people?

A. Yes.

Q. Can a man close with Christ in one of these offices, and not in another?

A. No; they are but hypocrites who would divide his offices, and receive him partially; for whoever would reap benefit by one office, must receive Christ in all.

Q. In which of Christ's estates doth he execute his three offices?

A. In both of his estates; namely, of humiliation and exaltation.

Q. What do you mean by these two estates of Christ?

A. By his estate of humiliation, I understand that low and afflicted condition Christ was in here upon earth; and by his estate of exaltation, that raised, high, and glorious condition he is in now in heaven.

Q. How did Christ execute all his three offices in his estate of humiliation?

A. 1. He executed his office as a Prophet by his personal ministry upon earth, and sending out his disciples to instruct the world in the way of salvation. 2. He executed his Priestly office, by offering up himself a sacrifice on the cross, and praying for his people. 3. He executed his Kingly office, in promulgating and explaining laws to the world, purging the temple, and riding in triumph to Jerusalem.

Q. How doth Christ execute these three offices now in his estate of exaltation?

A. 1. He executes that of a Prophet, by furnishing and sending forth his ministers to teach the world. 2. That of a Priest, by making intercession for his people. 3. That of a King, by proclaiming his laws, subduing his enemies, and governing his church.

Q. Did Christ execute none of these offices before either his state of humiliation or exaltation?

A. Christ being installed in all these three offices by virtue of the covenant of redemption.

he entered upon the execution of them immediately after the fall, and did execute them so far as his work did not necessarily require his incarnation.

QUESTION XXIV.

Q. How doth Christ execute the office of a Prophet?

A. Christ executeth the office of a Prophet, in revealing to us, by his word and Spirit, the will of God for our salvation.

Q. What do you mean by a prophet, or his office?

A. One whose employment it is, either to foretell things to come, or to teach sinners the will of God, and expound his word to them.

Q. Is Christ a prophet in all these respects?

A. Yes.

Q. What do we read of his prophesying or foretelling things to come?

A. He foretold Judas's betraying him, Peter's denying him, all the disciples' forsaking him, the manner of his death and sufferings, his rising on the third day, the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem, the persecution of his disciples, the calling of the Gentiles, &c. Matt. xxvi. 23, 31, 34; xx. 18, 19; xxiv. 2; xxi. 43; Luke xix. 44; John xvi. 2.

Q. By what other way did Christ execute his prophetical office?

A. He did it by his personal ministry, and teaching sinners the will of God, while he was on earth; and by sending forth his apostles and their successors to teach them; and by illuminating the minds of gospel hearers by his Spirit, to understand and relish divine truths.

Q. What was the need of such an extraordinary prophet as Jesus Christ to teach us the will of God?

A. Because of the gross darkness and blindness which came upon us by the fall; and because none but he that was in the bosom of the Father from eternity, was capable to make known to us the hid mysteries of the gospel, John i. 18; Acts xxvi. 18.

Q. Did Christ execute his prophetical office under the Old Testament as well as the New?

A. Yes; for he existed before he became man, and taught his church of old.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. By the holy scripture, which tells us, that Christ was in the Old Testament prophets by his Spirit; that he preached, in the days of Noah, to those who are now in prison; that he spoke with Moses and the Israelites in the wilderness, and was tempted by them there; see 1 Pet. i. 11; iii. 19; Acts vii. 38, 39; 1 Cor. x. 9.

Q. Wherein doth Christ excel all other prophets?

A. In regard Christ authorises them all, and teacheth the heart as well as the ear. No prophet ever taught with such authority, power, wisdom, diligence, faithfulness, zeal, and compassion, as Christ did; nor ever confirmed his doctrine with such miracles and holiness of life as Christ did his, Matt. xxii. 16, 22, 34, 46; vii. 28, 29; Luke iv. 22; xxiv. 32, 45; John vii. 46; xv. 24; viii. 46.

Q. By what means doth Christ reveal to us the will of God?

A. He doth it outwardly by his Word, and inwardly by his Spirit.

Q. Why are the scriptures called the word of Christ? Col. iii. 16.

A. Though they be also the word of the Father and of the Holy Ghost, yet they are Christ's word in a peculiar manner, because by them he speaks as Mediator in the name of God, and executes the prophetical office for teaching the church.

Q. Is it only by the word read that Christ teacheth his church?

A. He teacheth also by preaching and hearing of the word; and therefore he hath appointed pastors for opening up the scriptures, and teaching his church thereby to the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 19, 20; Neh. viii. 8; Rom. x. 14—17; Prov. viii. 34.

Q. Is the word sufficient to teach us the will of God without the Spirit?

A. No; for though the scriptures are in themselves a sufficient rule to direct, yet such is the darkness of our minds, that we cannot savingly discern and receive divine truths without the Spirit's illumination, 1 Cor. ii. 14.

Q. How is it that the Spirit teacheth us the will of God?

A. He teacheth us in and by his word, giving inward light, writing his laws in our hearts, and setting home spiritual truths upon the conscience.

Q. What are these special lessons which our great Prophet teacheth sinners by his Spirit?

A. Such as these; the great evil in sin, the woeful corruption of our natures, the dreadful wrath we deserve, our insufficiency to save ourselves, the fulness of saving power that is in Christ, the excellency of the new covenant, and a surety righteousness, the necessity of the Spirit's work in the soul, and of faith and holiness.

Q. Is not the Spirit sufficient to teach us these things without the word?

A. No doubt he could have taught us by the Spirit alone, without the word, if he had so pleased; but he hath instituted the word as the means he will make use of in teaching his church, Isa. viii. 20; Rom. xv. 4.

Q. What case are those in, who have not the scriptures to reveal the will of God to them?

A. They must be in a perishing condition, Prov. xxix. 18.

Q. Cannot the light of reason, or the sun, moon, and stars, make known the will of God to us?

A. No; for though they may teach us some general things concerning God, yet they cannot show us the way of salvation through Jesus Christ.

Q. Who are those that are taught the will of God by his Word and Spirit?

A. All true believers are so taught.

Q. Do not others know the will of God besides them?

A. Though natural men may have much literal knowledge, and some common illuminations; yet none but believers attain to the saving knowledge of God's will.

Q. How may we know if our knowledge of God's will be saving?

A. We may conclude it is so, if it tend to humble us and exalt Christ; if it warm our hearts, transform our souls, and reform our lives, and if we study to live up to our light in all respects, Phil. iii. 8, 9; John xiii. 17; 2 Cor. iii. 18.

Q. What shall become of those who are ignorant of God and his will, and slight the means of knowledge which God hath appointed?

A. He that made them will not have mercy on them; but will come with flaming fire, to take vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel, Isa. xxvii. 11; 1 Thess. i. 8.

Q. What shall ignorant persons do for knowledge?

A. They must read and hear the word, and go to Christ the great Prophet and Teacher of his church, and cry, "Lord, open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law," Psal. cxix. 18.

QUESTION XXV

Q. How doth Christ execute the office of a Priest?

A. Christ executeth the office of a Priest in his once offering up of himself a sacrifice to satisfy divine justice, and reconcile us to God: and in making continual intercession for us.

Q. What are the two parts of Christ's priestly office in the answer?

A. They are his offering sacrifice, and making intercession for us.

Q. What do you mean by a sacrifice?

A. In the scripture sense, it is a living creature slain, and offered to God to make atonement for sin.

Q. What is it to make atonement for sin?

A. It is to satisfy God's justice for sin, and pacify his wrath.

Q. What was the sacrifice which Christ our Priest offered up to God for us?

A. It was himself.

Q. What mean 'you by himself; was it his body or his soul that he offered?

A. He offered up both his body and soul for us, according to Heb. x. 10; Isa. liii. 10.

Q. What is meant by his offering up himself a sacrifice for us?

A. His representing his death and sufferings to God for his acceptance, as an equivalent for the sins of an elect world.

Q. How often did Christ offer up himself for us?

A. Once, and no more; though yet the papists most absurdly pretend to offer him up frequently in their unbloody sacrifice of the mass, and so set every mass-priest upon a level with Christ.

Q. Why may not Christ be offered up more than once?

A. Because his once offering up of himself did sufficiently satisfy justice: and none else can offer up Christ but himself; nor can he be offered without new suffering, which is inconsistent with his exalted state; see Heb. ix. 25, 26, 28.

Q. For what ends did Christ offer up himself as a sacrifice?

A. We are told in the answer, that he did it, to satisfy divine justice for our sins, and to reconcile us unto God.

Q. Could neither men nor angels offer a sacrifice sufficient to satisfy the justice of God for our sins?

A. No.

Q. Why so?

A. Because no satisfaction of theirs could be of infinite value.

Q. Was divine justice fully satisfied by Christ's sacrifice?—A. Yes.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. By the infinite dignity of the person that offered it; by the Father's voice from heaven, declaring he was well pleased in him; by Christ himself saying on the cross, "It is finished;" and by the glorious mark of respect God put upon him after his sufferings, in raising him from the dead, in receiving him up to heaven, and setting him down on his right hand.

Q. But why might not God have pardoned our sins without any such sacrifice?

A. Because he behoved to see his just threatening in the covenant of works fulfilled in the punishment of sin; and the glory of his justice displayed, as well as that of his mercy.

Q. What is the happy consequent to us of Christ's satisfying divine justice?

A. Our reconciliation to God.

Q. What is it to be reconciled to God?

A. It is to make God and men friends, who were enemies before.

Q. How is this reconciliation brought about?

A. By Christ's shedding his blood as a price to purchase our peace and friendship with God, of which we are to share upon our receiving Christ by faith.

Q. What are the benefits which Christ purchased by his sacrifice for his people?

A. All needful blessings, whether temporal, spiritual, or eternal; so that faith, repentance, conversion, justification, holiness, with all the graces of the Spirit, daily bread, communion with God, and eternal life, are all the purchase of Christ to his people.

Q. Whence had the sacrifice of Christ so much efficacy?

A. From his divine nature, to which his soul and body were closely united; and hence his blood is called the "blood of God," Acts xx. 28.

Q. How could the sufferings of one man satisfy for the sins of others?

A. By his having the sins of these others laid upon him and imputed to him.

Q. How could the sins and crimes of men be imputed to Christ, an innocent person, who had no hand in them?

A. By Christ's becoming Surety for sinners, substituting himself in their place, and voluntarily taking their guilt upon him.

Q. What view doth this sacrifice give us of sin?

A. It shows us the malignity and heinous nature of sin, that no less could expiate or wipe it away than the blood of Christ.

Q. Doth Christ's sacrifice so completely satisfy justice for sin, as to exclude all further satisfaction from us?

A. Yes; and hence all popish satisfaction for sin, by penances, pilgrimages, prayers, alms-deeds, and purgatory, are vain and presumptuous.

Q. Why then are good works, prayers, confessions, tears, afflictions, and sufferings, required of, and appointed to, believers here below?

A. Not to satisfy or atone for their sins, but to glorify God, and promote their sanctification and meetness for a better world.

Q. For whom did Christ offer up his sacrifice?

A. For the elect, and those who believe on him, Isa. liii. 11; Matt. xxvi. 28; John x. 15, 16; John xvii. 9, 19, 20; Acts xx. 28.

Q. Do we not read also of Christ's dying for all, of his reconciling the world to God, and of his being a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, 1 Cor. v. 15, 19; 1 John ii. 12.

A. Yes, but these texts are to be understood only of the elect world; it being absurd to say, that Christ shed his blood for those for whom he would not pray; that he satisfied justice for great numbers, who were actually in hell before he suffered.

Q. How could Christ's sacrifice satisfy for the Old Testament saints, who died before it was offered?

A. See the answer before, page 625.

OF CHRIST'S INTERCESSION.

Q. What is the second part of Christ's priestly office?

A. His making continual intercession for us.

Q. Doth this office properly belong to Christ's priesthood?

A. Yes; for under the law the priests made intercession for the people, and for that end carried the blood of the sacrifices into the most holy place, and then sprinkled the mercy-seat with it.

Q. What is the need of Christ's intercession?

A. Because there are many to accuse us, and plead against us; and of ourselves we are vile and unworthy of access to God.

Q. How is it that Christ makes intercession for us?

A. When he was on earth, he did it by humble prayers and supplications to God; but now in heaven he doth it by his glorious appearing as a public person in our name, and presenting before the throne of glory his all-sufficient merits, willing his Father to accept of his blood in behalf of the elect, that all and every one of them may, in due time, enjoy the benefits of his purchase, John xvii. 11, 17, 24; Heb. ix. 12, 24; xi. 24.

Q. Is this the way that the blood of Christ is said to speak?—A. Yes.

A. Is it upon the account of Christ's intercession that our duties and services are now accepted of God?—A. Yes, John xiv. 13.

Q. Is not the Holy Ghost said to make intercession for us, Rom. viii. 26. How is that consistent with Christ's office?

A. It is Christ's office to intercede without us, by presenting his blood and sufferings for us: it is the Spirit's work to intercede within us, by exciting our desires, and suggesting arguments in prayer to God.

Q. Did not Christ finish his priestly work, when he was upon the cross?

A. Yes; with respect to his satisfaction, but not his intercession: the one was then perfected, the other still continues.

Q. Is not his satisfaction the foundation of his intercession?—A. Yes.

Q. How long will Christ's intercession continue?

A. For ever, Psal. cx. 4; Heb. vii. 25.

Q. Will there be any need for the intercession of Christ after the last day, when all the elect will be gathered home?

A. Yes, in order to preserve them for ever in the possession of that happiness to which they are come.

Q. Doth Christ intercede only for actual believers?

A. No; he intercedes for all the elect; both those who have believed, and those who are yet to believe, John xvii. 20.

Q. What are the respective blessings which he pleads for to them?

A. To the unconverted, he pleads for converting grace, faith, repentance, &c. To them who believe, for more grace and holiness, for renewed pardons, preservation from the evil of the world, perseverance in grace, unity among themselves, and accomplishment of all the promises and good things purchased to them, both here and hereafter.

Q. When Christ pleads for his people, that they may be kept from the evil in the world, John xvii. doth he mean to keep them from all afflictions?—A. No.

Q. Are not sanctified afflictions a part of Christ's purchase to them?

A. Yes; and in that respect they are not evil to them, but good.

Q. What evil is it then that Christ speaks of?

A. The evil of sin, and the evil of wrath.

Q. Is Christ's intercession still prevalent and successful?

A. Yes; for him the Father heareth always, John xi. 42.

Q. What are the grounds of Christ's prevalency?

A. The dignity of his person and of his sacrifice, and because he pleads for nothing but what is agreeable to the divine will, and for those whom the Father loves as well as he.

Q. Doth not Christ infinitely excel all other advocates in the world?

A. Yes; for there is none so skilful, so prevalent, so diligent, so cheap, or so ready as he is.

Q. May we employ any other Advocate or Mediator besides Christ?

A. No; for the scripture tells us, "There is but one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus," 1 Tim. ii. 5. Christ is the sole Mediator of intercession, as well as of redemption.

Q. Why cannot saints or angels be our mediators with God?

A. Because they have no merit to plead upon, neither do they know us, nor our cases and wants, Isa. lxiii. 16.

Q. Wherein doth the priesthood of Christ excel that of the Levitical priests?

A. All these were but types and shadows of Christ; he is the substance: these offered many sacrifices, and the blood of beasts, which could not satisfy justice for sin; but Christ offered only one sacrifice, even his own blood, which gave full satisfaction: in the Levitical priesthood, there was still a difference between the priest, the sacrifice, and the altar; but Christ is all the three in one.

Q. How is it that Christ is all the three, the priest, the sacrifice, and the altar?

A. Christ in his own person was the priest which made the offering that atoned for sin; his human nature was the sacrifice, and his divine nature was the altar.

Q. Was not the cross the altar on which the sacrifice was offered?

A. The cross may be called so improperly, or in a large sense, as being the material part to which the sacrifice was affixed: but it was by no means the altar which sanctified the gift, and made it acceptable for the great ends it was offered for: this only was Christ's Godhead.

Q. How is Christ said to be a priest after the order of Melchisedec, rather than after the order of Aaron?

A. Because, though both of them typified Christ, yet Melchisedec was a more exact and lively type and representation of Christ as a priest than Aaron was, seeing he is set forth as superior to Abraham, and was a King as well as a Priest, having neither predecessors nor successors in his office, and his genealogy and descent wholly concealed; thereby prefiguring Christ's eternal generation and duration.

Q. What shall we do to secure an interest in the sacrifice and intercession of this glorious High Priest?

A. 1. Let us seek to be duly affected with our misery while without it, as being every moment exposed to the stroke of unsatisfied justice. 2. Let us be persuaded, that no sacrifice will satisfy, no blood will protect, but that which Christ hath offered. 3. Let us renounce all confidence in our own righteousness and duties. 4. We must heartily approve of the glorious device of saving penitents by the merits and intercession of our High Priest. 5. We must receive the bleeding High Priest into faith's arms, as one freely offered to us, and entirely trust him with our salvation. 6. Accept of him as a Priest upon his throne, and give up ourselves unto his government.

QUESTION XXVI.

Q. How doth Christ execute the office of a King?

A. Christ executeth the office of a King in subduing us to himself, in ruling and defending us, and in restraining and conquering all his and our enemies.

Q. What sort of a kingdom is it which Christ hath?

A. Besides his essential kingdom, which he hath as God equal with the Father over all the world; he hath also a Mediatorial kingdom, given him as Immanuel, in which he acts as the Father's viceroy, Psal. ii. 6; Acts ii. 36.

Q. What is Christ's Mediatorial kingdom?

A. It is the great dominion and power which is given to him as a Mediator; and this is twofold, 1. Christ's spiritual kingdom in and over the church. 2. His providential kingdom over all things for the good of the church.

Q. What do you mean by Christ's spiritual kingdom?

A. Both his kingdom of grace and his kingdom of glory; or, in other words, the church militant on earth, and the church triumphant in heaven; which are not two different kingdoms, but two provinces of one and the same kingdom; they both being but one body united together under one head, in and over which Christ reigns and rules both in a gracious and glorious manner.

Q. What do you mean by Christ's providential kingdom?

A. The administration of the kingdom of providence, or the power which is given to Christ over all things, whether in heaven, earth, or hell, to be managed for the good of the church; by which he is made the King of kings, and King of nations, as well as the King of saints, Mat. xxviii. 18; Eph. i. 22; Prov. viii. 15, 16; Rev. xv. 3, 4; xix. 15, 16.

Q. Over whom doth Christ exercise his kingly power?

A. Both over his own people, and over his enemies.

Q. Doth he govern them both alike?

A. No; for he puts forth and executes different acts of his power concerning them.

Q. What are these different acts?

A. With respect to his people, he subdues them to himself, he rules them, and defends them. With respect to his enemies, he restrains them, and conquers them.

Q. In what estate doth the King of Zion find his own people and subjects at first?

A. In a state of enmity and rebellion to him.

Q. Do they submit to him of their own accord?

A. No; he must subdue them to himself.

Q. What is that to subdue them?

A. It is to conquer their wills, and to make them, who were children of disobedience, willing and obedient in the day of his power.

Q. How shall we know if a day of Christ's power hath passed upon us, to make us his willing people?

A. It is a good sign if our love to sin be changed into a hatred of it, and if we sincerely desire to do the things that please God, and that not only in duties which are outward and public, but in those which are inward and secret.

Q. Doth Christ leave his church and people to their own care and conduct, after he hath subdued them?

A. No; but, like a good king, brings them under a good government, and continues to rule them in a gracious manner.

Q. How is it that Christ doth rule his subjects?

A. 1. He rules them outwardly, by giving them good laws, with promises and threatenings annexed thereto, and appointing church-officers, and discipline for applying the same. 2. He rules them inwardly by his Spirit, writing his laws in their hearts, and disposing them to yield obedience to what he requires of them; thus he sets up his throne in the hearts of his subjects, and makes all the faculties of their souls willingly to submit unto him.

Q. What further doth Zion's King for his subjects besides ruling them?

A. He defends them also.

Q. From what doth he defend them?

A. From whatever may hurt their souls; and, so far as it is for his glory, he defends their bodies from enemies also.

Q. How doth Christ defend his people?

A. He sets a hedge about them, he hides them under his wings, he intercedes for them; he gives strength to his people, he upholds them in the state of grace; he restrains and conquers their enemies.

Q. Have Christ and his subjects always the same enemies?—A. Yes.

Q. How comes that?

A. Because of the near relation between them; he being the head, and they the members: so, whatever injures the one, the other feels it.

Q. Who are the enemies of Christ and of his people?

A. Sin, Satan, wicked men, and death, which is called the last enemy.

Q. How doth Christ restrain his and his people's enemies?

A. By setting bounds to their rage, disappointing or over-ruling their evil designs, and making their wrath to praise him, Rev. ii. 10; Psal. lxxvi. 10.

Q. Will Christ suffer these enemies to prevail at last?

A. No; for he will at length conquer them all.

Q. When doth he conquer them?

A. He did it partly at his death and ascension, when he triumphed over them, and led captivity captive; for then he divested them of that legal power they held over the elect, as executioners of divine justice. He ruins many of them by particular judgments within time; and he will bring final destruction upon them all at his second coming.

Q. Is there not a great difference between Christ's subduing of his people, and his conquering of his enemies?

A. Yes; for he makes the one sweetly bow to his golden sceptre, the other he breaks with his rod of iron.

Q. Are not devils and wicked men subject to Christ, as well as his people?

A. Yes; but the one are subject to him by constraint, and against their will, and the other are subject by free choice and consent.

Q. Have we not many things to engage us to become Christ's willing subjects?

A. Yes; for he it is that hath best right to us, and there is none so good a master; his yoke is easy, and his rewards are glorious.

Q. Can any trust to Christ as their Priest, who do not submit to him as their King?

A. No; for they who will not be governed by his laws cannot expect to be saved by his blood.

Q. Will not Christ look on them as his enemies who refuse to submit to his government?

A. Yes.

Q. What will the King say to them at last?

A. Those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me, Luke xix. 27.

QUESTION XXVII.

Q. Wherein did Christ's humiliation consist?

A. Christ's humiliation consisted in his being born, and that in a low condition, made under the law, undergoing the miseries of this life, the wrath of God, and the cursed death of the cross; in being buried, and continuing under the power of death for a time.

Q. What do you mean by Christ's humiliation?

A. His coming from a high condition to a low one.

Q. What was the necessity of his doing so?

A. That he, as our Surety and Cantioner, might suffer the punishment due unto us.

Q. What are the several steps of Christ's humiliation mentioned in the answer?

A. They are chiefly three; namely, with respect to, 1. His birth. 2. His life. 3. His death.

Q. How did Christ humble himself in his birth?

A. 1. In that such a glorious Person should be willing to reside in flesh, and be born of a woman. 2. In his being born in such a low condition as he submitted to.

Q. Was it not a low step of humiliation in Christ to be incarnate, or to become man?

A. Yes; this was a much lower step for the eternal Son of God than for the sun in the heavens to become a clod of dust, or an angel a worm.

Q. What was the low condition that Christ submitted to be born in?

A. He was born of a mean woman, in a mean city, and that in the stable of an inn, having the beasts' manger for his cradle.

Q. How did Christ humble himself in his life?

A. There are three things relative thereto, mentioned in the answer: 1. His being made under the law. 2. His undergoing the miseries of this life. And, 3. Suffering the wrath of God.

Q. What is meant by Christ's being made under the law, Gal. iv. 4.?

A. That, according to his engagement as our Surety, he subjected himself to the law, both ceremonial and moral, and did exactly fulfil and obey the same.

Q. How did Christ subject himself to the ceremonial law?

A. In submitting to circumcision, making the offerings, and attending the ordinances therein required; and in order to fulfil it at once, he offered himself a sacrifice upon the cross.

Q. How did Christ subject himself to the moral law?

A. He did it as our Surety, fulfilling the preceptive part of it by the perfect obedience of his holy life, and satisfying the minatory part, by bearing the curse and penalties of the law, which we incurred for breaking it.

Q. Was it not a piece of amazing humiliation for the eternal Lawgiver to be thus subjected to his own law?—A. Yes.

Q. What is meant by the miseries of this life, which Christ underwent for us?

A. These are manifold, and include, 1. The common sinless infirmities of the human nature which Christ took upon him; as hunger, thirst, weariness, pain, sleeping, weeping, and the like. 2. The assaults and temptations of the devil, which he endured. 3. Outward poverty and want. 4. The contradictions, reproaches, and persecutions of a wicked world.

Q. Why did he take all these miseries upon him?

A. That he might bear what we deserved, and be the more sympathizing with us in our troubles.

Q. Why became he so poor, that was Lord of all?

A. That through his poverty we might be made rich, and to teach us contentment in a low condition.

Q. Did Christ undergo no more trouble in this world than what he endured from devils and wicked men?

A. Yes, he underwent the wrath of God also; as in the answer.

Q. What is to be meant by that?

A. That Christ became the butt of God's wrath and anger for our sins, and felt the direful effects of it in his soul as well as his body.

Q. Was God really angry with Christ, who was perfectly innocent, and his dearly beloved Son?

A. Christ in himself considered, was always the Father's delight; but as he became our Surety, and took on him our sins, the object of God's indignation, and which had a burden of wrath necessarily annexed thereto, he behoved to feel the sense and pressure of that insupportable load in a very extraordinary manner.

Q. How did his feeling of it appear?

A. By expressing his soul-trouble and non-plussing strait at the distant prospect of it; by the shrinking of his human nature at tasting of the bitter cup, and praying it might pass from him, if possible; by his wrestling in an agony, and sweating great drops of blood, that fell to the ground about him; by his crying out of his soul, its being exceeding sorrowful even unto death, and complaining of God's forsaking of him, John xii. 27; Matt. xxvi. 38, 39; xxvii. 46; Luke xxii. 44.

Q. Is it not upon this account also that Christ is said to be made a curse for us, and a man of sorrows?—A. Yes.

Q. Could any mere creature have borne the load of the Almighty's wrath?

A. No; and Christ's human nature could not have borne it, had it not been united to, and supported by his Godhead.

Q. Was it not possible this bitter cup could pass from our Surety, Christ?

A. No; for the justice of God could not be otherwise satisfied.

Q. Was not Christ heard in that prayer he made concerning it?

A. Yes; for we are told, "He was heard in that he feared," Heb. v. 7.

Q. How was he heard, when the cup did not pass from him?

A. In the extraordinary supplies granted to his human nature for enabling him to drink it.

Q. Was it necessary that Christ should suffer death after all his other sufferings?

A. Yes; that he might fully answer the threatening of the first covenant, satisfy justice, and confirm the truth by his resurrection.

Q. Was our Lord greatly humbled in his death?

A. Yes.

Q. In what respects?

A. In respect of the previous circumstances of his death, the kind and manner of it, and the things following upon it.

Q. How was he humbled in the previous circumstances of his death?

A. 1. In being betrayed by his own disciple, Judas. 2. In being sold for a small price. 3. In being taken and bound like a thief. 4. In being forsaken by all his disciples. 5. In being denied by Peter in his own hearing. 6. In being accused by the Jews of crimes he was wholly innocent of. 7. In being buffeted, spit on, cruelly mocked, arrayed, and crowned with thorns, by the soldiers and Herod. 8. In being scourged and condemned by Pilate as a notorious criminal. 9. In being put to carry his own cross to the place of execution.

Q. How was Christ humbled in the kind and manner of his death?

A. In being crucified, or put to suffer the death of the cross, which was a cursed, painful, lingering, and shameful death.

Q. What manner of death was the death of the cross?

A. A death used among the Romans for the greatest of malefactors, in which the man was so racked that they might tell his bones, his feet being nailed to the lower part of a tree, and his hands to a cross tree above, where he hung alive for several hours; the wounds still widening by his own weight, and the blood gushing out, till he died in extreme pain.

Q. Why is it called a cursed death?

A. Because God had said, Deut. xxi., "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." That is, he is exposed to the highest disgrace and reproach that can be done to a man, which proclaims him as much under the curse of God as any external punishment can do it.

Q. Why is it called a shameful death?

A. Because the person suffering it was exposed naked, and accounted one of the vilest criminals; and our blessed Lord was placed between two of them, as if he had been the greatest of the three.

Q. What love was this, that made him to endure the cross, and despise the shame?

A. Love that cannot be comprehended, for it passeth knowledge, Eph. iii. 18, 19.

Q. What was the most afflicting and humbling ingredient of all in Christ's death?

A. His being deserted and forsaken of God at the time of it; as appears by that amazing outcry on the cross, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani.

Q. Why was Christ thus forsaken?

A. To testify God's displeasure against sin, and to bear the punishment of desertion which was due to us for ever.

Q. In that dark hour of Christ's death, did nothing fall out to give testimony to Christ?

A. Yes; the sun was eclipsed, the earth quaked, the rocks rent, together with the vail of the temple, and many graves were opened; so that the centurion with his guard, that attended Christ, were forced to own, that truly he was the Son of God, Matt. xxvii. 51—54.

Q. Doth not the death of Christ afford the strongest arguments to cause us to hate and forsake sin?

A. Yes; for in it we see the infinite mercy of God towards us in providing such a Surety for us; we see God's indignation against sin as the most cursed evil in the world; and the dreadful storm of wrath which he will bring upon the workers of iniquity.

Q. What humbling things followed upon Christ's death?

A. There are two things mentioned in the answer: 1. He was buried. 2. He continued under the power of death for a time.

Q. Was it a piece of great humiliation for Christ to be laid in the grave?

A. Yes, certainly; for it is humbling to any man to be sent there, where he must call the worms his brethren and sisters: but much more was it so for him, who hath the keys of hell and death, to be himself locked up in the grave.

Q. Was not Christ's burying attended with several humbling circumstances?—A. Yes.

Q. What are they?

A. 1. It was done in great haste, with few attending it. 2. These few were not his relations, but strangers. 3. His body was not carried from his own house, nor from any house, but from the ignominious cross. 4. It was not laid in his own, but in another man's sepulchre.

Q. What is meant by Christ's continuing under the power of death?

A. His remaining in the state of the dead, and being death's prisoner for a time.

Q. What gives death a power over any man?

A. Sin.

Q. How could sin have any power over Christ, who had no sin?

A. Though he had no sin of his own, yet "he was made sin for us;" and so death seized him as his prisoner in our stead.

Q. How then should death have any more power over believers?

A. Death cannot seizethem as prisoners for punishment, but is only continued as a mean to purge away the remainder of sin perfectly from them.

Q. Was it not a great humiliation for him, who is the Lord of life, to be laid under the power of death for a time?—A. Yes.

Q. How long was the time he was in this state?

A. To the third day after his death.

Q. What type have we in scripture of his continuing so long in the grave?

A. Jonah's being three days in the whale's belly, Matt. xii. 40.

Q. Why did Christ continue so long?

A. To show that he was really dead.

Q. Why could not death hold him under its power any longer?

A. Because he had given full satisfaction to divine justice for his people's sins, and could not see any corruption in the grave.

Q. Why could he not see any corruption there?

A. Because he was the Holy One of God, and free of all sin.

Q. Whither did Christ's soul go after his death?

A. We read in the Gospels that he resigned it into his Father's hands, and that it went to paradise, the seat of the blessed.

Q. Do we not read in the creed, that "he descended into hell?"

A. Yes; but the meaning is not that he descended locally into hell, the place of the damned; but, the same word in the original signifying both hell and the grave, it may be understood either of his body's lying in the grave, or of his suffering the pains of hell in his soul.

QUESTION XXVIII.

Q. Wherein consisteth Christ's exaltation?

A. Christ's exaltation consists in his rising again from the dead on the third day, in ascending up into heaven, sitting at the right hand of God the Father, and in coming to judge the world at the last day.

Q. What may we learn from Christ's exaltation following his humiliation?

A. That we should patiently bear an afflicted state here, in hope of the glory that is to follow.

Q. In respect of what nature was Christ exalted?

A. Seeing Christ as to his divine nature cannot be exalted really, but declaratively only; it behoved to be with respect to his human nature that he was really and properly exalted.

Q. What are the steps or degrees of Christ's exaltation mentioned in the answer?

A. They are four: 1. His resurrection. 2. Ascension. 3. Sitting at God's right hand. 4. Judging the world.

Q. When did Christ rise from the dead?

A. On the third day.

Q. What day of the week did that day fall upon?

A. The first day of the week, which, ever since, is called "The Lord's day."

Q. By whose power did Christ rise?

A. By his own power, and by the power of his Father, John ii. 19; Rom. vi. 4.

Q. In what manner did he rise?

A. In a triumphant manner, with a great earthquake, the angels attending, and the keepers trembling for fear, and becoming as dead men, Matt. xxviii. 2—4.

Q. How do we know the truth of Christ's resurrection?

A. By the testimony of the apostles, who saw him very often after it, and heard his excellent instructions about their future conduct, and, for their greater satisfaction, were allowed to handle his body, and to eat and drink with him in a familiar manner.

Q. Did none see him after his resurrection besides the apostles?

A. Yes, many others, both men and women; and the apostle Paul, writing to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. xv. 6. says, "He was seen of above five hundred brethren at once, of whom the most part was then alive."

Q. But how can we be sure that the apostles' testimony was true?

A. Because they were men of great sincerity, and could propose no worldly advantage by declaring their Master's resurrection, but the greatest persecution from the Jews. And, if it had not been certain, they had not chosen Jerusalem as the first place for publishing it, and that within a few days after he was crucified there; and yet there they began, and many thousands embraced their doctrine. Nay, God from heaven confirmed their testimony, by enduing them with the gift of tongues, and a power of working all kinds of miracles.

Q. What was the necessity of Christ's rising again?

A. To declare that he was the Son of God, and that justice was fully satisfied for their sins, and to assure all believers of their resurrection from the dead also.

Q. Did Christ rise with the very same body that was crucified?—A. Yes.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. By the print of the nails and spear in his hands, feet, and side, which he showed to his disciples after he rose.

Q. Did ever any man rise from the dead but Christ?

A. Yes, such as Lazarus, Jairus's son, and several others.

Q. What is the difference between their resurrection and Christ's?

A. They rose but as private persons, by the power of God: but Christ rose by his own power, and that as a public person; the great head and representative of the church, for their justification, and to assure them of the truth of all his promises.

Q. How long did Christ stay with his disciples after his resurrection?—A. Forty days.

Q. For what end?

A. That he might convince them he was truly risen, and also instruct them of the nature of his kingdom and church, and give them directions about the government thereof.

OF CHRIST'S ASCENSION.

Q. What is the second step of Christ's exaltation?

A. His ascending up into heaven.

Q. From what place did he ascend?

A. From the mount of Olives.

Q. In what manner?

A. Visibly and triumphantly, with a cloud receiving him, and angels attending; leading captivity captive, and dispensing gifts, Acts i. 9, 10; Psal. lxxviii. 17, 18.

Q. How was he employed at parting from his disciples?

A. He was blessing them with uplifted hands, Luke xxiv. 50, 51.

Q. For what end did Christ ascend into heaven?

A. That he might take possession of the kingdom, both in his own name and in the name of all his people; and as a forerunner he might prepare mansions for them, and as an advocate he might plead their cause effectually.

Q. Where is Christ now bodily present?

A. In heaven.

Q. How long will he continue there?

A. Until his second coming.

Q. Are we not to look for his bodily presence on earth till that time?

A. No; for him the heavens must receive, until the restitution of all things, Acts iii. 21.

Q. Is not this a good argument against transubstantiation, or Christ's bodily presence in the sacrament?—A. Yes.

Q. Doth not Christ promise his presence to his people upon earth?

A. Yes; but that is meant of his spiritual, not his bodily presence.

Q. What do you mean by Christ's spiritual presence?

A. His coming to his people by the influences of his Spirit, for quickening and comforting their souls.

Q. Did ever any ascend bodily to heaven but Christ?

A. Yes; Enoch and Elijah did so also.

Q. What was the difference between their ascension and Christ's?

A. They were taken up, but Christ went up by his own power; they as private persons, without witnesses, but Christ as a public person, before many witnesses.

Q. What are the great lessons which Christ's ascension should teach us?

A. To be heavenly-minded, to set our affections upon things above, where Christ is, and to desire to be with him, Col. iii. 1; Phil. i. 23.

Q. What comfort may believers draw from Christ's ascension?

A. They may conclude that mansions will be ready, and that they will follow their head: they may promise themselves welcome, and kind usage seeing he who hath got all power in heaven, is nearly related to them, and hath all the compassions of both God and man in him.

OF CHRIST'S SITTING AT GOD'S RIGHT HAND.

Q. What is the third step of Christ's exaltation?

A. His sitting at the right hand of God the Father, Eph. i. 20; 1 Pet. iii. 22.

Q. Hath God a right or left hand as we have?

A. No, for God is a spirit, that hath no bodily parts: only his right hand is spoken of in condescension to our weak capacities.

Q. What is meant by Christ's sitting at God's right hand?

A. That he is advanced to the highest place of honour, power, and dignity, in heaven, having all things subjected to him, 1 Pet. iii. 22.

Q. How long will Christ sit at the Father's right hand?

A. Until he make all his enemies his footstool, Psal. cx. 1.

Q. What is the last enemy which he hath to destroy?—A. Death.

Q. When will that enemy be finally destroyed?

A. At the general resurrection; then it is that mortality shall be swallowed up of life, 2 Cor. v. 4.

Q. How is it that we read of Christ sometimes as sitting, and at other times as standing, at God's right hand? Acts vi. 56.

A. His sitting is mentioned, to denote his perpetual possession of the kingdom: his standing, to represent his readiness for the mediatory work, and particularly to help, plead for, and receive afflicted and dying saints, such as Stephen was, who saw him in that posture, Acts vii. 56.

Q. What may we learn from Christ's sitting at the right hand of God?

A. That it must go well with the church, seeing her friend and agent is so high in favour, and ruleth over all things; and that all the members of the body must be exalted, seeing the head is raised so high.

OF CHRIST'S JUDGING THE WORLD.

Q. What is the fourth step of Christ's exaltation?

A. His coming to judge the world at the last day.

Q. Is not this called Christ's second coming?

A. Yes, Heb. ix. 28.

Q. Why is it called so?

A. Because we read of two famous comings of Christ to the world, and this is one of them.

Q. What is the other?

A. His coming in the flesh.

Q. Is not the difference between these two comings of Christ very great?

A. Yes; for the first was in a state of deep humiliation, but the second is in a state of glorious exaltation.

Q. Do we read of any other comings of Christ in scripture.

A. Yes, we read of his coming by his Spirit in his ordinances; and of his coming in the dispensations of his providence, to destroy antichrist, and deliver his church from his enemies, John xiv. 18; 2 Thess. ii. 8.

Q. For what end will Christ come the second time?

A. To judge the world.

Q. What is understood by the world?

A. All mankind, quick and dead, small and great, righteous and wicked; and likewise the fallen angels.

Q. What is meant by Christ's judging of the quick and the dead, 2 Tim. iv. 1, and other places?

A. That Christ, at the end of the world, shall descend from heaven, to judge all that will be then living on the earth, and all the dead then in their graves.

Q. How is it evident that there will be such a judgment-day?

A. 1. Conscience in every man declares for it, by creating remorse and fears upon the doing of evil; and, on the other hand, satisfaction and hope upon the doing of good. 2. The justice of God requires it, that the wicked may be duly punished, and the godly rewarded: which is not done in this life. 3. The holy scriptures often assure us of it, that we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, John v. 28, 29; Acts xvii. 31; 2 Cor. v. 10; 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17.

Q. Who is to be the judge in that day?

A. Jesus Christ.

Q. Is not God the judge of all, Heb. xii. 23?

A. Yes, and Christ is that God equally with the Father and Holy Ghost: but God hath ordained the man Christ to be the visible Judge of the world, Acts xvii. 31.

Q. Why is the Lord Jesus Christ ordained for that end?

A. That he might be rewarded for his obedience and sufferings, and every eye might see the Judge; and that man being thus judged by his peers, the equity of God's proceedings might the more appear.

Q. When will Christ come to judge the world?

A. At the last day.

Q. Why is it called the last day?

A. Because it will be the concluding period of the world, when God will put an end to its days by the dissolution of all things; for then "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works therein shall be burnt up," 2 Pet. iii. 10.

Q. Doth any man know the particular time of Christ's coming?

A. No, though yet we may discern its approach to be near, by signs and forerunners. The apostles declare the gospel-times which we enjoy to be the last times, and that the ends of the world are come upon us, 1 Pet. i. 20; 1 John ii. 18; 1 Cor. x. 11.

Q. Are there not still some great events to be expected in the world before the last day come?

A. Yes, such as the conversion of the Jews, the downfall of antichrist and Mahomet, and the great enlargement and purity of the church.

Q. Why hath God kept the particular time hid from us?

A. To prevent carnal security, and to keep us preparing and watching for it every day; still ready to say, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus; make haste, O my beloved."

Q. What will be the manner of Christ's coming at the last day?

A. 1. It will be surprising and unexpected; and therefore it is compared to the coming of a thief in the night. 2. It will be with power and great glory: for the heaven shall rend, and fire issue before him; and he, attended with a multitude of glorious angels and saints, shall descend with a great shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trumpet of God, which will raise the dead: and thus shall he ascend the great white throne, and have all the world gathered before him, 2 Thess. i. 7, 8; v. 2; Mat. xxv. 31; Psal. l. 3; Jude 14; 1 Thess. iv. 6; Rev. xx. 11.

Q. Why do the scriptures insist so much upon Christ's coming to judgment?

A. To assure the world of it, to excite us to duty, to deter men from sinning, and to comfort the godly under distress, 2 Pet. iii. 10, 11, 14; 2 Thess. i. 6, 7.

Q. What is the great necessity of a day of judgment?

A. To make a solemn manifestation of the glory of God's attributes and perfections; as of his omniscience, in discovering the secrets of men's hearts and lives; of his mercy, in saving the elect; and of his justice, in punishing the wicked.

Q. In what manner will Christ judge the world?

A. He will judge the world in righteousness, and render to every one according to what he hath done in the body, whether it be good or evil, Acts xvii. 31; 2 Cor. v. 10.

Q. Must all men come into judgment at that day, good and bad, Christians and heathens?

A. Yes.

Q. May not some be overlooked and concealed in that great crowd?

A. No; for God's all-seeing eye will find them all out.

Q. Upon which of the Judge's hands will the good and bad be placed in that day?

A. The godly will be set upon the right hand, and the ungodly upon the left.

Q. What will be the difference betwixt the judgment of the godly and of the ungodly?

A. The one shall come into a judgment of absolution, the other into a judgment of condemnation. The sentence of the one will be, "Come unto me, ye blessed;" but the sentence of the other will be, "Depart from me, ye cursed." And likewise, the judgment of believers will go before that of the wicked.

Q. How do you know that?

A. By the scriptures, which tell us that "the dead in Christ shall rise first," and be immediately "caught up to meet the Lord in the air; and that they shall be set on thrones, and become assessors to Christ in judging the world, 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17; Matt. xix. 28; 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3.

Q. Seeing believers are guilty of many sinful thoughts and actions, as well as the wicked, how is it that they are not condemned with them?

A. Because all their sins are laid upon Jesus Christ, and he hath answered for them to the justice of God.

Q. Who are these sinners that shall be most miserable in the day of judgment?

A. Wicked Christians, and especially those who have had the clearest dispensations of gospel light, and greater measures of knowledge of God's will than others, and yet have abused them, and sinned against them, Matt. xi. 23, 24; Luke xii. 47.

Q. Will God judge heathens, who never had his law or gospel revealed unto them?

A. Yes, he will judge them by the law of nature, and the dictates of their own consciences, Rom. ii. 12, 14, 15.

Q. Will not the wicked have many accusers and witnesses to appear against them in that day?

A. Yes; such as the attributes of God, his mercy, patience, omniscience, bounty; and the creatures of God which they have abused. The blood of Christ which they have trampled, conscience which they have stifled, and the devil and companions in sin which have tempted them, will then accuse them, and witness against them.

Q. Do we not read of books that will be opened in that day, Rev. xx., what are those?

A. This is spoke with allusion to the courts here below, which have books for the rule of judgment. Accordingly, in that day will be opened the book of God's remembrance or omniscience, wherein all the actions of men will be found written. 2. The book of conscience, which will bring convincing evidences of sinners' guilt. 3. The book of the law, with all its precepts, threatenings, and curses, which they have despised. 4. The book of the gospel, with all its calls, offers, and promises, which they have slighted. All which will afford terrible matter of indictment against the wicked.

Q. What are the things which will be brought into judgment at that day?

A. All the thoughts and designs, as well as the words and actions of men.

Q. Must we give an account in that day of every idle word?

A. Yes, Matt. xii. 36.

Q. Should not this teach us to take good heed to all our words, thoughts, and designs now?

A. Yes.

Q. Will not the consequences of this judgment be very awful?—A. Yes.

Q. In what respects?

A. In regard the wicked shall thereupon go into everlasting punishment, and the righteous into life eternal, Matt. xxv. 46.

Q. How will the Judge's sentence be executed against the wicked?

A. The devils, the executioners of God's justice, will be waiting on, and ready, upon the passing of the sentence, to drag away the wicked to the place of torment.

Q. Will angels be judged at that day?

A. Yes, evil angels.

Q. How is it said that the saints shall judge angels? 1 Cor. vi. 3.

A. In regard they shall approve of the sentence which Christ shall pass upon them and upon all his enemies.

Q. What ought we to learn from Christ's coming to judgment?

A. We should endeavour always to be ready for it, and to love his appearing; we should be diligent to be found of him in peace, and to aim at all holy conversation and godliness; and we should suspend all rash judgments till that time, Luke xii. 40; 2 Tim. iv. 8; Tit. ii. 11, 13; 2 Pet. iii. 11, 14; 1 Cor. iv. 5.

QUESTION XXIX.

Q. How are we made partakers of the redemption purchased by Christ?

A. We are made partakers of the redemption purchased by Christ, by the effectual application of it to us by his Holy Spirit.

Q. What is the proper office and agency of the Holy Ghost in the work of man's redemption?

A. To apply it to elect souls.

Q. Hath not each person in the glorious Trinity an eminent hand in the work of our redemption?

A. Yes; the Father projected it, the Son purchased it, and the Holy Ghost applies it.

Q. What is meant by the work of our redemption?

A. The delivering of lost sinners from sin, Satan, and the wrath of God.

Q. What is meant by the purchasing of our redemption?

A. The buying or obtaining it at a valuable price.

Q. Who was it that purchased our redemption?

A. Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

Q. At what price did he purchase it?

A. At the price of his own precious blood.

Q. What is meant by our being partakers of this purchased redemption?

A. Our being made sharers of the benefits and advantages of it.

Q. What are these benefits?

A. Such as pardon of sin, protection from wrath, peace with God, peace of conscience, a change of nature, sanctifying grace, the unstinging of death, resurrection to life, and eternal glory.

Q. What is meant by the applying of this redemption to us?

A. The making of it ours, by producing the first beginnings of it in the soul, and thereby bringing us gradually into the full possession of its benefits. We begin the possession of them in our justification and sanctification here, and we complete it in our glorification hereafter.

Q. Is it only the Holy Spirit that can apply this redemption to us effectually, and possess us of it?—A. Yes.

Q. Cannot godly parents, ministers, or gospel-ordinances, do this?—A. No.

Q. Why is the Holy Spirit said to apply this redemption to us effectually?

A. To teach us that all that can be done by means and instruments to apply this redemption to us, will be ineffectual, without the work of the Holy Spirit.

Q. Is not the Spirit's application of this redemption as necessary to us as Christ's purchasing of it?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the difference between the purchasing and application of it?

A. The first is a work done without us, but the second a work done within us.

QUESTION XXX.

Q. How doth the Spirit apply to us the redemption purchased by Christ?

A. The Spirit applieth to us the redemption purchased by Christ, by working faith in us, and thereby uniting us to Christ in our effectual calling.

Q. What doth the Spirit work in us, to apply the purchased redemption to us?—A. Faith.

Q. Cannot we produce faith, or believe of ourselves?—A. No.

Q. Is not faith an act of the believing soul?

A. Yes; but still the scripture makes it God's gift to him, and the Spirit's work within him, Eph. ii. 8; Col. ii. 12.

Q. Is not the Spirit of God the Author or Worker of all grace?

A. Yes; and therefore he is called the Spirit of grace.

Q. What means doth he use for working faith in us?

A. The word, or ministry of the gospel, Rom. x. 14, 17.

Q. What shall become of those who want the gospel? May not the Spirit work faith in them for their salvation?

A. We have no promise for his doing so.

Q. What is the use of faith for applying Christ's purchase to us?

A. Faith is the grace that brings us to Christ, and is the means of our union with him.

Q. What is it to be united to Christ?

A. It is to be joined to him, and made one with him.

Q. Is it hereby that every believer hath an actual interest in Christ, and a title to his purchase?—A. Yes.

Q. What sort of union is there between Christ and believers?

A. It is a spiritual, supernatural, and mystical union, hard to be explained by any thing we find here below. It is somewhat like the union that is between a debtor and his surety, seeing by it the righteousness and satisfaction of Christ becomes the believer's; or like the union that is between the head and the members, and the root and the branches, seeing by it the Spirit of God brings vital and refreshing influences from Christ to all true believers, 2 Cor. v. 21; Col. ii. 19; John xv. 5; 1 Cor. vi. 17.

Q. Are not believers said to be in Christ, and Christ in believers, by virtue of this union?

A. Yes, Rom. viii. 1, 10; 2 Cor. v. 17; xiii. 5

Q. What are the bonds of this union with Christ and believers?

A. There is the Spirit, on Christ's part, taking hold of us; and there is faith, on our part, taking hold of Christ.

Q. What advantage doth believers reap by this union?

A. By it they have sympathy from Christ in their sufferings, and communion with Christ in his fullness; and, because he lives, they shall live also.

Q. Is there any dissolving of this union?

A. No; for death, which looseth all the ties of nature, cannot dissolve this union; for Christ is united to believers' dust in the grave, as well as to their souls in heaven.

Q. What must we do to be united to Christ?

A. We must be deeply sensible of our misery without Christ, cast off our sins which separate us from Christ, and receive him by a lively faith, as he is offered to us in the gospel.

Q. How shall we attain to this uniting grace of faith?

A. Let us look and cry to the Holy Spirit to work it in us.

Q. When doth he that?

A. In our effectual calling.

QUESTION XXXI.

Q. What is effectual calling?

A. Effectual calling is the work of God's Spirit, whereby, convincing us of our sin and misery, enlightening our minds in the knowledge of Christ, and renewing our wills, he doth persuade and enable us to embrace Jesus Christ, freely offered to us in the gospel.

Q. Is not effectual calling the same thing with conversion or regeneration?—A. Yes.

Q. Why is our conversion termed a call or calling?

A. In regard that it is by the voice or word of God, that we are roused from the sleep of sin, reduced from our wanderings, and brought home to himself.

Q. Why is it termed effectual calling?

A. Because it takes effect to bring the soul to God, and to distinguish it from the outward call of the word, which of itself is insufficient to prevail with us; "for many are called, but few are chosen," Mat. xxii. 14.

Q. What do you mean by "few are chosen?"

A. That few are determined effectually to embrace the call.

Q. Whose work is the inward and effectual call?

A. It is the work of the Spirit of God.

Q. Why is it called a work?

A. Because it is not perfected all at once, but done by several steps and degrees.

Q. What are the several steps of the Spirit's work mentioned in the answer?

A. There are, 1. A work of conviction. 2. A work of illumination. 3. A work of renovation.

Q. What is the state which the soul is called from by this work?

A. From a state of sin, of darkness, of enmity, of slavery, and misery.

Q. What is the state which the soul is called to?

A. It is a state of grace, of light, of peace, of liberty, and bliss.

Q. Whence is it that God doth call some, and not others?

A. It is not from any worth or goodness in them, but from his own mere good will and pleasure.

Q. What means doth the Spirit make use of in the calling of men?

A. Chiefly the voice and ministry of the word.

Q. Whether is it the voice of the law or the gospel?

A. It is both; the law to show us our misery, and the gospel to discover our remedy.

Q. What is the first step of the Spirit's work in our effectual calling?—A. Conviction.

Q. What doth the Spirit convince us of?

A. Of our sin and misery, or the defiled and wretched condition we were born and lie in, till a gracious change be wrought in us.

Q. What is it in sin that the Spirit doth convince us of?

A. Of sin's evil, malignity, guilt, and pollution; of its fountain, numerousness, aggravations, and deservings.

Q. By what means doth the Spirit bring men to the conviction of sin?

A. By the laws, precepts, and threatenings, by rods, and by conscience.

Q. May not any of these convince us of sin without the Spirit?—A. No.

Q. Was not this one great design of sending the Spirit?—A. Yes, John xvi. 8.

Q. Is there no conversion without conviction going before?

A. No; for, unless we have it in some measure, we will not see our need of Christ, nor come to him for help.

Q. Is the work of conviction alike great in all true converts?

A. No; some have more and some less, according to God's holy pleasure.

Q. What degree of conviction is necessary to all who are converted?

A. So much as is needful to discover a man's lost state, to make him value Christ above all things, and willing to part with all things for Christ.

Q. Doth conversion always follow upon a work of conviction?

A. No; for not a few, like Judas and Felix, have had strong convictions which have come to nothing.

Q. Whence is it that their convictions prove abortive?

A. Because they stifle them, and go to the world for ease, and not unto Christ; neither are their convictions of the right kind.

Q. What is the difference between the conviction of natural men, and those of true penitents?

A. 1. The first proceed only from a natural conscience and the fears of hell; but the second from the operation of God's Spirit, and a view of sin's evil, God's goodness, and Christ's sufferings. 2. The first are mainly upon the account of gross sins and outbreakings; but the other reach also to heart-sins, and those which are secret. 3. The convictions of natural men are cured by natural means, but those of true penitents only by the blood of Christ.

Q. What is the second step of the Spirit's work in effectual calling?

A. The work of illumination with respect to the remedy for sin.

Q. Are our minds dark by nature in that respect till the Spirit of God enlighten them?

A. Yes.

Q. What doth he enlighten our minds with?

A. With the knowledge of Christ our only Surety and Saviour.

Q. Is not ignorance of Christ a sad sign of one that is not effectually called or converted?

A. Yes.

Q. What knowledge or discoveries of Christ doth a sinner get by the Spirit's light?

A. He is brought to know the excellency of Christ's person, offices, righteousness and fulness provided for believing sinners; he is made to see Christ's all-sufficiency and ability to save to the uttermost, his suitableness to the various needs of our souls, and his willingness to save all that come to him for relief.

Q. What means doth the Spirit use for enlightening us with the knowledge of Christ?

A. Ordinarily the reading and the preaching of the gospel, Acts xxvi. 17, 18; Rom. x. 17.

Q. Are not then both the law and the gospel useful in our conversion?

A. Yes; the law, for discovering to us our disease, and the gospel, for showing us a physician: the law for convincing us of sin, and the gospel for leading us to a Saviour.

Q. May not the minds of some be very much enlightened under the gospel, without being called effectually or converted?

A. Yes; for Balaam was greatly illuminated; and we read of some supposed to be once enlightened, that yet may make final apostacy from Christ, Heb. vi. 4, 6.

Q. How may we know if the knowledge of Christ we are enlightened with, be true and saving?

A. It will be a good sign, if our knowledge humble us the more under a sense of our vileness; if it inflame our hearts with love to Christ, and a desire to be like him; if it engage us to put our trust in him for the whole of our salvation, and to hate sin as his great enemy, and to study to do the things that please him.

Q. What is the third step of the Spirit's work in effectual calling?

A. His renewing of the will.

Q. What do you mean by the Spirit's renewing of the will of man?

A. His making the will new and pliable, by putting new inclinations and dispositions into it, to choose what is good, and refuse what is evil.

Q. Doth the Spirit, by the powerful work upon the will, offer any violence to the liberty of man's will?

A. No; for he inclines it in a way agreeable to its nature, and sweetly changes its stubbornness and rebellion into a willing obedience.

Q. How may we know if our hearts and wills be yet renewed?

A. By our embracing of Christ in all his offices; by our preferring his will and glory before all earthly satisfactions; by our loving the good we once hated, and hating the evil we formerly loved.

Q. Are we able to renew our own wills, or change them from evil to good?

A. No; we can no more do it than the "Ethiopian can change his skin, or the leopard his spots," Jer. xiii. 23.

Q. What shall we do then to attain to this gracious change by the Spirit's renewing work?

A. Let us be deeply sensible of the evil and misery of sin, diligently wait upon the means of salvation, earnestly look to God in Christ, pleading for his Spirit's work upon our hearts, and carefully entertain his motions when he begins to work.

Q. What end doth the Spirit aim at in his convincing, enlightening, and renewing work in our effectual calling.

A. That thereby he may persuade and enable us to embrace Jesus Christ as freely offered to us in the gospel.

Q. What do you mean by the Spirit's persuading and enabling us to embrace Jesus Christ?

A. His prevailing with us, determining us, and making us able and willing to accept of Christ as our Saviour, and consent to the terms he proposeth to us in the gospel.

Q. What do ye mean by the gospel?

A. The glad tidings or joyful news of salvation through Jesus Christ, written at his direction by the prophets and apostles, and published by his messengers to lost sinners of mankind.

Q. How, or upon what terms, is Christ offered in the gospel to sinners, that they may embrace him?

A. He is offered to them as a free gift from heaven, in all his offices, of prophet, priest, and king; and they must embrace him accordingly.

Q. What do you mean by embracing Christ freely as he is offered?

A. That we must come to Christ without money or price; that is, we must be sensible of our emptiness of all good; and that we can bring no qualification nor worth to purchase or obtain Christ, but must come poor and empty-handed, willing to take Christ and his riches to furnish us with every thing necessary for us.

Q. How may we know if we have thus embraced Christ in a right manner?

A. By a diligent examination of ourselves, and particularly trying if we can say, that we have embraced Christ, not only for pardon of sin and eternal salvation, but also for holiness and newness of life; believing and depending on him as the meritorious cause and fountain of sanctification, as well as justification and glorification.

Q. Can no man thus embrace Christ until he is persuaded and enabled by the Spirit to do it?

A. No.

Q. Are we naturally averse from accepting the offer of a Saviour?

A. Yes, and therefore must be persuaded to it.

Q. Are we without strength, as well as averse to do it?

A. Yes; and therefore we must be enabled to embrace Christ.

Q. Cannot moral suasions, such as the exhortations, threatenings, and promises, of the word persuade sinners to embrace Christ?

A. No; these can no more do it of themselves, than the beams of the sun can enlighten a man born blind, or arguments can raise a dead man from the grave; for we are naturally blind and dead in sin.

Q. Is then the same power requisite to our renovation and conversion, as to our creation and resurrection?—A. Yes.

QUESTION XXXII.

Q. What benefits do they that are effectually called partake of in this life?

A. They that are effectually called, do, in this life, partake of justification, adoption, sanctification, and the several benefits which in this life do either accompany or flow from them.

Q. Have those who are effectually called, a title to special benefits and privileges above other persons?—A. Yes.

Q. When is it that they partake of these benefits?

A. They have some of them in this life, and the rest in the other life; they have some in hand, but much more in hope.

Q. What are the benefits or advantages they partake of in this life?

A. They are principally three; namely, justification, adoption, and sanctification.

Q. Are all those who are effectually called, justified, adopted, and sanctified by God in this life?—A. Yes.

Q. What do you mean by these words, justified, adopted, and sanctified?

A. That they have their sins pardoned, they become God's children and are made holy.

Q. Is holiness then a special benefit and privilege, as well as our duty?—A. Yes.

Q. Do these three benefits come singly to those who are effectually called?

A. No; for they are attended with many other blessings, that attend upon and flow from them; such as inward peace, free access to God, assurance of his love, fatherly provision, growth in grace, &c.

Q. Who then are the happiest persons, even in this life?

A. Those who are effectually called; for they are privileged above all others.

QUESTION XXXIII.

Q. What is justification?

A. Justification is an act of God's free grace, wherein he pardoneth all our sins, and accepteth us as righteous in his sight, only for the righteousness of Christ imputed to us, and received by faith alone.

Q. Doth the word justify, signify to make a person just by infusing of inherent righteousness into him, as the word sanctify signifieth to make a person holy in that manner?

A. No; for, if that were the meaning, it would confound justification with sanctification, of which the papists are guilty.

Q. What then is the true meaning of the word justify?

A. It is a legal or forensic word, borrowed from courts of justice; and it signifies to absolve one from guilt or punishment, and to pronounce him righteous or innocent.

Q. Whose act is it to justify a sinner?

A. It is God's act; for it is God that justifieth, Rom. viii. 33.

Q. Doth God justify the ungodly?

A. Yes, Rom. iv. 5.

Q. Is it not written, Prov. xvii. 15, "He that justifieth the wicked is an abomination to the Lord?" will God do that himself which he abhors in another?

A. God indeed abhors the absolving of guilty persons without satisfaction made to justice; but, when God doth justify the ungodly, it is upon due satisfaction made to his justice.

Q. May any ungodly person take encouragement from this to reckon himself among those that are justified?

A. No; for though God doth justify those who were ungodly before the passing of that act, yet none of these do continue to live ungodly afterwards: and those who continue to do so, show plainly that they never were justified persons, seeing justification and sanctification are inseparable.

Q. Why do you call justification an act and not a work?

A. Because it is a thing done all at once, as the sentence or declaration of a judge; and not a work of time, carried on by degrees, as effectual calling and sanctification are.

Q. What is the moving cause of this act?

A. The free grace of God, that is, his undeserved love and favour to sinners, without any worth or merit in them.

Q. What are the constituent parts of justification?

A. They are two, as mentioned in the answer, viz. God's pardoning of our sins, and his accepting of our persons as righteous.

Q. What is the meritorious cause of our justification?

A. The righteousness of Christ.

Q. Is it upon account of this righteousness that God both pardons our sins, and accepts of our persons?—A. Yes.

Q. What do you mean by the righteousness of Christ by which we are justified?

A. Not his essential righteousness as God, which is incommunicable; but his surety-righteousness, which as mediator God-man he performed in our stead, to satisfy justice, and magnify the law.

Q. What was this surety-righteousness of Christ made up of?

A. Of his active and passive obedience.

Q. What is Christ's active obedience?

A. The perfect obedience he gave to the precepts of the law in his holy life, which is imputed to believers; seeing by the obedience of this one man many are made righteous, Rom. v. 19.

Q. What is his passive obedience?

A. His suffering the penalties of the law due to us for sin, whereby he gave perfect satisfaction to the justice of God.

Q. If Christ gave perfect and full satisfaction to justice for our sins, how can our justification be said to be of free grace?

A. These two consist very well together, according to Rom. iii. 24, "Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ." It is wholly free to us, seeing God graciously accepts of a righteousness and satisfaction from a Surety, which he might have demanded from us. It is free, seeing God hath provided the surety for us, and furnished him to pay out debt, when it was impossible for us to find one to do it. It is free, seeing God requires nothing from us but faith in the Surety, which faith he also promiseth freely to give us: so that our justification is altogether of free grace to us.

Q. How is it that the righteousness of Christ becomes ours?

A. By God's imputing it to us, that is, his placing it to our account, as if we ourselves had performed a perfect righteousness to him.

Q. How is it according to truth for God to pronounce us righteous, who really are not so?

A. God doth not pronounce us righteous in ourselves, but righteous in our Surety Christ, who is righteousness to us in God's account; even as a creditor, having received payment from the surety, justly counts the debtor free and acquitted in law, 1 Cor. i. 30; 2 Cor. v. 21.

Q. Were the Old Testament saints justified by Christ's righteousness as well as we?—A. Yes.

Q. How could that be, seeing they died before Christ's righteousness was performed?

A. They believed in the promised Messiah that was to come, to be made an offering for sin, and to bring in everlasting righteousness; and their faith in him was accepted of God for their justification.

Q. How doth it appear that they depended upon Christ for justification?

A. In regard we are told that the gospel was preached unto them: that they saw the promises afar off, and embraced them. They had Christ exhibited to them in the ancient prophecies, types and sacrifices; and so they viewed him as the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. Abraham saw Christ's day afar off. Job knew his Redeemer lived. Isaiah foretells, that his soul should be an offering for sin: and he calls all men to look to him for salvation; and he points him out as one in whom we have righteousness and strength, and one in whom all the seed of Israel would be justified and should glory. Jeremiah calls him, "The Lord our righteousness." Daniel says, "He shall make reconciliation for sin, and bring in everlasting righteousness;" and that for this end Messiah was to be cut off, Heb. iv. 2; xi. 13; Rev. xiii. 8; John viii. 56; Job xix. 25; Isa. liii. 10; xlv. 22, 24, 25; Jer. xxiii. 6; Dan. xix. 24, 26.

Q. By what means do we receive and apply this righteousness of Christ?

A. By faith alone, Rom. iii. 22.

Q. Doth faith justify us as it is a work or act done by us?

A. No, but only as it is an instrument or hand whereby we receive and apply Christ's righteousness, which is the only ground of our justification before God.

Q. Why would God have faith to be the alone instrument of our justification.

A. That it might appear to be wholly of free grace; for faith is of a self-emptying quality, and ascribes all to God, Rom. iv. 16.

Q. Doth the matter come all to one, when we are said sometimes to be justified by Christ's righteousness, and sometimes by faith?

A. Yes; for it is by the one meritoriously, and by the other instrumentally.

Q. Are we justified partly by Christ's righteousness, and partly by our own?

A. No, we must not mix any thing of our own with Christ in the point of justification; therefore the apostle Paul asserts in strong terms, that we are justified by faith in Christ, without the works of the law, Rom. iii. 28; Gal. ii. 16.

Q. How is it then that the apostle James doth say, that a man is justified by works, and not by faith only? Jam. ii. 24.

A. It appears, from the context, that James is not speaking of our justification before God, but of the justification of a person, and of his faith, before men: so good works declare before the world that we are justified persons, and they declare our faith to be true and lively, seeing they are the genuine fruits of faith. And therefore the apostle saith, "I will show thee my faith by my works;" and Abraham's faith was perfected by works, Jam. ii. 18, 22.

Q. Why cannot we be justified before God by our works?

A. Because all the world is guilty, and all our works imperfect before God; and a just God requires a perfect righteousness.

Q. Are good works then of no use?

A. Though they cannot justify us before God, yet they are most necessary and useful to glorify

God, and to evidence the sincerity of our faith; and therefore it is required of all believers that they be careful to maintain all good works, Titus iii. 8.

Q. Is there not ground to suspect the truth of a man's faith, and of his justification, where holiness and good works do not appear?

A. Yes: for, by the same faith that a man is justified, his heart is also purified; and the goodness of a tree is known by its fruits, Acts xv. 9; Mat. vii. 16, 17.

Q. When is it that a person is actually justified?

A. As soon as he is brought actually to believe on Jesus Christ.

Q. Did not God decree to justify the elect from eternity?

A. Yes, but that will not infer that we are justified from eternity; no more than, because God decreed to create us from eternity, that therefore we were created from all eternity. All that we can draw from it is, that God graciously purposed our justification from eternity, and this only to take effect upon our believing.

Q. Are not the elect justified at the death or resurrection of Jesus Christ, seeing it is said that he died for our sins, and rose again for our justification?

A. They were then justified, virtually, but not actually; for, though the price was truly then paid, or completed, yet the purchased redemption is never actually ours, until it be applied.

Q. What is the first part of justification?

A. The pardoning of our sins.

Q. Whose prerogative is it to pardon sins?

A. It is God's only; for he is both the offended party, and the great Judge of all, Isa. xliii. 25.

Q. Have not ministers power to forgive sins, seeing Christ saith to them, "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted?" John xx. 23.

A. That imports no more but a ministerial declarative power to pronounce from God's word that every penitent believing sinner shall be forgiven: so that ministers can only declare sin to be pardoned upon the condition of faith and repentance.

Q. Have not private men power to forgive sin, seeing Christ says to all, Mat. vi. 14, "If ye forgive men their trespasses," &c.

A. Private men have power only to forgive private injuries done against themselves, but no power to forgive the wrong that at the same time is done to God.

Q. When doth God pardon men for their sins?

A. When they believe on Christ.

Q. Whether is pardon an act of justice, or of mercy?

A. It is both.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. 1. It is an act of justice in God to pardon every penitent believer, seeing Christ their Surety hath paid their debt, 1 John i. 9. 2. It is an act of mercy likewise, seeing God is graciously pleased to accept of a surety's payment, and to provide the surety also.

Q. What is it in sin that pardon doth take away?—A. The guilt of it.

Q. What is that?

A. Our actual obligation to punishment.

Q. Doth pardon take away the demerit or deservings of sin?

A. No; for the sins of believers in themselves deserve hell, as well as the sins of others.

Q. Doth pardon take away the inherence or being of sin altogether?

A. No; for we find corruption still remaining in those who are pardoned, Rom. vii.

Q. Hath every pardoned man the assurance of his pardon?

A. No; for an act of pardon may be past in the court of heaven, before it be intimated in the court of conscience.

Q. When God pardons the sins of his people, whether is it their bypast sins only, or is it their future sins also?

A. All their bypast sins are actually pardoned, and they have a right to pardon for their future sins, upon their actual believing and repenting: but no sin can be said to be actually pardoned, until it be actually committed, and application made to the blood of Christ for the pardon of it.

Q. Is not God angry with the sins of justified persons?—A. Yes.

Q. What sort of anger doth he manifest against them?

A. It is not vindictive wrath, as against the sins of the wicked, but only fatherly displeasure, which yet may be attended with sharp rods, and the loss of God's reconciled countenance, that cannot be recovered until they sincerely humble themselves, confess their sin, renew their faith and repentance, and pray earnestly for pardon.

Q. How may we know if our sins be pardoned?

A. By our love to Christ that obtained it, and our desire of conformity to him; by our mourning for sin that pierced Christ, and our fear of grieving him for the future; by the uprightness of our hearts, and our readiness to forgive others, Luke vii. 47; Rom. viii. 1; Psal. cxxxii. 4; xxxii. 1; Matt. xviii. 35.

Q. What is the second part of justification?

A. God's accepting of us as righteous in his sight.

Q. What is meant by that?

A. It is God's adjudging us as righteous, or persons acquitted from guilt; and his giving kindly access and acceptances both to our persons and services, upon the account of the righteousness of Christ that covers both.

QUESTION XXXIV.

Q. What is adoption?

A. Adoption is an act of God's free grace, whereby we are received into the number, and have a right to all the privileges of the sons of God?

Q. Is adoption a scripture word?

A. Yes, Rom. viii. 15; Gal. iv. 5; Eph. i. 5.

Q. What is the meaning of the word; or, what is it to adopt?

A. Among men it signifies to take one that is a stranger into a family, to account him as a child or heir, and to provide for him as such. So for God to adopt believers, it signifies his bringing them who are aliens by nature into his household, his owning them as his sons and daughters, and giving them a right to the privileges of his children.

Q. How many sorts of sons is God said to have in scripture?

A. Three sorts; 1. Jesus Christ is his Son by eternal generation, being of the same nature and essence with the Father, Psal. ii. 7. 2. Angels and Adam are called the sons of God, by reason of their immediate creation by him, Job xxxviii. 7; Luke iii. 38. 3. Believers are his sons by adoption, John i. 12; 1 John iii. 1.

Q. Whose act is adoption?—A. It is God's.

Q. Why is it called an act?

A. Because it is done at once.

Q. What sort of an act is it?

A. An act of God's free grace.

Q. Why is it called so?

A. Because it is wholly owing to the free love and favour of God, that he adopts any of mankind sinners into his family.

Q. Is there nothing lovely in one more than another, that moves God to adopt them into his family?—A. No.

Q. In what condition are sinners before they are adopted?

A. They have neither wisdom, beauty, holiness, nor any good thing to recommend them; but are black as Ethiopians, strangers to God, children of wrath, and of the family of hell, when God adopts them into his family.

Q. Is it not wonderful grace and love in God, not only to pardon such rebels, but also to make them his sons and heirs?—A. Yes.

Q. Upon whom is this favour conferred? Is it upon all?

A. No, but only upon those who receive Christ by faith, John i. 12; Gal. iii. 26.

Q. Have not God's adopted children a right to many privileges above others?—A. Yes.

Q. What are these?

A. They are under God's fatherly protection, provision, and conduct, while here below: they are allowed access to God as a Father, the Spirit's assistance in their prayers, and hearing of them : they have the ministry of angels, and are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, of an inheritance incorruptible.

Q. Do not these peculiar privileges call for special duties answerable to them for us?—A. Yes.

Q. What are the duties of adopted children to their father?

A. They should love and honour him; they should ask his counsel in all things, submit to his fatherly correction, fear to offend him, trust him, and depend on his care.

Q. By what signs may we know whether we be God's adopted children?

A. By such as these: if we resemble our Father, love him above all, and be heartily concerned for his glory. If we have the Spirit of adoption, who always where he is doth excite to prayer and the study of holiness, Rom. viii. 14; Gal. iv. 6; 1 John ii. 29.

Q. Wherein doth the children of God resemble their Father?

A. In holiness, mercy, and beneficence to all, even to their enemies.

Q. Are not all God's adopted children his sons also by regeneration?

A. Yes, they are all born again, and have new natures given them, John i. 12, 13.

QUESTION XXXV.

Q. What is sanctification?

A. Sanctification is the work of God's free grace, whereby we are renewed in the whole man, after the image of God, and are enabled more and more to die unto sin, and live unto righteousness.

Q. What is it to sanctify a thing or person?

A. In the scriptural sense, it is to devote a thing to God's use, or to cleanse from sin, and make us holy.

Q. Are not justification and sanctification inseparable?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the difference between them?

A. Justification is God's act or sentence without us, absolving us from the guilt of sin; but sanctification is God's work within us, cleansing us from the filth of sin. Justification is perfect and equal in all believers, and is done at once; but sanctification is unequal and imperfect in this life, and is carried on by degrees.

Q. What is the difference between regeneration and sanctification?

A. Regeneration is the first change of nature, by the infusing of all gracious habits into our soul at our conversion or effectual calling, which are all much the same; but sanctification is the continued exercise and advancement of the work of grace in the believer through his whole life.

Q. Whose work is it to sanctify us?

A. It is the work of the Holy Spirit, 2 Thess. ii. 13; 1 Pet. i. 2.

Q. Why is sanctification called a work and not an act?

A. Because it is wrought and carried on by degrees.

Q. Can we not sanctify ourselves?

A. No; we can no more actuate or increase grace than we can implant it at first. We can defile ourselves, but we cannot cleanse ourselves.

Q. May not the view of our graces humble us as well as our sins?—A. Yes.

Q. Why so?

A. Our sins, because they are ours; our graces, because they are none of ours: for every degree of grace is freely bestowed by God upon undeserving creatures.

Q. What is the procuring cause of our sanctification?—A. The blood of Christ.

Q. By what means is it carried on in believers?

A. By means of God's ordinances and providences, as he pleaseth to bless them.

Q. What is the subject of our sanctification? Or, what part of us is it that is sanctified?

A. The whole man.

Q. What do you mean by the whole man?

A. The whole powers and faculties of the soul, and the whole senses and members of the body, both inward and outward man is sanctified.

Q. How are the powers and faculties of the soul renewed and sanctified?

A. By the Holy Spirit's diffusing his gracious influences upon the heart, understanding, will, conscience, memory, and affections of the soul, whereby they are cleansed from sin, made new, spiritual, and holy, and remarkably fitted for serving and glorifying God.

Q. How are the senses and members of the body sanctified?

A. By changing them into a holy use, making these that before were instruments of sin, now become instruments of righteousness; so that outward conversation is ordered aright, according to the rule of God's word.

Q. After what pattern is that change made in sanctification?

A. After the image of God.

Q. Wherein doth this image consist?

A. In resembling God, and becoming like him in holiness and purity; in hatred to sin, and love to righteousness.

Q. Is the image of God perfectly restored to us while in this life?

A. No; for the work of sanctification is imperfect in the best of God's people while on this side of heaven.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. From the complaints they make of the remainders of sin in them, which make a continual struggle between grace and corruption: and hence it is, that our best duties are marred with sin.

Q. Why doth God leave corruption in his people as long as they are here?

A. 1. To keep them always humble under a sense of sin, and their need of a Saviour. 2. To teach them to make continual use of Christ for righteousness and strength. 3. To magnify his power in preserving weak grace, in midst of corruption. 4. To loose their hearts from this world, where they have such a struggling life, and make them long for heaven, where they shall triumph over corruption, and have perfect purity for ever.

Q. Will sanctification never be perfected till that time?—A. No.

Q. Do sanctification and glorification differ specifically?

A. No; but only in degrees; for grace is glory begun, and glory is grace perfected.

Q. What are the parts of sanctification mentioned in the answer?

A. They are two, to wit, mortification and vivification, or dying to sin and living to righteousness.

Q. What do you mean by mortification, or dying to sin?

A. The gradual weakening and subduing the power of sin in our souls.

Q. By what marks may we know whether we be dying to sin?

A. 1. If we be growing in our hatred of sin, and be labouring for its utter destruction. 2. If we be careful to withdraw every thing that proves fuel to our corruptions, and to check the first motions of sin. 3. If we bewail it before the Lord, when we feel its strength, and pray earnestly against it. And, 4. If we be studying to improve the death of Christ for the death of sin.

Q. What is imported in the other part of sanctification, living more and more unto righteousness?

A. It is to have a growing principle of spiritual life in our souls, prompting us to obey the will of God in all things, and to aim at further advancement in true holiness.

Q. What is the difference between morality in natural men, and true sanctification in believers?

A. The first is the product of nature, and makes some change only upon the outward life; but the second is the fruit of the Spirit, and makes a gracious change upon the heart. The first proceeds from self, and tends to self; but the second proceeds from a principle of love to God, and tends to his glory. In the first, Christ is neglected; but in the second, his strength and righteousness are sought to and employed.

Q. Is there an absolute necessity of sanctification here, in order to salvation hereafter?

A. Yes; for we are assured of it, that "without holiness no man shall see the Lord," Heb. xii. 14. An unsanctified man can have no communion with a holy God.

Q. Is it possible that great and notorious sinners can be sanctified?

A. Yes; for the apostle Paul, speaking of the vilest of sinners, saith to the Corinthians, "Such were some of you, but ye are sanctified," 1 Cor. vi. 11.

QUESTION XXXVI.

Q. What are the benefits which, in this life, do accompany or flow from justification, adoption, and sanctification?

A. The benefits which, in this life, do accompany or flow from justification, adoption, and sanctification, are, assurance of God's love, peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, increase of grace, and perseverance therein to the end.

Q. How many benefits, belonging to justified and sanctified persons, are there set forth in the answer?—A. Five.

Q. Which is the first?

A. ASSURANCE OF GOD'S LOVE.

Q. Doth God bear a special love to justified persons above others?

A. Yes; they are the special objects of God's love.

Q. May believers in this life attain to the persuasion or assurance of this love?—A. Yes.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. From the command of God enjoining all Christians to seek after it; and from the instances of many believers who have actually attained to the sure knowledge and persuasion of the love of God to them, 2 Pet. i. 10; Heb. vi. 11; Rom. v. 2, 3; Rom. viii. 16, 38, 39; 2 Cor. v. 1; 1 John iii. 14, 19, 21, 24; 1 John v. 13; Cant. vi. 3; Job xix. 25; 2 Tim. i. 12.

Q. Can any person attain to this assurance without special revelation from God?—A. Yes.

Q. How do they come at it?

A. Two ways; 1. By rational evidence and proofs from the word of God; namely, when they discover the inward evidences of these graces wrought in their souls, to which the promises of God's special love are annexed. 2. By the testimony of God's Spirit, bearing witness with their spirits that they are the children of God, 1 John ii. 3; 1 John iii. 14, 19; Rom. viii. 16.

Q. By what marks and evidences may we know our interest in God's love?

A. By our receiving of Christ in all his gospel offers, and trusting in him; by our love to Christ and to his people; by our affection to God's laws, and care to observe them; by our opposing of all sin, and particularly beloved lusts; by our desires after holiness, and the like, Mark xvi. 16; John

i. 12; Prov. viii. 17; 1 John iii. 3, 14; Psal. xviii. 23; cxix. 5, 6, 165; Phil. iii. 3; 1 Pet. ii. 7.

Q. What do ye mean by the Spirit's witnessing with our spirits? Rom. viii. 16.

A. His shining upon our graces, and enabling us to discern them: his concurring with the rational inferences of our spirits therefrom, and strengthening us to conclude that we are the children of God.

Q. Is this assurance essential to faith, and the attainment of every believer?

A. No; for some of them may walk in darkness, and have no light, Isa. l. 10.

Q. Do any true believers lose their interest in God's love?

A. No; for nothing can separate them from the love of God which is in Christ: but they may be without the sense and assurance of that love.

Q. Whence is it that God's people lose the sense and assurance of his love?

A. It proceeds frequently from their sloth and negligence in duty, and from their venturing upon sins against light; and sometimes from God's withdrawing the light of his countenance, for wise and holy ends, 2 Pet. i. 10; Cant. v. 3, 6; Psal. li. 8, 12, 14; lxxvii. 7—9.

Q. Why doth God withdraw from his own people, and deny them the sense of his love?

A. He doth it sometimes to hide pride from their eyes, and to teach them to live by faith rather than by sense: hence it may be that some of weaker grace are allowed more sensible comfort than those who are stronger.

Q. How may we distinguish true assurance from presumption?

A. True assurance humbles the soul, and makes it watchful against sin; but presumption puffs up and makes men secure. True assurance is willing to come to the light for trial, but presumption shuns the light, Gal. ii. 20; 2 Cor. vii. 1; Psal. cxxxix. 23, 24; John iii. 20, 21.

Q. Should not all Christians press for the assurance of God's love, as a thing of great advantage to them?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the advantage of having it?

A. It quiets the mind, and removes the fear of death; it enlarges the heart with love and thankfulness to God, and gives strength and cheerfulness in the performance of commanded duties.

Q. Doth this assurance tempt or incline men to negligence or looseness?

A. No; but rather excites and quickens them to diligence in holy duties.

OF PEACE OF CONSCIENCE.

Q. Is peace of conscience a benefit that belongs to those who are justified, adopted, and sanctified?—A. Yes.

Q. Do all sanctified persons enjoy this benefit at all times?—A. No.

Q. What should hinder it, seeing God speaks peace to such persons, and forgives all their sins?

A. Many times those whose sins are forgiven them, cannot be brought to forgive themselves; sometimes clouds of unbelief and temptations sadly darken their evidences, and they relapse into untender walking, whereby their consciences may be much disquieted, Psal. xxxviii. 3, 8; Isa. lix. 2.

Q. What is it that pacifies conscience, when troubled or wounded?

A. Conscience being God's deputy in us, nothing less can pacify it than what pacifieth divine justice, namely, the blood of Christ.

Q. How doth the blood of Christ pacify conscience?

A. By obtaining the removal of the guilt and power of sin from us, and the lifting up of God's countenance on us?

Q. Can any unbeliever have peace of conscience?

A. He may have a false peace, but it is only the believer in Christ that hath true peace of conscience, Luke xi. 21; Rom. v. 1.

Q. Whence doth the peace of unbelievers proceed?

A. Partly from the deceitfulness and flattery of their own hearts; and partly from the devil, that, as a strong man armed, keeps the house, Luke xi. 21.

Q. What is the difference between a true and false peace of conscience?

A. True peace of conscience is attained by the use of means, such as the ordinances, earnest prayer, brokenness of heart for sin, tender and holy walking before God. It arises from faith in Christ, the Peace-maker, and makes the man careful of pleasing God, and fearful of offending him. Whereas a false or presumptuous peace comes not this way, and hath no such attendants; nay, it is grounded upon vain imaginations, and is attended with carnal security, neglect of duty, and untender walking, 2 Thess. iii. 16; 1 Sam. i. 12, 18; Isa. lviii. 15; Psal. cxix. 165; Gal. vi. 16; Rom. v. 1, 2; Rev. iii. 17; Deut. xxix. 19.

Q. Doth the believer's inward peace come and go with his outward peace?

A. No; for he may have great tribulation in the world, when yet he may have much inward peace through Christ, John xvi. 33; Heb. iii. 17, 18.

Q. What is the best way to maintain our inward peace?

A. By making much use of Christ, who is our peace, looking daily to him for righteousness and strength, and strict walking by gospel-rules, Eph. ii. 14; Gal. vi. 16.

Q. Doth the believer's peace with God still alter with his peace of conscience?—A. No.

Q. How is it that the believer's state of peace is maintained, when his sense of peace is lost?

A. By reason of the stability of God's covenant, and the prevalency of Christ's continued intercession with God for his people, Psal. lxxix. 31—34; 1 John ii. 1.

OF JOY IN THE HOLY GHOST.

Q. What do you mean by joy in the Holy Ghost?

A. That spiritual joy, delight, and complacency, which the Holy Ghost works in his people, when he clears up their evidences, or allows them special favours to their souls.

Q. Why is this spiritual joy called joy in the Holy Ghost?

A. Because he breeds and feeds this joy; hence it is called the "fruit of the Spirit," Gal. v. 22.

Q. What are the chief grounds of this joy?

A. Ordinarily they are a sense of our interest in Christ, and of our justification by his righteousness; or his gracious presence with us, his work in us, the success of his gospel, or a prospect of heaven, Psal. li. 12; cl. 2; Isa. lxi. 10; Heb. iii. 18; Phil. i. 25; Acts ii. 46, 47; viii. 8; Rom. v. 2.

Q. Wherein doth this spiritual joy differ from the joy of the world?

A. Spiritual joy is inward and pure, deep and solid; it bears up under inward troubles, and disposes the soul for all spiritual performances: but worldly joy is muddy and sensual, blown away by every cross wind, leaves the mind under uneasy reflections, indisposeth for holy duties, and vanissheth at the approach of death.

Q. What is it that is most destructive to the true Christian's joy?

A. Sin, especially when it is ventured upon against light, Psal. li. 8.

Q. May not hypocrites have flashes of spiritual joy at some times?

A. Yes; for so had the stony ground hearers, and John's followers, Matt. xiii. 20; John v. 35.

Q. What is the difference between the true spiritual joy of believers, and the temporary joy of hypocrites?

A. True spiritual joy comes in the way of godly sorrow for sin, and of faith in Jesus Christ; it disposeth a man to humility and lowliness of mind, to hate sin more vehemently, resist temptations more steadily, and perform duty more cheerfully. But the hypocrite's joy being without any true foundation, or right views of Christ, it keeps sin in its strength, puffs up the man with a conceit of himself, and very soon leaves him as carnal and unholly as ever.

OF GROWTH IN GRACE.

Q. What is meant by the word grace?

A. Sometimes grace is taken for God's goodwill towards us, that is, his mercy and favour to sinners through Christ; and it is by this grace we are said to be elected, called, justified, and saved, Rom. iii. 24; xi. 5; Gal. i. 15; Eph. ii. 8. Sometimes again grace is taken for God's good work in us, or these gracious qualities which he infuses and plants in all justified persons, such as repentance, love, faith, &c., whereby they are sanctified and made meet for heaven, 2 Pet. iii. 18; Jam. iv. 6; Col. iii. 16; Eph. iv. 7; John i. 16. And in this last sense grace is to be understood in the answer.

Q. Is all true grace of a growing nature?

A. Yes.

Q. What doth the scriptures compare it to in its growing?

A. To the morning light, that increaseth more and more unto the perfect day: and to the husbandman's seed, which springs and groweth up, he knoweth not how, Prov. iv. 18; Mark iv. 26, 27.

Q. Wherefore is it that all true grace must grow?

A. Because it is the seed of God, and every soul possessed of it is united to Christ. Likewise there is a stature appointed, to which every Christian must gradually advance, that so he may be made meet for the inheritance above, 1 John iii. 9; John xv. 5; Eph. iv. 12, 13; Col. i. 12.

Q. When may grace be said truly to grow in a believer?

A. When it receiveth new additions or degrees of strength, which may be perceived either, 1. When its growth is inward, in respect of heart-sincerity and liveliness. Or, 2. When it is outward, in respect of the fruits of holiness produced in the life. Or, 3. When it is downward, in respect of self-abasement, and the rooting of gracious habits in the soul. Or, 4. When it is upward, in spirituality and heavenly-mindedness.

Q. Do believers always grow in grace?

A. No; but they are still in a growing disposition, and desirous to grow.

Q. May not true grace sometimes decay?

A. Yes; for sometimes believers leave their first love, and the good things which remain in them may be ready to die, Rev. ii. 4; iii. 2.

Q. Whence is it that grace decays in believers?

A. Sometimes it proceeds from violent storms of temptations, but ordinarily from their unwatchfulness, their neglect of employing Christ, their grieving of the Spirit, or harbouring of known sin.

Q. What are the ordinary symptoms of grace in decay.

A. 1. Loss of spiritual appetite, and of delight in duty. 2. Loss of wonted hatred of sin, and of tenderness of conscience. 3. Loss of desire for the coming of Christ's kingdom. 4. A growing love to the world and time's things.

Q. How may we know if grace be real and true, though it be very weak?

A. Wherever grace is true, sin will be felt as a burden, the soul will esteem Christ precious, his ordinances and people will be loved, and more grace and holiness will be earnestly desired.

Q. What means shall we use to get weak and languishing grace brought to thrive and grow?

A. We must be duly sensible of the spiritual consumption, and apply to the Physician for help; we must search if there be any unmortified lust at the root of grace, and remove it; we must look to Christ for his Spirit's influence and blessing upon ordinances and providences, earnestly pleading his promises of quickening and strength, and that he may come as the dew to Israel, Psal. lxxxv. 6; cxix. 25, 28; Hos. xiv. 4—6.

OF PERSEVERANCE IN GRACE.

Q. Is perseverance in grace a privilege of justified persons?—A. Yes.

Q. What do you mean by perseverance in grace?

A. A continuing still in the state of grace, and in the practice of godliness to the end.

Q. Can no justified person fall totally and finally from grace?—A. No.

Q. How are you assured of that?

A. From the unchangeableness of God, and the nature of grace; for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance; and grace in believers is a well of water springing up unto everlasting life, Rom. xi. 29; John iv. 14.

Q. Do all that profess Christ persevere in their profession?

A. No; for we read of many who have fallen from it, John vi. 66.

Q. Why do not all the professors of Christ persevere?

A. Because many of them are not rooted in sincerity; and they who begin in hypocrisy commonly end in apostacy, Matt. xiii. 20, 21; Psal. lxxviii. 37.

Q. May not truly gracious souls fall very foully into gross sins?—A. Yes.

Q. Have we any examples of such upon record?

A. Yes; we have Lot, Noah, David, and Peter.

Q. Why are such instances recorded?

A. To teach us to distrust our own strength, to avoid all temptations to sin, to live and rely upon our Surety, and not to despair of mercy upon our penitent returning to the Lord.

Q. Did not these who fell so foully fall from grace?

A. 1. Not totally: for though they fell from many degrees of grace, yet not from all grace; they came to have little faith, but not to be quite without faith. 2. Not finally, or without recovery; for though they fell from God for a time, yet repentance and recovery was secured to them.

Q. Are there not many who have once looked well, who have become final apostates from God?

A. Yes; but when they fall totally and finally from God, we may conclude they were never that in sincerity which they appeared to be: they were only saints in profession, but not in reality, 1 John ii. 19.

Q. Is it not said, The branches in Christ that bear not fruit shall be taken away, John xv. 2. Is not that a falling from grace?

A. These fruitless branches, there spoken of, were not in Christ by faith, but by profession only.

Q. Did not Adam and Solomon, who were gracious persons, fall totally and finally?

A. As for Adam, he had no promise of perseverance, though yet it is most probable he was recovered by believing in Christ, upon the promise that was freely tendered to him by God himself. And as for Solomon, we have ground to believe he was recovered by the mercy of God unto repentance, 2 Sam. vii. 14, 15.

Q. Why have we so many cautions and warnings given to believers in scripture, if they could not fall away from grace?

A. These warnings and dehortations are some of the means which God makes use of to prevent their falling away.

Q. Is it owing to the free will or strength of grace in believers that they fall not away finally?

A. No; for Adam and angels, who had stronger grace, fell; and so would believers, if they were not upheld by a power superior to any thing in themselves.

Q. What are the main grounds of the saint's perseverance?

A. The immutability of God's covenant and electing love; their being the purchase of Christ's blood, and united to him; Christ's potent intercession, together with the power and promise of God, John x. 11, 28; Luke xxii. 32; 1 Pet. i. 5.

Q. What promise have believers for their perseverance in grace to the end?

A. They have, among others, that in Jer. xxxii. 40, "I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good, but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me."

QUESTION XXXVII.

Q. What benefits do believers receive from Christ at death?

A. The souls of believers are at their death made perfect in holiness, and do immediately pass into glory; and their bodies, being still united to Christ, do rest in their graves till the resurrection.

Q. Do the benefits which believers receive from Christ end with their lives?

A. By no means; for they receive far greater benefits than ever at death, and after death.

Q. Whom do you understand by believers here?

A. Those who give credit to the word of God, and heartily receive and rest upon Christ for salvation, as he is offered to sinners in the gospel.

Q. Whether is it upon believers' souls or bodies that Christ bestows his benefits at death?

A. It is both upon their souls and bodies.

Q. What are the benefits granted to their souls at death?

A. There are two mentioned in the answer: 1. They are made perfect in holiness. 2. They do immediately pass into glory.

Q. Do all believers arrive at perfection in holiness?—A. Yes.

Q. When do they arrive at it?

A. At their death.

Q. Can none attain to it during this life?

A. No.

Q. Why so?

A. Because sin is never rooted wholly out of the soul till death.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. Both from the word of God, and our own experience, 1 John i. 8; Rom. vii. 23, 24.

Q. Why must all believers be made perfectly holy at death?

A. Because no unclean thing can enter within the gates of the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 27.

Q. How is it that believers are made perfectly holy at death?

A. Their graces are perfected, and the roots of sin plucked up out of their nature, which cannot be till the earthly fabric be dissolved.

Q. Do the souls of believers die or sleep with their bodies?

A. No; they live and act in a separate state.

Q. Whither do they go upon leaving the body?

A. Into glory.

Q. How soon after death?

A. Immediately, without any delay.

Q. Do they not go to purgatory by the way, that they may be purged from sin, and made pure to enter into heaven?

A. There is no ground for that popish fiction in the word of God, there being no purgatory, but the blood of Christ.

Q. How do you prove from scripture that they pass immediately into glory?

A. From these passages, which tell us that Lazarus's soul was presently carried by angels into Abraham's bosom; that the penitent thief was immediately glorified; that death is gain to the believer, and brings him to the Lord's presence; all which made the apostle desire to depart, that he might be with Christ, Luke xvi. 22; xxiii. 43; 2 Cor. v. 8; Phil. i. 21, 23.

Q. What do you mean by that glory which believers immediately pass into at death?

A. The immediate presence, vision, and fruition of God, which they are presently admitted to after death. Well may believers be said then to pass into glory; for then it is that they pass into a glorious state, a glorious place, a glorious company, and glorious employment.

Q. What is that glorious state which believers enter into at death?

A. It is a state of eternal rest and nearness with God, Heb. iv. 9; Rev. xiv. 13; 2 Cor. v. 8.

Q. What is that glorious place which they pass into?

A. It is their Father's house in heaven, called the King's palace, in which Christ hath prepared mansions for them, Psal. xlv. 15; John xiv. 2.

Q. What is the glorious company they are admitted to?

A. The company of God, of Christ, of the angels, and spirits of just men made perfect, 2 Cor. v. 8; Phil. i. 21; 1 Thess. iv. 17; Heb. xii. 22—24.

Q. What is the glorious employment they enter upon?

A. They will be employed continually in admiring and praising of God.

Q. What is it in God that will be the subject of their admiration and praise?

A. His glorious perfections, and wonderful works, and especially his redeeming love, and that amazing work of "God manifested in the flesh," and dying for us, Rev. i. 5; iv. 11; v. 9, 12.

Q. What benefits have believers from Christ at death, in respect of their bodies?

A. Their bodies at death remain in union with Christ, and rest in their graves, as in beds, until the resurrection, 1 Thess. iv. 14; Isa. lvii. 2.

Q. Wherefore is it that believers must meet with death?

A. Because it is appointed unto men once to die; and death doth pass upon all men, for that all have sinned, Heb. ix. 27; Rom. v. 12.

Q. Are none excepted from this law of death?

A. None but Enoch and Elias, who were translated to heaven without tasting of death; and those who will be found alive on the earth at Christ's second coming, 1 Cor. xv. 51; 1 Thess. iv. 15.

Q. Was death appointed as the punishment of sin?—A. Yes, Rom. vi. 23.

Q. Why then do believers die, seeing they are freed from all the punishment of sin, by Christ's suffering it for them?

A. Christ might have removed death altogether from believers if he had pleased; but he hath thought fit only by his death to change the nature of it, and take all that was penal out of it; so that he hath now quite altered death to believers, turning it from an enemy to be a friend, from a punishment to be a purgation, or a special mean for bringing about their perfect sanctification, and thorough cleansing from all sin: and hence it is that death is ranked among the believer's blessings or privileges, 1 Cor. iii. 22.

Q. Is there not a great difference between the death of a believer and of an unbeliever?

A. Yes; for to the one it is the effect of God's love, to the other it is the punishment of sin; to the one it is his Father's servant, sent to bring him home to his Father's house, to the other it is an officer of justice sent to arrest him for his fearful debts and crimes.

Q. What is the difference between the graves of believers and unbelievers?

A. The graves of believers are beds of rest, wherein they sleep in Jesus; and it is by virtue of the union subsisting between him and them, that they shall be awakened from their sleep in the morning of the resurrection; but the grave is a prison to unbelievers, wherein their bodies are kept in custody until the judgment of the great day; and from which they shall be raised by the power of God, their terrible Judge.

Q. How can there be any union between so glorious a person as Christ, and our vile bodies, when rotting in the grave?

A. Not only because the covenant which Christ stands in to believers reacheth to their very dust, but more especially because there is a mystical union between Christ as the head, and believers as the members of his mystical body, and, their dust being parts of that body mystical, Christ doth still look upon the same as related to him.

Q. Since death dissolves the union that is between the soul and the body, why doth it not also dissolve the union between Christ and the body?

A. Because the mystical union that is between Christ and his people is in its nature indissoluble, so that death cannot loose it, as it doth other unions and relations; but in this respect it is like the hypostatical union that is between the divine and human nature in the person of Christ: for, when Christ died the hypostatical union still remained, his divine nature being united both to his soul in heaven, and to his body in the grave; so, when believers die, the mystical union still remains, Christ their head being united both to their souls in heaven, and to their bodies lying in the grave.

Q. Are all believers' bodies laid in the grave?

A. No, strictly speaking; for some martyrs have been burnt in fires to ashes, some devoured by wild beasts, and some drowned in the sea: but the places wheresoever the bodies of such are put to corrupt, are to them as their graves, and thence will Christ bring them.

Q. In what respect is the believer's death called a sleep?

A. Because, as sleep eases and refreshes the man that is weary with toil and labour: so death eases the weary believer of all his toil and struggling with sin, Satan, and the world. Again, death is as a sleep to the believer, in regard he is to be wakened again from it in the morning of the resurrection, Psal. xvii. 15; xlix. 14.

Q. Why are believers' graves called beds of rest?

A. Because therein they rest from all their afflictions and labours in this world; from the wicked's persecutions, Satan's temptations, and sin's workings.

Q. How long shall they rest in their graves?

A. Till the resurrection.

QUESTION XXXVIII.

Q. What benefits do believers receive from Christ at the resurrection?

A. At the resurrection, believers, being raised up in glory, shall be openly acknowledged and acquitted in the day of judgment, and made perfectly blessed in the full enjoyment of God to all eternity.

Q. What is meant by the resurrection here spoken of?

A. The raising of all the dead from their graves, small and great, just and unjust, who have lived in all the ages of the world, from the creation of it unto the last day, Acts xxiv. 15; Rev. xx. 12.

Q. How doth the resurrection differ from creation?

A. Creation is the making of a new body out of the earth that did not subsist before; but resurrection is the raising up again of the same body out of its former dust.

Q. When is this universal resurrection to be?

A. At the last day when Christ shall come to judgment.

Q. How do you prove the truth and certainty of such a resurrection?

A. From the almighty power of God, that is abundantly able to raise the dead; and from the holy scriptures, wherein God expressly declares he will raise them.

Q. What was the cause of the Sadducees' error, who denied the resurrection?

A. Their not knowing the two great foundations of this doctrine; namely, the scriptures, and the power of God, as Christ told them, Mat. xxii. 29.

Q. How could they be ignorant of this doctrine of the resurrection from the scriptures of the Old Testament, seeing Job and Daniel plainly told them of it? Job xix. 26, 27; Dan. xii. 2.

A. The Sadducees had little regard to any of these writings, except the five books of Moses, which they imagined gave no hint of the resurrection, or of a future state; but our Lord plainly evinced the contrary from these very books, to the conviction of all, Matt. xxii. 31, 32, &c.; Mark xii. 26, 27.

Q. How did Christ prove the resurrection, and a future state, from the books of Moses?

A. From Exod. iii. 6, where God in the bush spoke to Moses, long after Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were dead, saying, "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." Now, seeing he saith not, I was their God, but I am their God, our Lord reasons from it, "He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living." And, seeing the covenant-relation still stands, their souls must then be living, and so also must be united again to their bodies, to which they have an innate inclination, that so they may be made for ever happy in the enjoyment of their covenanted God.

Q. But have we not far clearer discoveries of this doctrine in the New Testament?

A. Yes, in many places of it.

Q. How is it credible that the dead bodies of men, after undergoing innumerable alterations, should afterwards be raised again to what they were?

A. It should in nowise be thought incredible that God should raise the dead: for, if his power was able to raise the whole world out of nothing, it cannot be thought hard for him to raise our bodies out of their former dust, Acts xxvi. 8.

Q. Hath not God given us many proofs and instances of his power to raise the dead?

A. Yes, as in the rising of the widow of Zarephath's son by Elijah, the Shunamite's son by Elisha, the dead man at the touch of Elisha's bones, Dorcas by Peter, Eutychus by Paul, besides the resurrection of Christ himself, and many that were raised by him while he was on earth, 1 Kings xvii.; 2 Kings iv.; xiii.; Acts ix.; xx.; Matt. xxvii.; ix.; Luke vii.; John xi.

Q. Doth not the nature and perfection of God's infinite justice require that there should be a resurrection?

A. Yes; for, seeing the bodies of the wicked have been actors in their sins, it is just they should share in the punishment of them; and believers' bodies having been instruments in God's service, it is agreeable to equity that they should share in thereward and glory conferred upon them.

Q. Have you not some peculiar arguments for the resurrection of believers' bodies?

A. Yes; the resurrection of Jesus Christ their head, and the nature of God's covenant with believers, are certain and satisfying arguments for it.

Q. Will the dead be raised with the very same bodies they had when they were alive?—A. Yes.

Q. How do you prove that?

A. Because these very bodies, being the instruments of piety or vice, it is just that these, and no other, should partake of the reward or punishment. Again, if they were not the same bodies, it would be more properly a new creation than a resurrection. But Job puts the matter out of doubt, by assuring us that the bodies will be the very same, Job xix. 26, 27, "And though, after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another."

Q. Will not the bodies of believers, when raised, differ from what they are now?

A. Not in regard of their substance or essence, though they will differ very much in respect of qualities.

Q. What will be the different qualities of believers' bodies, when risen again?

A. Here they were weak, sickly, corrupt, and dying bodies, and called vile bodies, as being the instruments of much sin; but then they shall be strong, healthful, pure, spiritual, incorruptible, immortal, and beautiful bodies, Phil. iii. 21; 1 Cor. xv. 42—44, 52—54.

Q. How are believers' bodies said to be raised in glory, and to be made conform to Christ's glorious body?

A. In regard they shall partake of his glory: for Christ's body shall shine as the sun, and theirs shall shine as so many bright stars round about him; only all their glory will be borrowed from Christ their head.

Q. Will there not be a great difference between the resurrection of the just and the unjust?

A. Yes; for the saints will be raised to eternal life, and that by virtue of Christ's resurrection, and of their union with him; but the wicked shall be raised to condemnation, by virtue of the power and justice of God, which shall bring them, like malefactors, from prison to the judgment-seat. The saints shall rise with glory and triumph, amidst angels attending them; but the wicked shall rise with trembling and horror, having most deformed and ghastly looks, as men going to be sentenced to everlasting burnings.

Q. What will be the great means of raising the dead at the last day?

A. The voice of the archangel, and sound of the last trumpet, which shall give such a powerful summons to the dead, that none can sit; all thereupon must rise and appear before their Judge.

Q. Will there not be a speedy separation made between the righteous and wicked in that day?

A. Yes; the angels will then be employed to separate the godly from the wicked, and gather them altogether in one blessed company.

Q. How shall believers be then disposed of?

A. They will be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air.

Q. What privileges shall believers have at the judgment-seat above others?

A. Christ will place them on his right hand: he will openly acknowledge and acquit them: he will declare their right to the glorious inheritance prepared for them, and invite them to take possession of it: he will cause them to sit with him as assessors in judging wicked angels and men.

Q. What do you mean by Christ's open acknowledging of believers in that day?

A. His public owning of them as his elect and redeemed ones.

Q. Whom doth Christ say he will acknowledge for his at that day?

A. Those who own and confess Christ now.

Q. Whom will Christ deny in that day?

A. Those who disown and deny Christ now, Matt. x. 32, 33, "Whosoever, therefore, shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father who is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father who is in heaven."

Q. What do you mean by Christ's open acquitting of believers in that day?

A. His public justifying and absolving of them from all the guilt of their sins; and his vindicating and clearing them from all the world's slanders and aspersions.

Q. Are not believers acknowledged and acquitted by Christ before this time?

A. Yes; he doth in this world, when their sins are pardoned, and he intimates this to them by his Spirit's bearing testimony with their consciences, Rom. viii. 16, 33; 1 John iii. 21.

Q. How doth Christ's acknowledging and acquitting of believers now, differ from his doing it at the judgment-seat?

A. 1. In respect of promulgation, the first is secret in the believer's bosom, the second is public before men and angels. 2. In respect of subjective certainty; the believer may doubt of the first but he cannot doubt of the second; it being a judicial sentence pronounced by the Judge's own mouth with the greatest solemnity.

Q. What will be the effect of this acknowledging and acquittance?

A. It will for ever remove all doubts and fears from believers' hearts, and fill them with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Hence this day is called "the time of refreshing" to them; Acts iii. 19.

Q. Should not the faith of this acknowledging and acquittance by Christ encourage us to own Christ in his person, offices, and truths, in the face of all dangers?—A. Yes.

Q. How shall we attain to that happy resurrection and acquittance at the last day?

A. We must labour to be found in Christ, and clothed upon with his righteousness: we must constantly adhere to Christ and his truths, advance in the work of mortification, and study holiness in all manner of conversation.

Q. When Christ the Judge shall pronounce the sentence of absolution and condemnation, will not the execution thereof speedily follow?

A. Yes; for, after passing of them, it is added, Matt. xxv. 46, "And the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

Q. Will not the wicked be made to acknowledge the justice of the sentence against them?

A. Yes; because Christ, in passing the sentence, gives them what was their own former wish and desire.

Q. What was that?

A. The absence of God: as they said to God here, Depart from us, so Christ saith to them then, "Depart from me."

Q. Will not the saints after their sentence enter immediately upon perfect never-ending happiness?—A. Yes.

Q. What will be their happiness after the judgment is over?

A. They shall be made perfectly blessed in the full enjoyment of God to all eternity.

Q. What is included in perfect bliss?

A. Perfect freedom from all evil, and full enjoyment of all good.

Q. What evils will believers be freed from in heaven?

A. From all manner of sin, guilt or pollution; from all inclinations or temptations to sin; and from all the bitter fruits and effects of sin, such as complaints, temptations, fears, or trouble, of any kind.

Q. When is it that a man enjoys all that is good?

A. When he attains to the full enjoyment of God.

Q. Can we attain to that here upon earth?

A. No; for though God may be enjoyed by his people in some measure here, when they attain to communion with him in his ordinances, yet the full enjoyment of God is reserved for heaven hereafter.

Q. Wherein doth the full enjoyment of God in heaven consist?

A. 1. In being admitted to his glorious presence. 2. In having the immediate beatific vision of his face. 3. In having the full persuasion and sense of his love. 4. In being made like him. 5. In having fulness of delight and satisfaction in God as our everlasting portion.

Q. Is it possible that any creature can fully enjoy God?

A. No creature can enjoy God fully, as God enjoys himself; but believers have such enjoyment of God in heaven as fills them, in the measure they are capable of.

Q. How can any man see his face, when he is the invisible God?

A. He is invisible to the eye of the body, but not to the eye of the mind.

Q. How can a creature be made like to him that is infinite?

A. The holiness and purity of the rational creature is some shadow or picture of the infinite holiness of God.

Q. How long shall believers be blest with the full enjoyment of God in heaven?

A. Not for days, or years, but for all eternity; and this is the ingredient that will exceedingly sweeten their happiness above, that is without end; and they shall ever be with the Lord, 1 Thess. iv. 17.

Q. How is God said to be all in all in heaven?

A. It imports these things: 1. That saints will be satisfied there from God alone. 2. That there will be no need there for these subordinate things, out of which they used formerly to bring comfort. 3. That every thing they before have found comfortable will all be eminently found and enjoyed in God.

Q. Will not the saints be continually employed in adoring, praising, and worshipping God in heaven?—A. Yes.

Q. Will not their worship and adoration above far transcend the most refined worship upon earth?

A. Yes, in regard there will be no mixture of sin, no wandering, no hypocrisy, no imperfection, in the worship above: they will act above with the highest delight and constancy, without any weariness or intermission, for ever.

QUESTION XXXIX.

Q. What is the duty which God requireth of man?

A. The duty which God requireth of man is, obedience to his revealed will.

Q. Doth this question begin the second part of the catechism?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the difference between the first and second part of the catechism?

A. The first part treats on matters of faith, and what man is to believe concerning God: the second part handles matters of practice, and what is man's duty towards God.

Q. Are not these the two great lessons which the scriptures principally teach us?

A. Yes; and as we have heard the first, so we ought to be attentive to the second, for man has something to do, as well as something to believe.

Q. What do you mean by duty here?

A. That which a man oweth to God, or ought to do for God.

Q. What do you mean by obedience?

A. A man's going in with the will of God, either in what he commands or forbids

Q. What is the rule of our duty and obedience?
A. The revealed will of God.

Q. What do you mean by God's revealed will?

A. God's mind discovered and made known to us in the scriptures.

Q. Why may not the traditions or inventions of men be our rule?

A. Because God rejects all will-worship and superstitious performances, saying, "Who hath required this at your hand?" Isa. i. 12.

Q. Hath God any other will besides his revealed will?—A. Yes, his secret will.

Q. What is the difference between God's secret and revealed will?

A. God's secret will is his eternal counsel and decrees concerning all events whatsoever, which is not known till they come to pass; but God's revealed will is that which he declares, and lays before us as our duty, that we may practise and follow it.

Q. Is God's secret will no part of our duty?

A. No; "for secret things belong unto the Lord our God, but those things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children," Deut. xxix. 29.

Q. Upon what account is our obedience and service due to God?

A. Because God is our Creator, our Preserver, our Benefactor, and supreme Lord and Lawgiver.

Q. Is there not obedience due to others besides to God?

A. Yes; servants must obey their masters, children their parents, and subjects their magistrates, but not as we are bound to obey God.

Q. What is the difference between the obedience we owe to God, and what we owe to man?

A. We must obey God for his own sake, and because of his supreme authority; but we must obey men, our superiors, chiefly because God enjoins it, and only when their commands are agreeable to his will.

Q. What is to be done when the commands of God and of men are opposed one to another?

A. In that case we are to obey God rather than man, Acts iv. 19.

Q. What sort of obedience is it that is acceptable to God?

A. It must be sincere, universal, and constant; it must proceed from right principles, namely, from a renewed heart, from faith, and from the love of God, and of Jesus Christ; and it must be directed to right ends, namely, to advance the honour and glory of God.

Q. Can we merit any thing at God's hands by our obedience?

A. No; but must account ourselves unprofitable servants after we have done our best. Our best performances are imperfect, so that it is by Christ's obedience, not our own, that we must be saved.

Q. Is it our duty, notwithstanding, to study to obey God in the best manner we can?

A. Yes, because God commands it.

Q. Will not God accept of our obedience, if sincere, though attended with imperfection?

A. Yes, upon the account of Christ's merits and intercession.

Q. Is it not a yoke for men to be bound to constant obedience and service to God all the days of their lives?

A. No; for those who know God, and love him, count his service the greatest freedom, Psal. cxix. 45.

Q. Will they be free from this service in heaven?

A. No; for there his servants shall serve him, and count this their greatest happiness, Rev. xxii. 3.

Q. Will not their service in heaven differ much from what it is now?

A. Yes; for there they will serve God without sin or weariness.

QUESTION XL.

Q. What did God at first reveal to man for the rule of his obedience?

A. The rule which God at first revealed to man for his obedience was the moral law.

Q. Is man appointed to be under the obligation and direction of a law?—A. Yes.

Q. Why so?

A. Because, being made with rational faculties for the service of his Creator, he must needs be accountable to God for his actions.

Q. What is the use of a law to men?

A. To show to them what is sin, and what is duty.

Q. What is the law that was first given to men?

A. The moral law.

Q. What do you mean by the moral law?

A. That law which is the perpetually binding rule of our manners and practice, being the unalterable declaration of the will of God, concerning the duties of righteousness, which all men owe to God and their neighbours, in all ages of the world:—which law is briefly summed up in the Ten Commandments.

Q. Why is it called moral.

A. Because it is a perpetual rule for regulating our manners and conversation both towards God and man.

Q. How can the moral law be said to be the first rule revealed to man, seeing the ten commandments were only given at Sinai, above two thousand years after man was created?

A. The moral law, notwithstanding, was the first rule, seeing it was written on the heart of man at his first creation, he being made after the image of God.

Q. Doth this law still remain written upon man's heart?

A. The moral law being agreeable to the light of nature, though it be sadly obscured by the fall, yet some relics of it are to be found on the hearts of all mankind.

Q. Is the moral law binding upon the heathen world, who have not the scriptures to make it known to them?

A. Yes; it is binding upon all mankind, seeing it was fully made known to man at his first creation, and which knowledge he lost by his own fault. And though the heathens want the benefit of scripture-light, yet so much of the moral law is made known to them by the light of nature, as is sufficient to leave them without excuse for their disobedience, Rom. ii. 14, 15.

Q. If the moral law be natural, what need was there for writing it to us in the Bible?

A. 1. Because the fall of man had woefully darkened our minds, and obscured the knowledge of this law. 2. God would hereby show that he is the Author of the law and light of nature. 3. He designed to leave sinners the more inexcusable.

Q. Can any man obtain salvation by his obedience to the moral law?—A. No.

Q. Can any man now obey this law perfectly? A. No.

Q. Is it just for God to require perfect obedience to the law, when no man is able to give it?

A. Yes; for God may justly demand what he hath a right to, though we have lost it by our fault. God gave man, at his creation, power to obey perfectly, which he squandered away; now, though a debtor disables himself for paying his debt, the creditor doth not thereby lose his right to ask it.

Q. Why is the law given to men, seeing none can obtain life by it?

A. To be a restraint to sin, and a rule of righteousness; and particularly, the law is given to be a schoolmaster to bring men to Christ, Gal. iii. 24.

Q. How doth the law as a schoolmaster bring men to Christ?

A. As a schoolmaster by his threats and whips excites dull scholars to learn knowledge for their good; so the law, by its challenges, convictions, threatenings, and curse, awakens secure souls to see their sins and dangers, and to flee to Christ for a perfect righteousness to answer the demands of the law, and to shelter them from its curses.

Q. Doth the law lead all men to Christ?

A. No.

Q. For what use is the law to them who are not led to Christ?

A. It serves to render them inexcusable, if they continue still in their Christless state, after their sin and danger are discovered to them by the law.

Q. Is the law of any use to the regenerate, who are already brought to Christ?

A. Yes; it serves to show them how much they are bound to Christ for fulfilling it, and enduring its curse for them; and to engage them to live holy and thankful lives to his glory: and particularly, the law is given to them as a rule of life, that they may order their conversations by it.

Q. How can the moral law be a rule of obedience under the gospel, seeing it is said of believers, that they are not under the law, but under grace? Rom. vi. 14.

A. The meaning is, that believers are not under the law as a covenant of works, being delivered from the cursing and condemning power of the law by their surety Christ. But though it be not a covenant to them, whereby they are either to be justified or condemned; yet it is still continued as a rule, by which they are to regulate both their hearts and lives, Rom. iii. 31; vii. 7, 12; Tit. ii. 11, 12; 1 Cor. ix. 21.

Q. How is Christ said to be the end of the law for righteousness to us? Rom. x. 4.

A. In regard Christ doth answer the primary design of the law under the first covenant, which was to bring men to a perfect obedience or righteousness for their justification: this we cannot now find by the law, therefore we must seek it in Christ, where it is to be found. The end and scope of the law is now gained in Christ, seeing he is that to a believer which the law would have been to him, if he could have perfectly kept it; namely, righteousness, justification, and salvation.

Q. Doth the moral law preach Christ to us?

A. No; but God mercifully makes use of it as a spur to excite men to flee to Christ for salvation.

Q. How doth it that?

A. By showing to men that they have destroyed themselves, and that they cannot be their own saviours; and so it becomes a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ, as was before explained.

Q. What is it then that preacheth Christ to men, and shows them plainly the way of salvation?

A. The gospel.

Q. What do you mean by the gospel?

A. Any part of the Old and New Testament that brings to us the glad tidings of salvation, or points out the way to it; for the word gospel signifies glad tidings, or good news.

Q. Are any news so welcome or refreshing to sensible sinners, as the news which the gospel brings?

A. No news are so joyful as the doctrine of free grace, no tidings so sweet as the news of pardon, the news of a Saviour, and of salvation to the chief of sinners.

Q. Are the law and gospel opposite to one another?

A. No; for the one is subservient to the other, Gal. iii. 21; 1 Tim. i. 9—11; Rom. iii. 21.

Q. Did God give any other laws to men besides the moral law?

A. Yes, he gave also to the Jews the judicial and the ceremonial law, which were explained before under the 14th question, page 614.

QUESTION XLI.

Q. Where is the moral law summarily comprehended?

A. The moral law is summarily comprehended in the ten commandments.

Q. What mean you by the law's being summarily comprehended?

A. That the law of God, or moral law, which is contained at large in the whole bible, is briefly, or in few words, summed up in the ten commandments; and these ten commandments are no more but a very short sum of the moral law, though they be a most comprehensive sum of it.

Q. How are the ten commandments commonly divided?

A. Into two tables; the first four commandments make the first table, containing our duty to God; the last six commandments make the second table, containing our duty to our neighbour.

Q. How do the papists divide these commandments?

A. Though they cannot deny them to be ten in number, and these ten to be divided into two tables, seeing the scripture so expressly doth assert both, Deut. iv. 13. Yet they make but three in the first table, and seven in the second; designing this way to cloak their worshipping of images; for they would gladly conceal the second command, which strikes directly against them, by making it a pendicle of the first; and so they reckon the first and second commandments to be but one. And that they may still have the number of ten commandments, they divide the tenth into two.

Q. What absurdity is there in this way of doing?

A. It is against the plain sense and scope of the words of the decalogue. For the first and second commandments are evidently distinct, the first prescribing the right object of worship, and the second the right way of worship. And as for the tenth commandment, it appears plainly from the tenor of it, to be but one; the scope of it being to prohibit men to covet any thing that belongs to their neighbours: so that, if it was at all to be divided it should be divided at least into six commands, or rather into as many commands as there are things which are our neighbour's.

Q. Where were these ten commandments first promulgated?—A. At mount Sinai.

Q. After what manner was it done?

A. With the greatest solemnity and terror: For the mount was railed about, that none might touch it: the angels attended; the glory of God visibly descended in a cloud; there were thunders, lightnings, the sound of a trumpet, and God's voice was heard; the mountain shook; the people trembled, and even Moses himself did quake. And, lastly, God with his own finger did engrave the ten commandments upon two tables of stone.

Q. Why was the law given in this manner?

A. To possess the world with awful thoughts of the Lawgiver, and to show them the danger of breaking his holy law.

Q. What are the properties of this law?

A. It is holy, just, good, spiritual, and exceeding broad, Rom. vii. 12, 14; Psal. cxix. 96.

Q. Why is it called spiritual?

A. Because it reacheth to the thoughts and frame of the heart, as well as to the outward life and conversation.

Q. Why is it called exceeding broad?

A. Because of the large extent and comprehensiveness of its meaning.

Q. In what respect is the law so comprehensive?

A. In many respects: As, for instance, when it forbids any sin, it doth at the same time command the contrary duty: and when it commands any duty, it forbids the contrary sin: and when any sin is forbidden, all inward motions and affections to it, all degrees and appearances of it, all temptations, means, words, or gestures tending to it, are also forbidden; and when any duty is commanded, the inward frame and affections suitable to it, and the means and helps for promoting it, are likewise enjoined.

Q. Why did God write his law upon tables of stone?

A. To teach us the lasting obligation of it, and that we should write it on the tables of our hearts, or pray to God to do it for us.

Q. Can any man obtain to a conformity to this holy law in all things, in respect of his heart, words, and actions?—A. No.

Q. Are we not liable to the curse and condemnation of the law, if we break it, or come short of it in any thing?—A. Yes.

Q. How then shall we be sheltered from this curse?

A. By looking by faith to our surety, Jesus, and to his perfect obedience and righteousness to answer for us.

QUESTION XLII.

Q. What is the sum of the Ten Commandments?

A. The sum of the ten commandments is, to love the Lord our God with all our heart, with all our soul, with all our strength, and with all our mind; and our neighbour as ourselves.

Q. What do you mean by the sum of the ten commandments?

A. The main substance or life of them.

Q. What is the sum of the first table of the law?

A. Love to God.

Q. What is the sum of the second table?

A. Love to our neighbour.

Q. Why are the two tables summed up in love to God and our neighbour?

A. Because love is the great spring of all obedience to them; for where true love is to God and our neighbour, all the duties required in both tables will certainly follow.

Q. How is it that we ought to love the Lord?

A. As our God, and with all our heart, soul, strength, and mind, Mat. xxii. 37.

Q. What is imported in loving the Lord as our God?

A. That we must choose him for our God, and give up ourselves unto him.

Q. What is imported in loving the Lord with all our heart, soul, strength, and mind?

A. It imports the sincerity, ardeney, activity, and supremacy of our love to God; that we ought to love and serve him with our whole powers and faculties, and above all other things whatsoever.

Q. What are those things we ought to love the Lord above?

A. Above all things that we enjoy on earth; such as our money or estates, our houses or lands, our children or relations, our liberties, or even our very lives.

Q. What reason is there for loving the Lord above all things?

A. Because he is the Author of all; his excellency infinitely transcends all; and from him we have our all, even our being, our breath, our souls, our strength, our relations, and every thing else.

Q. May not a man lawfully love his relations and possessions in this world?

A. Yes, providing his love be not excessive.

Q. How may we know if our love to things in the world be excessive?

A. It is a token it is so, when the thoughts of these things jostle our spiritual thoughts; and when they come to get our first thoughts in the morning, or our last at night. Or when the impressions of worldly things abide longer with us than of things spiritual.

Q. How shall we know if we love God above all things?

A. It would be a good sign if we could say, that we value the favour of God more than that of any creature; and that we are more affected with the loss of God's favour than with any worldly loss ; and that we would choose rather to displease all the world than to offend him.

Q. Who is meant by our neighbour that we ought to love ?

A. Every man is our neighbour, and therefore we should bear affection to all men.

Q. What mean you by loving our neighbour as ourselves ?

A. That we should love others with the same truth and sincerity of love as we do ourselves ; or, as our Saviour explains it in that golden rule, Mat. vii. 12. We should be ready to do to others as we would have them doing to us. And we should not do that to others, which we would not have done to us, were they placed in our circumstances, and we in theirs.

Q. Should, according to this rule, a robber be spared, because he would spare those who would punish him ; or a drunkard have what liquor he demands from us, because he would give it to us if it was in his power ?

A. The rule is not to be understood of self-love that is corrupt and vicious, but of self-love that is natural and innocent ; it is this only that ought to be the standard of doing to our neighbour. In doing as we would be done to, we must act from a well informed judgment, and not from any corrupt bias to sin or vice.

Q. Are we bound to love our neighbour with the same degree of love as we bear to ourselves ?

A. No, but with the same sincerity of love only.

Q. Ought we to love all mankind alike ?

A. No ; we ought to love all men, indeed, with the love of benevolence, but the saints only with the love of complacency, Psal. xvi. 6.

Q. Are there not many who break this law of love to their neighbour ?

A. Yes ; namely, those who backbite their neighbour, who wish them evil, are grieved at their prosperity, or are inwardly glad of their hurt.

QUESTION XLIII.

Q. What is the preface to the ten commandments ?

A. The preface to the ten commandments is in these words : "I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage."

QUESTION XLIV.

Q. What doth the preface to the ten commandments teach us ?

A. The preface to the ten commandments teacheth us that, because God is the Lord, and our God, and Redeemer, therefore we are bound to keep all his commandments.

Q. What mean you by a preface ?

A. Something that is spoken or written before, in order to introduce another thing.

Q. What is the design of the preface to the decalogue ?

A. To lay before us some reasons and arguments to enforce the keeping of the commands.

Q. Why doth God make use of arguments to persuade men to obedience, seeing he is the absolute Sovereign of the world, who may command what he will ?

A. 1. To show his condescension in dealing with man, who is a rational creature, according to the principles of his nature. 2. To teach us that obedience to God is our reasonable service. 3. To teach us that he would have all his people to serve him willingly, and from free choice.

Q. What arguments doth God make use of in this preface to enforce obedience to this law ?

A. They are three: The first is taken from God's sovereignty over us, "I am the Lord : " The second from his covenant relation to us, "I am thy God : " The third from the redemption he hath wrought for us, "I have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage."

Q. How is it said, of this preface and the ten commandments, that "God spake all these words," Exod. xx. 1. Was it only as he spoke the rest of the bible ?

A. No ; for other parts of the bible God spake only mediately by the mouth of his prophets ; but these words were spoken immediately by God himself.

Q. How can God be said to speak, who hath no mouth, tongue, or organs of speech ?

A. God speaks not as we do ; but it is easy for his almighty power to form a voice in the air, and to utter articulate words when he pleaseth.

Q. Should it not engage us to a special regard of these words, that God spoke them himself ?

A. Yes ; for where God hath a mouth to speak, we should have an ear to hear. Let us carefully hear God when he speaks his laws to us, as we would have God to hear us when we speak in prayer to him.

Q. What force is there in that argument for our obedience, "I am the Lord ?"

A. It doth import that he is JEHOVAH, the eternal, independent, self-sufficient, immutable, and Almighty Creator, and supreme sovereign, who hath being in and from himself, and gives being to all things ; and therefore we his creatures and subjects owe to him all obedience.

Q. What is the force of that argument, "I am thy God ?"

A. It imports that we have chosen God for our God ; and that he hath owned us for his people, and bestowed particular mercies on us : and therefore our covenant interest in him should sweeten all his commands, and strongly engage us to obey them.

Q. Doth not the promise to believers, "I will be your God," include greater blessings in it than any other promise in the covenant of grace?

A. Yes: for it hath in it, I will not only give you pardon, give you heaven; but I will give you myself, a whole Deity, a JEHOVAH; all I am, all I have, all I can do, shall be yours; I will not only be your friend, your Father, your Husband, but I will be your God. All the divine attributes are yours, to make you happy, yea, all the persons of the glorious Trinity are yours, to contrive, carry on, and accomplish the work of your salvation.

Q. How shall we come to get an interest in God as our God?

A. We must believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and heartily accept of him as our Mediator, who by his death had made atonement for all who believe in him, yea, had purchased for them reconciliation with God, and a covenant relation to him as their God.

Q. What force is there in that argument (I have brought thee out of the land of Egypt) to engage us to obedience, who were never in Egypt?

A. Though we were not in the earthly Egypt, yet we are all by nature in the spiritual Egypt, and under the bondage of the devil and our lusts, which is worse than Egyptian bondage. And the Israelites' temporal deliverance from Egypt was typical of our spiritual deliverance from Satan's bondage; so that the argument hath the same force with us as with the Jews.

Q. Why was the Israelites' deliverance from Egypt so much made use of as an argument for their obedience?

A. Because Egypt was full of gross idolatry, a plague with which they were in danger of being infected: and there they groaned under cruel bondage; from which God delivered them in a most miraculous manner.

Q. Why should it be reckoned so great a mercy to be delivered from places overspread with idolatry?

A. Because idolatry is a damnable sin, and brings on great wrath; upon which account the mercy of our ancestors' deliverance from mystical Egypt (Rome's idolatry and bondage) should engage us to thankful obedience to God's law as well as the Israelites' deliverance did their posterity.

Q. Are not those who are redeemed by Christ from the bondage of Satan and his lusts, strongly obliged to keep his commands?

A. Yes, Luke i. 74.

Q. Is not Satan's slavery worse than any other?

A. Yes; for other captives groan under their slavery, and long for deliverance, but Satan's slaves are content and easy; other tyrants rule only over the bodies of their slaves, but Satan rules over the soul, and all its faculties.

Q. How may we know if we be redeemed by Christ from this bondage?

A. It will be a good sign, if the Redeemer be precious to us, particularly in his kingly office; and if we find the power of indwelling sin so broken in us, that this bosom enemy doth not triumph over us.

QUESTION XLV.

Q. What is the first commandment?

A. The first commandment is, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

QUESTION XLVI.

Q. What is required in the first commandment?

A. The first commandment requireth us to know and acknowledge God to be the only true God, and our God; and to worship and glorify him accordingly.

Q. Why doth this and the rest of the commandments still run in the singular number, Thou, and not You?

A. Because God would have every man to notice the directions thereof as particularly as if they were spoken to himself by name.

Q. How is the first commandment said to require things of us, when it seems only to forbid?

A. Because it is a rule for the right understanding of the commands, that where a sin is forbidden, the contrary duty is commanded; and where a duty is commanded, the contrary sin is forbidden: and so we find the scripture explains the law, Mat. v. 21, 23; Eph. iv. 28; Isa. lviii. 13; Mat. xv. 4, 5, 6.

Q. How many duties doth the first commandment chiefly require?

A. Four: 1. To know God. 2. To acknowledge God. 3. To worship God. 4. To glorify God.

Q. Doth God expressly command us to study to know him?

A. Yes, 1 Chron. xxviii. 9, "And thou, Solomon, my son, know thou the God of thy father."

Q. Is it not highly dangerous to live without the knowledge of God?

A. Yes, Jer. x. 25, "Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not."

Q. Is not ignorance of God yet more dangerous to those who live in a land of light, and enjoy the means of knowledge?

A. Yes, seeing they are without all excuse.

Q. Is it sufficient to know that there is a God?

A. No; we must also know what God is, and what are his works.

Q. What are these things we must know of God?

A. We should study to know God, 1. In his unity of essence. 2. In his trinity of persons. 3. In his attributes and perfections. 4. In his works of creation, of providence, and of redemption.

Q. What sort of knowledge of God is it that we must seek after?

A. A literal knowledge of God is not sufficient; a comprehensive knowledge of God is unattainable: but an experimental, practical, soul-affecting, humbling, and transforming knowledge of God, is what we should seek after, and labour to attain.

Q. Besides knowing God, are we also bound to acknowledge God?

A. Yes, Deut. xxvi. 17, "Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God?"

Q. What should we acknowledge concerning God?

A. We should acknowledge him to be the only living and true God, and that he is the only object of divine worship; we should acknowledge him to be the Creator and Governor of the world, and own our dependence upon him for all things; and we should acknowledge him as our Lawgiver and Judge, to whom we are accountable for all that we do.

Q. Is it sufficient to own and acknowledge God to be the true God?

A. No, unless also we take him and acknowledge him to be our God, and serve him accordingly.

Q. What is imported in acknowledging God as our God?

A. 1. It imports our renouncing all idols that would rival it with him. 2. Our making choice of God as our portion and chief good, and the God whom we will serve and please above all the world. 3. Our covenant-dedication, surrendering, and engaging ourselves to be the Lord's. 4. Our owning of God, and of his truths and ways before the world, which is called a confessing or professing of him before men, Mat. x. 32; John xii. 42; Rom. x. 9; 1 John iv. 15; 1 Tim. ii. 10; vi. 12.

Q. What is the third duty required in this commandment?

A. To worship God, Mat. iv. 10, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."

Q. How is God to be worshipped by us?

A. Both inwardly and outwardly.

Q. When is it that we worship God inwardly?

A. When we remember him, love him, highly esteem him, desire him, delight in him, honour and adore him, fear him, believe him, trust and hope in him, Mal. iii. 16; Eccles. xii. 1; Deut. vi. 5; Psal. lxxi. 19; Mal. i. 6; Isa. xxvi. 4, 8; Psal. cxxx. 7; Psal. xxxvii. 4.

Q. How do we worship God outwardly?

A. By offering up our prayers and praises to God, attending to his word, and partaking of the sacraments.

Q. What is the fourth duty required in this commandment?

A. To glorify God.

Q. Is there any difference between worshipping and glorifying of God?

A. Yes, in regard the glorifying of God is of larger signification than worshipping of him, seeing it comprehends all obedience to his laws, and hath respect to all parts of our conversation. We are bound to glorify God, not only in our religious, but also in our civil and natural actions; whether we buy or sell, eat or drink, or whatsoever we do, we should "do all to the glory of God," Psal. l. 23; 1 Cor. vi. 20; x. 31.

Q. What is the import of the word accordingly in the answer?

A. It imports that we should worship and glorify God in such a manner, as to make it appear that we really know him and own him, both as the true God, and as our God.

Q. Why is worshipping God and glorifying him joined together?

A. To teach us, that we must not only worship God devoutly, but must also walk circumspectly, and live holy lives in the world.

Q. What if a man worship God, and yet live in sin?

A. His prayers cannot be heard, but will be an abomination to the Lord, Psal. lxvi. 18; Prov. xxviii. 9.

Q. Who is the worshipper that will be accepted of God?

A. The man that hath a tender walk, and makes conscience of his ways, John ix. 31. "We know that God heareth not sinners; but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth."

Q. Can we be said to glorify God in the same sense that God is said to glorify us?

A. No; for our glorifying God is only declarative, but God's glorifying us is effective: we only declare God to be glorious, but he makes us glorious.

Q. How are we to declare God's glory?

A. By making known his glorious excellencies and perfections, and honouring him both with our lips and lives. See more of this before on the first question, pages 599, 560.

QUESTION XLVII.

Q. What is forbidden in the First Commandment?

A. The first commandment forbiddeth the denying, or not worshipping and glorifying the true God, as God, and our God; and the giving that worship and glory to any other which is due to him alone.

Q. What are the chief sins here forbidden?

A. They are five, mentioned in the answer: 1. Denying the true God. 2. Not worshipping him. 3. Not glorifying him. 4. Giving his worship to another. 5. Giving his glory to another.

Q. Who are these that are guilty of the sin of denying the true God?

A. 1. Atheists, who deny the being of a God. 2. Deists and infidels, who deny the truth of the holy Scriptures, and do not believe what God saith in them. 3. Those who deny the true Deity of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, or disown the doctrine of the Trinity; such as Arians, Socinians, Quakers, and others. 4. Those who deny the providence of God in governing the world, and ascribe events to other things.

Q. How many sorts of atheists are there?

A. Three sorts: 1. Atheists in opinion. 2. Atheists in affection. 3. Atheists in conversation.

Q. Who are those that are atheists in opinion?

A. Those who profess to believe that there is not a God. Some few have done so, and have been put to death for it. This truth of the existence of God, having the light of nature, and general consent of all nations to vouch for it, it is not easy to imagine how there can be a speculative atheist, or one that has got the impressions of God entirely blotted out, which are naturally engraven upon man's heart.

Q. Are there any such atheists in hell?

A. Atheism is a sin that cannot have place there; no devil is guilty of it, James ii. 19.

Q. Is not atheism a dreadful sin?

A. Yes; for it tends to open the flood-gates for all impiety and wickedness, and to destroy all order and government in the world; for thus a man might cheat, steal, rob, murder, and do the vilest things, and yet not sin, nor have any thing to fear hereafter.

Q. Who are those that are atheists in affection?

A. Those who, in their hearts, wish there were no God, as all wicked men secretly do? Psal. xiv. 1.

Q. Why do wicked men wish there were no God?

A. That so they might be freed from these restraints which mar their sinful pleasures.

Q. Who are those that are atheists in conversation?

A. Practical atheists, or those who live as if there were no God, Tit. i. 16, "They profess they knew God, but in works they deny him."

Q. Are there not many of these practical atheists in the world?—A. Yes.

Q. Who may be reckoned such?

A. All those, 1. Who neglect the worship of God. 2. Who live in hypocrisy. 3. Who indulge secret sins. 4. Who mock at the holy Scriptures, or holy persons. 5. Who never think on death or judgment. 6. Who set their hearts wholly upon the world, or upon sensual things.

Q. What is the second sin mentioned in the answer?

A. Not worshipping of God.

Q. Who are those who are guilty of this sin of not worshipping God?

A. Those who do not think of God, do not esteem him, do not love him, do not believe him, do not honour him, do not fear him, do not humble themselves before him, do not attend God's ordinances, do not offer prayers or praises to God in the public assemblies, nor in their families or closets.

Q. What is the third sin forbidden in this commandment?

A. Not glorifying of God.

Q. Who are those that are guilty of this sin?

A. 1. Those who neglect the knowledge of God, and live in ignorance of him. 2. Those who forget God, or hate the thoughts of him. 3. Those who do not admire and praise him, or are unthankful to him. 4. Those who desire the creatures, or delight in objects of sense more than God. 5. Those who are profane and ungodly in their lives and conversations.

Q. What is the fourth sin forbidden in this commandment?

A. Idolatry, or the giving that worship to another which is due to God alone.

Q. How many kinds of idolatry are there?

A. Two kinds, 1. Idolatry that is outward and visible. 2. Idolatry that is more secret and invisible.

Q. Who are guilty of the idolatry that is outward and visible?

A. 1. The pagans, who worship their idol-gods, their demons and deified heroes, the sun, the moon, the stars, the fire, several kinds of beasts, &c. 2. The papists, who worship other gods besides the true God; for they deify several things both in heaven and earth, to which they pay religious worship and homage.

Q. What are those other gods in heaven which the papists worship?

A. They worship angels, the virgin Mary, and saints departed.

Q. What are those other gods on earth which they worship?

A. They worship the pope, the bread in the sacrament, the sign of the cross, the images and relics of saints.

Q. How doth it appear that the papists give religious honour and worship to these things?

A. Both by their practice and by their books: for they build churches, erect altars, and institute holidays in honour of them; they burn incense, make and pay vows to them; they bow their knees, and pray to them; they seek blessings from them, and make them their hope and trust. As, for instance, they adore the wood of the cross, saying, O crux ave, spes unica, &c., that is, O holy cross, our only hope and trust, increase to, the godly their righteousness, and give unto sinners grace and remission of their sins.

Q. But why may we not worship saints and angels?

A. It is idolatry to worship creatures; for men to pray to them is to ascribe divine honours and perfections to them, as omniscience and omnipotence. God forbids this, as a giving of his glory to another; and tells us, that the saints in heaven do not know our wants; for proof of which, see Mat. iv. 10; Acts x. 25, 26; Rev. xix. 10; Isa. xlii. 8; lxiii. 16. And if it be idolatry to worship saints in heaven, far more is it to worship the bones, teeth, or relics of saints on earth, as papists do. To avoid this, God buried the body of Moses secretly, that none might worship his body.

Q. Is there not idolatry more secret and invisible, which others are guilty of, besides pagans and papists?

A. Yes; all carnal and unregenerated persons are guilty of it, by putting the creature in room of the Creator, loving it and depending on it more than God. For whatever thing it be that hath most of our love, or of our trust, or of our fear and dread, or hath most of our thoughts, or of our time and service, that is really our god; seeing it is put in God's room, and hath the honour and glory which is only due to him.

Q. What are those idols which men commonly set up in God's room?

A. 1. Self is the great idol which men generally adore, by seeking themselves in all they do; and this idol appears in many different shapes; as self-prophet, self-wisdom, self-righteousness, self-ability, self-ease, self-credit, and applause. 2. The world is the great clay idol which worldly men adore; hence covetous men are called idolaters, and covetousness idolatry. 3. The belly is the god of drunkards and gluttons, Phil. iii. 19. 4. Children and relations are the idols of many. 5. Great men or superiors are put in the room of God, when we trust in the arm of flesh, or make them lords of our faith and conscience. 6. The devil is called the God of this world, 2 Cor. iv. 4. So that we may hence see how sadly idolatry abounds, even among professed Protestants, who have renounced the Romish idolatry.

Q. In what respect is the devil called the God of this world?

A. Because he is put in the room of the true God by the most part of the world. Why? In the first place we read and hear of many of the Indians who directly worship him, and he appears to them in a bodily shape: besides, it is at his instigation that the infidel world run into all manner of wickedness. Again, how much is he adored, honoured, and served among professed Christians! By wretches, who enter into compact with the devil, and give up themselves to him; by those who consult with such wretched charmers, and those who use his spells and charms; by those who, in their common discourse, pray to the devil, bidding him take them, or their neighbours; and by those who hearken to the devil's temptations more than God's counsels.

Q. What is the fifth sin forbidden in the first commandment?

A. The giving of the glory which is due to God to another.

Q. Who are guilty of this sin?

A. Not only those who give divine worship to creatures, as above, but also those who ascribe events, not to God's providence, but to luck or chance, or to second causes only; and those who ascribe the praise of any good thing they receive, and their success in any business, to themselves and their own industry, to creatures, or to fortune; and likewise, those who have men's persons in too great admiration, they are chargeable with the sin of giving God's glory to others, 1 Sam. vi. 9; Deut. viii. 17; Dan. iv. 30; Heb. i. 16; Acts xii. 22, 23; Jude 16.

QUESTION XLVIII.

Q. What are we specially taught by these words (before me) in the first commandment?

A. These words (before me) in the first commandment, teach us, that God, who seeth all things, taketh notice of, and is much displeased with the sin of having any other god.

Q. What is the argument in this commandment to dissuade or restrain us from the sin of idolatry?

A. The consideration of God's omniscience, that the sin is committed before him, or in his sight, who exceedingly hates and abhors it.

Q. How doth it appear that God doth see all things?

A. In regard that he is present in all places, and infinite in knowledge, Psal. cxxxix. 7, 8, &c.; cxlvii. 5; Jer. xxiii. 24.

Q. What are these things which God sees?

A. He seeth all past things, all present things, all future things, and all possible things: he sees all his creatures, all their thoughts, all their words, and all their actions.

Q. Doth God take special notice of the sin of idolatry above others?—A. Yes.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. By the many tokens of displeasure which God hath evinced against it, both in threatening and punishing men for it, Deut. xxix. 24, 25, &c.

Q. Why is God so much displeased with the sin of idolatry?

A. Because God, who is jealous of his own glory, cannot but take it as a great indignity to see another put in his room, and set upon his throne, and that in his very sight and presence.

Q. Is not the attribute of God's omniscience much affronted by the world?

A. Yes; namely, by their idolatry, hypocrisy, and secret wickedness.

Q. Ought not God's omniscience to be a powerful check to all sins?—A. Yes.

QUESTION XLIX.

Q. Which is the second commandment?

A. The second commandment is, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me: and showing mercy to thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments."

QUESTION L.

Q. What is required in the second commandment?

A. The second commandment requireth the receiving, observing, and keeping pure and entire, all such religious worship and ordinances as God hath appointed in his word.

Q. Is the worship required, and idolatry forbidden in the second commandment, the same with that in the first commandment?

A. No; for the first command directs us as to the right object of worship, but the second command directs us as to the right way and means of worship: the first forbids the worshipping of any false god; the second forbids the worshipping of the true God in a false way, or by any means but what he himself appoints.

Q. Hath God appointed all that religious worship, and all these means and ordinances, in and by which only he will be served and worshipped?

A. Yes.

Q. Where do we find these?

A. In his word.

Q. What are these ordinances and means of divine worship appointed us?

A. 1. There is prayer in public, in private, and secret, Luke i. 10; Jer. x. 25; Mat. vi. 6. 2. There is thanksgiving and singing of psalms, Eph. v. 20; Isa. lii. 8; James v. 13. 3. There is the reading, preaching, and hearing of the word, Acts v. 21; x. 33; Tim. iv. 2. 4. The administration and partaking of the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper, Mat. xxviii. 19; 1 Cor. xi. 23, 24, &c. 5. There is fasting, Luke v. 35. 6. Swearing by the name of the Lord, when lawfully called, Deut. vi. 13. 7. Vowing to the Lord, Psal. lxxvi. 11. 8. Instructing of children and servants, Gen. x. 18, &c.

Q. What doth God require of us concerning all these ordinances?

A. That we should receive them, observe them, and keep them pure and entire.

Q. What is it to receive and observe them?

A. It is to approve them, attend upon them, and continue stedfastly in the practice of them.

Q. What is it to keep these ordinances pure and entire?

A. It is to use our best endeavours to preserve them free from all corruption, or mixture of human inventions; and to keep them so as nothing be added to them, nor taken away from them.

QUESTION LI.

Q. What is forbidden in the second commandment?

A. The second commandment forbiddeth the worshipping of God by images, or any other way not appointed in his word.

Q. What is the chief sin forbidden in this command?

A. Idolatry, or the worshipping of the true God by images.

Q. What do you mean by an image?

A. The picture, shape, or likeness of any creature in heaven, on earth, or in the sea.

Q. When is a person guilty of worshipping of God by images?

A. 1. When he frames or takes any material picture or similitude, and sets it before him in worship, as the papists do, who paint God the Father under the likeness of an old man; and Jesus Christ in the likeness of a young man, or of a lamb; and the Holy Ghost by the figure of a dove; which is plainly to "change the glory of God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts;" which the apostle condemns, Rom. i. 23. 2. A person is guilty of it, when he hath any carnal imagination or representation of God in his mind while worshipping him, as if he was like to a man, or any creature.

Q. May not an image or picture, to look upon in time of prayer, be some help to us in devotion, as papists say?

A. No; instead of a help, it is a great hinderance to it.

Q. How is it a hinderance?

A. In regard it promotes carnal and low thoughts of God, who is a glorious spirit, and infinitely exalted above all things visible or earthly. It is as great a dishonour and disparagement to the majesty of God, to represent him by the dead image of a creature, as it would be to represent a king by the picture of a frog.

Q. But, may we not have such images of God, or of the persons of the Trinity by us, if we do not worship them?

A. No; for it is an abomination which God expressly forbids, Deut. iv. 15, 16, "Take ye good heed to yourselves, (for ye saw no manner of similitude on the day that the Lord spake to you in Horeb out of the midst of the fire,) lest ye corrupt yourselves, and make you a graven image, the similitude of any figure," &c. And, further, it is impossible to frame an image of him that is infinite, spiritual, and invisible; and therefore he frequently asks the question, as in Isa. xl. 18, 25; xlii. 5, "To whom will ye liken God?" Surely no shape of any creature, no dead image, can be a fit representation of the living God.

Q. May we not have a picture of Jesus Christ, who is truly a man?

A. No; because, 1. His divine nature, which makes him to be God cannot be pictured at all. 2. He left no picture of his body when he left the earth, nor any account of his features, as it were on purpose to discourage any to draw his picture. 3. His body, as now glorified, cannot be represented by any artist whatsoever; so that the pictures now made of him must be greatly debasing of his glorious person. 4. If any such picture be designed to excite devotion, it is a breach of this command, which forbids all worshipping of God by images.

Q. Why do papists leave the second commandment out of their catechisms and public offices?

A. Because it so expressly condemns their images, crucifixes, and idolatrous practices.

Q. Will it free them from idolatry to say they only worship God or Christ before or by them, but not the images themselves?

A. No; for the commandment forbids even bowing or kneeling before them. And, if this shift could excuse the papists, it had also excused the Israelites in worshipping the golden calf; for they had it to say that they intended to worship Jehovah before the calf, Exod. xxxii. 4, 5.

Q. Is there any other sin forbidden in the second commandment besides idolatry, or the worshipping of God by images?

A. Yes; namely, the sin of superstition or will-worship

Q. What do you mean by that?

A. Men's presuming to worship God by means of their own devising, adding human inventions to God's institutions, or contriving other ways to serve and worship God than what he hath appointed or warranted in his word.

Q. Who are guilty of this sin?

A. All those who add new sacraments to the two of Christ's institution, or those who add the sign of the cross to baptism, the posture of kneeling to the Lord's supper, the keeping of holy days to the Lord's day, playing with organs to singing with the voice, reading of a book to prayer: or they who erect altars, pictures, or crosses, in places of worship, and bow unto them, or bow to the east, and at the name of Jesus, or the like. All these are superstitious inventions in God's worship, and human additions to God's institutions, without any warrant in his word, and therefore against the second commandment.

Q. Why may not wise, holy, and learned men, add some such things, for beautifying the worship of God?

A. 1. Because an infinitely holy and wise God, who hath an unquestionable right to appoint the means and manner of his own worship, hath expressly forbidden men to add any thing to the directions he hath given concerning the same, Deut. xii. 30—32. 2. He sharply censures all such additions, by calling them will-worship, and vain worship, and saying, they had only a show or pretence of wisdom in them, Col. ii. 23; Mat. xv. 9. Nay, he looks upon it as a presumptuous attempt to rival it with him, for men to add their own inventions to his institutions; and calls it a setting of their thresholds by his threshold, and their posts by his posts, Ezek. xliii. 8, and even saith it is a going a whoring with their inventions, Psal. cvi. 39.

Q. Why would God censure things which are so well designed for his glory, and beautifying his worship?

A. 1. Because he accounts it great pride and presumption in men to take upon them to mend the ordinances of God, as if they were wiser than he. 2. Instead of beautifying his worship thereby, they rather disfigure it; for God's worship is most beautiful in its own native simplicity and lustre: for to paint glass darkens its light, and to gild a diamond mars its sparkling rays. 3. It is only the presence and blessing of God that can make ordinances profitable to us; but God hath no where promised his blessing to men's inventions, but alienarily to his own institutions, Mat. xxviii. 20.

Q. Have not the Jews several significant ceremonies in their worship under the law?

A. Yes; but these were appointed by God's authority, as they were abolished again by it at Christ's coming, and a plain simple way of worship instituted under the gospel. And it is nowise likely that God would remove the ceremonies of his own institution, merely to make way for men's inventing others in their room.

Q. May not the church appoint some rites or ceremonies, for the sake of decency and order, by virtue of that command, 1 Cor. xiv. 40.

A. The text doth not warrant the church to add new parts to the worship of God, as significant ceremonies would be, but only to keep and observe the ordinances as God hath delivered them to us, with decency and order ; and take care that there be no indecency or disorder in the worship of God ; namely as to the circumstances of time and place, and the like, which the command of God, appointing the worship itself, doth virtually include, seeing without such circumstances it cannot be performed.

Q. Is there any other sin forbidden by the second commandment ?

A. Yes ; such as the countenancing, approving, or promoting of any false religion or superstitious worship ; the neglecting, contemning, hindering, or opposing of the true worship of God, or any of his ordinances ; the reproaching or persecuting those who worship God according to his word.

QUESTION LII.

Q. What are the reasons annexed to the second commandment ?

A. The reasons annexed to the second commandment are God's sovereignty over us, his propriety in us, and the zeal he hath to his own worship.

Q. What mean you by a reason annexed to a commandment ?

A. An argument joined to it, to enforce the keeping of it.

Q. How many such reasons are annexed to this commandment ?

A. Three : 1. God's sovereignty over us. 2. God's propriety in us. 3. God's zeal for his own worship.

Q. What mean you by God's sovereignty over us ?

A. His absolute power and authority over us, so that he may do with us as he pleaseth.

Q. In what words of the commandment is this reason contained ?

A. In these, " I the Lord."

Q. What do these words import ?

A. That he is the sovereign Lord over us, and has a right to make what laws he pleases about his own worship ; and that we, as God's subjects, are bound to observe the laws, and to worship him no other way.

Q. In what words is the second reason contained ?

A. In these words, " Thy God," I the Lord thy God.

Q. What do these words import ?

A. That God has a propriety or special interest in us, we belong to him by creation, redemption, or profession ; and therefore we ought to keep close to our God and his institutions, and beware of idolatry and superstition in worship, which tend to estrange the heart from God, Psal. cvi. 19, 21.

Q. In what words of the commandment is the third reason contained ?

A. In these : " I am a jealous God."

Q. What do these words import ?

A. That God hath a great jealousy, zeal, or tender concern, for his own worship, and is highly displeased with those who corrupt it, by bringing men's inventions into it, Exod. xxxiv. 14 ; Psal. cvi. 29.

Q. Wherein doth God show his zeal and jealousy for his own worship ?

A. In threatening to punish them as haters of God, who break this commandment, to the third and fourth generation : and in showing mercy to thousands of them that love him, and keep his law.

Q. Is it just with God to punish children for the sins of the parents ?

A. Yes, if the children go on in their parents' sins ; but if they forsake them, God will not punish them for them, Ezek. xviii. 14.

Q. Doth not God esteem any persons as lovers of him, but such as keep his commandments ?

A. No, John xiv. 21.

Q. Do not all these reasons oblige us to the greatest caution that we do not alter nor add to divine ordinances and institutions of worship ?

A. Yes.

Q. Have those who suffer for non-conformity to such additions, sufficient warrant for their sufferings ?

A. Yes ; as it is evident from Deut. xii. 32, compared with Deut. iv. 2, " Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you."

QUESTION LIII.

Q. What is the third commandment ?

A. The third commandment is, " Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain : for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

QUESTION LIV.

Q. What is required in the third commandment ?

A. The third commandment requireth the holy and reverend use of God's names, titles, attributes, ordinances, word, and works.

Q. In what manner must we use God's name ?

A. In a holy and reverend manner ; that is, with a humble and awful regard to God's infinite greatness and excellencies.

Q. What is meant by the name of God here ?

A. Any thing that is commonly ascribed to God, and by which God makes himself known to us, as a man is known to us by his name.

Q. What are those things whereby God makes himself known to us ?

A. They are six ; to wit, God's names, his titles, his attributes, his ordinances, his word, and his works.

Q. What are the names we must reverently use ?

A. They are such as Jehovah, Lord, God, Jah, I Am, the Father, the Son, Jesus Christ, the Holy Ghost, the Spirit.

A. What are the titles of God which we must use with reverence?

A. They are his usual designations taken from some of his peculiar excellencies; such as, the Lord of hosts, King of kings, Lord of lords, Father of lights, Holy One of Israel, Creator of the ends of the earth, Preserver of men, and the like.

Q. What are the attributes of God which we use reverently?

A. The essential perfections, whereby his nature is described to us, and he is distinguished from all his creatures, such as Omnipotence, Omnipresence, Eternity, Immutability, Infinite Wisdom, Infinite Holiness, Goodness, Faithfulness, Mercy, &c.

Q. Why are these called God's attributes?

A. Because God claims them to himself, exclusively of all others.

Q. What are the ordinances of God, which we must use reverently?

A. The sacraments, prayer, praise, preaching, oaths, vows, lots, &c.

Q. What is meant by God's word in the answer?

A. Not his essential word, but his written word, or the Bible.

Q. What is meant by God's works?

A. The works of Creation, of Providence, and of Redemption.

Q. When may it be said that the names, titles, and attributes of God are used by us in a holy and reverent manner?

A. When we entertain awful, admiring, and loving thoughts of them in our hearts, and mention them with gravity, respect, and tenderness, with our lips.

Q. When do we make use of God's ordinances in a holy and reverent manner?

A. When we make conscience of attending upon them, seek to have a humble reverential frame of heart in all our approaches to God, and earnestly desire communion with God in every ordinance of his.

Q. When do we use God's word in a holy and reverent way?

A. When we read it with seriousness, attend to the majesty of God as speaking therein to us, and endeavour to yield present obedience to his holy will, when revealed to us.

Q. When do we use God's works in a holy and reverent way?

A. When we contemplate God's glory in his works of creation, and have an awful regard to his dispensations of providence, submitting patiently to his corrections for sin, and praising him for all his mercies, and especially for Jesus Christ, our Saviour.

QUESTION LV.

Q. What is forbidden in the third commandment?

A. The third commandment forbiddeth all profaning or abusing of any thing whereby God maketh himself known.

Q. When do we take God's name in vain?

A. When we use it irreverently, superstitiously, or profanely; or when we abuse any thing whereby he makes himself known to us; such as his names, titles, attributes, ordinances, &c.

Q. How is it that people are guilty of profaning or abusing of God's names, titles, or attributes?

A. Many ways; as, 1. By swearing falsely when called to it by a judge. 2. By cursing or swearing profanely in common discourse. 3. By blasphemy, or speaking reproachfully of God. 4. By using the name of God in charms. 5. By offering prayers or praises to God with formal or careless minds. 6. By using God's name irreverently in common discourse, crying, without any awe, "O Lord, O God, God help me, bless me," or the like. 7. By repeating the oaths of others without concern for him. 8. By rash appeals to God, &c.

Q. Is it lawful to swear by the name of God when called to it by authority?

A. Yes, if what we swear be right and true, and if we have an awful sense of God upon our hearts when we do it, Deut. vi. 13; Heb. vi. 16.

Q. Is it lawful for a man to swear by his soul, conscience, faith, or the like?

A. No; for these being creatures, to swear by them is idolatry, or a putting of them in God's room, by giving them the worship and attributes which belong to him.

Q. What is the evil or sin of profane swearing and cursing?

A. 1. It is against God's command, both here and in other texts, as Mat. v. 34; Rom. xii. 14. 2. It is a rash way of appealing to the great Judge of heaven upon every trifling occasion, which God doth look on as a horrid baffling of his name. 3. It is a sad evidence of a graceless and profane heart: hence the Lord makes it a distinguishing character of the wicked and the righteous, Eccl. ix. 2, "He that sweareth, and he that feareth an oath."

Q. Doth God look upon profane swearers as his enemies?

A. Yes; as in Psal. cxxxix. 20, "Thine enemies take thy name in vain."

Q. What is the danger of profane or false swearing?

A. The Lord will deal with swearers as his enemies, by sending his curse into their houses, Zech. v. 3, 4, and pursuing them with his judgments both here and hereafter; for, with an awful voice from mount Sinai, hath he declared, "The Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

Q. When are people guilty of profaning or abusing God's ordinances?

A. 1. When they attend them hypocritically, or with dead and wandering hearts. 2. When they behave irreverently or indecently in the time of them, by talking, laughing, or sleeping.

Q. May lots be used in plays and games, as cards or dice?

A. No; for lots being an appeal to God for deciding things, which cannot otherwise be determined, ought to be gone about with reverence, Prov. xvi. 33; xviii. 18; Acts i. 26.

Q. How do men profane or abuse God's word?

A. By profane jesting upon it, or by perverting it to support error or sinful practices.

Q. How do men profane or abuse God's works?

A. By despising God's workmanship, by using his creatures in excess to the pampering of their lusts, by impatience under affliction, and unthankfulness for mercies.

QUESTION LVI.

Q. What is the reason annexed to the third commandment?

A. The reason annexed to the third commandment is, that however the breakers of this commandment may escape punishment from men, yet the Lord our God will not suffer them to escape his righteous judgment.

Q. What is the argument for enforcing this commandment?

A. It is contained in that dreadful threatening, "For the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

Q. What is the import of that threatening?

A. It imports, that though men should suffer swearers and such profane persons to pass, God will not let them escape without punishment, if they do not repent.

Q. How come the breakers of this commandment to pass without punishment from men?

A. Partly because human laws cannot extend to all profanations of God's name, and partly because many of those who should execute the laws against the profaners of God's name, are either guilty of the same or like sins themselves, or they are little concerned for God's glory.

Q. Though men let them pass, will God let them go unpunished?

A. No; for though he do not always punish them in this life with remarkable strokes, yet he will do it in his own time: for he says, "He will not hold them guiltless."

Q. Will he keep an exact account of the sins of the breakers of this commandment?

A. Yes; for he is much concerned for the glory of his name.

Q. When is it that God doth punish the breakers of this commandment?

A. Sometimes he inflicts judgment upon them in this life, according to Deut. xxviii. 58, 59; Zech. v. 3, 4; and these plagues are sometimes outward, and sometimes inward. But however they may escape temporal judgments, there are eternal judgments abiding them, which they cannot escape, Rom. ii. 3—6.

Q. Is it not great folly to venture to break God's law, because of his patience in forbearing to execute his judgments presently against sinners?

A. Yes.

QUESTION LVII.

Q. Which is the fourth commandment?

A. The fourth commandment is, "Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy: Six days shalt thou labour and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the seventh day, and hallowed it."

QUESTION LVIII.

Q. What is required in the fourth commandment?

A. The fourth commandment requireth the keeping holy to God such set times as he hath appointed in his word, expressly one whole day in seven, to be a holy Sabbath to himself.

Q. What do you mean by a Sabbath-day?

A. A day of holy rest, wherein men are to cease from worldly business, to attend upon the worship of God.

Q. How often is this day for the Sabbath to recur?

A. It is to be every seventh day, or still one day after six days' labour.

Q. Is this fourth commandment ceremonial and temporary, binding only on the Jews before Christ's coming?

A. No; it is a commandment moral and perpetual, binding upon all men, Jews and Gentiles, to the end of the world.

Q. How do you prove the morality and perpetuity of this commandment?

A. 1. From its being first appointed in paradise. 2. From its being written by the finger of God upon stone, and put into the ark with the other nine commandments, which was not done with any ceremonial precept. 3. The reasons and arguments made use of to enforce this commandment are moral and perpetual. 4. The Gentiles and strangers, who were not under the ceremonial law, were bound to keep the Sabbath as well as the Jews, Isa. lvi. 4, 6. 5. Both the Old Testament prophets, and Jesus Christ, speak of the keeping of the Sabbath as a duty in force under New Testament times, when the ceremonial law was to be abolished, Isa. lvi. 1, 2; Mat. xxiv. 20. 6. The consciences of men still challenge them most severely for breaking of this commandment, and God still pursues the breakers of it with his judgments.

Q. Whether is the fourth commandment authorised by the light of nature and sound reason, as the other nine are, or only by express revelation, and a positive law?

A. It is authorised by both. For the light of nature doth require that a due part of our time be allotted for the public worship of God, which should frequently recur; and that this time should be the same over all, that so one man's business may not interfere with another man's devotions. Now, the Author of nature, who best knows what portion of time is most suitable to the exigencies both of our bodies and souls, our present and future state, hath, by express revelation, wisely determined it to be the seventh part of our time.

Q. Doth not God show special regard to this commandment, by putting several marks of honour and respect upon it above the rest?

A. Yes: For, 1. As it is placed in the first table, so it is larger, and enforced with more arguments than any of the rest. 2. It is delivered both positively and negatively, (which no other of the ten is:) for it is not only said, "Keep holy the Sabbath," but also, "In it thou shalt do no manner of work." 3. It hath a solemn memento prefixed to it, which the rest have not, "Remember to keep holy the Sabbath;" q. d. See that ye remember this command; forget what you will, forget not this. 4. It is placed in the midst of the decalogue, as the heart in the body, for enlivening the several parts of it; it is set in the close of the first table, and immediately before the second, to show that the keeping of both tables greatly depends upon the observing of this commandment.

Q. For what special ends hath God appointed a Sabbath?

A. 1. For his own glory, and for the conversion of sinners to himself, by the preaching of the word on that day. 2. For promoting spirituality and heavenly-mindedness in us. He well knew that carnal things would be apt to dull our affections, and make us forget God and heaven; and therefore he thought fit to recall us every week from sensual objects to think on divine things, in enjoining us to keep the Sabbath, which is a lively emblem of heaven, where the saints continually adore, praise, and enjoy communion with God, without any mixture of worldly business.

Q. How much of the day appointed for the Sabbath is to be kept holy to the Lord?

A. One whole day in seven; a whole natural day, consisting of twenty-four hours, commencing from midnight to midnight, ought to be dedicated unto the Lord, seeing he claims a seventh part of our time. It is true, time for eating and sleeping must be allowed upon the Sabbath, as well as on other days, being the works of necessity, seeing without these we cannot perform the duties of the Sabbath.

Q. Is it not sinful for men to encroach upon this day for their own work?

A. Yes; as it was sinful in Ananias and Sapphira to halve their dedicated goods, and give but a part to the Lord; so it is in us to halve it with God in respect of his holy day.

Q. Should not every day be a Sabbath to a Christian?

A. Though Christians should serve God every day, yet they cannot make every day a Sabbath for the public worship of God; because God calls us to other duties relating to secular affairs, which are inconsistent with the work of the Sabbath. And though we are bound to be holy and religious at all times, yet we are enjoined to express our religion, in outward acts of worship, more at some times than others.

Q. To whom is the fourth commandment, and the charge of keeping the Sabbath holy, more especially directed?

A. To masters of families, and other superiors, as the commandment itself bears, under which surely magistrates are included; for these words, "within thy gates," may be understood of the magistrate's dominions, and particularly of city-gates, and those who dwell within them, Neh. xiii. 15, 19; Jer. xvii. 24, 25, &c.

Q. Why is this commandment more especially directed to them?

A. Because God would have them not only to keep it themselves, but to oversee the keeping of it by all that are under their authority, as Nehemiah did, Neh. xiii. 15, 16.

Q. Why doth the Lord prefix the word remember, to this commandment?

A. 1. To testify his special regard unto it, as being a fence to the other commandments, and a help to the keeping of them all. 2. Because he foresaw that Satan and his instruments would seek to extinguish the memory of the Sabbath, if they could; and men of themselves would be ready to forget the duties of it, seeing nature's light doth not enforce them so strongly as some others. 3. Because he would have us much to think upon his works of creation and redemption, the compend of all religion, which this commandment brings to our view. 4. Because he would have us to remember the Sabbath before it come, so as to prepare ourselves for the keeping of it when it doth come.

Q. What reason is there for preparing for the Sabbath beforehand?

A. 1. Because we are naturally carnal and unfit for spiritual work; and, being involved in worldly business through the week, some previous care is needful to abstract our thoughts from earthly things, in order to fit us for Sabbath employments and enjoyments. 2. Because God calls us to make near and solemn approaches to him, who is infinitely holy, in the ordinances of the Sabbath; and this requires preparation, according to the psalmist's example, Psal. xxvi. 6. "I will wash mine hands in innocency: so will I compass thine altar, O Lord." 3. It was the practice of God's ancient people to prepare for the Sabbath upon the foregoing day, which therefore was called the day of preparation, Luke xxiii. 54.

Q. What ought we to do by way of preparation for the Sabbath before it come?

A. 1. Let us remember the great end and design of the Sabbath, so as to instruct those committed to our charge about it; and to break off from worldly business, so as we may have time to think of the work of the approaching day; and to get the guilt of the bygone week removed, that we may have a reconciled God to meet with upon his own day. 2. Let us order all our worldly affairs beforehand, with such prudence and foresight, that the business of the Sabbath may not be interrupted thereby.

Q. Hath God appointed any other set times to be kept holy to the Lord besides the Sabbath?

A. None but the Jewish festivals or ceremonial Sabbaths, which being only shadows of things to come, they expired with Christ's coming; but the command for the weekly Sabbath being moral, it continues still in force, Col. ii. 16, 17; Gal. iv. 9—11; 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 2.

Q. Are we bound to keep the holidays observed by others, such as days for Christ's birth, passion, and ascension: days dedicated to angels, as Michaelmas; to the Virgin Mary, as Candlemas; besides many others dedicated to the apostles and other saints?

A. Though it be pretended that these days serve to promote piety and devotion, yet we have no warrant from God to observe any of them; nay, it appears to be unlawful to do it: for, 1. God doth quarrel men for using any device of their own for promoting his service or worship, without having his command or warrant for it, as in Deut. xii. 32; Isa. i. 12; Jer. vii. 30. 2. The apostle Paul expressly condemns the Galatians for observing such holidays, Gal. iv. 10,

11. 3. It is a disparaging of the Lord's day which God hath appointed, and an usurping of his legislative power, for men to set days of their appointing on a level with his day, as the institutors do, by hindering people to labour thereupon. 4. It is an idolatrous practice to consecrate days to the honour of saints and angels, for commemorating their acts, and publishing their praise; such honour and worship being due to God alone.

Q. Were not these days appointed by the ancient church, and authorised by great and holy men?

A. It was will-worship in them, seeing they had no power to institute holy days: for, 1. Under the law, when ceremonies and festivals were in use, the church appointed none of them, but God himself. 2. We read nothing of the apostles appointing or observing such holidays; not a word of their consecrating a day for Christ's birth, his passion, or his ascension; nor a day to Stephen the proto-martyr, nor to James, whom Herod killed with the sword. We read of the apostles observing the Lord's day and keeping it holy, but not of any other. 3. Those other days are left unrecorded and uncertain, and so are concealed, like the body of Moses, that men might not be tempted to abuse them to superstition. 4. Those days have not the divine blessing upon them; for they are the occasions of much looseness and immorality. 5. Though the observing of these days had been indifferent or lawful at first, yet the defiling of them with superstition and intemperance should make all forbear them.

Q. May not the church appoint days for fasting and thanksgiving?

A. Yes; if there be just occasion for them; and the church is warranted so to do, both by scripture-precepts and examples, Joel i. 14; ii. 15; Ezra viii. 21; Neh. xii. 27, &c.; Dan. ix. 3. And that such days are to be continued in gospel-times, is plain from Zech. xii. 11, 12, &c.; Mat. ix. 15; Acts xiii. 2, 3; xiv. 23; 1 Cor. viii. 5; 2 Cor. xi. 27. Moreover, it is God who, by his providence, calls us to fasting or thanksgiving; the church only names the days convenient for these purposes.

QUESTION LIX.

Q. Which day of the seven hath God appointed to be the weekly Sabbath?

A. From the beginning of the world to the resurrection of Christ, God appointed the seventh day of the week to be the weekly Sabbath, and the first day of the week ever since, to continue to the end of the world, which is the Christian Sabbath.

Q. Was the Sabbath ever changed from one day of the week to another?

A. Yes, it was changed from the last day of the week to the first.

Q. How long was the seventh or last day of the week observed for the Sabbath?

A. From the beginning of the world to the resurrection of Christ, which was about four thousand years.

Q. If the fourth commandment be moral, how could the day appointed in it for the Sabbath be ever altered?

A. The precise day of the week is an alterable circumstance, and separable from the essence of the fourth command; and the changing of it makes no more against the morality of the fourth commandment, than the change of the means of worship under the gospel makes against the morality of the second.

Q. How doth it appear that the precise day of the week is separable from the substance of the commandment?

A. Because neither the first part of the commandment, which is the mandatory, nor the last part of it, which is the benedictory, mention the seventh day of the week: for the one saith, "Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy," and the other, "Wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath-day, and hallowed it," he saith not, "Remember the seventh day, nor that he blessed the seventh day," but only the Sabbath; to teach us, that the seventh day in order from the creation is not of the essence of the commandment, but only a seventh day in number: and that the seventh, in order, might be altered, without infringing the morality of the commandment.

Q. Wherefore did God at first appoint the seventh in order from the creation for the Sabbath?

A. Because it was the day of God's rest from his works of creation; and therefore God would have men to rest from their works on this day, and to remember his works.

Q. When did God institute the Sabbath at first?

A. Immediately after the creation of the world, when Adam was in paradise, Gen. ii. 3.

Q. What need had Adam of a Sabbath, while in that sinless place and state?

A. Because Adam, though sinless, was but a finite creature, and his ordinary employment of dressing the garden would be some interruption to the solemn worship of God; wherefore God thought fit to appoint him a day in seven, wherein he might have uninterrupted freedom for it.

Q. By what authority was the day for the Sabbath changed?

A. By the same authority which instituted the Sabbath at first, even Christ's, who is true God and Lord of the Sabbath: for whether Christ did it immediately by himself, or directed his apostles to do it, it is all one. But it is evident that the apostles both observed the first day of the week, and gave directions about it, which they would not have done without instructions from their Lord.

Q. What was the necessity of a new day for the Sabbath?

A. 1. To manifest the greatness and glory of Christ, and his headship over the Church. 2. He would bury the seventh day Sabbath, to show that therewith he was to abrogate and bury the Levitical worship and ceremonies which were practised on that day.

Q. Why was the change made to the first day of the week?

A. Because on this day the Lord did rest from his work of redemption, which was greater than that of creation. When God gave the ten commandments, creation was his greatest work, but now he having wrought a greater, it was fit the one should cede to the other. The amazing work of redemption, wherein God had so wonderfully displayed his glorious perfections, being now finished, it was necessary that the day of God's resting from it should be kept in everlasting remembrance. Of all days the first day of the week was the most honourable to our Redeemer, and the most joyful to the redeemed: for this day Christ was born from the dead, and declared to be the Son of God with power: this day our glorious Surety was discharged of all our debt, was liberated from prison, and triumphed over all his and our enemies.

Q. Have we an express command for keeping the Sabbath on this day?

A. No; though yet we have good warrant from scripture for doing it. The fourth commandment expressly obligeth us to observe one day of seven as a sabbath, and the example of Christ and his apostles, in keeping the first day of the week, being universally evident to the whole church, was sufficient to enter them upon the uniform observation of it: and accordingly it hath been the uninterrupted practice of all the churches of Christ through the world, since the apostles' days, to keep the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath.

Q. What grounds have we from scripture for keeping the first day of the week?

A. 1. We are told this was Christ's resurrection day. 2. We have Christ's own example in meeting frequently with his disciples on this day for religious work; on this day he met with his two disciples going to Emmaus, and opened the scriptures to them; on this day he came to the eleven, showed them his hands and feet, and opened their understandings; on this day he came and blessed them, and gave them the Holy Ghost; on this day he met with them, and graciously convinced Thomas; as we may see in Luke xxiv. 15, 27, 36, 40, 45; John xx. 19, 22, 26, 27. 3. Upon this day, being pentecost, God sent down that extraordinary effusion of the Holy Ghost upon the apostles and brethren being met together, Acts ii. 1, &c. 4. Upon this day the disciples usually met for divine worship, for preaching and hearing the word, and celebrating the Lord's supper, Acts xx. 7. 5. Upon this first day of the week the apostles ordered their collections to be made for the poor, because of their public assemblies on it, 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 2. 6. As Christ hath put his name upon the sacrament of the supper, calling it the Lord's supper, because it derives its institution from him; so upon the same account he hath put his name upon the first day of the week, calling it the Lord's day, Rev. i. 10.

Q. Doth the fourth commandment transfer all the honour and dignity of the seventh day upon the first day of the week?

A. Yes; because God on this day rested from a far greater work than that of creation, (mentioned only in the fourth commandment, because then it was the greatest) and which now by all men ought to be remembered with more thankfulness and praise than it.

QUESTION LX.

Q. How is the Sabbath to be sanctified?

A. The Sabbath is to be sanctified, by a holy resting all that day, even from such worldly employments and recreations as are lawful on other days, and spending the whole time in the public and private exercises of God's worship, except so much as is to be taken up about the works of necessity and mercy.

Q. In what sense is God said to sanctify the Sabbath or hallow it?

A. By consecrating or setting it apart to holy uses and employments.

Q. In what sense is man said to sanctify the Sabbath?

A. By keeping it holy to God, or applying it to those holy ends and exercises for which God hath set it apart.

Q. What is the holy rest which is required upon the Sabbath?

A. It is a total cessation from worldly enjoyments and recreations.

Q. Why must we abstain from these upon the Sabbath?

A. Because God hath forbidden them, and because they would prove a hindrance to his worship and service upon it.

Q. How long must we abstain from our enjoyments and recreations?

A. Through the whole Sabbath day.

Q. May we not use some recreations after public worship is over, such as walking in the fields, or the like?

A. No; 1. Because the whole day is the Lord's, and ought to be kept holy to him; and it is sacrilege to alienate any part of what is the Lord's to our own use or pleasure. 2. We are expressly prohibited to find our own pleasure upon God's holy day, Isa. lviii. 13.

Q. Why are worldly recreations or diversions forbidden on this day?

A. Because they hinder the spiritual work of the Sabbath, and indispose the mind more for spiritual exercises than men's ordinary employments would do.

Q. Is there no kind of work or business of ours lawful on the Sabbath-day?

A. No; except it be the works of necessity and mercy.

Q. What are those works of necessity which are lawful on the Sabbath?

A. They are such actions as could not be prevented by our previous care, nor safely delayed till afterwards; as the defending ourselves against enemies, or fleeing from them; quenching fire, putting on clothes, and the like.

Q. What are the works of mercy lawful on the Sabbath?

A. Actions for preserving life; such as the feeding of our bodies, and of our beasts, relieving them when in distress, attending and visiting the sick, collecting for the poor, and the like.

Q. How ought we to manage in doing works of necessity this day, so as not to offend?

A. We must have no active hand in bringing them on, nor any secret complacency in their falling out; we must study to keep our hearts in a spiritual frame while doing them, and dispatch them as soon as possible, that we may return to the main work of the Sabbath.

Q. What is the frame of spirit proper for us on the Lord's day?

A. It is a holy spiritual frame of heart, such as John speaks of, Rev. i. 10, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day."

Q. What is imported in that expression, "I was in the Spirit?"

A. It imports to have our thoughts abstracted from earthly things, and to lay our souls open to the influences of God's Spirit, and to depend upon his assistance in all the duties of the day. It is to have the graces of the Spirit in exercise, and to have spiritual ends in all our Sabbath exercises, not to be seen of men, but to glorify God, and enjoy communion with him.

Q. What are the holy duties which are the proper work of the Sabbath?

A. The public, private, and secret exercises of God's worship.

Q. What are the public exercises requisite?

A. The joining in prayers and praises with the assemblies of God's people, the hearing of the word read and preached, and partaking of the sacraments.

Q. What are the private exercises required on this day?

A. It is necessary for families to join together this day in the worship of God, by reading his word, singing his praise, and calling upon his name; and to spend some time in catechising of children or servants, repeating the sermons, or Christian conference.

Q. Are all masters of families bound to worship God with their families?

A. Yes.

Q. How do you prove that?

A. 1. From the fourth commandment, that enjoins every head of a family, with all that are within his gates, be they his children, his servants, or strangers, to keep holy the Sabbath day, which must be by worshipping of God, as well as resting from labour; otherwise he would keep it no better than the beasts; and this worship is not to be restricted to what is public only; for the commandment is still binding upon masters of families, though no public worship could be had; they must sanctify the Sabbath in their dwellings, Lev. xxiii. 3. 2. Masters of families are bound to rule their families as ministers do the Church, which partly is by going before them in the worship of God, 1 Tim. iii. 4, 5. 3. We are enjoined to pray every where, and with all manner of prayer, and consequently with family prayer, 1 Tim. ii. 8; Eph. vi. 18. 4. Upon the Lord's returning to his people, he promises to pour out a spirit of grace and supplication upon families, so as every family shall mourn apart, Zech. xii. 10, 12, 13. 5. Wrath hangs over the families who call not upon God, Jer. x. 25. Lastly. Family worship is powerfully recommended by the examples of Christ and the saints, as Abraham, Joshua, David, Daniel, and Cornelius, Mat. xxvi. 30; Luke ix. 18; Gen. xii. 8; xiii. 4; xxi. 23; Jos. iv. 15; 2 Sam. vi. 20; Psal. ci. 2; Dan. vi. 10; Acts x. 2.

Q. What are the secret duties requisite on the Lord's day?

A. Secret prayer, reading the Scriptures, and other pious books, meditations upon divine subjects, and self-examination.

Q. What should we pray for upon the morning of the Lord's day?

A. For suitable spiritual frames for the work of the day; for the Lord's gracious presence to be with ministers and hearers; and particularly that he may give us the assistance of his Holy Spirit in all the duties of the day; that he may give us attention to hearken, understanding to conceive, wisdom to apply, judgment to discern, faith to believe, memory to retain, and grace to practise what we are to hear, that so the word may prove to us the savour of life unto life, and not the savour of death unto death.

Q. What should we pray for in the Sabbath evening?

A. For pardon of all our short-comings in our Sabbath performances, for the sake of Christ's atoning blood: at which times we should confess and bewail our earthliness, formality, wanderings, wearings, and bye-ends in duty; our dark understandings, hard hearts, cold affections, and treacherous memories: and also we should bless God for the Sabbath, and the joyful sound that we hear therein; and pray that our Sabbath-day's frame may last in some measure through the week, that we may walk with God, and live still in the view of the everlasting Sabbath above.

Q. Is the happiness of heaven like the keeping of a Sabbath?

A. Yes, it is called so, Heb. iv. 9. The word rest is in the original a sabbatism, or the keeping of a Sabbath; and so it is in these respects: 1. As the Sabbath is a rest from the toil of the week, so heaven is a rest from the toil which the saints had here with an ill heart and an ill world. 2. As the Sabbath is a day of thankful remembrance of Christ's finishing the work of our redemption, so in heaven they will be always commemorating Christ's mighty acts, and offering eternal thanksgiving and praise for redeeming love. 3. As the Sabbath is a day of holy convocation, so in heaven there is a glorious gathering of all the saints in one body. 4. As the Sabbath is a day of communion with God in ordinances, so in heaven there is an eternal communion with God in an immediate way.

Q. Wherein will the Sabbath above excel the Sabbath below?

A. 1. The saints' hearts will never be out of frame for keeping the heavenly Sabbath, as they are often here. 2. There will be no mixture of mourning with their songs of praise, as here. 3. Their Sabbath-work will never be interrupted through the necessities of the body, by sleeping, clothing, eating, as here. 4. The Sabbath above hath no night to succeed it, nor week-day to come after it; yet none there shall ever say, "What a weariness is it!" as many do here.

QUESTION LXI.

Q. What is forbidden in the fourth commandment?

A. The fourth commandment forbiddeth the omission or careless performance of the duties required, and the profaning the day by idleness, or doing that which is in itself sinful, or by unnecessary thoughts, words, or works, about our worldly employments and recreations.

Q. What are the evils forbidden in this commandment?

A. They are three, namely, the omission of the duties required by it, the careless performing of these duties, and all profaning of this holy day, which may be done several ways, as in the answer.

Q. What mean you by the omission of the duties required?

A. The neglect of the duties enjoined upon this day, either by forsaking the public assemblies of God's people, or by neglecting the worship of God in our families, or in secret.

Q. Are sins of omission great sins?

A. Yes; for by them God's authority is slighted, and conscience wounded: and hence some eminently pious have been made to cry out on a death-bed, "Lord, forgive me my sins of omission."

Q. What is the evil of neglecting to attend upon public ordinances upon the Sabbath?

A. 1. It is a denying God that public homage and service which he hath a just title to from all men, Isa. lxvi. 23. "From one Sabbath to another shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." 2. It is a despising the ordinary means which God hath appointed for converting of souls, weakening of corruptions, and strengthening of grace. 3. The damned will bewail the neglecting of such opportunities to all eternity.

Q. Is it a sufficient excuse for such neglect, for persons to say they were taking physic or letting blood on this day, or they wanted such apparel, or the day was cold, or stormy, or the like?

A. The excuses of persons for neglecting God's ordinances, which would not detain them from a gainful worldly market, will not be sustained at God's bar.

Q. What mean you by the careless performances of the duties of the Sabbath, here forbidden?

A. When people attend ordinances without any care or delight, or in a formal, dead, wandering, weary, or drowsy manner.

Q. Is not the Sabbath otherwise profaned than by sins of omission, or the careless performance of duty?

A. Yes, by manifold sins of commission, sins both of the heart and of the life.

Q. What are the sins of the heart, whereby the Sabbath is profaned?

A. They are many; such as atheism, or unbelief of God's truths preached to us on this day, ignorance of these truths, aversion to the duties of the Sabbath, hypocrisy and formality in these duties, wearying of them, drowsiness or sleeping in time of them, thinking upon worldly things, prejudice at Christ's truths, and those who publish them, undervaluing of gospel news, and slighting the offers of precious Christ made to us.

Q. What are the sins of the life or outward man, by which the Sabbath is profaned?

A. There are many of them; such as, 1. Speaking our own words upon this day, or talking of worldly affairs. 2. Doing our own works, to wit, pieces of servile work, which might either have been done the day before, or delayed until the day after. 3. Finding our own pleasures, by using worldly diversions or recreations upon the Lord's day; all which are expressly forbidden, Isa. lviii. 13. (See before, p. 673.) 4. Doing things on this day which are in themselves sinful, whereby sin is greatly aggravated; which persons are guilty of, when, instead of attending upon God's worship upon the Sabbath, they spend this holy day in drinking, swearing, unclean practices, jesting upon sacred things, or reproaching the serious worshippers of God.

QUESTION LXII.

Q. What are the reasons annexed to the fourth commandment?

A. The reasons annexed to the fourth commandment are, God's allowing us six days of the week for our own employments, his challenging a special propriety in the seventh, his own example, and his blessing the Sabbath day.

Q. What is the first reason for enforcing this commandment?

A. The first is taken from the great goodness and condescension of God, in allowing us six days of seven for our own affairs, and reserving but one of them for himself; when he might have taken six, and left us but one.

Q. In what words of the commandment is this reason contained?

A. In these words, "Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work."

Q. What is the second reason for enforcing this commandment?

A. It is taken from God's right and title to the seventh day of our time; he challengeth a special propriety in it.

Q. In what words of the commandment do we find this reason?

A. In these words, "But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God."

Q. But are not all the days of the week the Lord's?

A. Yes; but he hath a peculiar interest in the seventh above the rest, as having sanctified and set it apart from common use, for his own worship and service.

Q. Would it not be a high degree of sacrilege to rob God of his own day, or any part of it, seeing he claims it as his own?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the third reason for enforcing this commandment?

A. God's example, in resting from his works of creation upon the seventh day, which should prevail with us to imitate him, by keeping every seventh day as a holy rest after six days labour.

Q. In what words of the commandment is this reason contained?

A. In these: "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day."

Q. How can it be said that God rested then from creating, seeing he still creates men's souls, and daily produceth multitudes of creatures?

A. The meaning is, that God rested from creating any new species or kinds of creatures after the first six days, but not new individuals.

Q. What is the fourth reason for keeping this commandment?

A. God's blessing the Sabbath day, in these words: "Wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."

Q. What is the import of these words?

A. That God hath not only sanctified this day for his service, but he hath ordained the Sabbath to be a means and time for conveying blessings to those that keep it; and we may hope for a blessing from God, if we duly wait on him this day in his ordinances.

QUESTION LXIII.

Q. What is the fifth commandment?

A. The fifth commandment is, "Honour thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

QUESTION LXIV.

Q. What is required in the fifth commandment?

A. The fifth commandment requireth the preserving the honour and performing the duties belonging to every one in their several places and relations, as superiors, inferiors, or equals.

Q. Who are meant by father or mother in the fifth commandment?

A. Not only our natural parents, but all our superiors: for these also get the title of fathers and mothers in scripture: kings and queens are our fathers and mothers in a political sense, Isa. xlix. 23. Aged persons are so called, 1 Tim. v. 1, 2. Ministers are spiritual fathers, 1 Cor. iv. 15. Heads of families are economical fathers, 2 Kings v. 13. And those who are eminent in gifts, grace, or station in the world, are styled fathers, Gen. iv. 20—22; xlv. 8; 2 Kings ii. 12; Acts vii. 2.

Q. Why are superiors styled father and mother?

A. To teach them, like natural parents, to treat their inferiors with love and tenderness, as if they were their children, and not to slight or despise them.

Q. What is meant by the honour we are required to give our superiors by this commandment?

A. It comprehends all that esteem, respect, submission, obedience, and duty, which we owe unto them by the law of God.

Q. What is the general scope of the fifth commandment?

A. It is to enjoin us the performance of these duties which we owe to our neighbours in their several stations and relations, whether they be our superiors, inferiors, or equals.

Q. Why is this commandment called; "the first commandment with promise?" Eph. vi. 2.

A. Because it is the first commandment of the second table, and is the foundation of obedience to all the other commandments of it; and it hath a promise annexed to it, to show its dignity above them.

Q. Who are meant by superiors in the answer?

A. Not only our natural parents, but also magistrates, ministers, masters, husbands, the aged, and those who excel us in gifts or grace.

Q. Who are meant by inferiors?

A. Those who are in lower stations, as subjects, children, and servants, and those who are weak in gifts and grace.

Q. Who are meant by equals?

A. Those who are in like stations and conditions in the world.

Q. Why is the mother mentioned in the commandment as well as the father?

A. That children might not disregard her upon the account of her weakness or subjection to her husband. Nay, the Lord mentions the mother before the father, Lev. xix. 3, "Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father:"—Why? To meet with the humour of those who would diminish the respect and duty they owe to their mother.

Q. What duties are required of children to their parents?

A. To esteem and love them; to honour, reverence, and to obey them; to hearken to their counsels and instructions, and to submit to their reproofs and corrections; to marry with their consent; to cover their infirmities; and to supply them when in straits, Mal. ii. 6; 1 Kings xix. 29; ii. 19; Eph. vi. 1; Heb. xii. 9; Prov. xxiii. 22; Judg. xiv. 2; Gen. ix. 23; xlvii. 12.

Q. What shall children do when parents advise any thing contrary to God's word?

A. Children are only to obey parents in the Lord, and they must love and obey God before all men; for, "he that loveth father or mother (saith our Lord) more than me, is not worthy of me," Mat. x. 37.

Q. What duties are required of parents to their children?

A. To love them tenderly; to educate them in the knowledge and fear of God; to reprove, chasten, and keep them in subjection; to pity and pray for them; to instruct them in the ways of the Lord, and be good examples to them; to encourage them therein with endearing language; to provide and lay up for them, and put them in suitable callings, and to be concerned for a better portion to them than the things of this world, Tit. ii. 4; Prov. xxii. 6; xxix. 15, 17; xxxi. 2, 3; 1 Tim. iii. 4; v. 8; Eph. vi. 4; Psal. ciii. 13; ci. 2, 3; Gen. xvii. 18; xxv. 5, 6; iv. 1, 2; xlviii. 1; 2 Sam. xii. 16; Exod. xii. 26, 27; Deut. iv. 9, 16; 2 Cor. xii. 14; 2 Chron. xxi. 3; Luke xv. 12; Mat. xix. 13, 14.

Q. May parents reprove their children when they are in passion?

A. Reproofs at that time seldom do good; it were better to forbear until their passion be over, that they may reprove in the spirit of meekness, Gen. iii. 8; Gal. vi. 1.

Q. May we not lawfully be angry with children for their faults?

A. The best way to be angry, and not sin, is to be angry at sin; wherefore, when children offend, we should not be angry so much with them as with their sin.

Q. What duties are required of subjects to their magistrates?

A. To pray for them, to honour them, and be subject to them, to obey their just laws, to pay them tribute, to protect and defend them, to bear injuries from them patiently, and to be faithful to them, 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2; 1 Pet. ii. 13, 14, 17; Rom. xiii. 1, 6, 7; 1 Sam. xxvi. 9, 10, 15.

Q. What are the duties of magistrates to their subjects?

A. To make good laws, and appoint faithful officers to execute them; to be careful of the peace and safety of their subjects; to be encouragers of virtue, and punishers of vice; to govern with prudence, justice, and clemency; to relieve the oppressed; to provide means of grace for all the souls in their dominions; and to be nursing fathers to the church, 2 Chron. xix. 5—7; xvii. 8, 9, 12; i. 10; ii. 1; 1 Pet. ii. 14; Isa. xlix. 23; 2 Kings xii. 7; xviii. 4; xxiii. 21; Neh. xiii. 10, 11.

Q. What duties are required of people to their ministers?

A. To esteem and love them dearly for their office and works' sake; to pray for them, and attend upon the ordinances dispensed by them; to submit to their reproofs and censures; to hearken, to apply and conform to their doctrine; to shut their ears against malicious reports raised against them, and communicate to them in temporal good things, 1 Thes. v. 5, 12, 13, 25; Rom. xv. 30; Luke x. 16; Heb. xiii. 17, 18; Jam. i. 21; 1 Tim. v. 19; Gal. vi. 6; 1 Cor. ix. 14.

Q. What are the duties of ministers to their people?

A. To preach the word faithfully, and dispense all ordinances to them; to have tender love and affection to their souls; to pray fervently for them; to reside amongst them, and watch carefully over them; to be partners of godly living unto them; and be willing to make the greatest condescensions for the edification and good of souls, 2 Tim. iv. 2, 3, 5; 1 Thess. ii. 7—10; Eph. i. 15, 16; 1 Pet. v. 2, 3; Tit. ii. 7; 1 Cor. 19, 21, 22; 2 Cor. xii. 19.

Q. What duties are required of servants to their masters?

A. To love, honour, and obey them; to be faithful in all things intrusted to them; to be diligent in their work, and study to please them in all things; to bear their rebukes patiently, not answering again, Mat. vi. 24; 1 Tim. vi. 1; Col. iii. 22; Tit. ii. 9, 10; 1 Pet. ii. 18, 19; Gen. xxiv. 12.

Q. What are the duties of masters to their servants?

A. To rule over them with gentleness, and not with rigour; to give them sufficient food, and pay them their wages justly; to be careful of them under sickness; to reprove sin in them, instruct them, and to command them to keep the ways of the Lord, and particularly the Sabbath, Eph. vi. 9; Lev. xxv. 43; Prov. xxvii. 27; Deut. xxiv. 14, 15; Mat. viii. 6; Prov. xxix. 19; Gen. xviii. 19; Exod. xx. 10.

Q. What are the duties of wives to their husbands?

A. To love them and be faithful to them in all things; to give them due respect and reverence, and to be obedient to them; to study to please them, and to be helps to them in family affairs; to warn them of any evils or dangers they may be exposed to; to study, by a meek, quiet, chaste, and loving conversation, to adorn religion, and win over their husbands to the love of it, Tit. ii. 4; Prov. xxxi. 12, 27; 1 Tim. iii. 11; Heb. xiii. 4; Eph. v. 33; 1 Pet. iii. 1—7; 1 Cor. vii. 21; Gen. ii. 18; Mat. xxvii. 19.

Q. What are the duties of husbands to their wives?

A. To love them and live chastely with them; to nourish and cherish them; to cover their infirmities, and protect them from injuries; to study to please them; to counsel and advise them, pray with them and for them, and praise them when they do well, Eph. v. 28, 29; Prov. v. 18—20; 1 Pet. iv. 8; 1 Sam. xxx. 18; 1 Cor. vii. 33; 1 Pet. iii. 7; Gen. xxv. 21; Prov. xxxi. 28, 29.

Q. What are the duties of the younger and inferior in gifts and grace, to the aged and superior?

A. To rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man; to speak to them with respect, give them the place in speaking, submit to their advice, and imitate their holy lives, Lev. xix. 32; 1 Tim. v. 1, 2; Job xxxii. 4, 6, 7; 1 Pet. v. 5; 1 Cor. xi. 1.

Q. What are the duties of the aged and superior to the younger and inferior?

A. To bear with their weakness, and to lay themselves out for their good, by instructing them, and praying for them: to study to adorn their old age by a holy and exemplary life, Rom. xv. 1; Gen. xlviii. 15, 16; Tit. ii. 2—4.

Q. What are the duties of equals one to another?

A. To submit to one another, to be pitiful, to be courteous, to be at peace among themselves, to be kindly affectioned one to another, in honour preferring one another; to seek one another's wealth, and rejoice in others' welfare, 1 Pet. v. 5; iii. 8; Rom. xii. 10, 15; 1 Cor. x. 24.

QUESTION LXV.

Q. What is forbidden in the fifth commandment?

A. The fifth commandment forbiddeth the neglecting of, or doing any thing against the honour and duty which belong to every one in their several places and relations.

Q. How many ways may this commandment be broken?

A. Two ways: 1. By neglecting the duties of the stations and relations in which God hath placed us, whether we be superiors, inferiors, or equals. 2. By doing things directly contrary to the honour and duty which we owe to our superiors, inferiors, or equals.

Q. What are these sins which inferiors are commonly guilty of against their superiors?

A. They are many, such as slighting and despising them, envying their elevation, reviling and cursing them; disobedience to their just commands and counsels, contempt of their reproofs and corrections, mocking and studying to expose them, making a show of reverence and obedience without reality, not imitating their good examples, and the like.

Q. What are the sins which superiors are commonly guilty of against their inferiors?

A. They are, such as commanding unlawful things, enjoining things not in their power to perform; advising and encouraging them to what is evil, dissuading and discouraging them from what is good; cruel treating of them, and provoking them to wrath; proud imperious carriage towards them; reproving with bitterness, or correcting with rigour, oppression, and tyranny; debasing themselves, and losing their authority; not giving good examples, and the like.

Q. What are the sins of equals against one another?

A. Hatred, anger, malice, envy, evil-speaking, injuring, reproaching or backbiting one another; affecting pre-eminence one over another, tempting and encouraging one another, and the like.

Q. Is it a sin in children to dispose of their parents' goods as their own?

A. Yes, Prov. xxviii. 24. "Whoso robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression, the same is the companion of a destroyer."

Q. Is it not a great dishonour done to parents for children to dispose of themselves in marriage without their consent?

A. Yes, Exod. xxii. 17; Num. xxx. 5; Deut. vii. 3; Jer. xxix. 6; 1 Cor. vii. 38; Col. iii. 20.

Q. What if children set light by their parents, or expose their weaknesses?

A. They draw down the curse of God upon themselves, Deut. xxvii. 16. "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother: and all the people shall say, Amen."

Q. Do you read of any upon whom this curse came for so doing?

A. Yes, of Ham the son of Noah, Gen. ix. 22, 25, 26.

Q. What shall become of those who curse their parents?

A. Whoso curseth his father or his mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness, Prov. xx. 20. Nay, death is threatened to them, Exod. xxi. 17.

Q. What is threatened against those who not only disobey, but mock their parents?

A. The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it, Prov. xxx. 17.

Q. What is due to those children who beat their parents?

A. He that smiteth his father or his mother shall surely be put to death, Exod. xxi. 15.

Q. What if the magistrate neglect to punish such disobedient children?

A. God will take the punishing of such into his own hand.

Q. Do you read of any instances of his so doing?

A. Yes, I read of Eli's sons, 1 Sam. ii. 25. "They hearkened not to the voice of their father, because the Lord would slay them." And of David's rebellious son Absalom, that was taken up by an oak between the heaven and the earth, to hang as a monument of God's justice for breaking the fifth commandment, 2 Sam. xviii. 9.

Q. What became of the little children of Bethel who mocked Elisha as he passed by, saying, "Go up, thou bald-head," &c.?

A. God sent forth two she-bears out of the wood, that tore forty and two children of them, 1 Kings ii. 24.

Q. Are not those children guilty of dishonouring their parents, who despise them when they are poor or old, or suffer them to be in want?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it not monstrous ingratitude in children to requite their parents so badly for their love and tenderness toward them?—A. Yes.

Q. What may such expect for it?

A. To meet with the same usage from their own children in this world, and with dreadful punishments in the other, if they repent not.

QUESTION LXVI.

Q. What are the reasons annexed to the fifth commandment?

A. The reasons annexed to the fifth commandment are a promise of long life and prosperity, (as far as it shall serve for God's glory and their own good) to all such as keep this commandment.

Q. Since the light of nature doth so clearly teach us to honour our parents, why is there such a promise annexed to it?

A. To show how greatly concerned God is to support the authority of parents.

Q. How is the fifth commandment called the first with promise, Eph. vi. 2, seeing the second hath a promise in it of God's showing mercy to thousands?

A. The promise in the second doth likewise extend to the keeping of all the other commandments, but the promise in the fifth is made to the keeping of it only.

A. What doth God here promise to those who keep the fifth commandment?—A. Long life.

Q. What is included in the promise of long life here?

A. It includes a promise of prosperity, with the blessing and comforts of life: for, without this, long life would not be a reward; death being more eligible than long life in misery, Eph. vi. 3; Rev. ix. 6.

Q. What course then should children take to live long and happy lives?

A. They should honour and obey their parents.

Q. Is this promise of long life and prosperity to obedient children, to be understood absolutely, or with limitation?

A. It is to be understood, as other temporal promises, with this limitation, so far as the following of it shall serve for God's glory, and their own good.

Q. What if God sometimes take away obedient children in their youth?

A. We are then to think that God did not see long living here to be for their good, but thought fit in place of it to give them a long life in heaven, which is far better, Phil. i. 23.

Q. May not then disobedient children look for short and miserable lives here?—A. Yes.

QUESTION LXVII.

Q. Which is the sixth commandment?

The sixth commandment is, "Thou shalt not kill."

QUESTION LXVIII.

Q. What is required in the sixth commandment?

A. The sixth commandment requireth all lawful endeavours to preserve our own life, and the life of others.

Q. Is there not a comely order among the commandments of the second table?

A. Yes; for the fifth commandment, or first of the second table, prescribes in general, what respect men should show to one another in their several stations and relations. In the next place, we have particular directions with respect to those things which are most valuable to men; the first is with respect to our lives, in the sixth commandment; the next relates to our chastity, in the seventh commandment; the third is concerning our estates, in the eighth commandment; the fourth is with respect to our good name, in the ninth commandment; the last is concerning the inward frame of our hearts in reference to our own estate and the estate of others, in the tenth commandment.

Q. Whose life is it that we are bound to preserve by the sixth commandment?

A. Both our own life and the life of others; and this is to be understood, not only of the life of the body, but also of the soul.

Q. Doth this commandment require us to study and endeavour, by any means whatsoever, to preserve our own life and other men's?

A. No; we are only to use all lawful means and endeavours for that end.

Q. May we use no unlawful endeavour, or venture upon any sin, to preserve our own life, or the life of others?—A. No.

Q. Did not Isaac tell a lie, in calling his wife his sister, to save his life? Gen. xxvi. 7. And did not Peter deny Christ, to preserve his life?

A. Isaac's lie and Peter's denial were sins against God, and are recorded, not for imitation, but for caution; for we must not do evil that good may come," Rom. iii. 8. Nay, to go about to save our lives by such sinful means, is the way to lose our lives and our souls for ever, Mat. xvi. 25, 26; x. 33.

Q. What are the lawful endeavours which we should use to preserve the life of our bodies?

A. Just self-defence against violence; the temperate use of meat, drink, clothes; bodily exercise, and physic when needful; likewise we should study a cheerful, peaceable, and contented temper of mind, without harbouring anger, envy, grief, or such passions as prejudice the healthy, Luke xxii. 36; Eph. v. 29; Prov. xxv. 16, 17; 1 Tim.

v. 23; Isa. xxxviii. 21; Prov. xvii. 22; Col. iii. 12, 13.

Q. What are the endeavours we should use for preserving the bodily life of others?

A. A pleading for, and labouring to rescue, the innocent in danger of death; hiding the persecuted, or warning them of danger; relieving those that are in wants; bearing injuries without revenging them, and the like, Prov. xxxi. 8, 9; 1 Sam. xiv. 45; xix. 4, 5; 1 Kings xviii. 4; Acts xxiii. 16; Rom. xii. 17, 20; Job xxxi. 19; Mat. xxv. 35.

Q. What endeavours should we use for preserving the life of our souls?

A. Attending upon the outward means of salvation, believing, repenting, mortifying sin, and studying holiness, Prov. viii. 34—36; Mark xvi. 19; Ezek. xviii. 31, 32; Rom. viii. 13; Heb. xii. 14.

Q. What endeavours must we use for preserving the souls of others?

A. We must use all the means which God hath appointed for reclaiming men from evil, and promoting their conversion; such as warning, reproof, instruction, prayer, holy example, and recommending Christ to them, James v. 20; 1 Cor. vii. 16; 1 Pet. iii. 1; 1 Thess. v. 14; Rev. xix. 17; Acts xx. 26, 27; xvi. 31.

QUESTION LXIX.

Q. What is forbidden in the sixth commandment?

A. The sixth commandment forbiddeth the taking away of our own life, or the life of our neighbour unjustly, and whatsoever tendeth thereunto.

Q. Whose life is it that this commandment forbids to take away?

A. Our own life, or the life of our neighbour.

Q. Doth it forbid the taking away of our neighbour's life in any case?

A. No, but the taking it away unjustly.

Q. When is it that our neighbour's life may be justly taken away?

A. 1. In case of public justice by a magistrate. 2. In case of a lawful war. 3. In case of necessary self-defence.

Q. Is killing in any other case to be looked upon as murder?

A. Yes, except when it is done by pure accident, without knowledge or design of harm, in which case there were of old cities of refuge for the slayer to flee to, Deut. xix. 5, 6.

Q. How doth it appear that the magistrate hath power to take away men's lives, notwithstanding of the sixth commandment?

A. Because God hath appointed several crimes, particularly murder, to be punished with death,

Gen. iv. 6, "Whosoever sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." Exod. xxi. 12, "He that smiteth a man so that he die, shall be surely put to death." And this is confirmed in the New Testament, Mat. xxvi. 52; Rev. xiii. 10.

Q. May the magistrate spare or pardon a murderer?

A. No; for God hath forbidden it, Num. xxxv. 31, 33, "Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death; but he shall be surely put to death: for blood it defileth the land, and the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it."

Q. How doth it appear to be lawful to kill in a just war?

A. Because it is done by the authority of the supreme magistrate, who, even under the New Testament, is warranted to bear the sword against evil-doers, Rom. xiii. 4. And we are frequently assured, that true piety is very well consistent with the office of a soldier, Luke iii. 14; Mat. xviii. 9, 10; Acts x. 1, 2; xiii. 12. And those soldiers are recorded with signal honour, who through faith subdued kingdoms, waxed valiant in fight, and turned to flight the armies of the aliens, Heb. vi. 33, 34.

Q. How doth it appear to be lawful to kill in our own defence, when attacked by robbers or murderers?

A. From Exod. xxii. 2, "If a thief be found breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall be no blood shed for him." And Luke xxii. 36, 38, Christ approves of the disciples having swords for their protection, although they might not use them when Christ's hour was come. And Prov. xxiv. 11, 12, we are called to defend our neighbour in danger, and much more ourselves.

Q. What are we to think of those who shed blood in duellings?

A. They are the devil's martyrs, and murderers in God's sight; for they usurp God's right of vengeance, which he hath expressly reserved to himself, Rom. xii. 19.

Q. If another challenge me to fight, how can I avoid to accept of it, without losing my honour?

A. In that case we must leave our name and credit with God, and not be drawn on by airy notions of honour to the God-dishonouring sin of murder, or to set ourselves above all laws both of God and man, and thereby throw our precious souls a prey to the devil.

Q. Did not David fight a duel with Goliath?

A. He did that by public authority in a lawful war for the good of his country, by the motion of God's Spirit, and not from any passion or corrupt affection of his own. For God forbids all men to be their own avengers, Rom. xii. 19.

Q. Is it not the worst kind of murder for a man to kill himself?

A. Yes; for, in other murders, a man may live to repent of his sins; but in this, if he die immediately, the man dies in his sin, without time for repentance.

Q. What are the temptations which usually prompt men to destroy themselves?

A. It was impatience under a cross, or dishonour he met with, that provoked Ahithophel to do it, 2 Sam. xvii. 23. It was horror of conscience, under guilt and despair of mercy, that drove Judas to it, Mat. xxii. 4, 5. It was fear of torture, or an ignominious death from others, that pushed Saul to do it, and the jailor to attempt it, 1 Sam. xxxi. 4; Acts xvi. 27.

Q. Are not the temptations of men to self-murder contrary to all reason?

A. Yes; seeing it is most foolish and unreasonable for a man to adventure upon unspeakable torture and anguish which will last for ever, that he may shun a small distress here that would soon be over.

Q. Did not many of the ancient heathens applaud men's killing themselves, in some cases, as an act of heroism and magnanimity?

A. These men were not illuminated by gospel light, otherwise they would have reckoned it an act of rebellion and treachery, for a man to break prison or desert his post, until he was fairly dismissed by his sovereign lord; yea, an act of pusillanimity and cowardice, for a man to flee from a small conflict or trial, which God had appointed for the discovery of his valour.

Q. Did not Samson kill himself in pulling down Dagon's temple? Judges xvi. 30.

A. His intention was not against his own life, but against Israel's enemies; besides, he acted as a judge in Israel, being moved by the Spirit of God to deliver God's people, but not from despair; and so his action is not imitable by us.

Q. Doth the sixth commandment forbid only the direct taking away of our own or our neighbour's life?

A. It also forbids whatsoever tendeth thereto.

Q. May not a man thus be guilty of self-murder, without putting violent hands on himself?

A. Yes; as when he neglects or refuses food or physic, or necessary means of preserving life. Or, 2. When he is guilty of surfeiting, drunkenness, or any kind of intemperance. 3. When he indulges excessive sorrows, distracting cares, sinful anger, envy, or such hurtful passions which breed distempers in the body, Luke xxi. 34; Eccl. ii. 22, 23; vi. 2; Prov. xiv. 30; xvii. 22.

Q. How may a man be guilty of murdering his own soul?

A. By neglecting the outward means of salvation, refusing Christ the only remedy for sin, despising warnings, counsels, and reproofs, and continuing obstinate in sinful courses, Prov. viii. 36; vi. 32; Ezek. xviii. 30, 31; John v. 40.

Q. How may a man be guilty of murder with respect to others?

A. He may be guilty of murder with respect to their bodies, and with respect to their souls; and this he may be guilty of in thoughts, in words, and in deeds.

Q. How may a man be a murderer in his thoughts?

A. By entertaining sinful anger, hatred, envy, and desire of revenge; by contriving or consenting to the death of others, 1 John iii. 15, "Whoso hateth his brother is a murderer," Mat. xv. 19, "Out of the heart proceeds murder;" see also Mat. v. 21, 22; Zech. viii. 17; Eph. iv. 31; Gen. xxxvii. 11, 20; xlix. 6; Acts xxii. 20.

Q. How may a man be a murderer in words?

A. By backbiting his neighbour, or using opprobrious words against him, which cause murders; by cursing or imprecating evil upon him; by informing or bearing false witness against the innocent, or swearing to kill him, Mat. v. 22; Eph. iv. 31; Prov. xii. 18; xv. 1; Psal. lvii. 4; lxiv. 3; Jer. xviii. 18; 1 Sam. xxii. 9, 10, &c.; xxv. 10, 11; 1 Kings xxi. 10; Acts xiii. 12.

Q. How may men be murderers by their deeds?

A. Many ways, both directly and indirectly; as by striking, wounding, or hurting the bodies of men, or doing any thing that tends to the destruction of their lives; by oppressing or robbing the poor, or not relieving them when ready to starve; by murdering the innocent under the form of law and justice; by setting them in dangerous posts to be cut off; by not hindering their death, when in their power; by not executing the law against murderers, so that they are spared to shed more blood, Num. xxxv. 16—18, &c.; Ezek. xxii. 7; 2 Sam. xi. 15; xii. 9; 1 Kings xxi. 12, 13; Prov. xxiv. 11; Isa. i. 15.

Q. How are men guilty of murdering the souls of others?

A. By counselling or commanding them to do evil; by tempting and enticing them to sin; by giving a bad example to them; by not reproving sin, and giving warning against it; by ministers not warning sinners of their danger, or teaching them unsound doctrine, 1 Sam. xxii. 18; 2 Sam. xiii. 5; Prov. vii. 10; 2 Kings x. 29; Lev. xix. 17; Ezek. iii. 18; 2 Pet. ii. 1.

Q. Have we not many evidences of God's special hatred and abhorrence of the sin of murder?

A. Yes; in his commandments and threatenings against it, his strict injunctions concerning its punishment, in his making inquisition for blood, and the strange methods of his providence for bringing secret murder to light, and the judgments he inflicts for it, when it is passed unpunished by men.

Q. Wherefore is murder so hateful to God?

A. 1. Because it destroys a creature made after the image of God and a creature which the Son of God shed his blood to ransom. 2. It is an usurping of the power and prerogative of God, who saith, "Vengeance is mine." 3. It is an imitating of the devil, who was a murderer from the beginning; upon all which accounts the blood of murdered persons cries loudly to God for vengeance. And therefore all who are guilty in any degree, should flee to the blood of Christ for refuge and cleansing, crying, "Deliver me from blood-guiltiness, O God," Gen. ix. 6; iv. 10; Rom. xii. 19; John viii. 44; Psal. 14.

QUESTION LXX.

Q. What is the seventh commandment?

A. The seventh commandment is, "Thou shalt not commit adultery."

QUESTION LXXI.

Q. What is required in the seventh commandment?

A. The seventh commandment requireth the preservation of our own and our neighbour's chastity, in heart, speech, and behaviour.

Q. What is it that ought to be the dearest to us next to our life?—A. Our chastity.

Q. Whose chastity doth the seventh commandment require the preservation of?

A. Our own and our neighbour's.

Q. In what must we preserve our own and our neighbour's chastity?

A. In heart, speech, and behaviour.

Q. What is meant here by chastity?

A. Not abstinence from marriage, but abstinence from all uncleanness and filthiness, whether in a married or unmarried state.

Q. May persons be both chaste and married?

A. Yes; for the apostle recommends to married women a "chaste conversation coupled with fear," 1 Pet. iii. 2.

Q. What is meant by that chastity in heart, speech, and behaviour, which we must study to preserve?

A. 1. That we must entertain no thoughts nor desires but what are pure and chaste, whatever company we be in. 2. That our discourse one with another must be grave and uncorrupt, and such as may tend to edification. 3. That our whole conversation, gestures, and actions, must be chaste, modest, and decent, as becometh Christians.

Q. Why should we be so careful to preserve our chastity?

A. Because we are rational creatures, and not brutes; Christians and not heathens; and the bodies of Christians should be members of Christ, and temples of the Holy Ghost, and consequently ought to be kept clean and pure. Nay, it is God's express command, that we should abstain from fornication and all uncleanness, and that we should possess our vessels in sanctification and honour, 1 Cor. vi. 15, 18, 19; 1 Thess. iv. 3—6; Eph. iv. 17—19: v. 3.

Q. By what means shall we preserve our chastity?

A. By faith and prayer; by watching over our hearts and eyes; by temperance in our diet, diligence in our callings, keeping of chaste company, and avoiding all temptations to, and occasions of uncleanness, Acts xv. 9; Mat. vi. 13; Prov. iv. 23; ii. 16; v. 8; Job xxxi. 1; Jer. v. 8; Gen. xxxiv. 1, 2, 10; 1 Cor. ix. 27.

QUESTION LXXII.

Q. What is forbidden in the seventh commandment?

A. The seventh commandment forbiddeth all unchaste thoughts, words, and actions.

Q. Doth this commandment forbid all lustful thoughts and desires?

A. Yes, Mat. v. 28, "Whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart."

Q. Is not adultery here to be understood of any sort of uncleanness?—A. Yes.

Q. Doth this commandment forbid all obscene speeches, lascivious jests, and songs?

A. Yes, Eph. v. 4, "Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient."

Q. What are the unchaste actions, or acts of uncleanness, here forbidden?

A. Adultery, fornication, polygamy, rape, incest, sodomy, and all unnatural lust; prohibiting of lawful marriages, and dispensing with those that are unlawful; unjust divorce or desertion; keeping or allowing of stews; and all other actions which have a tendency to promote or encourage unchastity and uncleanness, Heb. xiii. 4; 1 Cor. vi. 18; v. 1; vii. 12, 13; Gal. v. 9; Mal. ii. 14—16; Mat. xix. 5; v. 32; Deut. xxii. 25; Lev. xviii. 6, 20—23; Gen. xxxviii. 9; Rom. i. 25, 26; 1 Tim. iv. 3; Mark vi. 18; 2 Cor. vi. 14; Lev. xix. 29; Jer. v. 7.

Q. Who are those who prohibit lawful marriages?

A. The papists who forbid the marriages of ecclesiastical persons, and those who (they pretend) have spiritual affinity together, as god-fathers, god-mothers, and the children they present to baptism.

Q. Have they any ground for such prohibitions from scripture?

A. No: For the scripture declares marriage to be lawful and honourable in all, as being instituted by God before the fall; and condemns the forbidding to marry as false doctrine. Besides, the prophets and priests were married under the Old Testament, as were Peter and other apostles under the New, Heb. xiii. 4; Gen. ii. 18, 22, 24; Lev. xxi. 7, 13; 1 Cor. vii. 2, 9; ix. 5; Luke iv. 38. Acts xxi. 8, 9; 1 Tim. iii. 2, 4.

Q. Whodoth dispense with unlawful marriages?

A. The pope, who for money dispenses with incestuous marriages, that is, of persons near akin, and within the degrees forbidden by the word of God.

Q. Where are those degrees explained in which incest is committed?

A. In Lev. xviii. 7—9, &c.; xx. 11, 14; Deut. xxvii. 20—23.

Q. In what cases can married persons be divorced, or their marriage disannulled?

A. Only in the cases of adultery and wilful desertion, Mat. xix. 9; 1 Cor. vii. 15.

Q. Who teach otherwise?

A. The papists, who hold that they may be divorced when either the man or the woman think fit to retire into a cloister.

Q. What other actions or things are there forbidden in this commandment, which have a tendency to promote or encourage uncleanness?

A. They are such as drunkenness, gluttony, idleness, frequenting light company, listening to filthy speeches or songs, lascivious books and pictures, plays and dances, immodest attire, wanton looks and gestures, and the like.

Q. What are the evils of this sin of uncleanness?

A. It is most hateful and dishonourable to a holy God. It debases a man from the excellency of his nature, and levels him with the beasts. It is an infatuating sin, that takes away the heart, binds the body, and stupifies the conscience. It wastes the means, destroys the body, rots the good name, and damns the soul. Nay, it murders two souls at once, 2 Sam. xi. 27; 1 Cor. vi. 15, 18, 19; Hos. iv. 11; Prov. vi. 26, 32, 33; v. 7, 9—11; Eph. v. 3—5; Rev. xiii. 4; xxi. 8; xxii. 15.

Q. What are the remedies against this infatuating sin?

A. We must pray to God, for Christ's sake, for a new heart to hate all sin, and to be kept from temptation to it; shun lewd company, and watch over the heart and eyes; keep up the remembrance of God's all-seeing eye being still upon us, and think often upon the burning flames prepared for those who burn with lust.

QUESTION LXXIII.

Q. Which is the eighth commandment?

A. The eighth commandment is, "Thou shalt not steal."

QUESTION LXXIV.

Q. What is required in the eighth commandment?

A. The eighth commandment requireth the lawful procuring and furthering the wealth and outward estate of ourselves and others.

Q. Whose wealth and estate doth this commandment concern?

A. Both our own and other men's.

Q. What doth it require of us with respect to them?

A. To use means to procure and preserve them.

Q. May we use any means for that end?

A. No; for we must use only lawful means to profit ourselves or others.

Q. Doth not this commandment suppose, that there is no community of goods, but that every man hath a propriety in his estate?

A. Yes; for otherwise there would be no place for this commandment; no man could say, This is mine, or that is mine; nor could he give alms to others. A community of goods cannot take place but by consent of the proprietors in a time or ease extraordinary, Acts ii. 44.

Q. Is it lawful to seek to increase our worldly estate more than it is?

A. Yes, Gen. xlvii. 14; Deut. viii. 18; Prov. xiii. 11.

Q. For what ends should we endeavour to increase it?

A. 1. We should chiefly aim at the glory of God, that we may be capable to honour him with our substance, and be kept from sinning against him by stealing or false swearing, as in Prov. xxx. 8, 9. 2. That we may help others, Eph. iv. 28. 3. That we may keep ourselves and families from being burdensome to others. And, lastly, That we may avoid idleness.

Q. What means must we use to procure and further our worldly estate?

A. We must be diligent and laborious in honest and lawful callings; we must live soberly and frugally, and manage our affairs with prudence and discretion; we must look to the Lord for success in our endeavours, be just in all our dealings, be ready to supply the needy, use proper means to obtain what belongs to us, but avoid unnecessary law-suits and suretyship, 1 Cor. vii. 20; vi. 1, 2, &c.; Gen. iv. 2; Prov. x. 4, 6, 22; xi. 24, 25; vi. 1, 2; Eph. iv. 28; Tit. ii. 12; Psal. cxii. 5; 1 Pet. v. 7.

Q. Is it unlawful for Christians to go to law, to defend or recover their own?—A. No.

Q. Doth not the apostle blame them for going to law with one another, saying, "Why do ye not rather take wrong?" &c., 1 Cor. vi. 7.

A. He is there blaming them for going to law about smaller matters before heathen magistrates, and telling them that they should make up differences among themselves, or suffer wrong, rather than by wrangling to bring a scandal upon their holy religion, and stumble the heathen at Christianity.

Q. Doth not Christ say, Mat. v. 19, "If any man will sue thee at law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also?"

A. His meaning is, That we should part with some smaller thing, such as a coat or a cloak, rather than involve ourselves into a vexatious law-suit: but not that we should let any man undo us, when God hath blessed us with good laws for our protection.

Q. May we seek after the world as our treasure?

A. No, but as a help under God in our journey: we must lay up our treasure in heaven, and secure a portion for ourselves there through eternity.

Q. Should we not be ready to assist poor widows and orphans with our money, and lend to those who are in need?

A. Yes, James i. 27; Psal. cxii. 5.

Q. What must we do to promote and further the wealth of others?

A. We must be true and just in all our transactions with others, and render to every one his due: we should preserve our neighbour's goods, and restore them to him if they be in our hands: we should wish and seek their good as well as our own, and do in all things to them as we would have them to do to us, Psal. xv. 2, 4; Zech. xiii. 16, 17; Rom. xiii. 7; Lev. vi. 2, 3, &c.; 1 Cor. x. 24; Mat. vii. 12.

QUESTION LXXV.

Q. What is forbidden in the eighth commandment?

A. The eighth commandment forbiddeth whatsoever doth or may unjustly hinder our own or our neighbour's wealth, or outward estate.

Q. What is implied in the sin of stealing, here forbidden?

A. The injuring of ourselves or others in worldly estates, and the using unlawful means to gain the world.

Q. What way may we injure our own worldly estate, and thereby steal from ourselves and families?

A. By idleness, sloth, negligence in our calling; by rash engaging in suretyship and imprudent bargains; by prodigality, and wasteful spending, in gluttony, drunkenness, lewd company, costly apparel, gaming, and the like, 2 Thess. iii. 11; Prov. xviii. 9; xxiii. 21; xxii. 26, 27; xxviii. 19, 21, 27.

Q. Is it a sin for men to live above their incomes or gains?

A. Yes; for hereby they destroy their own estate, hinder their own charity, and waste the substance of others also.

Q. Is not the using of unlawful ways and means to enrich or subsist ourselves and families, a sin against the eighth commandment?

A. Yes; for this is no better than stealing and dishonesty in the sight of God, however matters be disguised with fair cloaks and pretexts before men.

Q. What are these unlawful things of enriching or subsisting ourselves?

A. They are such as these; immoderate cares and labour, covetousness, hastening to be rich, excessive narrowness, gaming, usury, monopolies, running of goods, lying, false swearing, breaking the sabbath, bribery, simony, selling masses, pardons and indulgences, using unlawful callings and occupations, or taking any ways to defraud or overreach others to gain money.

Q. How is covetousness against the eighth commandment?

A. Because the covetous man is guilty of stealing from several: 1. From God and his church, in not giving any thing to pious uses. 2. From his neighbour, in refusing to help him in straits. 3. From himself and his family, in depriving them of the necessary comforts of life. All which are against Prov. iii. 9; Mal. iii. 8, 10; 1 Cor. ix. 14; Gal. vi. 6; Isa. lviii. 7; Eccl. iv. 8; vi. 2; 1 Tim. v. 8.

Q. Do niggards, who have no hearts to use what they have, sin greatly?

A. Yes; for they defraud themselves and their families of the comfort and use of those good things which God hath bestowed on them, and so cannot be thankful to God the bountiful giver. They are uncharitable to those in need; for he that will not allow it to himself, will not love another better than himself. They are hurtful to the society and generation they live among; for they hoard up that, which if others had, the poor would be employed, and others would be the better of it, Eccl. iv. 8; vi. 2; 1 Tim. v. 8; Psal. xxxvii. 3, 26, 27; Job xxix. 12—16; Psal. cxii. 3, 5, 9.

Q. Is the gaining of money by usury, unlawful?

A. Yes, Prov. xxviii. 8; Psal. xv. 5.

Q. What is usury?

A. The taking of unlawful profit for money that is lent out.

Q. Is it lawful to take any interest or gain for money lent?

A. Yes, when it is taken according to the laws of the land, and from those who make gain by it, by trading or purchasing of lands; seeing it is equally just for the owner of money to ask a share of the profit which others make by it, as for the owner of land to demand farm from the tenant of it; money being improveable by art and labour as well as land.

Q. What is the unlawful profit for money which may be called usury?

A. The taking profit for money from the poor who borrow for mere necessity, or taking needful things from them in pawn for it; or the taking more profit from any than law allows, as they who take ten, fifteen, or twenty in the hundred, Exod. xxii. 25, 26; Deut. xxiv. 12, 17; Ezek. xviii. 7, 8.

Q. But the people of Israel were discharged to take any usury or profit for lent money from their brethren, Deut. xxiii.

A. This law seems to have been peculiar to the Jewish state, and that in regard of their estates being so divided, settled and secured to their families by the year of jubilee, and their not being employed in trading or making purchases like other nations, so that they had no occasion to borrow money but for the present subsistence of their families. But for strangers, who had another way of living, the Israelites were allowed to lend to them upon usury, and to share with them in their profits, Deut. xxiii. 20. Which shows that the taking of interest is not oppressive in itself; for they are frequently prohibited to oppress a stranger, and yet allowed to take usury from him, Exod. xxii. 21; xxiii. 9.

Q. What is meant by monopolies, here forbidden?

A. The engrossing or buying up of some commodities, especially corn and provisions for the poor, in order to exact great prices from them afterwards, Prov. xi. 26, "He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him: but blessings shall be upon the head of him that selleth it."

Q. What is the evil of running of goods?

A. It is a denying to render custom to whom it is due; besides, there are many other sins which commonly attend this practice, as perjury, bribery, lying, Sabbath-breaking, bloodshed, &c.

Q. What is meant by bribery, which is here forbidden?

A. It is the taking or giving of bribes or gifts to pervert justice, Prov. xvii. 23, "A wicked man taketh a gift out of the bosom, to pervert the ways of justice."

Q. What is meant by simony here forbidden?

A. It is a buying and selling of the offices and places of ministers, and other spiritual things, for money, good deeds, or favour. A vile practice! it being a token that the design of the purchasers is to make money by them. It is a sin marked out as odious by the Spirit of God, for it tends to destroy all true religion. It is called simony, from that wicked person, Simon Magus, Acts viii. 19, "He offered them money, saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost."

Q. Who are those who sell pardons, indulgences, and masses?

A. The Popish priests do it for money, like the Pharisees, who, under a pretence of long prayers, devoured widows' houses, Mat. xxiii. 14. So the priests, under pretence of long prayers for the dead, and saying soul-masses, enrich themselves by devouring the houses of the widows and fatherless, Rev. xviii. 13.

Q. Who are those who use unlawful trades and occupations to gain money?

A. Highwaymen, thieves, bawds, stage-players, jugglers, fortune-tellers, usurers, smugglers, ingrossers, gamblers, and those who make gain by carding, dieing, and such lottery-games: also those who make a trade of harbouring such people in their houses, or letting out houses to them; and particularly those change keepers, who, for the love of gain, entertain drunkards, unclean persons, thieves, profaners of the Lord's day, and such loose persons.

Q. How are people guilty of breaking the eighth commandment, by plain stealing from others, or injuring them in their worldly estate?

A. Besides what hath been already mentioned, people are guilty of it by thieving, robbing, man-stealing, resetting of thieves and stolen goods, frauds in merchandising, unfaithfulness in contracts and matters of trust, falsehood in promises, denying just debts, or not paying them, vexatious law-suits, borrowing what we cannot pay, detaining any thing strayed or lost, or what we have wrongously taken; all extortions and oppression, unjust enclosures and depopulations, removing ancient land-marks, sacrilege, wronging the coin, denying public taxes, withholding the wages of servants and labourers, rigorous exacting of debts, stopping the ear at the cry of the poor, Eph. iv. 28; Psal. lxii. 10; 1 Tim. i. 10; Prov. xxix. 24; 1 Thes. iv. 6; Psal. xxxvii. 21; Luke xvi. 12; Hos. iv. 1; Deut. xxii. 1, 2, &c.; Prov. iii. 28—30; 1 Cor. vi. 6; Luke xix. 8; Ezek. xxii. 12, 29; Lev. xxv. 17; Isa. viii.; Mic. ii. 2; Prov. xxiii. 10; Rom. ii. 22; Mat. xxii. 21; Rom. xiii. 6, 7; Lev. xix. 13; Mat. xviii. 28; Prov. xiii.; Deut. xv. 7.

Q. What are those frauds in merchandise here forbidden?

A. Circumvening or over-reaching others in buying or selling; taking advantage of their ignorance or necessity; imposing on them lies; deceitful commending of goods when selling, and undervaluing them when buying; selling things bad for good; using false balances, weights, or measures; taking exorbitant prices; undermining others in their trade, by withdrawing their customers, or wronging their credit, Lev. xxv. 14; xix. 35, 36; Prov. xx. 14; xi. 1; xxviii. 22; Deut. xxv. 13, &c.; Amos viii. 5, 6; 1 Cor. xiii. 3; Phil. ii. 4.

Q. What is the sin of sacrilege here forbidden?

A. Robbing or taking things away from God or his church, that properly belong to them: or alienating any thing dedicated to sacred uses: which, among other things, doth include the sins of non-residence and negligence of pastors; and the robbing Christian congregations of their right of calling their own ministers, Mal. iii. 8, 9; Prov. xx. 25; Josh. vii. 20, 21; 2 Cor. xxviii. 21; 2 Tim. iv. 2; 1 Pet. v. 2, 3; Acts i. 23; vi. 3; Jer. xxiii. 1, 2.

Q. Is stealing a way to be rich?

A. No, it brings poverty; for the curse of God is against the thief, Zech. v. 3, 4.

Q. Is not the thief of kin to an atheist?

A. Yes; for he practically denies God's omnipresence and his all-seeing eye over him, and that he is a righteous Judge who will call him to account.

Q. Must not all guilty of wronging others in their goods, repent and make restitution, as they would have mercy from God?

A. Yes, Lev. vi. 4; Ezek. xxxiii. 15; Luke xix. 8.

QUESTION LXXVI.

Q. Which is the ninth commandment?

A. The ninth commandment is, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour."

QUESTION LXXVII.

Q. What is required in the ninth commandment?

A. The ninth commandment requireth the maintaining and promoting of truth between man and man, and of our own and our neighbour's good name, especially in witness-bearing.

Q. How many duties doth this answer mention as required of us by the ninth commandment?

A. They are four: 1. The maintaining and promoting of truth between man and man. 2. Maintaining and promoting of our own good name. 3. Maintaining and promoting of our neighbour's good name. 4. Being concerned for all these, especially in witness-bearing.

Q. Why especially in witness-bearing?

A. Because then we are solemnly required to tell the truth, as being before a judge, and upon oath, whereby God is appealed to.

Q. How ought we to maintain and promote truth amongst men?

A. By loving the truth, speaking the truth sincerely, standing and appearing for the truth, and judging and deciding for the truth, Zech. viii. 16, 19; Prov. xxxi. 8, 9; Exod. xxi.; Psal. xv. 2.

Q. Why are we required to speak the truth sincerely, or from the heart?

A. Because the devil and bad men sometimes speak the truth from an evil design, Mark i. 34; 1 Sam. xxii. 9, 10.

Q. Wherefore ought we to maintain and promote our own good name?

A. That we may be capable to glorify God, and do the more good in our day and generation.

Q. Doth an evil report of men hinder their usefulness?—A. Yes.

Q. Who are more especially concerned to maintain their good name?

A. Magistrates, ministers, and professors of religion.

Q. Is commending ourselves, or carrying proudly, the way to maintain or promote our good name?

A. No, but rather the way to procure contempt.

Q. What are the proper means then to obtain a good name?

A. We must study to be humble, harmless, sober, meek, chaste, and just; to keep our word exactly; to be ready to serve others; and, in a word, to practise "whatever things are true, honest, lovely, and of good report," Col. iii. 12; Phil. ii. 15; iv. 8.

Q. Ought we not to vindicate ourselves when we are reproached?

A. Yes; but with meekness, and readiness to forgive those who reproach us.

Q. What if they do not hearken to us, nor believe us?

A. We must commit the cause to him that judgeth righteously.

Q. What is incumbent upon us to maintain our neighbour's good name?

A. We ought to have a due esteem of all the good we see in them, and be willing to express this seasonably for their encouragement in the ways of God: we should be ready to hearken to a good report, and unwilling to receive a bad report concerning them; conceal their infirmities, discourage tale-bearers, speak well of them behind their backs, and stand up in their defence when we know them traduced, Phil. ii. 3; Heb. vi. 9; Rom. i. 8; 1 Cor. xiii. 6; Psal. xv. 3; Prov. xxv. 23; xvii. 9; 1 Sam. xxii. 14.

Q. But what should we do when the bad reports we hear of our neighbours are evidently true?

A. We should be grieved for their miscarriages, and contribute what we can, by our admonitions, advices, and prayers, for their amendment, and for the recovery of their good names again, 2 Cor. ii. 4; Mat. xviii. 15, &c.

QUESTION LXXVIII.

Q. What is forbidden in the ninth commandment?

A. The ninth commandment forbiddeth whatsoever is prejudicial to truth, or injurious to our own or neighbour's good name.

Q. What evils doth this answer set forth, as forbidden in this commandment?

A. Three: 1. Saying or doing any thing that is prejudicial to truth. 2. Saying or doing any thing injurious to our own good name. 3. Saying or doing any thing injurious to our neighbour's good name.

Q. What are those things here forbidden, which are prejudicial to truth?

A. The wronging of truth, or anywise acting against it, in courts of judicature; the speaking of untruth, falsehood, or telling lies upon any account whatsoever; equivocating, perverting the truth, falsifying our word, and the like.

Q. How do men injure the truth in courts of judicature?

A. By persons informing against, or accusing others falsely; by the accused person's denying that of which he is guilty; by suborning false witnesses; by witnesses concealing or disguising the truth, or witnessing falsely; by persons agenting and pleading against the truth, for an evil cause by forgery, or making use of false writings; by perverting of men's words to a wrong meaning; by undue silence in a just cause, or not acting faithfully for it; by passing unjust sentences, justifying the guilty, or condemning the innocent, Luke xxiii. 2; Acts vi. 13; xxix. 2, 5; Gen. iv. 9; 1 Kings xxi. 13; Isa. v. 23; x. 4; Psal. exix. 69; Lev. v. 1; 2 Tim. iv. 16; Prov. xvii. 15; xxxi. 8, 9.

Q. Is every man that speaks an untruth guilty of lying?

A. No; he is not, if he really think the thing to be true which he speaks, although it may be false.

Q. What is it you mean by a lie then?

A. A man's speaking of any thing which he knows to be false, and telling it with a design to deceive.

Q. What is the evil of lying?

A. 1. It is a sin most hateful to God, who is a God of truth. 2. It tends to destroy all human society and commerce among men. 3. It makes a man a child of the devil; for he is a liar, and the father of lies, Prov. vi. 17; John viii. 44; Deut. xxxii. 4.

Q. Doth not God testify his high displeasure against the sin of lying?

A. Yes, and that even in this world; for God struck Ananias and Sapphira dead with a lie in their mouths.

Q. What is the portion of liars hereafter?

A. All liars have their part with the father of lies in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone; for God hath said it, Rev. xxi. 8.

Q. Is it not then one of the worst of names to call a man a liar?

A. Yes; and therefore we should guard against doing it.

Q. But what if the persons so called deserve the name?

A. Then we should be grieved for it, and reprove him, not in passion, to expose him, but in the spirit of meekness, in order to amend him.

Q. May not a man tell a lie to preserve his own or his neighbour's life?

A. No; for we must not do evil that good may come. Nay, we may not lie, though it were to advance the glory of God, Job xiii. 9; Rom. iii. 7, 8. And though some of the scripture saints may have failed in this respect, we must not follow their example, but live by precept.

Q. What think you of the popish doctrine and practice of equivocations, and of keeping no faith with heretics?

A. They are abominable.

Q. What do you think of those who lie in jest, to make sport to others?

A. God calls them fools that make a mock of sin, Prov. xiv. 9.

Q. What are those things injurious to our own good name which the ninth commandment forbids?

A. They are such as thinking or speaking too highly, or too meanly of ourselves; flattering, vaunting, and vain-glorious boasting; accusing ourselves of what we are not guilty; aggravating smaller faults too much; excusing or extenuating sins, when called to a free confession; denying the gifts or graces which God hath given us; rash exposing our infirmities before the wicked; speaking or doing any thing which may be a blot upon our name, Rom. xii. 16; Luke xviii. 11; Exod. iv. 10; 2 Tim. iii. 2; Psal. xii. 3; 1 Cor. xiii. 4, 5; Mat. vii. 3; Prov. xxviii. 13; xiv. 34; Gen. iii. 12, 13; Job xxvii. 5; Col. ii. 18.

Q. What are the things injurious to our neighbour's good name, here forbidden?

A. All slandering, backbiting, reproaching, scolding, taking up and spreading evil reports, evil speaking, rash judging, or censuring, whispering, tale-bearing, misconstruing the actions, words, or intentions of others; not covering their infirmities, stopping our ears against their vindication; not clearing their innocence when we know it; speaking truth with an ill design against them; being glad at their miscarriage or disgrace; scornful contempt, scoffing; fond admiration of some to the disparagement of others, Psal. l. 20; xv. 3; lxix. 10; xxxv. 15, 16; Job xix. 3; James iv. 11; Rom. i. 29, 30; iii. 8; Lev. xix. 6; Neh. vi. 6, &c.; 1 Sam. i. 13, 14; xxii. 6; Acts vii. 57; Jer. xlviii. 27; Gen. xxi. 9; Jude xvi.

Q. Though we may not raise a false report, yet may we not repeat it after hearing it?

A. No; for that is to spread it. Wherefore though a false report be laid at your foot, we should be unwilling to take it up, Psal. xv. 3.

Q. Ought we not to discourage all backbiters and tale-bearers?

A. Yes; for such "sow discord among brethren, and separate chief friends." And we may suspect, that those that bring such tales to us, will be ready also to take some away, Prov. vi. 19; xvii. 9; xxv. 3.

QUESTION LXXIX.

Q. Which is the tenth commandment?

A. The tenth commandment is, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's."

QUESTION LXXX.

Q. What is required in the tenth commandment?

A. The tenth commandment requireth full contentment with our own condition, with a right and charitable frame of spirit toward our neighbour and all that is his.

Q. In what verse of the New Testament have we this commandment summed up and explained?

A. In Heb. xiii. 5, "Let your conversation be without covetousness, and be content with such things as ye have."

Q. When the answer bears that the commandment requires full contentment with our condition, doth it mean that we should be content to live in a sinful condition?

A. No; for God quarrels with sinners for such a contentment, Rev. iii. 17.

Q. Doth it mean that we should be insensible or unconcerned under an afflicted condition?

A. No; for God is displeased with this too, Jer. v. 3; Hos. vii. 9.

Q. What is the meaning of it then?

A. That we should be well satisfied with that portion of the necessities and comforts of this life, which God in his wisdom sees fit to bestow upon us, without grudging or repining at his will, but freely acquiescing in God's determination, as that which is best and most fit for us.

Q. Who are those that attain to this state of contentment?

A. Those who have their spirits suited to their condition.

Q. Are not those the happiest persons in the world?

A. Yes; for they have a mercy that is better than the greatest fulness of earthly things.

Q. May a man as soon attain to this happiness of contentment with a little of the world, as with much of it?

A. Yes; for the apostle Paul, who had little of it, was well contented with his little; and, upon the occasion of a small supply sent him from Philippi, he saith, "I have all, and abound; I am full," Phil. iv. 11, 18. Whereas Ahab, who had a kingdom, was full of vexation and discontent for want of Naboth's vineyard; and so was Haman, though loaded with riches and honours, for want of a bow from Mordecai, 1 Kings xxi. 4—6; Esther v. 11—13.

Q. How do believers arrive at such contentment with a little of the world?

A. They learn it of God, who teacheth them to believe and think upon their own unworthiness; to consider that their Lord had no where to lay his head; that God will give them what is best for them, and that their portion in Christ and eternal life is large enough for all their wants.

Q. How is it that riches do not afford contentment to the men of this world?

A. Besides that the world is but vanity, there is a secret curse attending their enjoyments, which blasts the comfort of them; hence the earthly heart is, like the grave, never satisfied, but still would have more, Eccl. v. 10; Prov. xxx. 15, 16.

Q. Is it covetousness for a man to desire more of this world than what he hath?

A. No; if he desire it for good ends, with submission to God's will, and use honest means to get it.

Q. What then is the covetousness here forbidden?

A. It is to desire the good things which another enjoys, and to grudge at their having of them.

Q. May not a man wish for the estate of another, if he design to do more good with it than he doth?

A. No; for the heart is most deceitful, and its purposes variable: hence he is called a "fool that trusteth in his own heart," Prov. xxviii. 26; Jer. xvii. 9.

Q. Are they not strangers then to their own hearts, who think they would be contented if they had a little more of the world than what they have?

A. Yes; for the desire of the heart enlarges with the estate.

Q. Are not those far wiser, who are desirous to obtain the true riches of saving grace, and the promises of the covenant?

A. Yes; for these will abide with them, when other riches will make themselves wings, and fly away from them, and even then when they stand most in need of help.

Q. How may those who are poor attain to contentment with their lot, and be kept from covetousness?

A. By placing their chief happiness in the enjoyment of God; and by considering that their worldly condition is of God's carving, and that they have more than they deserve; that many better have been in worse circumstances; that many are the worse for riches, but few or none the better; and that as they brought nothing into this world, so they shall carry nothing out, Psal. xvi. 5, 6; Hab. iii. 17, 18; Gen. xxxii. 10; Job i. 21; Heb. xi. 38; Eccl. v. 13; 1 Tim. vi. 7, 8.

Q. Is not to be truly godly the short way to contentment?

A. Yes; for godliness is that unto which only true contentment is annexed, 1 Tim. vi. 6. Christ hath purchased this grace unto all who believe in him.

Q. Have not the godly poor some special arguments to make them easy under their straits?

A. Yes; by considering that God designs these very straits for their good, to keep them humble and depending; that he sees riches would be a snare to draw their hearts away from God; that it is rare to see a rich man eminent in grace; that God hath been far kinder to them in giving them a portion in his well-ordered covenant, a goodly heritage, which is infinitely more excellent and durable than any other.

Q. How shall the rich attain contentment in their full condition?

A. By seeking this grace from God, and not expecting happiness from the things of time; by studying to employ their riches for the glory of God, and the good of others; by keeping still in mind that God in Christ is the soul's portion, that the world cannot give them true comfort, that it cannot lengthen out their lives, nor profit them at the hour of death, Luke xii. 15; Psal. lxii. 10; Prov. xi. 4; 2 Cor. xi. 7, 8.

Q. How shall these be content and easy who are reduced from a prosperous state to low circumstances?

A. By considering that God hath absolute dominion over us, hath right to do with his own what he will; that he taketh nothing from us but what he gave, or rather lent to us for a time; that he is holy, just, and wise, and knows what state is fittest for us.

Q. What are the advantages of this grace of contentment?

A. It produceth much inward peace, composeth the soul for duty, calms the spirit in adversity, and preserves from many temptations, snares, and sins, which those that are discontented fall into, such as fretting, murmuring, passion, bitterness, envy, lying, stealing, injustice, swearing rashly or falsely, and many others.

Q. What is meant by the right and charitable frame of spirit toward our neighbour and all that is his, which this commandment requireth?

A. It is to be kindly affectioned to others, to wish their good, to rejoice in their prosperity, and to be sorry for their afflictions, Rom. xii. 10, 15; 3 John 2, 3; Heb. xiii. 3.

QUESTION LXXXI.

Q. What is forbidden in the tenth commandment?

A. The tenth commandment forbiddeth all discontentment with our own estate, envying or grieving at the good of our neighbour, and all inordinate motions and affections to any thing that is his.

Q. After God had forbidden the sins of stealing and adultery, in the preceding commandments, why doth he add, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, nor his wife?"

A. To assure us of the spiritual extent and meaning of the law, and that it forbids the very first motions or risings of sin in the heart; the consideration whereof opened Paul's eyes to see his vileness through indwelling sin, though he was free of gross vices, Rom. vii. 7, "I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet."

Q. What is the first sin which the answer mentions as here forbidden?

A. Discontentment with our estate, which is the sin of both rich and poor.

Q. Whence do men's discontents with their condition arise?

A. From pride, love to the world, and distrust of God's providence.

Q. How doth it arise from pride?

A. Because it appears that they who are discontented with God's carving, have too high thoughts of themselves: they either think they deserve better at God's hand, or that they could have ordered matters better for themselves than God hath done.

Q. What are the evils of discontentment?

A. Besides those mentioned a little before, it makes men unthankful for mercies, unfit for duties, uneasy to their relations and neighbours; it breeds strifes, debates, law-suits, rebellions, and murders; it robs men of the comfort of their lives, makes their crosses heavier, and provokes God to prolong and add to them.

Q. What is the second sin here forbidden?

A. Envy, which is a secret discontentedness at the prosperous state of others, or a grudging or grieving at their wealth, qualifications, or honours.

Q. What are the evils of this sin of envy?

A. It is heart-murder, and a sin against all reason; yea, it is devilish to be a man's enemy for no other reason but because God is kind to him. It is a quarrelling with God's wisdom and goodness; it is a rottenness to the bones; it produeth confusion and every evil work, Mat. xx. 15; Prov. xiv. 30; James iii. 16.

Q. What are those inordinate motions and affections to the things of our neighbour, which are here forbidden?

A. All desires after these things which we cannot have by lawful means, or without wronging our neighbour; and all inclinations to coveting, Col. iii. 5.

QUESTION LXXXII.

Q. Is any man able perfectly to keep the commandments of God?

A. No mere man, since the fall, is able in this life perfectly to keep the commandments of God, but doth daily break them, in thought, word, and deed.

Q. Why is it said in the answer, "No mere man?"

A. To except the man Christ Jesus, who did perfectly keep God's commandments.

Q. Was not Christ a mere man?

A. No; he was both God and man.

Q. Why is it said, "since the fall?"

A. To except our first parents when in the estate of innocence, who then were able to keep God's commandments perfectly.

Q. Why is it said, "is able in this life?"

A. To except the saints in heaven, who are perfectly able to do it there.

Q. Can no saint on earth attain to perfection in keeping God's law?

A. No; for "there is not a just man upon earth that doeth good and sinneth not," Eccl. vii. 20; 1 John i. 8, 10.

Q. How comes it to be so?

A. Because the best saints here are but renewed in part, and they have remains of corruption in them, which fight against the spiritual and renewed part, Gal. v. 17. And we find the best of scripture saints acknowledging this, and complaining of their imperfections, Job ix. 2, 3; Psal. ix. 13; exxx. 3; cxliii. 2; Isa. lxiv. 6; Dan. ix. 5; Rom. vii. 18, &c.

Q. Are not Noah, Job, and Hezekiah, called perfect men? Gen. vi. 9; Job i. 8; 2 Kings xx. 3.

A. That is not meant of an absolute perfection, or a perfection of degrees; but only of the perfection of sincerity, or a perfection of parts; as the body of an infant is reckoned perfect, though it be not come to the highest perfection. And that the scripture doth not mean absolute perfection, is evident from its recording the sins and imperfections of these very persons which are called perfect, Gen. ix. 21; Job iii. 1, 3; 2 Chron. xxxii. 25.

Q. What is meant by sincerity, or a perfection of parts?

A. A sincere or upright aiming at conformity to the will of God in all things, and a constant pressing on for further degrees of holiness.

Q. Doth not David say, "Judge me, O Lord, according to thy righteousness?" Psal. vii. 8.

A. He speaks there, not of the righteousness of his person, but of the righteousness of his cause, which he defended against his adversaries, and to which he appealed.

Q. Doth not the apostle say, whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin? 1 John iii. 9.

A. The sense is, that the regenerate do not commit sin as they once did, with delight, or full consent of the will; they do not allow sin to reign in them. But that they are not without sin, is evident from 1 John i. 8.

Q. Why doth Christ require us to be perfect, Mat. v. 48, if we cannot attain to it?

A. 1. To let us know what he hath right to demand of us. 2. To humble us, and drive us to Christ for perfect righteousness. 3. To teach us to desire, aim at, and press toward perfection in holiness.

Q. In what respect are we guilty of breaking the commandments of God?

A. We are guilty of it daily, in thought, word, and deed.

Q. Doth God look upon thoughts of sin as breaches of his law?

A. Yes, Gen. viii. 21; Mat. v. 28; Jer. iv. 4.

QUESTION LXXXIII.

Q. Are all transgressions of the law equally heinous?

A. Some sins in themselves, and by reason of several aggravations, are more heinous in the sight of God than others.

Q. Are all sins equal?

A. No, some are more heinous than others.

Q. What is that for sins to be heinous?

A. It is to be more hateful and offensive to a holy God, than others are.

Q. How doth it appear that some sins are more offensive to God than others?

A. From these things: 1. The sin-offering under the law was to be greater than the trespass-offering. 2. Some sins are more severely threatened and punished than others. 3. Some sins are declared not capable of pardon, Lev. ix. 3; Mat. xxiii. 14; xii. 31.

Q. Why is it said in the answer that some sins are more heinous in the sight of God than others?

A. To teach us by what rule we should judge of the greatness of sins, seeing many are apt to make light of that which is heinous before God, who certainly is the proper judge in this matter.

Q. What is it that makes some sins more heinous than others?

A. Some sins are more heinous in themselves, or in their own nature; and some by reason of certain aggravations attending them.

Q. What are those sins which are more heinous in their own nature than others?

A. Sins against the first table of the law, or those which are committed more immediately against God, are more heinous than sins against the second table, or those which are immediately against man; as, for instance, sacrilege is more heinous than theft, idolatry than adultery, blasphemy against God, than defaming of our neighbour, 1 Sam. ii. 25.

Q. Are not some of the sins against the first table more heinous than others?

A. Yes; and we find atheism and idolatry marked out as sins of the greatest magnitude, Exod. v. 2; Jer. xlv. 4.

Q. Are not some of the sins against the second table more heinous than others, in their own nature?

A. Yes; and murder is noted for a most heinous and crying sin; and so is oppression, especially of the widow and fatherless, Gen. iv. 10; Exod. xxii. 23.

Q. Are heinous and crying sins capable of forgiveness?

A. Yes; upon true faith and repentance, Isa. i. 18; 1 Cor. vi. 11.

Q. What are the only fountains of pardon which sinners must look to?

A. The free grace of God, and the meritorious blood of Jesus Christ, Luke vii. 42; Eph. i. 7; 1 John i. 7.

Q. What are the most heinous of all sins in the world?

A. The sin against the Holy Ghost, being a sin unto death, which is not forgiven, Mat. xii. 31; 1 John v. 16.

Q. What is the sin against the Holy Ghost?

A. It may be described, an apostacy, or turning from God, and his truths and ways, after clear illumination and a fair profession; and sinning wilfully, with hatred, malice, and despite, against Christ and his people, and continuing impenitent therein to the end, Mat. xii. 31, 32; Heb. vi. 4—6; x. 26, 29.

Q. What are the aggravations which make some sins more heinous than others?

A. They are the particular circumstances which attend them, that make them greater than otherwise they would be. And from scripture we find sins receive their aggravations: 1. From the persons offending. 2. From the parties offended. 3. From the means against which sins are committed. 4. From the manner of committing sin. 5. From the time of sinning. 6. From the place where sins are committed.

Q. How is sin aggravated from the person offending?

A. Sin is aggravated, if the person guilty be of age and experience, or be eminent for his gifts, profession, station, or office in the world; so that his example may encourage or draw others into sin, 2 Sam. xii. 14; 1 Kings xiv. 16; Mic. iii. 5; Rom. ii. 24; Gal. ii. 13.

Q. Are not the sins of Christians more heinous than the sins of heathens?—A. Yes.

Q. Are not the sins of those children who have had religious education and examples, more heinous than the sins of others?—A. Yes.

Q. How is sin aggravated from the parties offended?

A. Sin is aggravated, when it is committed immediately against God and his perfections, against Christ and his grace, against the Holy Spirit and his operations; against men in eminent stations, our superiors and friends to whom we are much obliged; against the souls of men, and those who are dear to Christ, Psal. li. 4; Rom. ii. 4; Mat. xxi. 38; Heb. xii. 25; Eph. iv. 30; Acts vii. 51; Num. xii. 8; Isa. iii. 5; Prov. xxx. 17; Psal. xli. 9; Ezek. xiii. 19; Mat. xviii. 6; 1 Cor. viii. 12.

Q. How is sin aggravated from the means against which it is committed?

A. Sin is much aggravated, when it is committed against a clear and lively dispensation of gospel light and love, against the most gracious calls and offers, against the light of nature, and the convictions of conscience: against mercies, threatenings, and judgments; against counsel and admonitions; against long patience and good examples; against church-censures and civil punishments; against prayers and purposes, vows, and covenants, Mat. xi. 21, 23; John xv. 22; Rom. i. 26; Dan. v. 22; Deut. xxxii. 6; Amos iv. 9; Jer. v. 3; Prov. xxix. 1; Tit. iii. 10; Prov. xxiii. 35; Psal. lxxviii. 36, 37; Eccl. v. 4; Lev. xxvi. 25.

Q. How is sin aggravated from the manner of committing it?

A. When a man sins wilfully, and without temptation, presumptuously, and without fear, deliberately and with contrivance, obstinately and with resolution, impudently and with boasting, willingly and with delight, maliciously and with despite, customarily and with continuance, openly and with contempt. Likewise sin is much aggravated, when a man is guilty of doing that which he condemns in others, of relapsing into sin after repentance, of doing evil under a cloak of religion, or of teaching and encouraging others to sin, Jer. vi. 16; Num. xv. 30; Psal. xxxvi. 4; Psal. lli. 1; Prov. ii. 14; Isa. lvii. 17; Zech. vii. 11; 2 Pet. i. 20; Rom. i. 32; ii. 21; Rev. ii. 14.

Q. How is sin aggravated from the time of sinning?

A. Sin becomes more heinous, when it is committed upon the Sabbath-day, or when the person ought to have been at divine worship, or after solemn ordinances and engagements to be the Lord's, or in time of affliction, when the Lord is calling to humiliation, Ezek. xxiii. 38; Isa. xxii. 12, 13; lviii. 3; Num. xxv. 6; 2 Chron. xxviii. 22; Isa. i. 1.

Q. How may sin be aggravated from the place of sinning?

A. When it is committed in a land of light, in a place dedicated to the worship of God, in a place of gracious deliverances, or in a public place before others, who may thereby be tempted and ensnared, Isa. xxvi. 10; 1 Sam. ii. 22; Psal. cvi. 7; 2 Sam. xvi. 22.

QUESTION LXXXIV.

Q. What doth every sin deserve?

A. Every sin deserveth God's wrath and curse, both in this life and that which is to come?

Q. What is meant by God's wrath and curse due to sin?

A. Those dreadful punishments, which are the effects of the sin-revenging justice of God, and the condemning sentence of his broken law, both here and hereafter.

Q. Doth the least sin deserve eternal punishment?—A. Yes.

Q. How is that evident?

A. Because every sin is an offence done against an infinitely holy and righteous God, and his just law; wherefore God's justice demands infinite satisfaction for it, Gal. iii. 10; Rev. vi. 23; Ezek. xviii. 4.

Q. How doth it appear that there is so much evil in every sin?

A. Because every sin in its own nature is a walking contrary to God, and a contemning of him who is infinitely good: it strikes against his sovereignty, his infinite power, his wisdom, his goodness, and holiness, Lev. xxvi. 40; Psal. x. 13; James ii. 10, 11; 1 Cor. x. 22; Jer. ii. 5; Hab. i. 13.

Q. Is there no ground for the Popish distinction of sins venial and mortal?

A. No; for every sin in its own nature is mortal and deadly; and though every sin be venial or pardonable through Christ, yet in itself it deserves eternal punishment, Rom. vi. 23; Deut. xxvii. 26; Rom. i. 18.

Q. Is there not more evil in the least sin, than the sufferings of a finite creature can make atonement for?

A. Yes; and therefore the sufferings of the damned, being never satisfactory, must be eternal.

Q. Cannot the least sin be expiated by any thing but the blood of Christ?

A. No, Heb. ix. 22.

QUESTION LXXXV.

Q. What doth God require of us, that we may escape his wrath and curse due to us for sin?

A. To escape the wrath and curse of God due to us for sin, God requireth of us faith in Jesus Christ, repentance unto life, with the diligent use of all the outward means whereby Christ communicateth to us the benefits of redemption.

Q. How know you that the wrath of God is due to us for every sin?

A. Because the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all unrighteousness of men; and every sin is a contempt of an infinite God, Rom. i. 18; Psal. x. 13.

Q. Hath God revealed any way for escaping that wrath which is due to us for sin?

A. Yes; namely, the way of faith and repentance, with a diligent use of all the means of grace.

Q. Doth God require faith, repentance, and the use of means, in order to satisfy for sin, and purchase salvation to us?

A. No; for that would be to make a Saviour of our duties, and to render Christ's death in vain, Gal. ii. 21.

Q. Why then doth God require these things of us?

A. He requires them only as means for applying the purchase of Christ's death, and communicating the grace he hath merited unto us, Luke xxiv. 47; Rom. i. 16, 17; Luke xxi. 36.

Q. Are faith, repentance, and other duties, the conditions of our salvation?

A. Yes; they may be called so, if by conditions we understand no more but that they are necessary means of our salvation, as being appointed by God for applying the righteousness of Christ, which is the only meritorious and pleadable condition of our salvation.

Q. Could not God save us by Christ's righteousness, without faith, repentance, or any other means?

A. Whatever God might do in his absolute sovereignty, it ought to satisfy us, that God hath expressly revealed his will in this matter, and hath declared that it is through the use of these means only that he will communicate to us the benefits of redemption; and this makes them absolutely necessary to all who expect salvation by Christ: and indeed it would not be for the honour of God to pardon or save any that go on in sin, and neglect Christ and his worship.

QUESTION LXXXVI.

Q. What is faith in Jesus Christ?

A. Faith in Jesus Christ is a saving grace, whereby we receive and rest upon him alone for salvation, as he is offered to us in the gospel.

Q. Is not faith taken in different senses in scripture?

A. Yes; sometimes it is taken for the doctrine of faith, and sometimes for the grace of faith.

Q. How is it otherwise distinguished?

A. Into historical faith, the faith of miracles, and saving faith.

Q. Is it saving faith for a man to believe that there is a God, or that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of sinners, or that the Bible is true?

A. No; for that is only historical faith, and the devils come this length, James ii. 19.

Q. What is historical faith?

A. It is the assent of the understanding unto the truths revealed in the word, whereby a man believes and gives credit to them as he doth to the truths of a history. So did these, Mat xiii. 20; John ii. 23; Acts viii. 13; xxvi. 27.

Q. What more is there in saving faith than for a man to assent or give credit to the divine testimony?

A. If the assent be strong and full, it will indeed bring along with it the other acts of faith; that is, if a man not only assent to the things revealed in the gospel as true, but also firmly believe that they are as valuable and excellent as they are held forth to be, then he cannot but close with them. But if our assent only regards the truth of the things proposed, and not their goodness and suitableness to us, it is not true and saving: for, where faith is true, there is not only an assent of the mind to the verity of gospel-truths, but also a consent of the heart unto them, as worthy of all acceptance, 1 Tim. i. 15; Rom. x. 10.

Q. What is the faith of miracles?

A. It is a peculiar confidence in the power of God, for producing of miraculous effects, which many had in the first times of the gospel both actively and passively. Some had faith to heal, and others to be healed; and both these were sometimes found in persons void of saving faith, as in Judas and the unthankful lepers.

Q. Why is faith in the answer called a grace?

A. Because it is God's free gift without any deserving in us, Eph. ii. 8.

Q. Why is it called a saving grace?

A. Because there is no salvation without it, and all those who have it shall be saved, Mark xvi. 16.

Q. How is it that faith doth save us?

A. Not by virtue of any worth in faith, or of its being a deed or work of ours; but because faith is the grace that takes hold of the righteousness of Christ, by which only we are justified and saved.

Q. Why then are we said to be justified and saved by faith?

A. Because faith is the instrument and means of our justification and salvation.

Q. Is not faith the fruit of Christ's purchase?

A. Yes: for it is given in the behalf of Christ to believers; he sends his Spirit to work faith, and hence he is called both the "Author and Finisher of faith," Phil. i. 29; Eph. i. 17, 19; Heb. xii. 2.

Q. What mean you by the righteousness of Christ, which is the matter and ground of our justification before God?

A. Christ doing or dying, or all that he did and suffered for us as our Surety and Cautioner. See before, Question xxxiii. p. 643, 644.

Q. Is it the same righteousness then, which we find sometimes called the righteousness of God, and sometimes the righteousness of faith? Rom. x. 3, 6.

A. Yes, it is the very same; and is called the righteousness of God, because it is of God's devising and of God's performing, he being God that wrought it out for us. It is called the righteousness of faith, because it is by or through faith that the righteousness of Christ becomes ours; and hence we find it sometimes called the "righteousness of God by faith," Phil. iii. 9.

Q. What is the proper object of faith?

A. The general object of faith is the whole word of God; faith assents and consents to all its truths, offers, commands, promises, and threatenings: but the special object of faith is Christ and his Surety-righteousness; for it is to this the penitent soul looks as the only ground of his justification before God, 2 Cor. ii. 2.

Q. What are the principal acts of justifying or saving faith?

A. There are two mentioned in the answer, namely, receiving and resting upon Christ.

Q. What are we to understand by these two acts of faith?

A. 1. To receive Christ is to make choice of Christ, and embrace the offer of him as our Surety, and to consent with a hearty approbation to the gospel way of justification and salvation through Christ. 2. To rest upon Christ is to adventure our all upon a crucified Jesus, by trusting in him alone, and laying the full weight and stress of our souls and our whole salvation upon him, as the only foundation and ground-stone laid in Zion for perishing sinners to rest on, Psal. ii. 12; 1 Pet. ii. 6.

Q. Why is faith said to rest upon Christ alone in the answer?

A. To show that sinners must not rest partly upon Christ and partly upon their own doings for salvation, but upon Jesus Christ alone.

Q. Doth not the soul's resting on Christ import that it is laden and burdened when it comes to Christ?

A. Yes; for the soul is burdened, not only with the fears of wrath, but also with the guilt and pollution of sin, and with the power of indwelling corruption, which it longs to get rid of.

Q. What is there in Christ to give rest to the burdened soul?

A. There is in him a fullness of merit to expiate guilt, satisfy justice, and obtain cleansing and purity to the soul; yea, there is a fullness of the Spirit in him, to renew and sanctify the natures of all who come to him.

Q. Must not we by faith receive and rest on Christ in all his three offices, of Prophet, Priest, and King?

A. Yes, we must receive and rest on Christ, 1. As our Priest, by renouncing all confidence in our own doings, and being content to be justified by Christ's sacrifice and righteousness only. 2. We must receive and rest upon Christ, as our Prophet, by renouncing all our carnal reasonings, and submitting to be taught by Christ, and to learn and believe according to the revelation of his word. 3. We must receive and rest upon Christ as our King, by renouncing our own wills and inclinations, and subjecting our whole man, hearts and wills, to Christ, to be inclined and ruled by his Spirit, according to the directions of his word.

Q. Hath saving faith any other act besides these of receiving and resting upon Jesus Christ?

A. Yes; for saving faith doth also receive and believe the whole word of God and that because of the divine testimony; and acteth differently upon the several parts thereof, giving credit to its histories and prophecies, yielding obedience to its commands, trembling at its threatenings, and embracing its promises as infallibly true and certain: though still the receiving and resting upon Christ, as tendered in the gospel promises for salvation, be the chief and main acts of saving faith, John iv. 42; 1 John v. 10; Acts xxiv. 14; Rom. xvi. 26; Isa. lxvi. 2; Heb. xl. 12; Isa. xxvi. 3.

Q. For what ends are we by faith to receive and rest upon Christ?

A. For salvation, that is, for our complete salvation, not only from wrath, but from the filth, power, and being of sin, and all the effects of it; so that it includes justification, sanctification, and eternal glory.

Q. What is the ground upon which we are warranted to receive and rest upon Christ for salvation?

A. Upon this, that he is offered to us in the gospel.

Q. Unto whom is Christ offered in the gospel?

A. Not to believers only, but to all who hear the gospel, even the greatest sinners, Mark xvi. 15; Rom. x. 18; Isa. xlv. 22; xlv. 12.

Q. By whom is Christ offered to us in the gospel?

A. By his father, by himself, by his Spirit, and by his ministers, Mat. xxii. 2; 3; Isa. lxv. 1; Rev. iii. 20, 22; Mark xvi. 15.

Q. Upon what terms is Christ offered unto us?

A. He is offered, 1. Freely, without money or price, or without regard to any good thing in us, but merely to our need, Isa. lv. 1; lxv. 1. 2. Christ is offered to us wholly and undividedly, in all his offices, of Prophet, Priest, and King; in all which we must receive him as before mentioned.

Q. Do any refuse Christ who have him offered to them?

A. Yes; the most part refuse him, John i. 11; Isa. liii. 1.

Q. Who are they that will be reckoned refusers of Christ?

A. All who do not believe the report of the gospel, and embrace the offer made unto them.

Q. Is saving faith a sure proof of our being elected to eternal life?

A. Yes; and therefore it is called the faith of God's elect; and it is said, "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed," Tit. i. 1; Acts xiii. 48.

Q. Why is faith called precious in scripture? 1 Pet. i. 7; 2 Pet. i. 1.

A. Because it is honoured of God to be the instrument of our justification, to be the eye that discerns Christ, the hand that takes hold of him, and the bond of our union with him, it is the spring of the other graces, and sets them a-work; it is the means of our spiritual life and supplies, and of our peace and joy, Rom. v. 1—3, &c.; Eph. iii. 17; Gal. ii. 20; Rom. xv. 13.

Q. Why doth God put such respect upon faith above the other graces?

A. Because faith puts the highest honour upon his beloved Son, and approves of God's device of saving us through him; it strips the creature of all ground of boasting, and highly exalts free grace; it gives God all the glory of our salvation, which is most acceptable to him, Mat. xvii. 5; 1 Pet. ii. 7; Rom. iii. 27; iv. 16; Eph. ii. 7, 8.

Q. By what marks may we know if we have saving faith?

A. True faith produceth a high esteem of Christ, and worketh by love; it softens and purifies the heart; it vents itself much in prayer and good works, and looses the heart from earthly things, 1 Pet. ii. 7; Gal. v. 6; Mark ix. 24; Acts xv. 9; Heb. iv. 14, 16; James ii. 18; 2 Cor. iv. 18.

Q. Have all believers saving faith in the same degree?

A. No; for some are weak, while others are strong.

Q. How doth the weakness of faith discover itself?

A. In much doubting and staggering at the promises, in depending upon the means more than Christ; in living much by sense, in distrusting of God, and fainting in the day of adversity.

Q. How may we know if there be faith in reality amidst such weaknesses and signs of unbelief?

A. It is a hopeful evidence if the soul in the meantime be mourning for its unbelief, crying for more faith, and looking sincerely to Christ for righteousness and strength.

Q. What are the evidences of a strong faith?

A. Where faith is strong, the soul will be aiming at the Redeemer's honour in all its actions. The love of Christ will constrain more powerfully to bate sin, and live godly, than the fear of hell or hope of reward can do: the soul will rejoice in tribulation, and be much in the exercise of praise; it will trust God in time of danger, and look through all discouragements to the faithfulness of God, and rely upon him.

QUESTION LXXXVII.

Q. What is repentance unto life?

A. Repentance unto life is a saving grace, whereby a sinner, out of a true sense of his sin, and apprehension of the mercy of God in Christ, doth, with grief and hatred of his sin, turn from it unto God, with full purpose of, and endeavour after new obedience.

Q. Why is repentance called a grace, and a saving grace?

A. See the answers before concerning faith.

Q. Why is it here called repentance unto life?

A. So true repentance is called, Acts xi. 18, because it is a necessary means to attain eternal life, and to distinguish it from the sorrow of the world that worketh death, 2 Cor. vii. 10.

Q. What is that sorrow of the world?

A. It is that which we call a legal repentance, that hath no good effect; being a sorrow only for some gross sin, for fear of wrath, but not a sorrow for all sin as it dishonours God, such as gospel-penitents have.

Q. Can a man by his own natural powers attain to gospel-repentance?

A. No; for the heart by nature is like a stone, and none but the Spirit of God can take it away, and give a heart of flesh, according to Ezek. xxxvi. 26.

Q. What are the parts of true repentance, held forth in the answer?

A. There are six: 1. A true sense of sin. 2. An apprehension of the mercy of God in Christ. 3. A grief for sin. 4. A hatred of sin. 5. A turning from sin. 6. A turning to God, and the ways of new obedience.

Q. What is the true sense of sin, which is necessary to repentance unto life?

A. It is a heart-affecting discovery of the guilt, malignity, and aggravations of sin, our undone state by it, and our inability to deliver ourselves from it, which wounds and distresses the conscience, and fills the mind with perplexity and restlessness, until it can see some ground of hope, Psal. xxxviii. 3, 4; Acts ii. 37.

Q. Wherefore is such a sense of sin necessary in penitents?

A. To make sin hateful, and Christ desirable in their eyes; for it is only such sick souls who will value the physician, Mat. ix. 12, 13.

Q. Are there not many who may be affected with a sense of sin, who never become true penitents?

A. Yes; there is frequently conviction and trouble for sin, without conversion.

Q. What is the difference between the convictions and trouble of unconverted persons, and those of true penitents?

A. The convictions and trouble of the one are only for some gross sins, arising from a natural conscience, and fears of hell; they are of short continuance, and are cured by natural means: but the convictions and trouble of the other are for all sins whatsoever, inward and outward, secret and open; they arise from the Holy Spirit, a view of the evil of sin, and the injury done to God thereby: they are abiding, and are only cured by the blood of Christ.

Q. What mean you by the apprehension of the mercy of God, which is needful to true repentance?

A. That it is needful to bring a lost sinner to true repentance, that he discover that God is merciful, ready to forgive, and willing to be reconciled to repenting and returning prodigals.

Q. Why is this needful?

A. Because, without it, a deep sense of his sin is ready to overwhelm the soul with despair, as it did Judas.

Q. After what way and manner is the mercy of God discoverable to guilty sinners?

A. Only in and through Christ the Mediator, who hath given satisfaction to the justice of God for sin.

Q. Can then the general goodness of God, or his absolute mercy, be any relief to convinced sinners?

A. No; because God is also infinite in justice and holiness, and therefore must be a consuming fire to sinners out of Christ.

Q. What is that true grief for sin which is necessary to true repentance?

A. It is a hearty sorrow and mourning of the soul for committing such an abominable thing as sin is, and that mainly because sin hath contemned and dishonoured God, it hath crucified Jesus Christ, it hath grieved the Holy Spirit, it hath deformed and defiled our souls, it hath disabled us from glorifying God, and debarred us from communion with him.

Q. What is that hatred of sin which is necessary in true repentance?

A. It is an inward abhorrence of sin, as the most abominable thing, and a loathing of ourselves because of it, Jer. xxxi. 19.

Q. Can any who hate sin make a sport of it?

A. No.

Q. Whence is it that a true penitent hates sin?

A. Because sin is most hateful to God; it is the murderer of Christ, and an enemy to his own soul.

Q. What kind of hatred doth the true penitent bear to sin?

A. 1. It is a deep and implacable hatred, which makes him aim at the utter ruin and extirpation of sin in his soul. 2. It is an universal hatred; for seeing the true penitent hates sin as sin, he must hate every sin, whether secret or open, pleasant or profitable, in himself or in others, Rom. vii. 24; Psal. exix. 128.

Q. Is not the soul's turning from sin an essential part of true repentance?—A. Yes.

Q. What kind of turning must it be?

A. 1. It must be a turning from sin in heart, with a real grief for it, and hatred of it, Psal. xxxviii. 18; Ezek. xxxvi. 31. 2. It must be an universal turning from sin, both in the heart and in the life, without reserving of one known sin, Ezek. xviii. 31. 3. It must be attended with turning to God, and the ways of new obedience, Isa. i. 16, 17; lv. 7.

Q. Is turning from sin always a sure sign of true repentance?

A. Not always; for we read of some who turn, but not to the Most High; they may cease to do evil, and not learn to do well; they may turn from one sin to another, from profaneness to superstition, or from presumption to despair, Hos. vii. 16; Jer. iv. 1.

Q. Is not turning from sin, when it is followed with turning to the Lord, a certain evidence of true repentance?

A. Yes; for these two are the very essential parts of it.

Q. What is this "turning to the Lord," which is essential to true repentance?

A. It imports, 1. Our applying to God in Christ for pardon of sin, and cleansing from it. 2. Our making choice of God for our God. 3. Our having the outgoings of our hearts and affections to him, as our portion and happiness. 4. Our giving up ourselves to his service and obedience, Isa. lv. 7; Jer. iii. 22; Isa. xxvi. 8; Psal. exix. 57—59.

Q. How may we know if our "turning from sin to God" be true and real?

A. When it is accompanied with a full purpose of, and sincere endeavours after new obedience; for purposes to continue in sin, or negligence in God's service, are inconsistent with true repentance.

Q. Why is the patient believer's obedience called "new obedience?"

A. 1. Because it springs from new principles, faith, and love. 2. It is done for new ends, not for worldly interest, but to please God, and to advance his glory. 3. It is performed in a new manner, to wit, with the heart, and by faith looking to Christ for strength to do it, and for righteousness to make it acceptable to God.

Q. What may we think of their repentance, who live in the neglect of duty, or in the practice of sin afterwards?

A. We may think that their profession of repentance hath not been sincere.

Q. Can any man look for pardon or salvation without repentance?

A. No; for Christ hath expressly told us, "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish," Luke xiii. 3.

Q. May a man delay his repentance until he come to a death-bed?

A. By no means; for many die very suddenly, neither have we power of ourselves to repent when we will, and men turn hardened in sin by continuing in it.

Q. Is there room for repentance for old sinners, and those who have been notoriously wicked?

A. Yes; for if they repent, God hath said he will abundantly pardon, Isa. lv. 7. And we have instances of his doing so, 1 Tim. i. 13—15.

Q. But how shall we attain to true repentance?

A. We must cry earnestly to God for it, and plead his promises of giving it to those who ask it of him, James i. 5; Ezek xxxvi. 36, 37. And we must look frequently to Christ crucified, whom we have pierced with our sins, Zech. xii. 10.

Q. Is it not said of Esau, that he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears? Heb. xii. 17.

A. It is not said there, that Esau sought the grace of repentance from God to his own soul, but only that he sought of his father Isaac that he might repent of giving the blessing to his brother Jacob; which indeed he could not obtain: but it had been well for him, had he been as careful to seek God's blessing as his father's.

Q. Hath not repentance several counterfeits, which we ought to beware of?

A. Yes: for Saul confessed his sin, Ahab had outward expressions of mourning, Judas and Felix had great convictions and terrors; but none of these turned from their sins to God in Christ for mercy.

Q. Do we need repentance only at our first turning to God?

A. Believers, through their whole lives, have need to be daily repenting and making application to Christ's blood, because they are daily sinning by infirmity, and falling short of their duty.

QUESTION LXXXVIII.

Q. What are the outward means, whereby Christ communicateth to us the benefits of redemption?

A. The outward and ordinary means whereby Christ communicateth to us the benefits of redemption, are, his ordinances, especially the word, sacraments, and prayer; all which are made effectual to the elect for salvation.

Q. What do you mean by Christ's ordinances here?

A. All those means of grace and salvation which he hath appointed in his word.

Q. May not ordinances of man's appointment be made use of for our spiritual benefit?

A. No; for these the Spirit of God calls wil-worship and vain things, upon which we cannot expect his blessing, Col. ii. 23; Mat. xv. 9.

Q. What are these benefits of redemption which are communicated to us in the use of Christ's ordinances?

A. They are many; such as knowledge, conviction, conversion, faith, repentance, pardon, peace, spiritual life, strength, &c.

Q. What are the ordinances of Christ, by which he communicates these benefits to us?

A. They are the word, the sacraments, prayer, praise, a gospel ministry, church government and discipline, religious fasting, vowing, conference, meditation, self-examination, &c.

Q. Why are these ordinances called means of grace, or of salvation?

A. Because by them, or through them, the Holy Spirit conveys grace into his people's souls, and thereby promotes their salvation.

Q. Which of these ordinances doth he chiefly make use of for that end?

A. Especially the word, sacraments, and prayer; but not excluding the rest from being also useful that way.

Q. Why are these three called the outward means of salvation?

A. To distinguish them from meditation, faith, repentance, and such inward means.

Q. Why are they called the ordinary means?

A. Because they are God's common and usual way of conveying grace.

Q. Doth not God sometimes make use of extraordinary means for converting sinners?

A. Yes; as, in the primitive times, he frequently made use of the miraculous gift of tongues, healing, casting out devils, inflicting of judgments, and sometimes voices from heaven, and earthquakes, as means to convert souls; as in the case of Paul and the jailor.

Q. Are the ordinances means of salvation to all who enjoy them?

A. No; instead of that, they are the savour of death unto death, to many who have them and abuse them, 2 Cor. ii. 16; Isa. lv. 11.

Q. To whom are they made effectual to salvation?

A. To the elect only?

Q. Whence have the ordinances that efficacy?

A. Not from themselves, but from the blessing and Spirit of God, 1 Cor. iii. 7.

QUESTION LXXXIX.

Q. How is the word made effectual to salvation?

A. The Spirit of God maketh the reading, but especially the preaching of the word, an effectual means of convincing and converting sinners, and of building them up in holiness and comfort, through faith unto salvation.

Q. Who is it that makes the word effectual to salvation?

A. The Spirit of God.

Q. How are we to use the word, if we would have it made effectual to salvation?

A. We must both read it, and hear it preached.

Q. What need we go to hear sermons, when we can read the bible, or as good sermons at home?

A. Because it hath pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe; and he calls us to hear, that our souls may live; for, saith he, "Faith comes by hearing," 1 Cor. i. 21; Isa. lv. 3; Rom. x. 17.

Q. Do they not slight God's ordinances for saving souls, who slight the preaching of the word?—A. Yes.

Q. Is not the reading of the word God's ordinance for the conversion and salvation of souls, as well as the preaching of it?

A. Yes, as is evident from Deut. xvii. 19; Acts viii. 28, 29; Col. iv. 16.

Q. Why is it said in the answer, especially the preaching of the word?

A. Because it pleaseth the Lord to honour the preaching of the word more frequently and usually to convince and convert souls; as is manifest both from scripture and experience, 1 Cor. i. 21; Mat. xxviii. 19; Rom. i. 16; x. 14—17; Acts ii. 37; iv. 2, 4; vi. 7; viii. 5, 6; x. 44; xi. 19, 20; xiii. 48; xvii. 3, 4; xviii. 8—10; xxvi. 18.

Q. Whence is it that the preaching of the word is so honoured?

A. Because it is an ordinance instituted for explaining and applying the word, which God makes use of to awaken, convince, rebuke, exhort, and comfort souls; and to speak directly and particularly to the consciences of men. And seeing God hath thought fit to institute a standing ministry in his church for these very purposes, we may expect he will own and bless it, 2 Tim. iv. 2; Acts xxvi. 18; 2 Cor. v. 20; Eph. iv. 12. As, under the law, God had those who gave the sense of the word, and caused the people to understand it; so, under the gospel, he hath a convincing ministry, by which the secrets of men's hearts are made manifest, Neh. viii. 8; 1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25.

Q. Would it not be a better way to convince and convert souls, to send an angel, or one from the dead, unto them?

A. No; for we have greater evidence of the truth, certainty, and divinity of the word of God, than we could have of any such apparition; so that, if men do not hear the prophets and apostles, neither would they be persuaded though one rose from the dead, Luke xvi. 31.

Q. What use doth the Spirit of God make of the word, in order to the salvation of men?

A. He makes use of it to convince and convert sinners, and to build up the saints, as set forth in the answer.

Q. How is the word made the means of convincing sinners?

A. By searching out hidden sins, and discovering the thoughts and intents of the heart; and by laying before us the evil and malignity of sin in contemning God, the pollution of sin in making us odious in his sight, and the guilt of sin in drawing eternal wrath and damnation upon us, Heb. iv. 12; Acts ii. 37.

Q. How is the word made the means of conversion?

A. The Spirit of God writes the threatenings, precepts, and promises of it upon the heart; so that the soul is brought under the affecting impressions of the reality of the things of the other world, the evil of sin, and excellency of Christ and holiness; whereby the man is gradually changed into a new creature.

Q. Is there not a difference between the words, convincing and converting of a sinner?

A. Yes; for a sinner may be convinced without being converted, but he cannot be converted without being convinced.

Q. Is not the efficacy of the word very powerful in conversion?

A. Yes; and upon that account the scriptures liken it to rain, to light, to fire, to a hammer, and to a sword, Isa. lv. 10, 11; Psal. cxix. 105; Jer. xxiii. 29; Heb. iv. 12.

Q. Wherein doth the wonderful efficacy of the word appear?

A. In this, that one plain word or sentence of it will prevail more with the soul than the most rhetorical discourses, or cogent arguments of men; it sometimes of a sudden turns the tide of the heart and stream of the affections to another course; it dispossesses Satan, and throws down his strongholds; it persuades men to mortify darling lusts, and resist the strongest temptations to sin; it causes men to see things in another light, to abhor what they loved, and love what before they abhorred: yea, so great is the change that the word makes upon men, in conversion, that the scriptures call it a creation, a regeneration, and a resurrection.

Q. What is conversion?

A. It is the implanting of new habits and principles in the soul, whereby there is an universal change wrought in the mind, heart, and life; the whole man is turned from the creature to God, from self to Christ, and from sin to duty; the soul is conformed to the image of God, and the will is subdued to his will; and the man studies to please God in a holy life. In a word, conversion is the same thing with regeneration, or effectual calling. (See more of it before, Question 31, p. 641.)

Q. Of what use is the word to those who are converted?

A. It builds them up in holiness and comfort, through faith unto salvation, Acts xx. 32; 2 Tim. iii. 15; Rom. xv. 4.

Q. What is imported in building up of the converted?

A. 1. It supposes that there is a good foundation laid, by their believing and resting upon Christ crucified, and receiving grace from him. 2. It imports their growing in grace, and that there is added to them more knowledge, more faith, more love, more strength, more holiness, and more comfort.

Q. What mean you by holiness?

A. It is a principle of new life, which inclines the soul to hate all sin, and to love what is pure and pleasing to God, and to study conformity in the whole man to the nature and will of God.

Q. How doth the word build up converted persons in holiness?

A. 1. By discovering to them the defects of their graces and duties. 2. By finding and re-proving every lust and hidden sin. 3. By showing them more and more of the evil and deformity of all sin. 4. By fortifying them against the suggestions of Satan, wicked men, and the corrupt heart. 5. By pointing forth their duty, and discovering to them more and more of the beauty and necessity of holiness. 6. By setting before them the attractive examples of Christ and the scripture saints. 7. By directing them where to go for strength for every duty.

Q. How doth the word build them up in comfort?

A. 1. By furnishing them with marks and evidences of the work of grace in their souls. 2. By bringing to them the refreshing promises of pardon through the blood of Jesus Christ. 3. By discovering to them the promises of persevering grace, and of new supplies of strength, both for work and warfare, duty and difficulty. 4. By assuring them of the unalterable nature of Christ's love, and of the well-ordered covenant. 5. By holding forth to them the great and glorious things laid up for them hereafter.

Q. How doth the Spirit, by the word, build up the saints in holiness and comfort?

A. He doth it through faith, or by their exercising faith upon the truths and promises of the word; whereby they firmly embrace them, and feed upon them, Acts xv. 9; Rom. xv. 13; 1 Pet. i. 5, 6.

Q. Wherefore hath the word so little efficacy in converting and building us up in our duty?

A. Because we have provoked the Spirit of God to withdraw from the preaching of the word, and we come not to it with preparation and prayer, faith and attention; or else the good seed falls upon rocks, upon the high-way side, or among thorns.

QUESTION XC.

Q. How is the word to be read and heard, that it may become effectual to salvation?

A. That the word may become effectual to salvation, we must attend thereunto with diligence, preparation, and prayer, receive it with faith and love, lay it up in our hearts, and practise it in our lives.

Q. Is the word of God effectual to the salvation of all who read and hear it?

A. No; for many do read and hear it, yea, understand and remember it too, who do not truly believe it.

Q. Is it warrantable for common people to read the scriptures?

A. Yes; for Christ commands it, and the Bercans are commended for it, John v. 39; Acts xvii. 11.

Q. Have they warrant to preach the word also?

A. None have warrant to preach the word but those who have gifts for it, and are duly called to it, Rom. x. 14, 15.

Q. Ought not all true Christians to bear a great love to God's word?

A. Yes; for it is the directory of our lives, our counsellor in straits, our support in the day of affliction, and the book in which we find our evidences for heaven.

Q. Should not the consideration of the Author, design, and usefulness of this book, engage us to read it carefully?

A. Yes; for we should look upon it as a golden epistle, indited by the Spirit of God; we should receive it as a love-letter from heaven, opening up God's designs of love to our souls; we should go to it as for our daily food and subsistence, and daily inquire in it for the will of God, and hereby consult with God about our duty in all cases.

Q. At what times ought we to read the Bible?

A. Not only upon the Lord's day, but also upon week days, both morning and evening, seeing we have such constant occasion for it to quicken us in duty, encourage us in trials, resolve us in doubts, and strengthen us against temptations.

Q. In what manner ought we to read the word of God?

A. We should first look up to God for his blessing upon it, and then we should read with faith, reverence, and application to ourselves, as if we were particularly named in the precepts, promises, reproofs, threatenings, and consolations of it; and carefully observe those which are most applicable to us. And, in reading every part, we should still keep Christ in our eye, as the end, scope, and substance of the whole scriptures.

Q. In what manner ought we to hear the word read and preached to us?

A. Something is to be done before, something in time of it, and something after it.

Q. What things are needful before hearing the word, that it may be effectual to our salvation?

A. Two things; namely, preparation and prayer.

Q. What is that preparation which is needful before hearing of the word?

A. We must study to lay aside all worldly thoughts and cares, and get awful impressions of the majesty of God, whose word we are to hear; and be willing humbly to be taught of him. We should inquire into our state, our wants and sins, and be content to put away every sin that the word condemns, and comply with every duty that the word calls for.

Q. What is the need of such preparation before solemn duties?

A. The greatness and jealousy of that God whom we approach, calls for it; and it is a good token of the success of duty when the heart is prepared for it, Psalm x. 17, "Thou wilt prepare their heart, thou wilt cause thine ear to hear."

Q. Hath the word no success at any time upon unprepared souls?

A. Though they have no right to expect it, yet God, in his sovereign mercy, is sometimes found of them that sought him not, Isa. lxvi. 1.

Q. May any man go to the word, depending upon his own preparation?

A. No, but only in dependence on Christ's merits, and the Spirit's assistance.

Q. What kind of prayer is requisite before hearing the word?

A. Humble and fervent prayer, both in secret and in our families.

Q. What should we pray for, if we would have the word effectual?

A. We should pray that God may direct the minister rightly to divide the word of truth, and to speak a word in season to all; that God may pour out his Spirit upon us, and upon the whole congregation; and that he may give a blessing to his word, for convincing, converting, and edifying of our souls.

Q. What is required in time of hearing the word, to make it effectual to salvation?

A. We must hear it with attention, faith, love, meekness, and tenderness, Luke xix. 48; xxiv. 32; Heb. iv. 2; James i. 21; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 27.

Q. What is that attention which is needful in hearing the word?

A. It is a diligent hearkening to the word, with our minds fixed upon it, and guarding against all earthly and impertinent thoughts in time of it.

Q. Whence do wandering thoughts proceed in time of hearing?

A. From an earthly heart, from a careless mind, from a wandering eye, or from an evil custom.

Q. What is the evil of wandering thoughts, in time of hearing?

A. They are provoking to God, a contempt of his omniscience; they keep us from remembering the word, and hinder the impressions and success of it.

Q. How shall we be delivered from wandering thoughts?

A. We ought to pray and watch against them; over-awe our hearts with God's presence and all-seeing eye; and study to bring more love to the word: for what we love and hold in high estimation we fix our minds upon.

Q. How shall we prevent dullness, drowsiness, or sleeping, in time of hearing?

A. By considering that the great God is speaking to us, that life and death are set before us, and we are called to hear for our life, 2 Cor. v. 20; Deut. xxx. 19; xxxii. 46, 47.

Q. What is that faith which is required in reading and hearing the word, that it may be effectual to our salvation?

A. It is the soul's believing and giving credit to the truth of the word, because of the divine testimony supporting it. If our faith in hearing be of the right stamp, we must believe that the word is God's, and that what he saith in it is infallibly certain, and we must receive it as such; and particularly the record which God hath given us of his Son. Again, we must believe that God speaks to us in particular, in the promises, threatenings, and reproofs of his word; and therefore we must apply them to ourselves, and not put them by us.

Q. Why did not the word preached profit the Israelites?

A. Because it was not mixed with faith in them that heard it, Heb. iv. 2.

Q. Do they who hear the word in faith, receive it also with great love and esteem?—A. Yes.

Q. How doth that appear?

A. By their diligent attendance on it, and by their prizing it above the most valuable things here below, such as gold, silver, or even their necessary food, Psal. xix. 10; cxix. 72, 127; Job xxiii. 12.

Q. What is required of us after hearing, so as the word may be effectual to salvation?

A. We must lay up the word in our hearts and practise it in our lives.

Q. What do you mean by laying up the word in our hearts?

A. It is to give the word such a place in our understandings, memories, and affections, that the things of the world shall not be able to thrust it out, but we shall continue to remember, ponder, and meditate upon it long afterwards.

Q. What is the advantage of laying up the word in this manner?

A. It would serve as a bridle to keep us back from sin, Psal. cxix. 11, "Thy word have I hid in my heart; that I might not sin against thee."

Q. What shall I do with a bad memory, that doth not retain the word after I hear it?

A. Labour to feel the power of the word, and get a high esteem of it; for what we highly value we will not forget; as a bride will not forget her jewels, Psal. cxix. 16, 93; Jer. ii. 32.

Q. What is it to practise the word we hear, in our lives?

A. It is to be ready to obey and put in practice whatever thing the word of God informs us to be our duty, James i. 22, 25.

Q. What shall we think of those who hear the word, but walk contrary to it, and still go on in sin?

A. They are to be looked upon as unbelievers, and enemies of Christ and his gospel.

QUESTION XCI.

Q. How do the sacraments become effectual means of salvation?

A. The sacraments become effectual means of salvation, not from any virtue in them, or in him that administers them, but only by the blessing of Christ, and the working of his Spirit in them that by faith receive them.

Q. What hath God appointed sacraments for?

A. To be the means of salvation, and particularly to promote grace and comfort in his people while in their sojourning state.

Q. Is not the word sufficient for that end without the sacrament?

A. It should satisfy us that a wise God had thought fit to appoint us to make use of both the one and the other, as means of salvation.

Q. How do the word and sacraments differ as means of salvation?

A. The one is for begetting faith, the other for confirming it; the one is directed to the ear, the other to the eye.

Q. Why hath Christ added sacraments to his word?

A. To be visible signs of his love to mankind, to cure our unbelief, to help our faith, and to quicken all our graces and affections. He knows our frame, that we are more affected by things which our eyes see, than by those which we only hear of by the ear.

Q. Do the sacraments prove effectual means of grace and salvation to all who partake of them?

A. No; but to the elect only.

Q. What is the reason they prove not effectual to all?

A. Because their efficacy and virtue is not from themselves, but from God the Author, who, being a free Agent, communicates virtue to them according to his pleasure.

Q. Have the sacraments then no virtue in themselves, or by the external action, to confer grace upon the partakers?—A. No.

Q. Have the sacraments their virtue from the intention, the preparation, the learning, the holiness, or zeal of the administrator?—A. No.

Q. From whence then have the sacraments their efficacy and virtue?

A. Only from the blessing of Christ, and the working of his Spirit.

Q. Should any man rest upon his bare attendance upon ordinances?—A. No.

Q. What ought we always to seek and look after under ordinances?

A. Christ's blessing, and his Spirit's working.

Q. What doth the Spirit, by his working, in order to make the sacraments effectual?

A. He puts life and virtue in the ordinances, and by them conveys and applies Christ and his benefits to the souls of men.

Q. Doth not the Spirit by his working put life in all the powers and faculties of the soul?

A. Yes.

Q. What may we think of those who deny or scoff at the working of the Spirit upon souls under ordinances?

A. They are sensual, not having the Spirit; and they are strangers to the grace of God.

Q. Is not the case of such very deplorable?

A. Yes; for "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his," Rom. viii. 9.

Q. In whom doth the Spirit make the sacraments effectual?

A. Not in all who receive them, but only in those who by faith receive them.

Q. Is not this faith, by which other blessings are conveyed, also wrought in the soul by the Holy Ghost?—A. Yes.

QUESTION XCII.

Q. What is a sacrament?

A. A sacrament is a holy ordinance instituted by Christ, wherein, by sensible signs, Christ and the benefits of the new covenant are represented, sealed, and applied to believers.

Q. Is the word sacrament to be found in scripture?

A. No; but the thing signified is there, and the word is very significant, and ancient.

Q. What words have we in scripture instead thereof?

A. We have signs and seals, Rom. iv. 11; Gen. xvii. 11; Exod. xxvii. 13.

Q. From whom is the word sacrament borrowed?

A. From the Romans, who understand by it a military oath, whereby soldiers bound themselves to be true and faithful to their general: but gradually it came to be applied to baptism and the Lord's supper, because in them we engage to be faithful soldiers to Jesus Christ, the Captain of our salvation.

Q. Why is it called, in the answer, a holy ordinance?

A. It is called an ordinance, as being a thing ordained of God; it is called holy, because it is ordained by a holy God, for holy persons and for holy purposes.

Q. Why is it said to be instituted by Christ?

A. To let us know that Christ, who is the head of the church, hath only power to appoint sacraments to her; and that they are not true sacraments which are not instituted by him.

Q. What is the use of sacraments?

A. The use of them is to be visible signs and seals to the church, of the benefits of Christ's mediation and purchase.

Q. What are the two parts of a sacrament?

A. There are, 1. The outward visible or sensible signs. 2. The invisible things signified and represented by them.

Q. What mean you by sensible signs?

A. The elements and actions used in the sacraments, called sensible, because they are perceived by our outward senses.

Q. What are these sensible signs used in the sacraments?

A. In baptism, there is water sprinkled on the body. In the Lord's supper, there is bread broken and eaten, and wine poured out and drunk.

Q. Are not these elements and actions seals as well as signs?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the difference between their being signs and seals?

A. As they are signs, they signify or represent blessings or benefits to us; as they are seals, they ratify and confirm our right to them.

Q. What are the blessings or benefits which are represented, sealed, and applied to us by these signs and seals?

A. They are Christ and the benefit of the new covenant; that is, the blessings of Christ's purchase, which are exhibited and tendered to us in the covenant of grace.

Q. Do the sacraments seal and confirm these benefits to all who partake of them?

A. No; but to believers only, who are within the covenant; for those who are not within it, apply God's seal to a blank.

Q. Why is the covenant of grace called the new covenant?

A. It is called new, 1. In opposition to the old covenant of works made with our first parents, which they brake. 2. It is sometimes called the new covenant or testament, in opposition to the old manner of dispensing of the covenant of grace by types and sacrifices, before Christ's incarnation.

Q. Had the old covenant of works any sacraments annexed to it?

A. Yes; it had two, to wit, the tree of knowledge, and the tree of life.

QUESTION XCIII.

Q. Which are the sacraments of the New Testament?

A. The sacraments of the New Testament are, baptism, and the Lord's supper.

Q. What were the sacraments of the covenant of grace under the Old Testament?

A. They were two, namely, circumcision and the passover; in place of which we have now baptism and the Lord's supper.

Q. Are the sacraments of the Old and New Testament the same for substance?

A. Yes; for they are seals of the same covenant, and they both represent Christ and his benefits.

A. Wherein do they differ?

A. The Old Testament sacraments represented Christ as to come, and that in a darker way; but the New represent Christ as already come, and in a more clear and plain manner.

Q. What is the difference between baptism and the Lord's supper?

A. Baptism is for initiation, and to be received but once by us, as circumcision was: the Lord's supper is for nutrition, and to be received often, as the passover was.

Q. What was the passover?

A. It was a lamb slain, roasted with fire, and eaten wholly, with bitter herbs, and unleavened bread, whereby was represented Christ and his sufferings; and the receiving of him by faith, with sincere repentance.

Q. How doth it appear that there are no more sacraments under the New Testament than two?

A. Because Christ the Head of the church hath instituted no more for sacraments, than baptism and the Lord's supper; neither are any more needful, seeing the one is a sign and seal of our spiritual birth, and the other of our spiritual nourishment.

Q. Do not the papists add more sacraments to these two?

A. Yes; they add other five, to wit, confirmation, penance, ordination, marriage, and extreme unction.

Q. Why may not these be received as sacraments?

A. Because none of them are instituted by Christ for sacraments; and though ordination and marriage be of divine appointment, yet neither they nor any of the rest have the constituent parts of true sacraments, nor are they seals of the covenant of grace.

QUESTION XCIV.

Q. What is baptism?

A. Baptism is a sacrament, wherein the washing with water, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, doth signify and seal our ingrafting into Christ, and partaking of the benefits of the covenant of grace, and our engagement to be the Lord's.

Q. What doth the word baptism signify?

A. It is a Greek word, and signifieth a washing: so it is rendered in Mark vii. 4; Luke xi. 38.

Q. What are the two parts in this sacrament?

A. 1. There is the outward visible or sensible sign made use of. 2. There is the invisible or spiritual thing signified by it.

Q. What is the sensible sign here?

A. It is the sprinkling or washing of the body with water, and using of the words of institution.

Q. What is the spiritual thing signified by the washing with water?

A. There is, 1. The washing away of the guilt of sin, by the blood of Christ, in our justification. 2. The washing away of the filth of sin, by the Spirit of Christ, in our regeneration and sanctification, Rev. i. 5; John iii. 5.

Q. Wherein lies the resemblance between water, and Christ's blood, or the blessings purchased thereby?

A. In these things: 1. Water washes away the filth of the body, so the blood of Christ cleanseth the soul from sin. 2. Water extinguishes fire, so Christ's blood quenches the fire of God's wrath. 3. Water mellifies the earth, so Christ's blood softens our hard hearts. 4. Our bodies cannot live without water, neither can our souls without the blood of Christ. 5. Water is cheap and free to all, so is the blood of Christ with its benefits. 6. Water hath no effect upon us unless it be applied, so neither hath the blood of Christ without the application of faith.

Q. Is it lawful to add any thing to the water made use of in baptism?

A. No; for though the Papists mix oil, salt, cream, and spittle with the water, and likewise use the sign of the cross at baptism; yet all these are but vain and sinful additions, without any warrant from God's word.

Q. Why may not the sign of the cross be retained in baptism, seeing it is designed to teach all those who are baptized, not to be ashamed to own a crucified Christ?

A. The Papists give plausible reasons for the other additions, as well as for this: but seeing the sign of the cross was brought into the church by the Papists, as well as the cream and spittle, it ought to be laid aside with them, as unscriptural and antichristian inventions.

Q. Is it necessary to dip or plunge the whole body into the water in baptism, as, some say, was the practice in the primitive time?

A. Whatever might be done with some in hotter countries, it would be highly dangerous, especially for infants, in our colder climates, to plunge them in water; and therefore we must rest with sprinkling of them: and for this practice we find sufficient warrant in the scriptures.

Q. What warrant is there in scripture for baptizing by sprinkling?

A. 1. We find the washing of tables is termed baptizing, Mark vii. 4, which we know is done, not by dipping, but by sprinkling. 2. The Israelites are said to have been "baptized unto Moses in the cloud," 1 Cor. x. 2, which was by sprinkling them with its rain. 3. When it is said that all things under the law were purged by blood, we are told at the same time that this was done by sprinkling them with the blood of the sacrifice, and not by dipping them in it, Heb. ix. 21, 22, and hence Christ's blood is called the blood of sprinkling. 4. The circumstances of many of the persons baptized, recorded in scripture, make it highly probable that it was done by sprinkling or pouring water on them.

Q. What instances are these you refer to?

A. 1. We read of three thousand baptized by the apostles in a part of one day, Acts ii. 41, which could not have been done in so short a time, had they taken them all to a river, and plunged them one by one into it. 2. When Philip baptized the Ethiopian eunuch, Acts viii. 38, it was not likely he would strip him and plunge him in the river when he was in a journey, and nowise prepared for it; but rather that they went into the water to the ancles, being barefooted, according to the custom, where he sprinkled water upon him, according to the prophecy in which the eunuch had been reading, Isa. lii. 15, "So shall he sprinkle many nations." 3. When Ananias went to baptize Paul, we find he was in the house, Acts ix. 17—19. Neither is it likely he would go out of it, to be plunged in a river, in the weak and faint case his body was in at that time. 4. When Cornelius and his friends were baptized, they were in the house, and water was called for there to do it, Acts ix. 47, 48. 5. Likewise the jailor in Philippi, and his family, were in the house when they were baptized by Paul and Silas, Acts xvi. 32, 33. For it cannot be imagined that the jailor would leave his post and go out of the city with all his family in the middle of the night, and let Paul and Silas, who were prisoners, go too, to seek a river to plunge them in. 6. It was the custom of the primitive church to baptize the sick upon their beds, who hence were called Clinei; and surely these could not be plunged, but sprinkled only.

Q. Do we not read of John's baptizing at Jordan and Enon, because of the plenty of water there; and of persons baptized going down into the water, and coming up out of the water? Acts viii. 38, 39.

A. John chose these places, because the waters there were common, which was not the case in other parts of that dry country. And for going down into the water, and coming up out of it, this is said of the baptizer, as well as of the baptized, and so cannot infer dipping. Besides, the words may be rendered, they went into the water, and they came up from the water.

Q. What doth the sprinkling with water in baptism declare unto us?

A. It declareth unto us, that we are filthy and polluted by nature, by reason of original sin and corruption; and that we stand greatly in need of being washen from it.

Q. Can the water in baptism wash us from it?

A. No; it is only the blood of Christ, represented by the water, that can do it.

Q. How is it that the blood of Christ washes us from sin?

A. It is by the Holy Spirit's applying the merits and virtue of Christ's blood unto our souls.

Q. In whose name are persons to be baptized?

A. In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

Q. What is signified and meant by using these words in baptism?

A. Several things; as that the ordinance is dispensed by divine warrant; and that the person baptized vows subjection to God's authority; and that he is thereby consecrated and bound to the faith, profession, worship, and obedience, to the Holy Trinity; and that he will always depend upon the favour, grace, and protection of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

Q. Is not baptism the sealing of a covenant between God and us?—A. Yes.

Q. What is here sealed and engaged on his part?

A. That he will be our God, ingraft us into Christ, and entitle us to all the benefits of the new covenant which Christ hath purchased by his blood.

Q. What is here sealed and engaged on our part?

A. That we will be the Lord's, in soul and body, in practice as well as profession, to serve him, and fight for him all the days of our lives.

Q. What is meant by that privilege of our being ingrafted into Christ?

A. It is for us to be cut off from the old stock of nature, and to be united to Christ as our blessed root, from whom we may draw sap for our growth and fruitfulness, John xv. 5; Rom. xi. 17.

Q. Is this privilege sealed to us by baptism?

A. Yes.

Q. What are the benefits of the covenant of grace, which are sealed to us in baptism?

A. They are all these blessings which Christ hath purchased by his blood; such as admission into the visible church, and a right to all church-ordinances and privileges, spiritual illumination, remission of sin, deliverance from wrath, friendship with God, regeneration and sanctification, the conduct of the Spirit, fatherly protection and provision, increase of grace, and perseverance in it, meetness for heaven, victory over death, and resurrection to eternal life.

Q. Doth baptism seal and apply these blessings and benefits equally to all who are baptized?

A. No; for, to those who are truly elect, or believers, it seals them absolutely; but, to those who are only such in profession, it seals them but conditionally, that is, upon condition they are what they profess to be.

Q. Do believers partake immediately of the benefits sealed to them in baptism?

A. Though their right be then sealed, yet God is a free agent, and not tied to that moment of time; but confers his grace, and makes his ordinances effectual, when and how he pleaseth.

Q. Have unbelievers any benefit by their baptism?

A. Yes; for, by it they are outwardly separated from the rest of the world, and from the devil and the flesh, and are solemnly consecrated to Christ and his service; they are become members of the visible church, and have a sealed right and claim to plead the ordinances, offers, and promises of the gospel, if they do not forfeit these by their after carriage, Rom. ix. 4; 1 Cor. vii. 14.

Q. Doth not baptism take away original sin, and regenerate all those who partake of it; as papists and others teach?

A. No; for Simon Magus remained still in his unregenerate state after he was baptized, and the best of God's people are troubled with the inherence of original sin all their lives.

Q. Is baptism absolutely necessary to salvation?

A. No; for the converted thief was saved without it. It is not the want, but the contempt of baptism, which exposeth to damnation.

Q. What is the necessity then of baptism?

A. It is necessary by virtue of Christ's commandment, who hath thought fit to appoint it. 1. As a badge of Christianity. 2. As a channel of grace. 3. As a sign for teaching us our pollution by sin, and our remedy by Christ. 4. As a seal for confirming believers' right to the blessings of his covenant. 5. As a bond for engaging us to his service.

QUESTION XCV.

Q. To whom is baptism to be administered?

A. Baptism is not to be administered to any that are out of the visible church, till they profess their faith in Christ, and obedience to him; but the infants of such as are members of the visible church are to be baptized.

Q. Is baptism to be administered to all persons whatsoever?—A. No.

Q. To whom is baptism to be administered?

A. Not to heathens or infidels, nor to those who call themselves Christians, if they be ignorant, or if their lives be vicious and scandalous.

Q. Why may not these be baptized?

A. Because they are not to be looked upon as members of the visible church, nor within the covenant, and so have no right to the seals of it, Eph. ii. 12.

Q. Upon what terms may such persons be admitted to baptism?

A. Only upon submitting to the gospel, and their professing of repentance, and of their faith in Christ, and resolutions of obedience to him, Acts ii. 38; viii. 13; Mat. iii. 6.

Q. Who are they that properly have a right to baptism?

A. Those who are members of the visible church, and their infant-offspring, Acts ii. 39.

Q. What is it you call the visible church?

A. It is a society made up of all the professors of Christ throughout the world, who openly embrace the true religion, together with their children, 1 Cor. vii. 14; Acts iii. 39; Rom. xi. 16; Gen. xvii. 7.

Q. What are the privileges of the visible church above the rest of the world?

A. The visible church is entitled to God's preserving care in the midst of dangers and enemies, to the enjoyments of a gospel-ministry and ordinances, and to the communion of saints, 1 Tim. iv. 10; Isa. xxxi. 5; Eph. iv. 11, 12; Mark xvi. 15, 16; Acts ii. 39, 42.

Q. What is it you call the invisible church?

A. The whole body of true believers; that is, those who not only profess Christ outwardly, but have a real and vital union with Christ as their head, whereby their souls are inwardly renewed, which God only sees, and therefore called invisible.

Q. What are their privileges above others?

A. They have communion with Christ both in grace and glory.

Q. Have infants a right to baptism?

A. Yes; the infants of those who are believers or members of the visible church have a right to baptism, but not others.

Q. How do you instruct their right to baptism?

A. Because the infants of believing parents are within the covenant, as well as the parents themselves; so God told Abraham in the covenant he made with him, and did thereupon establish and declare the right of his infant-seed to the initiatory seal of the covenant, Gen. xvii. 7, 10, "I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. And every man-child among you shall be circumcised." Now, Abraham's covenant being the covenant of grace, of which Christ is the Mediator; and believers now being Abraham's children by faith, and heirs of the same covenant with him, which is everlasting, and its promises and privileges the same now as of old, though its seals be changed: wherefore the infant-seed of believers now have the right to baptism that Abraham's seed of old had to circumcision, which was the same in substance with it. And this right of succession we find expressly declared by the apostle Peter, Acts ii. 38, 39, "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, for the promise is unto you, and to your children." And hence the apostle Paul calls the children of believers now holy, 1 Cor. vii. 14, that is, federally holy, as the Jews were called a holy nation, being by circumcision instated within the covenant, solemnly dedicated to the Lord, and made visible church-members, as our infants are by baptism.

Q. How doth it appear that baptism is come in the place of circumcision?

A. It is evident from Col. ii. 11, 12. Besides, it is plain that both of them represent the pollution of our nature, and the way of our purification, by the shedding of Christ's blood.

Q. What further warrant have you from scripture for infant baptism?

A. 1. Christ commanded his apostles, Mat. xxviii. 19, to go disciple and baptize all nations, of which infants are a considerable part. There was no need to mention them there expressly, seeing their privilege was settled for many ages before by circumcision: though soon after we are told that their right continued as formerly, Acts ii. 38, 39. And indeed it were most unreasonable to think that their condition should be worse by Christ's incarnation than it was before. 2. We are assured that the privilege of the Gentiles now is as large as that of the Jews was, they being all one in Christ, Rom. iii. 29; x. 12; Gal. iii. 14, 28. 3. We are told, Rom. xi. that the Jews shall be grafted again into their own olive tree, as they were broken off. From which it is easy to infer, that their seed, which were broken off with them, shall be grafted in with them as before. 4. The scriptures declare infants to be capable of the divine blessings of pardon, of the Spirit, of faith, of grace, and of glory; upon which account Christ kindly invites and takes them into his arms. See Isa. xlv. 3; lxx. 23; Jer. i. 5; Mat. xviii. 6; Mark x. 14, 16; Luke i. 15. And therefore the sign and seal of these blessings must also pertain to them. 5. We read of the apostles baptizing whole households together, and including the infants therein, Acts xvi. 15, 33; 1 Cor. i. 16. And in this they followed the example of the Jews, who circumcised all the proselytes that came over to them, and their children also. And, after the example of the apostles, it is well known the ancient church baptized the infants of the Christian parents.

Q. Do not we read of the apostles teaching, and of persons professing their faith, before they were baptized?

A. Yes; but these were only the adult or aged without the visible church, who were first to be won to the Christian faith before they or their children might be baptized. But infants, who are not capable of being taught, or of professing their faith, are to be deemed as parts of their parents, and to be judged of by them till they come to the use of reason; so that if parents be holy, and among the blessed of the Lord, their infant offspring are to be deemed so with them, according to Rom. xi. 16; Isa. lxx. 23. In the covenant made with Abraham and his seed, of which circumcision was the seal, and they all partook, God said not to the infants, but to Abraham, Gen. xvii. 1, "Walk before me, and be thou perfect."

Q. If children be admitted to baptism, why not also to the Lord's supper?

A. Because it is required of all who partake of the Lord's supper, to examine themselves, and to discern the Lord's body; which children cannot do, not having the exercise of reason. And, upon the same account, the children of the Jews, who did partake of circumcision, were not admitted to the passover; they not being capable to ask, or to be instructed concerning the meaning of it, according to Exod. xii. 26. The initiatory seal is for conveying a right, but the other is for commemorating a benefit, which necessarily supposeth understanding.

Q. To whom doth it pertain to present the infants of the visible church to baptism, and to act as sponsors for them?

A. Infants being considered as parts of their parents, and having a right to baptism as such, it belongs properly to parents to present them to God in baptism, and in their name to consent to the covenant of grace; and not to those who are called god-fathers or god-mothers. It is only the parents who have the power of their education, and who are accountable to God for them; and, till they be capable to choose their own way, the will of the parents only is to be taken for theirs.

Q. Are not Christian parents bound by the strongest ties to bring their children to God in baptism?

A. Yes; 1. Because they have dedicated themselves and all they have unto the Lord. 2. They being the instruments of conveying original sin to them, they are bound in justice to repair the injury, (so far as they can) by bringing them to the fountain of Christ's blood for their cleansing, and to the congregation of God's people for the help of their prayers.

Q. Are all those in covenant with God, and entitled to heaven, who get this seal of it; particularly those children who are born of truly godly parents, that gave them up sincerely to God in baptism?

A. 1. If such children die young before they do any thing to disinherit themselves, we have ground to believe they are saved. 2. These children, by their birth and baptism, are entitled to many external privileges and mercies more than others; hence baptism is resembled to Noah's ark, by which all Noah's family were saved from the temporal deluge as well as himself, 1 Pet. iii. 21. 3. Children of godly parents have a stronger claim to the blessings of the covenant than others, seeing they cannot only plead, "They are the Lord's," by baptismal dedication, but that God is truly "their father's God," and they are the seed of his people, with whom the covenant was established, and to whom the promises were made. But, 4. They should remember, if they do not put in their claim when they come to age, to take hold of the covenant for themselves, and ratify their parents' deed, they forfeit their right and claim to the saving blessings of the covenant.

Q. How should parents be affected and exercised when they present their infants to God in baptism?

A. They should look back to their own baptismal dedication, transact with God in secret, both for themselves and their infants, and endeavour to make it sure that they are really in covenant with God, since this is of the utmost concern, both to them and their posterity; for the promise runs, "I will be your God, and the God of your seed." They should earnestly pray for grace to enable them to give them good instructions and a good example, that they may, like Abraham, the father of the faithful, "command their children and their household after them to keep the ways of the Lord," Gen. xviii. 19.

Q. How should children improve their baptism when come to age?

A. 1. Children of godly parents should bless God that they are born of such parents, and that their claim to the covenant blessings is so much strengthened thereby. 2. They should timeously ratify their baptismal covenant and their parents' deed, by a personal transaction with God, and giving away themselves unto the Lord: and this they should do solemnly at the sacrament of the Lord's supper, that so they may become Christians by their own consent, as well as by their parents' dedication. 3. They should plead their baptism, as God's seal and pledge to them of the remission of sins, through the blood of Christ, which was then sacramentally applied to them. 4. They should improve their baptism as a spur to holy living, a shield against temptation, and an incitement to the courageous owning of Christ and his truths, without being ashamed of him before men.

QUESTION XCIV.

Q. What is the Lord's supper?

A. The Lord's supper is a sacrament, wherein, by giving and receiving bread and wine, according to Christ's appointment, his death is showed forth; and the worthy receivers are, not after a corporal and carnal manner, but by faith, made partakers of his body and blood, with all his benefits, to their spiritual nourishment and growth in grace.

Q. What are the usual names given to this ordinance?

A. It is called the Lord's supper, 1 Cor. xi. 20. It is called the Lord's table, 1 Cor. x. 21. The communion, 1 Cor. x. 16. Breaking of bread, Acts ii. 42. The cup of blessing, 1 Cor. x. 16. Christ's Testament, Luke xxii. 20. The feast, 1 Cor. v. 8. The ancients usually called it the Eucharist, and we commonly call it the Sacrament.

Q. Why is it called the Lord's supper?

A. From the time when the Lord Jesus its Author did institute it, which was in the same night wherein he was betrayed.

Q. Why did he appoint it at night?

A. Because the passover was to be eaten at night, and supper then was the principal meal of the family; and it may teach us, that this feast is only for the members of Christ's family, who dwell with him both day and night.

Q. Are we then necessarily bound to celebrate the sacrament at night, as was done at its first institution?

A. No; for the reason of doing it at night, and in a private family, doth not now subsist: this was done at first only upon the account of the passover-supper that was to be so eaten, and in the room of which the Lord's supper was to succeed; but, in numerous assemblies for worship, the night would be highly inconvenient for it.

Q. Why did Christ appoint the supper immediately after the passover?

A. To show that the one was to come in the room of the other, and that they are both the same in substance.

Q. How doth it appear that they are the same in substance?

A. In regard the Israelites kept the lamb four days tied to their bed-posts before it was slain; that by its constant bleatings they might be kept in mind of their sore bondage in Egypt, from which God wonderfully delivered them, and also put in mind of the sorrows and agonies which the Messiah was to suffer to deliver them from sin and hell: so, in like manner, the Lord's supper is a standing memorial of our salvation by the sufferings and death of Jesus Christ, our glorious deliverer from sin and wrath.

Q. Why did Christ appoint this ordinance the same night in which he was betrayed?

A. 1. That he might give a strong proof of his love to his disciples, in providing more for their comfort than for his own safety; and that at a time when he saw heaven, earth, and hell coming all in battle-array against him. 2. That we might observe the charge he gave us about this ordinance, as the words of a dying Jesus, who was going to do more for us than all the world could do.

Q. Is the Lord's supper a sacrifice as well as a sacrament?

A. No: for though the Papists have horridly corrupted this ordinance, and turned it to the sacrifice of the mass, whereby they disown the sufficiency of Christ's sacrifice on the cross to take away sin, and are guilty of the vilest superstition and idolatry; yet the Lord's supper is no more but a sacrament, which is of a quite different nature from a sacrifice: a sacrament being the commemoration of a benefit received from God; but a sacrifice, the offering of something propitiatory to God for sin, which was done at once by Christ upon the cross, and can never be repeated.

Q. In what posture ought we to receive the sacrament?

A. In a table posture, such as is common at meals; which we find Christ and his apostles used, Mat. xxvi. 20, 26; Luke xxii. 14, where it is said "they sat down" at the table.

Q. Is it not more decent and reverent to use kneeling at this time?

A. We are not to be wiser than Christ, nor to accuse the apostles and primitive church (who used sitting) of indecency and irreverence.

Q. Who then appointed kneeling, and when came it in?

A. It was Pope Honorius the second, in the beginning of the thirteenth century.

Q. Upon what pretence did he appoint kneeling?

A. It was in consequence of the doctrine of transubstantiation, which had been decreed not long before by Pope Innocent the third. Then it was judged proper to kneel for worshipping the sacramental bread, which they believed to be turned into Christ's real body.

Q. Should any Protestant symbolize with Papists and idolaters in their errors and superstitions?—A. No.

Q. What are the elements or visible signs appointed in the Lord's supper?

A. Bread and wine.

Q. How are these to be disposed of?

A. After consecration, the bread is to be broken, given, and eaten; and the wine being poured forth, is to be given and drunk.

Q. Why are both these signs appointed?

A. The more to confirm our faith, and give us the more distinct representation of Christ's death and sufferings, and to show us the plentiful redemption and rich supplies we have in a crucified Christ for our perishing souls.

Q. May we make use of wafers instead of bread, as the Papists do?

A. No; for then we should not have a fit sign of spiritual nourishment, nor any breaking of bread, according to Christ's institution.

Q. What is signified by the bread here?

A. Jesus Christ the bread of life, who is given for the life and nourishment of our souls.

Q. What is signified by the wine?

A. Christ's precious blood, with all the rich blessings and refreshing comforts proceeding from it to us; such as deliverance from wrath, pardon of sin, peace with God and conscience, access to God in duty, strength and increase of grace, intimation of God's love, and sweet views of Immanuel's land.

Q. What is signified by the breaking of the bread, and the pouring forth of the wine?

A. All the sorrows and sufferings of Christ for us, and particularly the breaking and wounding of his body on the cross, and the shedding of his blood for our sins.

Q. What is signified by giving the bread and wine to the communicants?

A. It signifies God's giving a whole crucified Christ, with all his offices and benefits, to believing partakers.

Q. What is signified by communicants receiving the bread and wine?

A. It signifies their stretching forth faith's hand to receive a whole Christ, according to the gospel offer, and that with close and particular application to their souls' necessities.

Q. Have the people a right to the cup as well as to the bread?

A. Yes; and none may deprive them of it, seeing that Jesus Christ appointed a full feast and complete nourishment to his people, and said to the first communicants, "Drink ye all of it," Mat. xxvi. 27.

Q. How should we be affected and employed when beholding and receiving the bread broken, and wine poured forth.

A. We should contemplate a broken and bleeding Saviour, with contrite and broken hearts, for our sins, that pierced him: our hearts should be warmed with love and gratitude to him, that loved us in such a manner, as to give himself to be a propitiation for our sins: we should lodge our souls in his wounds, as our only refuge from the avenger of blood, and plead Christ's blood and merits for all that we want from God.

Q. What is the chief end of this institution, first mentioned in the answer?

A. It is to show forth Christ's death according to 1 Cor. xi. 24—26.

Q. How are we to show forth Christ's death in this ordinance?

A. By recalling it into our minds with admiration, giving thanks to God for such a sacrifice, and pleading it with him as the only ground of our hope: and also by proclaiming before the world the wonderful love of Christ in dying for us, and our hope and confidence in the merits thereof; publicly owning ourselves to be his disciples, and declaring by this action that we are not ashamed of his cross, but glory in it.

Q. Why will Christ have us to show forth his death in this manner?

A. To testify our thankfulness for it, and that we believe it to be the only foundation of our salvation; and also because this commemoration is an excellent means to subdue sin, quicken grace, melt our hearts, and administer comfort to us under all discouragements.

Q. Who are those meant by the worthy receivers mentioned in the answer?

A. They are believers, who are fit to receive, and who exercise faith and love in the act of receiving: not that they are worthy in a legal sense of any mercy, but called worthy, because they receive in a suitable and becoming manner, both with respect to their state and frame; which is worthiness in a gospel sense.

Q. May those who have weak faith, and many fears, be admitted to join with worthy receivers?

A. Yes; for weak believers are among Christ's friends whom he invites, and are those who have a right to the children's bread; besides, this ordinance is appointed as a means of our spiritual strength and growth in grace.

Q. But may not these weak and doubting souls keep back till they arrive at comfort and strength?

A. No; for strength and comfort are attained in the way of believing, and using the means which God hath appointed for that end; and we have no ground to expect them while we neglect this ordinance, which is one of these means.

Q. What advantage do worthy receivers reap by this ordinance?

A. They are made partakers of Christ's body and blood, with all his benefits.

Q. How are worthy receivers made partakers of Christ's body and blood?

A. Not corporally, but spiritually.

Q. How do they partake of these spiritually in the sacrament?

A. When they get their title secured to the benefits or fruits of Christ's broken body and shed blood, as by saine or infetment; or when their souls actually share of these benefits here in part.

Q. What are these benefits or fruits of Christ's body and blood, which worthy receivers partake of?

A. They are pardon of sin, deliverance from wrath, the subduing of sin, the strengthening of grace, curing of heart-plagues, resolving of doubts, loosing of bands, sweet views of God's love, and of eternal glory, and the like.

Q. Are we not made partakers of Christ's body and blood in a corrupt and carnal manner in the sacrament?—A. No.

Q. What is meant by these words in the answer?

A. That there is no transubstantiation or turning of the bread and wine in the sacrament, into the very body and blood of Christ, as the Papists maintain.

Q. Is not Christ really present in the sacrament?

A. Yes; he is spiritually present by his Spirit and grace, but not present in a bodily manner.

Q. Do the elements remain still bread and wine after the consecration?

A. Yes; for our reason and senses plainly testify them to be so, and Christ and his apostles expressly call them so. The apostle Paul, speaking of the bread, doth three times over call it bread after consecration; and Christ calls the cup, when distributing it, the fruit of the vine. See 1 Cor. xi. 26—28; Mat. xxvi. 29.

Q. What is the meaning then of these words of Christ, "Take, eat; this is my body broken for you?"

A. The plain and obvious meaning is, That the broken bread signifies and represents Christ's body as it was to be broken and wounded for us. In like manner, Christ said, "This cup is the New Testament;" not that he meant the very cup was turned into the New Testament, but only that it was a sign and seal of the New Testament and its blessings.

Q. Must not Christ's body continue in heaven until the resurrection of all things, at his second coming?

A. Yes; the apostle Peter saith so, Acts iii. 21. Nay, Jesus Christ himself said, "Now I am no more in the world," John xvii. 11.

Q. Can a true human body be in heaven, and on earth, and in many thousand places of the earth at the same time?—A. No.

Q. Is it consistent with the glorified state of Christ's body to have it still liable to sufferings and contempt?—A. No.

Q. Would it not be liable to these, if transubstantiation was true?

A. Yes; for so it might still be pierced, nay, torn in pieces, or burnt: it might be eaten by wicked men, nay, by beasts, and thrown out to the dunghill; which is absurd to imagine concerning the glorified body of the Son of God.

Q. Seeing such absurdities would follow, ought not we to understand Christ's words, "This is my body," in a figurative sense?

A. Yes; especially seeing our Lord frequently used this way of speaking to his disciples, calling himself bread, a door, a way, a vine, &c., and particularly concerning the sacraments, saying of circumcision, "This is my covenant; and of the lamb, "It is the Lord's passover, Gen. xvii. 10; Exod. xii. 11. And we see how expressly the Holy Ghost saith of believers, 1 Cor. xii. 27, "Ye are the body of Christ." Yet all agree to take these words figuratively; and why not also Christ's words, "This is my body."

Q. Seeing believers—worthy communicants—are not partakers of Christ's body and blood in the sacrament in a corporal manner, how is it they partake of him?

A. They are partakers of Christ by faith in the sacrament, when the fruits and benefits of Christ's death are applied by faith unto their souls, by which they get spiritual nourishment and growth in grace, Heb. iii. 14; 1 Cor. x. 16; John vi. 35, 47, 58, 63.

Q. How is faith to be exercised in communicating?

A. Many ways: 1. In discerning a crucified Christ and his benefits under the elements, and looking to him for healing and salvation. 2. In fleeing into the clefts of his wounds for protection from wrath. 3. In embracing Christ in all his offices, and with all his benefits, as he is offered to us in the giving of the bread and wine. 4. In being firmly persuaded of the truth of the gospel-revelation, and of the promise of salvation by the blood and merits of Jesus Christ. 5. In applying the virtue and efficacy of the blood and merits of Christ to ourselves, for silencing conscience, renewing the soul, subduing of sin, and for quickening and strengthening of grace. 6. In pleading his blood with God for pardon and acceptance, for sanctification and glorification. 7. In yielding up ourselves, both soul and body, to Jesus Christ, to be taught by his Spirit, governed by his laws, and saved by his blood.

Q. Do believers get spiritual nourishment and growth in grace by exercising faith in partaking in the foresaid manner?—A. Yes.

Q. How may we know if we receive spiritual nourishment and growth in grace, in and by the sacrament?

A. We may know it by these marks: 1. If we have a better taste and relish of spiritual things than we had before. 2. If we draw virtue from Christ's death for crucifying of sin, which hinders our strength and growth. 3. If we be more rooted and established in grace, confirmed in our faith, hope, and love, and increased in the graces of humility and spiritual mindedness. 4. If we abound more in prayer, and in the fruits of holiness, and in the duties which we owe both to God and man.

QUESTION XCVII.

Q. What is required to the worthy receiving of the Lord's supper?

A. It is required of them that would worthily partake of the Lord's supper, that they examine themselves of their knowledge to discern the Lord's body, of their faith to feed upon him, and of their repentance, love, and new obedience; lest, coming unworthily, they eat and drink judgment to themselves.

Q. Can unbelievers, while remaining so, be worthy partakers?

A. No; for they, not being in covenant with God through Christ, have no right to this confirming seal of the covenant.

Q. Is this an ordinance appointed for conversion?—A. No.

Q. Is it not dangerous to come to it unworthily?

A. Yes.

Q. How shall we prevent that danger?

A. By seeking after both habitual and actual preparation for it; that is, by labouring both to be in a state of grace, and to have grace drawn forth into exercise.

Q. How shall we attain to this preparation?

A. By examining ourselves, 1 Cor. xi. 28.

Q. What is it for a man to examine himself in this case?

A. It is for a man to retire from the world, and to try his own heart with certain questions concerning his qualifications for the Lord's table, and to urge his heart to make plain answers.

Q. What are the things we should examine ourselves about, in order to our partaking of the Lord's supper?

A. The answer mentions five special things which we are to examine ourselves about, namely, our knowledge, faith, repentance, love, and new obedience.

Q. For what end must we have knowledge?

A. That we may be able to discern the Lord's body in the sacrament.

Q. What is it to discern the Lord's body in the sacrament?

A. It is to distinguish rightly between the outward signs, and the spiritual things signified; and to have a due uptaking of the value and excellency of the body and blood of Christ, and the blessings thereby purchased; and also to discern the greatness of our Lord's sufferings, so as to be duly affected with his love manifested therein, and grieved for our sins, that were the procuring cause of them.

Q. What are we to examine about our knowledge?

A. Two things: 1. If it be competent in its measure. 2. If it be saving in its quality.

Q. What is that competent measure of knowledge needful for worthy partaking?

A. We must have the knowledge, 1. Of God in the unity of his essence and trinity of persons. 2. Of man in his estate both before and since his fall. 3. Of Christ the Mediator, in his two natures and three offices. 4. Of the covenant of grace, and of the way of our justification by faith in the Surety's righteousness. 5. Of the seals of this covenant, and particularly of the holy supper, and the design of it.

Q. How may we discern if our knowledge be saving in its quality?

A. We may reckon it is so, 1. If it be humbling, and cause us to mourn for sin, Zech. xii. 10. 2. If it take us off from self, and lead to Christ and his righteousness as the only ground of our hope, Phil. iii. 8, 9. 3. If it influence both heart and life, and make us breathe after conformity to Christ our head, 2 Cor. iii. 18.

Q. What is the use of faith in the Lord's supper?

A. To feed upon a crucified Christ, or to apply the fruits and benefits of his death unto our souls. See more of its usefulness before, p. 709.

Q. What is implied in faith's feeding on Christ in the sacrament?

A. It imports the soul's hungering and thirsting after Christ, and embracing of him by faith: also it imports the soul's union with Christ, and partaking of the benefits of his death; its having great satisfaction in him, and deriving life, strength, and growth from him.

Q. How may we know if our faith be true and saving?

A. We may judge it so, if it soften and purify the heart, if it make Christ precious to us, if it work by love, if it carry us above the world, and make us fruitful in good works.

Q. What is the use of repentance in partaking of the Lord's supper?

A. That, in renewing covenant with God, we may be sorry for former breaches and backslidings: that, in looking upon a bleeding Saviour, we may mourn for our sins, which brought all these sufferings upon him: that we may receive a broken Christ into broken hearts, and firmly resolve in his strength, that we will not pierce him any more.

Q. How may we know if our repentance be true?

A. It is so, if our sense of sin drive us to Christ the only remedy; if our grief for sin be universal, for the corruption of our nature, as well as the outbursts of our life; if we sincerely desire deliverance from all sin and corruption, study universal holiness, endeavour to avoid all known sins, and to perform all known duties both to God and our neighbour.

Q. Why is love so needful at the Lord's table?

A. Because it is a love-feast, wherein we have the greatest discovery of God's love to sinners ever was given, which requires suitable returns of love from us, namely, love to God and Christ, and to his people, and to our very enemies.

Q. How may we know if our love to God and Jesus Christ be true?

A. We may judge it so, if we love God above all things; if we keep his commandments, if we be afraid to offend him, if we be tender of his honour, if we rejoice in the success of his gospel, if we mourn under his absence, long for his presence, and desire to be like him.

Q. Is not every worthy communicant resolved in Christ's strength to perform new obedience, by forsaking all sin, and following the Lamb whithersoever he goeth?—A. Yes.

Q. Is not self-examination with respect to all these things very useful before partaking?

A. Yes; for it serves to discover how it is with us, to humble us for defects, and to excite us to go to the fullness that is in Christ, for the supply of all our wants.

Q. Is it not most dangerous to neglect self-examination before communicating?

A. Yes; for the answer saith, "All must examine themselves, lest coming unworthily they eat and drink judgment to themselves."

Q. Is not self-examination to be joined with earnest prayer?—A. Yes.

Q. What should we pray for before we come to the Lord's table?

A. That God would prepare our souls for so near an approach to God; that he would quicken all the sacramental graces, and bring them to a lively exercise in us; and that he would save us from coming unworthily to his holy table.

Q. Who are those that come unworthily to the Lord's table?

A. Those who are ignorant or graceless, and they who live in any known sin, or come without reconciliation to God and their neighbour; also they who neglect to prepare themselves by self-examination and prayer for exciting of grace before they come.

Q. What is the sin of those who come unworthily?

A. They are guilty of the body and blood of the Lord, being accessory to the Jews' sin who crucified him, by their harbouring the murderer sin, 1 Cor. xi. 27.

Q. What is the danger of those who come unworthily?

A. They eat and drink judgment to themselves, 1 Cor. ix. 29, 30.

Q. What judgments were inflicted on the unworthy communicants at Corinth?

A. Sickness and death, 1 Cor. xi. 30.

Q. Is this sin pardonable upon repentance?

A. Yes; the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin.

Q. May those who want assurance come to the Lord's table?

A. Yes, if they have a sense of their need of Christ, and earnest desires to be found in him; for this sacrament is a means for strengthening weak grace, and obtaining the evidences of God's love to doubting souls.

Q. What shall those do, who, after all their endeavours, cannot get their hearts brought to any suitable frame for approaching to God in this ordinance?

A. They ought to bewail their case before the Lord, and yet, in obedience to his commandment, they should come to put honour upon their dying Saviour, who has appointed this ordinance as a means for bringing such exercised souls into a right frame. It is our best course, even in our worst cases, to lay ourselves in God's road, who has promised to meet such as remember him in his ways, and many times surprises his people with supplies of life, when he sees them struggling with their deadness in the use of appointed means.

QUESTION XCVIII.

Q. What is prayer?

A. Prayer is an offering up of our desires to God, for things agreeable to his will, in the name of Christ, with confession of our sins, and thankful acknowledgment of his mercies.

Q. What are the parts of prayer mentioned in this answer.

A. They are three; petition, confession, and thanksgiving.

Q. What are our petitions to God called in the answer?

A. They are called an offering up of our desires to God.

Q. Doth God account the offering up of the words of the mouth, as petitions or prayers to him?

A. No, without the desires of the heart: though he will accept of the desires of the heart, if sincere, without the words of the mouth, as in the cases of Moses and Hannah, Exod. xiv. 15; 1 Sam. i. 13.

Q. Are we not to make use of our voice and words in uttering our desires to God?

A. Yes, when the circumstances of the time and place allow it; for these are proper and needful to prevent wandering, to increase fervency, and to glorify God with the outward man, Psal. v. 3; lv. 17; lxix. 3.

Q. If some, as they allege, cannot pray in such proper words as others, may they omit prayer?

A. No; for God looks chiefly to the heart, and its desires; and he accepts them when sincere, though the words be not so proper or exact. Hence the Psalmist encouraged himself in his distress, Psal. xxxviii. 9. "Lord, all my desire is before thee, and my groaning is not hid from thee."

Q. To whom are we to offer up our desires in prayer?

A. To God only, Psal. l. 15; lxii. 8; Mat. vi. 10; vi. 9.

Q. May we pray to any of the three Persons of the Godhead?

A. Yes; for in scripture we find prayer directed, sometimes to the Father, John xvi. 23; Eph. iii. 14; sometimes to the Son, Mat. viii. 2; Acts. vii. 59; 1 Cor. i. 2; sometimes to the Holy Ghost, 2 Cor. xiii. 14. Yet so as, when any one of the three is named, the other two are understood as included, they being all three but one and the same God.

Q. Why must we pray to God only?

A. Because so we are commanded, and it is God only that searches our hearts, that knows our cases, and can help us in straits, Mat. iv. 10; Psal. xxxiv. 15, 17; 2 Kings vi. 26, 27; and hence he styles himself, The God hearing prayers, Psal. lxxv. 2.

Q. May we not pray to saints or angels, or to the Virgin Mary?

A. No; for in all the scriptures there is neither command, promise, nor example for it; nay, we are forbidden to do it, for it is idolatry. The saints know not our cases, and they are cursed who trust in man; see Mat. iv. 10; Isa. xlii. 8; lxiii. 16; Exod. xx. 3; Gal. ii. 18; Rev. xix. 10; Jer. xvii. 5.

Q. May we not pray to the saints in heaven, as well as apply to the saints on earth to pray for us?

A. We do not pray to saints here with religious honour, but only ask their charitable assistance while we have access to converse with them here below, which we are warranted to do, 2 Thess. iii. 1; James v. 14, 16. But the saints in heaven are "ignorant of us," Isa. lxiii. 16.

Q. Can we in prayer make known to God that which he knew not before?

A. No; for he understands our thoughts afar off, Psal. cxxxix. 2, 4. But yet he thinks fit to enjoin us thus to make known our requests to him, as the means by which we are to receive the good things promised, Phil. iv. 6; Psal. l. 15; Joel ii. 32; Rom. x. 12.

Q. Can prayer merit any thing from God?

A. No; for in prayer we come as needy beggars, to ask mercy only by mere favour.

Q. If God hath decreed to give us what we need, what need we pray for it?

A. Because God hath commanded us, and he hath decreed to bestow blessings in the way of prayer.

Q. Is not prayer our privilege as well as our duty?

A. Yes; and a great privilege it is for such poor beggars to be admitted in a familiar manner to open our cases to so great a King, in whose presence the angels cover their faces.

Q. For what things may we offer up our desires to God?

A. Not for things unlawful, but for things which are agreeable to God's will, 1 John v. 14.

Q. What do you mean by the will of God, which is to be the rule of our prayers?

A. Not his secret will, which is unknown to us, but his revealed will, which is contained in his word.

Q. What are these things agreeable to God's revealed will, which we are to pray for?

A. They are good things, both spiritual and temporal, that we stand in need of, and which he hath promised to us in his covenant.

Q. What are these spiritual things that we should pray for?

A. They are such as an interest in Christ, pardon of sin, supplies of grace, deliverance from sin and wrath, and eternal life.

Q. May we pray for the good things of this life?

A. Yes; but not principally, or in the first place.

Q. What things are we to seek in the first place?

A. Spiritual things, particularly Jesus Christ and his grace.

Q. Ought not spiritual things and temporal things be asked in a different way?

A. Yes; for the one we are to pray absolutely, and for the other conditionally, and with submission to God's will.

Q. What is the condition upon which we are to pray for temporal good things?

A. It is upon condition that God see it fit for his own glory and our good to grant them to us, 2 Sam. x. 12; xv. 25, 26; Mat. viii. 2.

Q. Ought we to seek for temporal mercies with the same fervency as for spiritual?—A. No.

Q. Should we pray for all sorts of spiritual mercies in the same way?

A. No; for we should pray absolutely for these that are absolutely necessary for us, such as Christ, faith, remission of sin, perseverance, &c. But for things which are not absolutely needful to salvation, such as the highest degrees of grace, spiritual gifts and comforts, deliverance from temptations, &c.; these we should pray for conditionally, and with submission to the will of God.

Q. Why may we pray absolutely for God and his grace?

A. Because they are absolutely promised, and we are sure they are for God's glory and our real good, seeing without them we cannot serve God here, nor enjoy him hereafter.

Q. Ought we to pray for all sorts of persons?

A. Yes; as for kings, for magistrates, and ministers, for all saints, for the afflicted, for the unconverted, for our relations and friends, and even our enemies, 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2; Eph. vi. 18, 19; Mat. v. 44; Psal. lxxii. 19; lxvi. 2—4.

Q. Are there not some persons excepted, for whom we must not pray?

A. Yes; we may not pray for them that have committed the sin against the Holy Ghost, nor for the dead, nor for the damned in hell, 1 John v. 16.

Q. What if we should ask any thing disagreeable to the will of God?

A. In that case, we must not expect to receive it, James iv. 3.

Q. Is it enough that the matter of our prayer be right, to wit, that they be for things agreeable to God's will?

A. No; for the manner of our prayers must be so too.

Q. May we go to God without a Mediator?

A. No; for we are guilty and obnoxious to his justice, and so can no more approach to God, than stubble to a consuming fire.

Q. Who is the only Mediator between God and man?

A. The man Christ Jesus, and beside him there is none else, 1 Tim. ii. 5.

Q. In whose name must we offer up our desires to God?

A. Only in the name of Christ, this one Mediator, John xiv. 14; xvi. 23.

Q. What do you mean by praying in the name of Christ? Is it only to use his name in our prayers?

A. There is more in it; for it imports our pleading the merits of Christ, the purchaser for every thing we want, and depending thereupon as the only ground of our acceptance and audience with God, Eph. iii. 12.

Q. Is Christ that angel mentioned, Rev. viii. 3, 4, with the golden censer, that offers up our prayers before the throne of God?—A. Yes.

Q. What is that incense he is said to mix with the prayers of the saints?

A. It is the merits of his obedience and suffering, or his perfect righteousness.

Q. What need is there for mixing this incense with our prayers?

A. To perfume them, and take away the ill savour of the imperfections and defilements which cleave to our best duties.

Q. May we not in prayer make use of the name of saints or angels as our intercessors with God?

A. No; for this would be highly injurious to the Lord Jesus Christ, who is the alone intercessor and advocate with the Father for us, 1 Tim. ii. 5; Heb. vii. 25; 1 John ii. 1.

Q. Besides praying in Christ's name, is there any thing more required in the manner of our prayers, that they be acceptable to God?

A. Yes; they must be offered up with humility, sincerity, faith, fervency, and perseverance, Psal. x. 17; Jer. xxix. 13; Heb. x. 22; James i. 6; v. 16; Luke xviii. 1.

Q. When we are bid "pray without ceasing," 1 Thess. v. 17, must we do no other work but pray?

A. The meaning is, that we should continue in prayer without wearying, keep up stated times, and embrace all other proper occasions for prayer, and study to keep the heart always in a praying frame.

Q. Must we omit prayer, when we do not find our hearts in a good frame for it?

A. No; we must go and make our complaint to God who can help us, and not cease praying till we find ourselves in a better frame.

Q. If the desired mercy do not soon come, may we then give over?

A. No; we must continue instant in prayer, and not faint, Rom. xii. 12; Luke xviii. 1.

Q. Can we of ourselves pray in this acceptable manner to God?

A. No; and therefore we must have the Spirit of God to help our infirmities, Rom. viii. 26, 27, and hence he is called the "Spirit of supplication," Zech. xii. 10.

Q. How doth the Spirit of God help us in prayer?

A. He both raises suitable affections in us for prayer, and directs us to suitable matter and arguments in prayer, because we know not what we should pray for as we ought, Rom. viii. 26.

Q. Is it not thus that the Spirit makes intercession in us?—A. Yes.

Q. Are all prayers, offered up to God, accepted and answered?

A. No; for the prayers of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord, Prov. xv. 8.

Q. How cometh it that the prayers of many are not regarded?

A. Because they regard iniquity in their hearts, such as unbelief, pride, covetousness, malice, or unmercifulness to the poor; for each of which God threatens to shut out our prayers, Psal. lxxv. 18; cxxxviii. 6; James i. 7; Isa. lvii. 17; Mat. v. 24; vi. 15; Prov. xxi. 13.

Q. Doth not God sometimes delay long to hear the prayers of his own people?

A. Yes; he doth so, to chasten and humble them for their sins, to try their faith and patience, to quicken them to more fervency in prayer, and make mercies more sweet to them when obtained, Isa. lix. 2; lxiv. 7; Mat. xv. 26, 28; 2 Cor. xii. 8, 9.

Q. How may we know that our prayers are accepted of God, when yet we receive no answer to them?

A. It is a good sign of acceptance, when we are helped still to wait upon God in the way of duty, to get our hearts enlarged in prayer; or when we are inclined to justify God and blame ourselves for the cause of his silence, Isa. viii. 17; Psal. cxxxviii. 3; Lam. iii. 39—41.

Q. Doth not God sometimes answer his people's prayers, though the very things asked be not given?

A. Yes, when he grants them the equivalent, or things more necessary for them; as when he gives spiritual blessings instead of temporal, stronger adherence to Christ instead of assurance, or greater humility and melting of heart for sin, instead of consolation and joy.

Q. What is the second part of prayer mentioned in the answer?

A. Confession of our sins.

Q. Ought not our petitions for pardon and mercy to be attended with humble confession of sin?

A. Yes, if we would have them acceptable and successful, Luke xviii. 13, 14.

Q. What sins should we confess unto the Lord?

A. All our sins, both original and actual, of omission and commission, in heart and life, in words and actions; with the several aggravations of them, and their deserving at God's hand.

Q. In what manner ought we to confess our sins to the Lord?

A. We should confess our sins humbly, freely, fully, and in a most penitent manner, with grief for them, hatred of them, and strong resolutions against them, in the strength and assistance of Jesus Christ.

Q. Must we not forsake our sins, as well as confess them?

A. Yes; for it is only those who do so, that shall find mercy, according to Prov. xxviii. 13.

Q. What is the third part of prayer mentioned in the answer?

A. Thankful acknowledgment of God's mercies to us.

Q. Is thanksgiving to be always joined with our petitions and supplications to God?

A. Yes; for God requires and expects it, and it is most pleasing unto him, Phil. iv. 6; Luke xvii. 17; Psal. lxi. 31.

Q. What are the mercies we ought to acknowledge and give thanks for?

A. All the spiritual and temporal mercies which we presently enjoy; and the eternal mercies which we hope for, and have promised unto us.

Q. Which is the greatest mercy that we have to acknowledge?

A. Jesus Christ is the mercy of mercies, and the unspeakable gift of God to a perishing world, for which we should offer thanks to God, both now, and through all eternity, Luke i. 72; 2 Cor. ix. 15.

Q. Is not this thankfulness for mercies a special way of glorifying God?

A. Yes, for God hath said, "Whoso offereth praise, glorifieth me," Psal. l. 23.

Q. How should we acknowledge our mercies, so as to glorify God?

A. We should acknowledge them thankfully, and with admiration, affectionately and with delight in the Author, humbly and with self-abhorrence, obediently and with fruitful lives, fiducially and with encouragement to ask for more, Psal. ciii. 1, 2, &c.; cxvi. 1, 2, 9, 12; iv. 1, 3; lxvii. 5, 6; Gen. xxxii. 10, 11; 2 Cor. i. 10.

Q. Ought we not to bewail it, that we are so negligent and backward in this duty of thankfulness for mercies received?—A. Yes.

QUESTION XCIX.

Q. What rule hath God given for our direction in prayer?

A. The whole word of God is of use to direct us in prayer, but the special rule of direction is that form of prayer which Christ taught his disciples, commonly called "The Lord's Prayer."

Q. Why do men need rules and directions in prayer?

A. Because of ourselves we know not what to pray for as we ought, nor how to pray for it aright when we know it; but are ready to mistake either as to the matter or manner of our prayers.

Q. When do men mistake in the matter of prayer?

A. When they ask things not good in themselves, or not proper for them; so the disciples did mistake, when they would have called for fire against the Samaritans, Luke ix. 54.

Q. When do men mistake in the manner of prayer?

A. When they pray for mercies in a formal way, or for carnal ends, as to make provision for their lusts, Isa. lxiv. 7; James iv. 3.

Q. What helps hath God furnished us with for prayer?

A. He hath given us both a general and special directory for it.

Q. What is the general directory which God hath given us for prayer?

A. The whole word of God, which is of great use to direct us, both as to the matter and manner of prayer.

Q. How is the word of God useful to direct us in the matter of prayer?

A. The word furnishes us with matter of preface, for confession, for petition, and for thanksgiving, in prayer.

Q. What matter doth the word furnish us with for the preface of prayer?

A. It affords us the most noble and lofty descriptions of God, with his titles and attributes, which are proper in our addresses to him; such as these in Exod. xv. 11; xxxiv. 6, 7; Neh. ix. 6; Job ix. 4; xi. 7; xl. 9; Psal. lxxxiii. 18; lxxxiv. 8, 10; lxxxix. 6, 8; xc. 2; cii. 25—27; civ. 1, 2, 24; cxxxix. 7—10; cxlv. 3, 8, 9, 14, 17; Isa. xxviii. 29; xl. 12, 15, 17, 22, 28; lv. 9; Jer. xvii. 10; xxxi. 35; Mal. iii. 6; Dan. ii. 34, 35; 1 Tim. i. 17; Rev. iv. 6, 11.

Q. What matter doth God's word furnish us with for the confession of sin?

A. It sets before us many examples of religious persons humbling themselves before God for their sins, and confessing their original sin and corruption, the blindness of their minds, the stubbornness of their wills, the carnality of their affections, their sins of omission and commission, and the manifold aggravations of their sins; as in Ezra ix. 6, 13, 15; Neh. ix. 32—34, &c.; Job vii. 20; ix. 3, 20; xv. 14, 15, &c.; xl. 4; xlii. 5, 6; Psal. xiv. 3; xix. 12; xxxviii. 4, 18; xl. 12; li. 3—5, &c.; lxxiii. 22; cxix. ult. cxxx. 3, 4, &c.; Isa. i. 6; vi. 5; Jer. v. 3; ix. 1; xvii. 9; xxxi. 18; Lam. iii. 39, 40, &c.; Dan. iv. 5, 6, &c.; Luke xv. 18, 19, 21; Rom. vii. 14, 15, &c.; viii. 7; Eph. xxi. 2, 3, &c.; iv. 18.

Q. What matter doth the word afford us for thanksgiving?

A. It sets before us the examples of God's people, who blessed and praised him for his goodness to them in creation and providence, in allowing them the comforts of life, peace, and tranquillity, success in their callings, sanctified afflictions, recovery from sickness, the accomplishment of promises, and especially for Jesus Christ, and all manner of spiritual blessings in him, Psal. viii. 3, 4; lxxv. 9, 10; cxxxix. 14; civ. 27, 28, &c.; iii. 15; lxxviii. 19; cix. 67; ciii. 1—3, &c.; Deut. viii. 10; Gen. xxxii. 10; Isa. xxxviii. 10, 17; lxiii. 7; 1 Kings viii. 56; Luke i. 68, 69, &c.; Eph. i. 3; 2 Cor. ix. 15; Rev. i. 5, 6; 1 John iv. 10.

Q. What matter doth the word afford for petitions and requests?

A. The scriptures abound with many excellent precepts and precious promises, every one of which we may turn into prayers of requests, begging of God that he would give us grace to obey the precepts, and grace to enable us to plead and wait for the accomplishment of the promises. Besides, we have recorded many examples of saints petitioning for pardon of sin, reconciliation with God, the divine blessing, the evidences of God's love, and peace of conscience; for renovation of heart, saving illumination, holy fear, faith, and increase of all grace; for preservation from sin and error, wisdom to improve time, and prepare for death; as in Psal. li. 1—3, 7, 9; cxliii. 2; lxvii. 1, 6; cvi. 4, 5; xxxv. 3; li. 8, 10—12; cxix. 18, 29, 33, 37, 80, 132, 133; xxvii. 11; lxxxvi. 11; xix. 12, 13; xxxix. 4, 5; xc. 12; Hos. xiv. 2; Luke xviii. 13; xvii. 5; Jer. xvii. 14; Rom. xv. 13; Job xxxiv. 32; 1 Thess. v. 23, 24. All which may be useful to direct us in prayer.

Q. Do we not find the scripture saints making use of arguments with God in prayer for obtaining their requests?

A. Yes, very many, taken from the mercy of God's nature, the glory of his name, his promises, faithfulness, power; and from the merit and righteousness of his son Jesus Christ, Psal. lxxxvi. 5, 15; lxxix. 8, 9; cxix. 49; lxxiv. 20; Josh. vii. 9; Numb. xiv. 17—19; Neh. i. 5; Mat. viii. 2; Isa. lxiv. 6; Jer. xxiii. 6; Dan. ix. 17—19, which are recorded for our instruction and imitation.

Q. If the word shows us the matter of prayer so fully, then what need have we of the Spirit of grace and supplication, which God promiseth to pour out upon his people?

A. It is the Spirit's office to take of the things of Christ and show them unto us, John xvi. 15. He teaches us all things, and brings all things to our remembrance, John xiv. 16.

Q. Doth the scriptures give us direction also as to the manner of prayer?

A. Yes; it directs us to draw near to God with sincerity, humility, fervency, constancy, and faith in the merits of Jesus Christ, Heb. x. 22; Psal. x. 17; James v. 16; i. 6; John xvi. 23; Luke xviii. 1.

Q. What is the special rule of direction in prayer, mentioned in the answer?

A. That form of prayer which Christ taught his disciples, commonly called the Lord's prayer. This we have recorded in Mat. vi. 9—14, "After this manner, therefore, pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name," &c.

Q. Why is that prayer called the Lord's prayer? is it because he used it himself?

A. No; the Lord Jesus could not use it, for he had no sin to seek forgiveness, as in the fifth petition; but it is called his prayer, because he taught it to his disciples, that they might make use of it.

Q. What was Christ's design in teaching them this prayer?

A. He designed to teach his disciples (who were then but private persons) suitably to their weak infant state, when they had little of the Spirit, and little knowledge of the gospel-mystery; for he but gradually revealed himself to them: and therefore, in the mean time, he gives them a short, plain, and easy form of the words, that might comprehend the heads or chief things they had to ask of God, and from which they might draw materials for prayer. Likewise, he taught them by it to ask for things relating to God's glory before things relating to themselves, and to prefer spiritual mercies before temporal.

Q. Why do you think this prayer was so much calculated for the disciples' present state?

A. Because our Lord did not then think fit to direct them to pray in his name, or to make any mention of Christ in their prayers: but afterwards, when he was pleased plainly to reveal himself as the great Priest and sacrifice for lost sinners, he taught them expressly to pray in his name,—John xv. 23, 24.

Q. Was it our Lord's design to tie his disciples to the precise words he gave them, and to use them always when they prayed?

A. No; for he gave them this prayer chiefly as a pattern or directory for their assistance in prayer, so that they were left at freedom either to use these very words, which indeed are sweet and excellent, or to enlarge upon them in other words suitably to their own case, or the case of others joining with them in prayer.

Q. How do you make it appear that they were left at that freedom?

A. Because, 1. Christ saith to his disciples, Mat. vi. 9, "Pray after this manner." 2. Matthew and Luke very much differ, and alter the words in recording this prayer. 3. We have several prayers of the apostles recorded, as in Acts i. 24; iv. 24; Eph. iii. 24; 1 Thess. iii. 11; 2 Thess. ii. 16; Heb. xiii. 20; and yet in none of them do they use the express words of this prayer. 4. The Lord gives directions for prayer in other texts, and prescribes words as expressly as Christ doth in Mat. vi., such as we have recorded in Hos. xiv. 2; Joel ii. 17; and yet none plead that we are stinted to these precise words, though there is the same reason for doing it in the one place, as in the other.

Q. Is not the Lord's prayer still of excellent use unto us?

A. Yes, and we ought to value it highly, and have a special regard to it, as a pattern of divine contrivance, and a most comprehensive summary of the chief things we have to ask of God, which we should diligently study both as to matter and method, and from which we should take the materials of our prayers.

Q. Doth Christ's giving us this prayer warrant men to compose forms of prayer for others, so as to restrict them to the use of them, and cause them to read them when they pray?

A. By no means: For though forms of prayer may be useful to children and weak persons, who cannot pray without such helps; yet to impose them upon such as need them not, and to oblige men to read them as terms of communion, is unwarrantable.

Q. Wherefore is it unwarrantable?

A. 1. Because we have no scripture command nor example for it; we are enjoined to read and study the scriptures, but not to read any prayer book. If the scripture saints had any such book, they could not have said, as in Rom. vii. 26, "We know not what to pray for as we ought, without the Spirit's help;" for those who read such books for prayer, seem to be at no loss what to pray for. 2. We have many prayers of the scripture and primitive saints recorded, which they conceived suitable to their present circumstances and necessities, without any book or set form; nay, these ancient saints were so far from reading their prayers from a book, that we are assured the usual posture was to pray with their eyes either shut, or else lift up to heaven. 3. The cases, frames, trials, and circumstances of Christians are so various, and alter so frequently, that it is impossible that such composed forms can reach them. 4. To restrict men to such forms, would hinder them from the search of the scriptures, and of their own hearts; seeing they must use the petitions prepared for them, whether they be suitable to their conditions or not. 5. This practice is injurious to the office of the Holy Spirit, and the design of Christ's ascension.

Q. Is not the using and reading of forms of prayer, of very ancient standing in the church?

A. For as ancient as it is, we are well assured there was no such practice in the church for four hundred years after Christ: neither came it in, till the Spirit of grace had in a great measure left the church; and whenever he is poured out again upon the church, these forms will be laid aside.

Q. How is this practice injurious to the Spirit's office, and Christ's ascension?

A. In regard it is the office of the Holy Spirit to help his people's infirmities, when they know not what to pray for as they ought; and Christ ascended up on high, that he might send the Spirit, and give gifts unto men, of prayer as well as of preaching: but, if reading of prayers take place, these gifts are useless, seeing one that can read well may pray as well as those who have the greatest gifts: and hereby a grave is digged for burying the most useful gifts of God to men; which is an injury to Christ and his Spirit, and expressly contrary to the injunction which he gives unto ministers, to stir up the gift of God that is in them, 2 Tim. i. 6.

Q. What parts doth the Lord's prayer consist of?

A. Of three parts, namely, a preface, six petitions, and the conclusion.

QUESTION C.

Q. What doth the preface of the Lord's prayer teach us?

A. The preface of the Lord's prayer (which is, "Our Father which art in heaven,") teacheth us to draw near to God with all holy reverence and confidence, as children to a father able and ready to help us; and that we should pray with and for others.

Q. Why doth Christ teach us to begin prayer with a solemn preface?

A. To let us know that we must not rush into God's presence without consideration, but must study to have an awful sense of the majesty of that God whom we are to address.

Q. What is the preface given to the Lord's prayer?

A. It is in these words, "Our Father which art in heaven."

Q. What views doth Christ give us of the object of worship in this preface?

A. We have a twofold view of God in it: 1. In the near relation he stands to his people in these words, "Our Father." 2. In his glorified majesty, and dwelling place, in these words, "which art in heaven."

Q. How is the word Father to be understood here?

A. Sometimes Father is understood personally for the first person of the blessed Trinity, and to whom prayer is directed; as in Eph. iii. 14. Sometimes Father is understood essentially for the God-head, including all the three persons, as in 1 Chron. xxix. 10; 2 Cor. vi. 18. And in this last sense we take it in the Lord's prayer.

Q. In what respect is God called our Father?

A. 1. God is called our Father in respect of creation, as in Isa. lxiv. 8; Mal. ii. 10. 2. In respect of our adoption into the family of God through Jesus Christ, Rom. viii. 14, 15; Gal. iv. 5, 6.

Q. When Christ directs us in prayer to call God "Our Father," what doth he teach us hereby?

A. He teacheth us hereby to draw near to God, 1. With holy reverence and fear of God our Creator. 2. With a filial and kindly respect to God as our Benefactor and Provider. 3. With humble confidence and expectation of getting what we want from a loving Father. 4. With willingness and desire, as children who delight to speak to their kind father.

Q. Is it not unspeakable love and goodness in God to allow such sinful worms to call him "Our Father?"

A. Yes; and the apostle John is astonished at it, 1 John iii. 1.

Q. May unregenerate men call God their Father?

A. Not in a peculiar manner, or in a gospel sense; hence Christ would not allow the Pharisees to call God their Father, John viii. 42, 44.

Q. Who are these then that may warrantably do it?

A. Those who receive the spirit of adoption into their hearts may cry, "Abba, Father," Rom. viii. 15.

Q. What is the spirit of adoption?

A. It is the Spirit of God that produces the nature and disposition of children in the souls of God's people; which appears in their filial love to God, their fear of offending him, their dependence upon him, their obedience and desire of conformity to him.

Q. How shall these cry, Abba, Father, who see not the evidences of the spirit of adoption in them?

A. If they receive the Lord Jesus by faith, they may call God their Father; for it is by faith in him that sinners become the children of God, John i. 12; Gal. iii. 26.

Q. What shall they say, who doubt if they have got true faith?

A. If they be weary of their sins, and earnestly desirous of reconciliation with God through Christ, they may go to God with the prodigal, and say to him, "Father, I have sinned," &c., Luke xv. 18.

Q. Wherein doth God resemble a father or earthly parent to his people?

A. In regard he pities them, provides bread for them, clothes them, loves to hear them speak, is ready to hear their cries, gives them good instructions, and a good example, chastises them with yearning bowels, provides portions and inheritances for them, Prov. iii. 13; xv. 8; 1 Pet. i. 4; ii. 2; Isa. lxi. 10; Psal. xxxiv. 16; xxxi. 19; Mat. v. 48; Jer. xxx. 11; Luke xii. 32.

Q. Wherein doth God excel all earthly fathers?

A. In regard he is a Father infinitely rich, wise, and loving, immortal and everlasting; he gives his children whatever is best for them, and in good time; he never gives them what is hurtful to them; he makes all his children heirs, yea, heirs of a kingdom, even the youngest of them.

Q. Why is God in this preface said to be in heaven? Is he no where else?

A. The meaning is not that God's presence is included in the heavens; for the heaven of heavens cannot contain him, who fills heaven and earth, and is everywhere present, 1 Kings viii. 27; Jer. xxiii. 24. But he is said to be in heaven, because there is his throne and court, where he manifests himself most gloriously, Psal. xi. 4; ciii. 19; Isa. lxvi. 1.

Q. What doth Christ teach us by addressing God as our Father in heaven?

A. 1. That though we be allowed to speak freely to God, yet we should know our distance, and have exalted thoughts and awful apprehensions of the divine Majesty and glory. 2. That God beholds all things, and is able and ready to help us in every case. 3. That we should be heavenly-minded and abstracted from the world in duty: that we should have our eyes on heaven, as our country and home, and especially on Jesus Christ our intercessor there, for acceptance and audience in every duty.

Q. What doth the word our in this preface teach us?

A. That we ought not only to pray alone for ourselves, but that we should also pray in society with others, and for others: and particularly, that family worship is a duty incumbent on those who have families, Jer. x. 25.

QUESTION CI.

Q. What do we pray for in the first petition?

A. In the first petition (which is, "Hallowed be thy name,") we pray, That God would enable us and others to glorify him in all that whereby he maketh himself known, and that he would dispose of all things to his own glory.

Q. What is a petition?

A. It is a request or asking of a thing.

Q. How many petitions are in the Lord's prayer?—A. Six.

Q. How are these six petitions divided?

A. The three first relate chiefly to God's glory, and the three last to our good and benefit.

Q. What is the first of these petitions?

A. Hallowed be thy name.

Q. Why is this petition put first?

A. To show that we are to prefer the hallowing of God's name to all other things whatsoever. This is the first and great petition, and will last when the other petitions shall be out of date in heaven; for to all eternity the saints will insist upon the hallowing of God's name.

Q. What is meant here by God's name?

A. God himself the person named; and particularly every thing whereby God makes himself known, such as his titles, attributes, words, &c.

Q. What is it to hallow the name of God?

A. It is to sanctify, honour, or glorify God himself, and to do it in those things by which he makes himself known, Isa. viii. 13; xxix. 23; 1 Pet. iii. 15.

Q. Why is the word hallowed, or sanctified, made use of, rather than glorified?

A. Because God's glory shines most in his holiness, and God's holiness beautifies all his other attributes, Isa. vi. 3; xii. 6; Exod. xv. 11.

Q. Is there not a vast difference between God's sanctifying of us, and our sanctifying of God?

A. Yes; for God's sanctifying of us, is by infusing holiness into us, which we had not before; but our sanctifying God, is only to manifest and acknowledge that holiness of God, which he eternally had, and will have.

Q. Why is the petition set down in the third person, "hallowed be thy name?"

A. To include all persons and things that are capable of doing it; as, 1. Let us who pray be fit, or make us fit, to hallow thy name. 2. Let all our fellow-creatures be fitted and employed to hallow thy name. 3. Because creatures are insufficient to do it, Lord, let thy name be hallowed by thyself, who only canst do it to purpose.

Q. Are we not taught by this petition to acknowledge that we are incapable of ourselves to do any thing for God's glory?

A. Yes; and therefore Christ will have us to ask grace from God to fit us, and put us in the most useful circumstances for the glorifying of his name.

Q. How is it that we by grace may hallow and glorify God's name?

A. By adoring his excellencies; owning our dependence on him; trusting and believing in him; reverencing his name, his word, and ordinances; praising him, and calling upon him; confessing and forsaking our sins; magnifying God in his works; justifying him in his judgments; fruitfulness in good works; ascribing the honour of all we do to him; standing up for his glory; espousing the cause of truth and holiness; suffering for them; witnessing against error, sin, and every thing that dishonours him; and commending the way and service of God to others, both by our lips and lives.

Q. Doth Christ also teach us, in this petition, that it should be our joy and endeavour to have the name of God hallowed and glorified by others, as well as by ourselves?—A. Yes.

Q. What must we pray for, that others in the world may also glorify his name?

A. That the nations, and those who know not God, may be converted to him; that they may glorify his name, in the same manner that we are endeavouring to do it; and that they may "come and declare his righteousness to a people that shall be born," Psal. xlvii. 2, 3; xxii. 27, 31.

Q. Should we not join our endeavours with our prayers in order to engage others to glorify God?

A. Yes, according to our stations.

Q. What direction hath Christ given to persons of all stations for that end?

A. That in Mat. v. 16, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Q. Seeing we come so far short of our duty in this respect, ought we not to pray that God may glorify his own name?

A. Yes, we have Christ teaching us this by his own example, John xii. 28, "Father, glorify thy name." And we have God's promise that he will do it, Ezek. xxxviii. 23; xxxvi. 23.

Q. How is it that God glorifies his own name?

A. By pouring out his Spirit on the church, and disposing all things in the world to his own glory.

Q. How doth God dispose of the affairs of the world to his own glory?

A. By over-ruling the occurrences in it, to such events and issues as may best promote and advance the glory of his name; as when he restrains or punishes his enemies, and vindicates his name from the reproaches of the wicked; when he relieves his church from oppression, removes her grievances, establishes pure worship and ordinances, opens a door for reformation, restores her judges as at the first, and her counsellors as at the beginning, Ezek. xxviii. 24—26; xxxvi. 23, 24, 37, 38; xx. 40, 41; Isa. i. 26; Psal. lxxvi. 9, 10.

Q. Doth not Christ teach us in this petition to pray against every thing whereby God's name is dishonoured?—A. Yes.

Q. What are these evils whereby God's name is dishonoured?

A. They are many, such as atheism, idolatry, unbelief, contempt of God and his worship, swearing, Sabbath-breaking, uncleanness, &c.

Q. If any such profane persons say the Lord's prayer, doth not their practice contradict their prayers?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it not a cutting affliction to a gracious soul to see or hear God's name dishonoured?

A. Yes, Psal. xlii. 10.

Q. Will not God pour contempt on those who dishonour his name?

A. Yes, their name and memory shall rot here, and they shall rise to shame and everlasting contempt hereafter, Prov. x. 7; Dan. xii. 5.

Q. What shall be done to those who honour and glorify God's name?

A. They shall lose nothing by it, 1 Sam. ii. 3, "Them that honour me I will honour."

Q. How shall God honour those who honour him?

A. He will put honour upon their persons, upon their names, their souls, and their bodies. He will honour them at death, by sending angels for them, and after death by putting robes of immortality and crowns of righteousness upon them.

QUESTION CII.

Q. What do we pray for in the second petition.

A. In the second petition, (which is, "Thy kingdom come,") we pray, That Satan's kingdom may be destroyed, and that the kingdom of grace may be advanced, ourselves and others brought into it and kept in it, and that the kingdom of glory may be hastened.

Q. Why doth this petition follow the former?

A. Because we cannot hallow or glorify God's name aright, till his kingdom come into our souls.

Q. What is signified by the kingdom of God here?

A. Three things: 1. The preaching of the gospel is called his kingdom, Mat. xiii. 47. 2. A work of saving grace in men's souls is so called, Luke xvii. 21. 3. The state of glory in heaven is also called the kingdom of God, 1 Cor. xv. 50. The two first are called the kingdom of grace in the answer, and the third is called the kingdom of glory.

Q. Why are these called the kingdom of grace?

A. Because it is by the indensation of the gospel that a work of grace is begun and carried on in the souls of the elect.

Q. Who is King in this kingdom?

A. God; but he governs it by Jesus Christ his viceroy, whom he hath set to reign in it, and hence called King of Zion, Psal. ii. 6.

Q. Why is Christ's gracious work in his people's souls called a kingdom?

A. Because, wherever grace comes, it subdues mutinous lusts, rules in the will and affections, and brings the whole man in subjection to Christ and his righteous sceptre, 2 Cor. x. 5.

Q. Whether is it the coming of the kingdom of grace or of glory, that we pray for in the second petition?

A. We pray for the coming of them both, and that because the last is nothing but the perfection of the first, and the glory of God is more fully displayed in it.

Q. What is meant by the coming or advancement of the kingdom of grace, which we are here taught to pray for?

A. It includes the spreading and success of the gospel through the world, and removing of the impediments thereof. Also we pray therein, that the churches of Christ every where may have faithful ministers, pure doctrine, ordinances, and discipline, with much of the presence and power of God's Spirit concurring with the same. That the kingdom of God may be set up in our souls, and in the souls of others, and a work of grace may be carried on therein to perfection.

Q. What are those impediments of the coming of this kingdom, that we must pray God to take out of the way?

A. There is in general the kingdom of Satan, which includes the dominion and tyranny of sin, of antichrist, and all the enemies of the church; the overspreading of false religions; the prevailing of error, idolatry, superstition, scandals, divisions, or a corrupt ministry in the church: all these we must pray against.

Q. How doth it appear that Satan hath a kingdom in the world?

A. In regard Satan is styled the god and prince of this world; and the wicked are his children and subjects, in and over whom he rules, 2 Cor. iv. 4; John xiv. 30; viii. 44; Eph. ii. 2; 2 Tim. ii. 26.

Q. Is Satan's kingdom very large?

A. Yes, it is much further spread than the kingdom of Christ.

Q. How comes Satan to have such a large kingdom?

A. By our first parents revolting from their rightful sovereignty.

Q. Why doth God permit Satan to rule over the world in such a manner?

A. God permits it as a righteous act of vengeance against man, for revolting from the sweet government of his Lord and Maker; and also to glorify his name, by recovering the elect from Satan's dominion.

Q. Has Satan any right to govern the wicked?

A. No; he is an usurper, though they are become his willing slaves.

Q. Ought we not to pray that Satan's kingdom may be destroyed?

A. Yes; for while it stands it hinders the coming of Christ's kingdom; and the precious souls he rules over, are under a cruel government.

Q. What is the meaning of the word Satan?

A. It signifies an adversary; and well he may be called so, for he is the adversary that goes about as a roaring lion, seeking to devour precious souls, 1 Pet. v. 8.

Q. What is meant by our praying to destroy Satan's kingdom.

A. We mean that Christ may bruise the old serpent's head, and deliver poor souls from his tyranny; that Jews, Turks, heathens, and wicked men, may be brought to the knowledge and obedience of Christ.

Q. How may we know if we be delivered from the kingdom of Satan, and brought into the kingdom of Christ?

A. We may know it by our hearkening to the gospel call, by our closing with Christ in all his offices, by our surrendering our hearts to be his throne, our loving his laws, and fighting against his enemies.

Q. Ought these to pray, "Thy kingdom come," in whose souls the kingdom of grace is come already?

A. Yes; for, it being in a weak condition, they must still pray that it may come with more power into them; that sin may be more weakened, and grace more strengthened and increased; and that they persevere in grace to the end.

Q. Would not the remarkable coming of the kingdom of grace produce blessed effects in the world?

A. Yes; for then godliness would be in esteem, truth would prevail against error, iniquity would stop its mouth, Jerusalem would be a praise, her walls would be repaired, her grievances redressed, and her branches healed; then should her ministers be clothed with righteousness, and her saints shout for joy; then should sinners fly together as a cloud, like doves to their windows; then should the lion lie down with the lamb, the weak should be as David, and David as the angel of God.

Q. What do we pray for in this petition, with respect to the kingdom of glory?

A. That it may be hastened.

Q. What is meant by the kingdom of glory?

A. The glorious state of the church triumphant in heaven, when they shall be free from all evil, enjoy all good, and reign with Christ for ever.

Q. Why is the heavenly state called the kingdom of God?

A. Because in that state God reigns over his people gloriously, there not being any mutinous lust or rebellious thought to be found among them. And they themselves shall be made kings, and shall sit with Christ on his throne, and reign with him for ever, Rev. iii. 21; xxii. 5.

Q. Who are those that are entitled to that kingdom of glory?

A. Those who receive Christ as their king now, who strive to subdue their lust, who live as pilgrims here, who keep up a correspondence with that kingdom, and study to be made meet for it.

Q. Is there not a time fixed for the coming of this kingdom? How then should we pray to hasten it?

A. Though the time be fixed, yet God makes it our duty to be longing and breathing out our desires for the coming of it, according to Christ's promise, Cant. viii. 14; Rev. xxii. 20.

Q. How is this longing disposition of the saints expressed?

A. It is called a "looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God," 2 Pet. iii. 12.

Q. Why are saints of this longing disposition?

A. Because the new nature inclines them to desire perfect freedom from sin, and full communion with God.

QUESTION CIII.

Q. What do we pray for in the third petition?

A. In the third petition (which is, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven,") we pray. That God by his grace would make us able and willing to know, obey, and submit to his will in all things, as the angels do in heaven.

Q. Why doth this petition follow upon the former?

A. To teach us, that the doing of God's will is the way to promote the coming of his kingdom.

Q. What is meant by the will of God here?

A. Both the will of God's precept and the will of his providence, Mat. vii. 21; 1 Pet. iii. 17.

Q. What is it that we pray for when we ask that the will of God's precept may be done?

A. We pray, that we and others may, by God's word and Spirit, be enlightened to know his will revealed to us, and may, by his grace, be inclined and enabled to obey it.

Q. Doth not this suppose that we are naturally blind and ignorant of God's will?

A. Yes; and so the scripture tells us, Eph. iv. 18; v. 8.

Q. Are we not by nature also unwilling to know the will of God?

A. Yes, Job xxi. 14, "They say unto God, depart from us, for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways," Rom. viii. 7.

Q. What must we do, in order to know the will of God?

A. We must search the scriptures where it is revealed to us, and pray for the teaching of the Spirit of God, who only can effectually remove our blindness and enmity, and give us the saving knowledge of God's will, John v. 39; Psal. cxix. 18, 33, 86.

Q. Is it enough for a man to know God's will in a literal manner?

A. No; for we must likewise be inclined and strengthened to obey it. Therefore saith our Lord, John xiii. 17, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."

Q. Will not knowledge, without doing, make a man's case the worse?

A. Yes, it will make hell the hotter, according to Luke xii. 47.

Q. Are we not naturally prone to rebel against God's will, and to do the will of the flesh and of the devil?

A. Yes, Rom. viii. 7; 1 Pet. iv. 3; Eph. ii. 3; John viii. 44.

Q. Who are those that are inclined to do the will of God?

A. Those who have God's law written in their hearts, which God promiseth to do to all those whom he renews by his Spirit, Jer. xxxii. 33.

Q. What is it to write his law in their hearts?

A. It is to make them intimately acquainted with it, to give them a heart-love and inward conformity to it, and a ready disposition to obey it.

Q. Is it not the Spirit of God that must work in us, both to will and to do what he requires in his law?

A. Yes, Phil. ii. 13; Ezek. xxxvi. 27.

Q. What is it we ask in this petition, when we pray that the will of God's providence may be done?

A. That God may give us and others grace to submit to afflicting dispensations, when it is the will of God to send them, Acts xxi. 24.

Q. What is that holy submission to the will of God which Christians ought to have, when they meet with affliction?

A. It is a gracious disposition of soul, whereby a Christian is inclined to acknowledge God's wise hand in all he meets with, and to be content to be wholly at God's disposal, without murmuring against him, 1 Sam. iii. 18; 2 Sam. xv. 26.

Q. Wherefore may we not murmur under affliction?

A. Because God is righteous in all his ways, and punishes us less than our iniquities deserve; and, if he take away any of our comforts, he but takes what is his own, Psal. cxlv. 17; Ezra. ix. 13; 1 Chron. xxix. 14.

Q. When is it that a Christian is in greatest hazard of murmuring?

A. When he meets with poverty, reproach, the loss of near relations, or with sharp bodily pain.

Q. What should quiet us in such cases?

A. Serious consideration, that we have procured all this to ourselves, that he is a holy God that hath done it, and that he sees it needful for us.

Q. What are we taught by these words in the petition, "On earth?"

A. That our concern for the glory of God and good of souls should be very extensive; for we should desire that all the inhabitants of the earth may be engaged to obey the will of our heavenly Father.

Q. What is meant by these words, "As it is in heaven?"

A. These words show what manner of obedience we should aim at and pray for; that it should be like that of the angels and glorified saints in heaven.

Q. Where do we read of the angels doing the will of God?

A. In Psal. ciii. 21, "Ye angels that excel in strength, that do his commandments, hearkening to the voice of his word."

Q. Where do we read of the glorified saints doing the will of God?

A. In Rev. xxii. 3, "There his servants shall serve him."

Q. What may we infer from such texts?

A. That it is no disparagement, but our highest honour, to serve God on earth; seeing in heaven both angels and saints serve him.

Q. Is there not a great difference between their obedience and ours?

A. Yes; for they do the will of God in a perfect manner, but we do it imperfectly.

Q. How then can we imitate these heavenly inhabitants?

A. In doing the will of God according to our state and ability, as they do according to theirs.

Q. How is it that angels and saints do the will of God in heaven?

A. They do it presently, sincerely, humbly, cheerfully, entirely, diligently, fervently, constantly, and unweariedly; and in these we should study, through grace, to imitate them, humbly bewailing short-comings, and earnestly praying to God in Christ's name for more strength.

Q. May not all such upright souls firmly hope the time is hastening when they shall obey God like angels?

A. Yes, according to Luke xx. 36.

Q. Are not the most part on earth unmindful of those excellent patterns of obedience?

A. Yes; and particularly they who make the practice of the world the rule of their doings; and they who delay performing God's will; also, they who do it only by fits, and they who do it negligently.

Q. Is it not a great part of the service of angels and saints in heaven to sing songs of praise to God?—A. Yes.

Q. What do they praise him for?

A. They praise him for his works of creation and providence, and especially for his work of redemption by Jesus Christ: hence they are said to sing the song of Moses and the song of the Lamb, Rev. xv. 3.

Q. Wherefore are their songs in heaven so styled?

A. They are called the song of Moses, because it was Moses that gave us the account of God's wonderful work of creation, and also his wonderful works of providence in preserving the church, and punishing her enemies, in the deluge of Egypt and the Red Sea, upon which occasion we have Moses's triumphant song recorded, Exod. xv. Again, their songs may well be called the "song of the Lamb," seeing Christ the Lamb of God is the subject-matter of their songs, in regard of his amazing free love in undertaking, carrying on, and finishing that glorious work of our redemption. And in these works of creation, providence, and redemption, saints and angels will find abundant matter of praise to all eternity.

QUESTION CIV.

Q. What do we pray for in the fourth petition?

A. In the fourth petition (which is, "Give us this day our daily bread,") we pray, That of God's free gift, we may receive a competent portion of the good things of this life, and enjoy his blessing with them.

Q. What is meant by bread here?

A. Food proper for our bodies, a part being taken for the whole; as in John xiii. 8, and other places.

Q. Are we not to pray for other things to our bodies besides food?

A. Yes; and bread is sometimes taken in a large sense for all things needful for upholding the body in this life, as in Gen. ii. 19; and so it includes habitations, health, sleep, clothes, medicines, and all other necessities of life, which we are likewise to pray for. As also, for averting of those evils which would destroy our bodies, or the means of supporting them; such as bad seasons, famine, war, violence, burnings, plagues, &c.

Q. Why doth Christ mention bread only in this prayer?

A. To teach us, that we have forfeited the good things of this life, and deserve to be deprived of them all; that the least crumb of bread, is God's free gift, which we can nowise merit at his hand: and likewise teach us, not to ask delicacies or dainties, but only necessities, and to be content with a sober maintenance, 1 Tim. vi. 8.

Q. Is not the bread we ask for the Lord's? why then do we call it "Our bread," as if we had a right to it?

A. It is called ours, not that we deserve it from God, for he oweth no man any thing; but because God is pleased, of his free gift to man, to appoint it for preservation: and likewise to teach us, to see what title we have to the bread we eat, that it be our own bread, and not another man's.

Q. Who are they that cannot call the bread they eat their own bread?

A. Such as eat the bread of idleness, mentioned in Prov. xxxi. 27, that is, bread they do not work for, but live at the cost of others: likewise those who eat the bread of violence or deceit, mentioned in Prov. iv. 17; xx. 17, that is, bread got by rapine and injustice; these cannot be said to eat their own bread.

Q. What is required of us, that the bread we eat may be called ours?

A. 1. We must see that we have a civil right to it, as having acquired it by honest and lawful means, 2 Thess. iii. 12. 2. We must see also to have a covenant-right to our bread, by being interested in Christ. Christ, who is the heir of all things, through whose purchase earthly things are given to believers in a covenant way, Rom. viii. 32; 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23.

Q. Can unbelievers say before God, as well as believers, "Our bread?"

A. No; for whatever civil right they have to what they possess, they have nothing by covenant-right: whatever they have by God's providence, or with his leave; they have nothing by God's promise, or with his love; it is only believers who are rightful heirs and possessors of the world. So that unbelievers, who abound in wealth, have cause to be deeply humbled before

God, and to say, alas, we are but usurpers of God's good things, we have no good right to them before him, Psal. xxxvii. 9, 11; Mat. v. 5; 1 Tim. iv. 8.

Q. What is meant by daily bread in this petition?

A. Such a portion of outward things as is necessary and sufficient for our subsistence from one day to another.

Q. Why doth Christ direct us to pray for daily, and not for yearly bread?

A. To teach us these things: not to look for many days, or great things in the world, but to live every day as it were our last; hence it is added, in the petition, give us this day, Prov. xxvii. 1. 2. To live in a daily and constant dependence upon God, without anxious cares about futurity, Mat. vi. 34; Phil. iv. 6. 3. To exercise ourselves daily in prayer, acknowledging God for every mercy, and seeking his blessing thereupon, Psal. lv. 17; 1 Thess. v. 17.

Q. May we ask for riches or great things to ourselves?

A. No; for God forbids us, telling us that they who will be rich fall into many temptations and snares, Jer. xlv.; 1 Tim. vi. 9.

Q. What if God should think fit to bestow riches upon us?

A. Then we should receive them out of God's hand with thankfulness, begging for grace to use them for his glory, and to preserve us from the snares and temptations which usually attend them, Gen. xxxii. 10.

Q. What are these temptations?

A. When riches increase, men are tempted to set their hearts upon them, to trust in them, to be proud, to forget God, and to oppress others, Psal. lxii. 10; 1 Tim. vi. 17; Deut. viii. 13, 14; James ii. 6.

Q. Is not poverty attended also with temptations?—A. Yes.

Q. What are these temptations?

A. The poor are tempted to discontentment with their lot, and to use unlawful shifts to better it, Prov. xxx. 9.

Q. What condition then is freest from temptations, and to be most desired?

A. A middle condition, with a competent portion of the good things of this life: upon which account Agur made it his prayer to God, Prov. xxx. 8, "Give me neither poverty nor riches, feed me with food convenient for me."

Q. What is to be understood by a competent portion?

A. Such a portion as our needs and circumstances require, and which God sees to be fittest for us.

Q. Is God the best judge of what we need?

A. Yes; for our heavenly Father, who knows all our needs, is infinitely good and wise, Mat. vi. 32.

Q. Seeing our heavenly Father knows our need of temporal things, what need we ask them of him?

A. Because he desires to hear his people's voice, and he would have them to acknowledge that all things come from him.

Q. Have we nothing to do but to pray for our daily bread?

A. God hath appointed us also to labour for it, Gen. iii. 19, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground."

Q. Is not God offended with those who pretend to pray for bread, and will not work for it?

A. Yes, 2 Thess. iii. 10.

Q. If men must labour for their bread, why must they pray to God for it?

A. Because it is God that must give us wisdom and strength to labour, that must make our labours successful, and make temporal things effectual to nourish and sustain us, Deut. viii. 3, 18; Psal. cxxvii. 1; Lev. xxvi. 26.

Q. Ought the rich, who are well provided, to pray for their daily bread?

A. Yes, they ought to pray that what is given may be blessed to them, continued with them, and that they may receive it as out of the Lord's hand.

Q. Why must we seek the blessing of God with outward good things?

A. Because without it they would be cursed and hurtful unto us, Hag. i. 6; Mal. ii. 2.

Q. Is not a little, with the blessing of God, better than the riches of the wicked?

A. Yes, Psal. xxxvii. 16.

Q. What must we do, that our portion in outward things may be blessed and comfortable to us?

A. We must secure an interest in Christ the purchaser, guard against distracting cares, trust in the providence of our heavenly Father, be content with his allowance, and thankful for it, deal justly with all men, and use the gifts of God for his glory.

Q. Doth this petition forbid all sorts of care, or laying up for afterwards?

A. No; for some care, in the way of prudent foresight, is needful to provide for children and families, and nowise inconsistent with trusting to God for daily bread, 2 Cor. xii. 14; 1 Tim. v. 8. We see Joseph laid up for the approaching famine, and Solomon commends him that gathereth in summer. Nay, Christ himself desired the remaining fragments to be gathered up, and he had a purse-bearer, to have something beforehand for their needs, Gen. xli. 48; Prov. vi. 6—8, &c.; xxxi. 16; John vi. 12; xiii. 29.

Q. What are these cares which are inconsistent with this petition?

A. Those which arise from affection to earthly things, which draw on men to use unlawful methods to get them, or are attended with disquieting or distrustful thoughts.

QUESTION CV.

Q. What do we pray for in the fifth petition?

A. In the fifth petition (which is, "And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors,") we pray, That God, for Christ's sake, would freely pardon all our sins; which we are the rather encouraged to ask, because by his grace we are enabled from the heart to forgive others.

Q. How is it that we find in the Lord's prayer but one petition for temporal things, and so many for spiritual?

A. To teach us to be far more careful about the precious immortal soul, than about the poor dying body.

Q. Why is this petition annexed, by the copulative and, to the former petition?

A. To teach us, that worldly enjoyments can give no comfort without pardon of sin; and, therefore, when we ask for the one, we should with the same breath pray for the other: for let a man have never so much of the world, he is a miserable creature if he want pardon.

Q. What is meant by our debts here?

A. Our sins against God.

Q. How can sin be called a debt, seeing obedience is properly the debt we owe unto God?

A. Sin is also called a debt, because, when we fail to pay the debt of obedience, we contract a new debt to the justice of God: by sin we become bound to satisfy justice for the wrong done thereto, by suffering eternal punishment; and God, as the creditor, hath right to insist for this satisfaction when he will.

Q. Have we not all the properties of bad debtors?

A. Yes; for we are wholly insolvent, we are turned careless about paying our debt, we are unwilling to confess debt, we shift clearing of accounts, we keep out of our creditor's way, and love not to meet with him.

Q. Doth not the debt of sin expose us to greater misery than any other debt whatsoever?

A. Yes: For other debts but expose men's bodies to misery here, which death puts an end to; but the debt of sin exposeth both our souls and bodies to eternal miseries in hell, the worst of all prisons, out of which there is no hope of liberation.

Q. Is there any man able to pay his own debt?

A. No, not the least farthing of it.

Q. How then shall we be delivered from the burden of our debts?

A. We must pray to God for a free pardon, as we are taught in this petition, "Forgive us our debts."

Q. Will God forgive our debts without satisfaction to his justice?

A. No; but he hath provided a surety for us, who hath made full satisfaction, even the Lord Jesus Christ, for whose sake we must pray for pardon.

Q. If Christ hath satisfied for the debt, how is the pardon free?

A. It is free to us, because God exacts no satisfaction from us; and for the surety from whom he exacts it, he gave him to us freely, without our deserving or desire: so that the pardon is still free to us, according to Rom. iii. 24, "Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ."

Q. What means must be used by us for receiving of this free pardon?

A. We must with believing and penitent hearts go to the mercy of God in Jesus Christ, and plead for forgiveness for his sake: and at the same time we must be careful, as Christ teacheth us, to be in a disposition to forgive our debtors.

Q. Who are those meant by our debtors here?

A. All those who have injured or wronged us in our persons, estates, names, relations, or in any thing else.

Q. What is it to forgive the faults of such debtors?

A. It is to pass them over without any hatred or desire of revenge against them, and to be ready to do them good when it is in our power.

Q. Do those forgive others heartily, who wish them evil, or are secretly glad when evil befalls them?—A. No.

Q. What case are those in, who will not forgive others their trespasses?

A. Christ saith, that neither will God forgive them, Mat. vi. 15.

Q. Do we anywise merit forgiveness from God, by our forgiving others?

A. No; it is only an encouragement to expect forgiveness from God, when we feel this testimony of God's grace in our hearts, inclining us to forgive others?

Q. Are we able of ourselves to forgive others?

A. No; we must have the grace of God to enable us to do it, Luke xvii. 2, &c.

Q. Doth the particle as, in the petition, import an equality in our forgiving others with God's forgiving us?

A. No; for we cannot forgive as freely, perfectly, and finally as God doth: but it is a note of similitude, and of our desire to imitate God in his forgiving of us, and that we do it heartily and sincerely.

Q. Is it not highly dangerous to use the Lord's prayer with a malicious heart?

A. Yes; for such use a fearful imprecation against themselves, praying that God may deal with them as they do with others, which is, that he may not forgive them at all.

Q. How shall we attain to this forgiving temper of spirit?

A. By seeking it from God, and considering our Saviour's precept and example, and the promise of forgiveness annexed to it, Mat. vi. 14. And also by minding that we wrong God much more than any man wrongs us; and if God be willing to forgive us ten thousand talents, we may well forgive our neighbour a few pence, Mat. xviii. 32, 33.

Q. Must we forgive those who do not desire it of us, nor repent of what they have done to us?

A. Yes, for we find Christ and Stephen did so.

Q. Do they not still remain debtors to God for their sins, if they repent not, though we have forgiven them?

A. Yes; and therefore those who injure their neighbours, should not be satisfied with a remission from them, but must cry to God for his forgiveness also, saying with David, Psal. li. 4, "Against thee, thee only have I sinned:" As if he had said, The wrong I have done to others is little in comparison of what I have done against thee.

QUESTION CVI.

Q. What do we pray for in the sixth petition?

A. In the sixth petition (which is, "And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil") we pray that God would either keep us from being tempted to sin, or support and deliver us when we are tempted.

Q. Why is this petition connected with the former by the copulative and?

A. To teach us two things: 1. That pardoned souls are the special objects of Satan's malice. 2. That, when past sins are forgiven, we should be very watchful against sin for the future, Psal. lxxxv. 8.

Q. What are these temptations we are liable to?

A. They are of two sorts, some to try us, others to seduce us.

Q. Whence come these temptations for trial?

A. From God; thus did he tempt Abraham, Gen. xxii. 10.

Q. Why doth God thus tempt his people?

A. For the trial of their faith, and their other graces, 1 Pet. i. 6, 7.

Q. Seeing God knows perfectly what is in every man, what need is there for his trying of them?

A. God tries his people, not for his sake, but for their own sakes, that they may know themselves the better; and also for the sake of others, who, by seeing their graces, may be quickened to imitate them, or, by observing their weakness, may learn to walk humbly before God.

Q. How is it said, James i. 13, that "God tempteth no man?"

A. The meaning there is, that God doth not tempt any man to seduce or entice him to sin.

Q. Whence then come these temptations for seduction?

A. From the devil, the world, and the flesh.

Q. Is not Satan called the tempter, Mat. iv. 3. And why?

A. Because he hath a main hand in our temptation to sin, and it is his constant work and business to seduce and entice men to evil.

Q. Is not Satan a very subtle tempter?

A. Yes, as appears by his considering the conditions of men, and his choosing the fittest seasons and instruments, and the most suitable baits to prevail with them; and by his transforming himself sometimes into an angel of light. And hence the scriptures call him the old serpent, and speak of his devices, wiles, and snares, Job i. 8; Rev. xii. 9; 2 Cor. ii. 11; xi. 24; Eph. vi. 11; 2 Tim. ii. 26.

Q. Is not the tempter very cruel as well as subtle?

A. Yes, and therefore he is called a roaring lion, 1 Pet. v. 8, for he devours his prey without mercy, when once he is master of it. Although at first he cunningly tempts and entices men to commit sin, yet he afterwards cruelly accuses them of it, and torments them for it.

Q. Doth not Satan prevail the more easily against us, by reason of the strong friends he hath within us?

A. Yes, the lusts of the flesh are ready always, like Delilah, to deliver us up to him, Judges xvi.

Q. What is to be understood by these words, "Lead us not into temptation?"

A. In these words we pray, that God may not expose us to temptations, nor deliver us up to the tempter's will; that, when we are exposed, God may not withhold his supporting grace, but may strengthen us to resist the temptation.

Q. Doth God sometimes as a judge desert men, and leave them to Satan's power?

A. Yes; and he doth it justly, as being provoked to it by their sins, 1 Sam. xvi. 14; Job i. 12; Psal. cix. 6; Rom. i. 24; 2 Thess. ii. 11.

Q. Ought we not to pray that God would keep us from being tempted?

A. Yes; because of ourselves we are weak to resist, and prone to yield.

Q. How doth God keep us from being tempted to sin?

A. Either by sanctifying our natures, or by binding up the tempter, or by keeping us from coming into the way of temptations. Sometimes the Lord hedges up his people's way with the thorns.

of affliction, to keep them from straying into dangerous by-paths, Hos. ii. 6.

Q. While we pray to God to keep us from being tempted to sin, should we not at the same time be diligent in watching over ourselves?

A. Yes; our Lord will have watching to go along with prayer, Mat. xvi. 41, "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."

Q. Does not God sometimes suffer his dear saints to be tempted by Satan?

A. Yes, he sees fit to do so for their good to try their grace, to abate their pride, to excite their prayers, to show them their need of living by faith on Christ, to make them weary of the land where Satan goes his circuit, and long for heaven, where they shall be out of his reach forever.

Q. Why doth Satan continue his assaults against God's people, seeing he cannot ruin them?

A. Such is his malice, if he cannot keep them out of heaven, he will make their passage to it as uneasy as possible.

Q. What grounds of comfort doth God afford his people under temptation?

A. It is comfortable to them to know that their Redeemer hath Satan in his chain, so that he can go no further in tempting than Christ gives him leave; that he hath given them his sweet and faithful promises to support them; and that he himself was willing to be tempted of the devil, that he might be the more capable to sympathise with his people, ready to succour them when tempted, Heb. ii. 18.

Q. What are these promises which Christ hath given his people to support them under temptation?

A. He hath promised them his gracious presence with them under their sharpest trials; and that he will not suffer them to be tempted above what they are able, but with the temptation will also make a way to escape, Isa. xliii. 2; Heb. xliii. 5; 1 Cor. x. 13.

Q. How is it that Christ succours his people when they are tempted?

A. He sends his Spirit to fortify grace in them, and brings his promises to their remembrance; he intercedes for them that their faith fail not, and he seasonably takes off the tempter from them.

Q. Can no man preserve himself in the hour of temptation?

A. No; for it is God only that is able to keep us from falling, Jude 24.

Q. Doth not Satan sometimes throw in unbelieving and blasphemous thoughts into the minds of God's people?—A. Yes.

Q. Will God charge his people with guilt upon account of those temptations?

A. No, if they hate them, grieve for them, and give no consent unto them.

Q. What is meant by the evil, in this petition we pray to be delivered from?

A. We here pray to be delivered from the evil one, the devil; from the evil of evils, sin; from the evil of temptation here, and the evil of punishment in hell hereafter.

Q. Is there nothing else required of us, but to pray to be delivered from evil?

A. We must also watch, and carefully avoid all occasions of sin, such as idleness, evil company, and the like; for those who do not so, their prayers are but mocking of the Lord.

QUESTION CVII.

Q. What doth the conclusion of the Lord's prayer teach us?

A. The conclusion of the Lord's prayer (which is, "For thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, for ever, Amen,") teacheth us to take our encouragement in prayer from God only, and in our prayers to praise him, ascribing kingdom, power, and glory to him; and, in testimony of our desire and assurance to be heard, we say, Amen.

Q. What are we taught by the particle for, prefixed to the conclusion of this prayer?

A. We are taught thereby to enforce our petitions with arguments; as we find was the practice of saints in scripture, Num. xiv. 13, &c.; Josh. vii. 9; 2 Chron. xiv. 11; xx. 6, &c.

Q. Why must we use arguments with God in prayer?

A. Not that we can thereby incline God to grant us any thing that he is averse to; but we ought to do it in order to strengthen our faith, and to excite our fervency in pleading with God.

Q. May we take our arguments or encouragement in prayer from any worthiness or good thing in ourselves?—A. No.

Q. From whence then must we bring them?

A. Only from the infinite perfections of God, and merits of his Son.

Q. What are the arguments or grounds of encouragement mentioned in the conclusion of the Lord's prayer?

A. They are the kingdom, the power, and the glory of God, which last for ever.

Q. What is the design and meaning of this conclusion?

A. To show us the reasons why we should pray to God, and the grounds we have to hope that he will hear us; and likewise to teach us, that the main end we ought to propose in our prayers, is, that the kingdom, power, and glory of God may be declared and advanced more and more.

Q. What is meant by the kingdom of God here?

A. God's universal sovereignty, dominion, and authority which he hath over the world, and all things in heaven and earth.

Q. Hath God the disposal of all the kingdoms and governments in the world?

A. Yes, he disposeth of human kingdoms and states, and he hath absolute right to do in the kingdom of nature, of providence, of grace, and of glory, as seemeth good to him.

Q. What encouragement may we draw from God's kingdom in prayer?

A. That seeing he is our king and governor, who hath right to dispose of all things, we have reason to expect he will be ready to give us what good things we need; for a king wisheth well to his subjects. Hence the people of God often plead with him upon this relation, Psal. v. 2; xx. 9; lxxiv. 12.

Q. What is meant by the power of God here?

A. His infinite might and ability to do whatsoever he will.

Q. What encouragement may we take from God's power in prayer?

A. That, seeing he is almighty, he is sufficiently able to give us all the good things we ask: and this argument is often made use of in prayer, 1 Chron. xx. 6; xxix. 12; Mat. viii. 2; Mark xiv. 36; Eph. iii. 20.

Q. But how doth it appear that God is willing to give, as well as able?

A. Because he assumes the character of a gracious king to his subjects, and of a loving father to all his children.

Q. What is meant by the glory of God here?

A. The honour, dignity, and praise which belong unto God upon account of his infinite excellencies.

Q. What is the argument we draw from the glory of God in our prayers?

A. That the granting of these our petitions will greatly redound to the glory of his holy name; and that this is the great end we aim at in all we ask, Psal. lxxix. 9; lxxxvi. 11, 12; cxv. 1, 2; Jer. xiv. 21; John xiv. 13.

Q. What encouragement may we take from these words, for ever?

A. It strengthens our faith to think, that God's sovereignty and perfections are everlasting; that he shall never want power to help us, as earthly kings may.

Q. Doth Christ in this conclusion teach us in prayer to extol and magnify the Lord, and that we ought to join praises to him always with our prayers?

A. Yes; for a thankful and praising disposition is highly pleasing to God, Psal. lxix. 30, 31, and engageth him to grant our desires, Psal. lxvii. 5, 6.

Q. What is meant by the word Amen?

A. It is a Hebrew word, which signifies truth or certainty, and it is as much as to say, Lord, so it is; or, so let it be; and thereby we express our fervent desires to be heard, and our humble confidence of obtaining what we ask in the name of Jesus Christ, who, with the Father, and the Holy Spirit, is the one supreme God, to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

THE AFFLICTED MAN'S COMPANION.

TO THE READER.

THE subject of this book, however melancholy it may appear to some, yet it is necessary to all ; seeing the word of God, and our own experience, assures us, that "Man, who is born of a woman, is of few days, and full of trouble ;" and that he "is born to trouble, as sparks fly upwards." Nay, God's dearest children are not exempted from this common fate. We see what is the character God giveth of his church, Isa. liv. 11, "O thou afflicted, and tossed with tempests, and not comforted."

If in this world, then, we must look for tribulation, it is highly necessary for every man to seek direction how to provide for it, and behave under it, so as he may glorify God, edify others, and attain to eternal happiness at last. The tribulations we have to look for here are manifold ; but, among those that are outward, I know none about which men ought to be more thoughtful and concerned than bodily sickness, that usual harbinger of death, and which ushers the way to judgment.

This is a subject not much handled in public sermons, which are delivered only to them that are in health, the sick being incapable to attend them. Wherefore, it seems the more necessary to handle it in writing, that so the afflicted may have a book in their houses, and at their bedsides, as a monitor to preach to them in private, when they are restrained from hearing sermons in public.

And though sometimes ministers' sermons may be very suitable to the case of the sick and afflicted ; yet, alas ! the most part are careless and forgetful hearers of these things, while they are in health and prosperity, as reckoning the evil day at some distance from them. A book, then, such as the following directory, being with them in time of sickness and affliction, may, by the divine blessing, be useful to bring to their remembrance those counsels and admonitions which they very much neglected in the time of their health.

Again, ministers of the gospel, though never so much inclined to attend the sick, yet, by reason of disability and multiplicity of other work, cannot be always with them, to direct, resolve, and comfort them. But such a book as this, they may have still at hand to consult with.

And, in regard the afflicted for the most part are unable to read for themselves, it would be a most charitable work for friends or neighbours that attend them, to lay hold on proper seasons for reading such a book as this in their hearing ; and especially such chapters or directions as they judge most suitable for them. Thus you might be helped in some measure to exonerate your consciences, and do your last offices of kindness to your sick and dying friends, when you can serve them no longer in this world.

I might have brought in and handled some controversies (had I been fond of them), in the ensuing treatise, about the administration of the Lord's supper to the sick, and about extremum unction, which some also begin to plead for, and thence have taken occasion to touch at some other new usages, such as the middle state, prayers for the dead and other Popish errors, that some (called Protestants), would have revived and introduced among us. But I have industriously shunned what is controversial, and kept close to what is practical and owned by all true Christians.

For preventing the growth of these and other errors (from which this nation hath been much longer free than others), I wish all ranks among us would closely observe the sacred rule of faith, God's word, and remember the solemn and national engagements we of this land are under, to maintain the pure truths of God therein contained, in opposition to all sorts of errors, whether Popish, Pelagian, Arian, Antinomian, &c. And may we ever abhor the doctrine that would teach us to break these bands asunder !

Have we not ground this day to suspect that Satan is carrying on a deep and subtle plot for shaking our covenanted Reformation, and weakening a Protestant interest? When, upon the one hand, some are beginning openly to advance and propagate the old abjured Popish doctrines which our reformers threw out, and with axes and hammers would go at once to cut down all our carved work; and, at the same time, on the other hand, some would be at breaking down the excellent fences of our reformation, viz. our covenants, confessions, the magistrate's power, &c. For this end, papers are spread, and positions advanced, impugning the warrantableness of our national covenants and confessions, and the obligation thereof; reflecting also upon our worthy reformers and ancestors, as unenlightened, who framed and took them, or died adhering thereto; and also denying the magistrate's power, CIRCA SACRA (for the support of the truth, and suppressing of heresies), acknowledged by the word of God and our confession of faith; and all this, forsooth, to make way for a toleration of all errors and sects among us; though they cannot but know, that tolerating of false religions is expressly ranked among the sins forbidden in the second commandment, according to the exposition of our Larger Catechism; and is also condemned by the twenty-third chapter of our Confession: in both which, we may see the clear scripture-texts, cited by the Assembly, for refuting and condemning any such toleration. Ah! what joy may all this cause at Rome! therefore tell it not in Gath, &c.

As the Lord did signally countenance our reformers' practice in entering into solemn and national covenants with God, and among themselves, for religion and reformation, by the pouring out of his Spirit from on high, for bringing in of many souls to himself, and for overturning idolatry and superstition, and advancing reformation to a great pitch, in spite of all the enemies and difficulties that were in the way; so their practice of national covenanting, even under the New Testament dispensation, is sufficiently warranted, both by the light of nature, and by the word of God, and that in both Testaments. And this will appear if we consider the scripture-precedents, together with the promises and prophecies of the Old Testament relating to gospel times, and compare them with the New; and especially those which foretel the unchurching of the Jewish nation, and the ingrafting of the Gentile nations into their room; and that thereupon the national church-state and privileges of the Jews were to be transferred to Christian nations, and particularly this of being nationally in covenant with God. Which prophecies are to have their special and full accomplishment at Babylon's downfall. For illustrating these points, and applying the scripture-texts relative thereto, I might expatiate in several sheets of paper, if it were proper here. I shall only at this time cite some of the texts that may be well improved to the foresaid purposes; which the reader may turn to and consider at his leisure, such as Isa. xix. 18, 21, 23—25; xlv. 23; lv. 3—5; lx., lxi., lxii. chapters of Isaiah throughout; Jer. l. 4, 5; Micah iv. 1, 2; Zech. viii. 21—23; Rev. ii. 15; Rom. xi. 17, 19; x. 12, 19; ix. 24—26; compared with Hos. i. 9—11; ii. 23; Mat. iii. 5, 6; xxi. 43; Acts viii. 6, 12; 2 Cor. viii. 5. Likewise I might cite several prophecies with respect to the islands, and the utmost ends of the earth, which were peopled by Japhet, that have a very particular and favourable aspect to this covenanted land.

Besides all which, it is evident, from the first and great command of the law, which is directed to Israel as a nation, and is obligatory under the New Testament as well as the Old, that it is a moral duty, universally and perpetually binding upon nations and societies, as well as single persons, to choose, acknowledge, and avouch the Lord to be their God, to walk in his ways, and keep his statutes. This is required in the first commandment according to the exposition of our Larger Catechism; and is there confirmed by these texts, that warrant and exemplify the practice of national covenanting, such as Deut. xxvi. 17, 19; Josh. xxiv. 22. In such a national way did our fathers of old acknowledge and avouch the Lord to be their God, and devote themselves and their posterity to the Lord. And, blessed be the Lord our God, who did many ways declare himself to be well pleased with the bargain, and especially by filling the temple with his glory.

As the prophets and godly Jews were at great pains to convey to posterity historical accounts of the wonderful deliverances God wrought for Israel at the Red sea, and in rescuing them from Egypt, Babylon, and other enemies; so it would be useful to fortify our reformation, if we were careful to hand down to the rising generation a sense of God's distinguishing mercy to this land, in delivering us from spiritual Babylon, and rescuing us from time to time from these captains that have sought to lead us back thither. Many a time hath he delivered us, when we have been brought very low.

By many instances it hath appeared, that the glorious Jehovah hath not been ashamed to own his covenant relation to this sinful and unworthy land. God forbid that we of this age should be ashamed to own our covenant-relation to him. This hath been both our glory and our safety; and I hope, there will still be found a remnant to own it, and plead it with God in the time of danger. Surely, it is not time now to disclaim it, when the enemies of our Zion are combining together, and seeking to raze her to the foundation. Let all her lovers cry mightily to her covenanted Lord in her behalf, in these shaking times: let them join to put up that prayer of the Psalmist, Ps. lxxviii. 28, "Strengthen, O God, that which thou hast wrought for us;" and that of Habakkuk, Hab. iii. 2, "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years."

May 27th, 1797.

N. B. The foresaid digression, in the preface to the first edition, was occasioned by the broaching of some sectarian notions, which introduced great reelings and shakings in this corner, and other parts of this church; since which time, alas! she hath enjoyed little peace within her walls, or prosperity within her palaces; but, instead thereof, she hath been tossed with tempests and troubles of various kinds, whereby the children of Zion have been brought, and still lie, under great distress and affliction.

The first impression of this book being disposed of, and a second called for, I have the more readily consented to it, at this time of general calamity and distress, seeing the book is intended as a directory to Christians under affliction, whatever sort it be. It cannot but be obvious to every serious observer, that the Lord's judgments are in the earth at this day, and that the inhabitants of this land are generally visited with calamities of divers kinds, both spiritual and temporal; which makes a Directory how to manage and bear under them the more seasonable and necessary.

Ah! the Lord's hand is visibly lifted up against us at this day, and hath been for some years past, in shutting up the church's womb, blasting gospel-ordinances, and withdrawing his Spirit from the assemblies of his people, and from our judicatories.

The flood-gate is opened for error, infidelity, and looseness, to overspread the land; so that the gospel of Christ, the holy scriptures, and all revealed religion, are condemned and ridiculed by many. "The anger of the Lord hath divided us both in church and state, and hath mingled a perverse spirit in the midst of us;" yea, hath made such woful breaches among godly ministers and Christians, who are aiming at the same things, that no balm can be found for healing them. There is a way opened for a carnal, self-seeking minister to get into the vineyard, when faithful labourers are thrust out, and godly preachers and students are discouraged from entering in. Not a few Christian congregations, who lately were harmonious and united in partaking of gospel-ordinances, are now so miserable, rent, and scattered, through mournful intrusions and dividing courses, that they cannot worship God together; and many of them are wandering like sheep having no shepherd, exposed to beasts of prey, and liable to perish in a state of ignorance or negligence.

Likewise, the Lord's hand is remarkably lifted up against us, in the variety of temporal judgments and calamities brought upon us within a very short time bypast. Sometimes the Lord sends forth his stormy winds with extraordinary violence, so as to carry terror and destruction along with them both by sea and land, and even threaten to bury us in the ruin of our houses. Sometimes he sends such long continued rains in harvest, as threaten to destroy the whole crop before our eyes. Sometimes such extraordinary storms of frost and snow, as to bind up the waters and mills, that food cannot be prepared for us, and we are ready to perish in midst of plenty. Sometimes he sends such destructive storms of lightning and thunder from heaven, and kindles such violent fires on earth, that whole cities, with their inhabitants, are like to be consumed therewith. Upon our neighbouring countries dreadful inundations have been sent of late, for destroying the inhabitants with their cattle and effects. Again, God hath visited us with long continued drought, cold, and unnatural storms in the spring, and sometimes with frost in midst of summer, which have brought on extraordinary scarcity and dearth of victual, so that there are great disorders committed in the land by riots and tumults for want of food, and multitudes of families are dissolved, and forced to wander begging their bread; and the cattle also are famished for want of grass and food to sustain them. In the mean time we are engaged in war with cruel enemies, who seize our ships, carry our countrymen captives, throw them into dungeons and nauseous prisons, where they use them barbarously; yea, much of their blood is shed, and many valuable lives are lost in our defence. And, besides our other calamities, we suffer greatly through decay of trade and merchandise, and penury of money; in many places, merchants, tradesmen, and artificers, want business; there is no work nor hire for labourers, and for those who would use honest industry for bread, whether men or women: so that want is "come upon us as one that travaileth, and poverty like an armed man," and many are reduced to extreme misery, and starving circumstances, for lack of bread.

By all which proceedings it appears that God hath a peculiar controversy with Scotland, and threatens to punish her remarkably for her heinous sins and provocations. The Lord's hand hath been long lifted up against us, and now it is higher lifted up than ever; and, the higher it is lifted, the blow is like to be the severer when given. He hath sent many lesser strokes and judgments upon us, as fore-runners and warnings of greater, which he hath still in reserve for us, if we repent not; for his magazine is far from being exhausted. As there are many causes for these calamities of ours, so I think there is a principal one mentioned, Mat. xxiv. 12, "Iniquity doth abound, and the love of many is waxen cold." Infidelity, immorality, and contempt of the gospel, are come to a prodigious height: our hearts are become cold and frozen to Christ and his interest, to his people and holy laws: for which cause, God is provoked to send such judicial cold and frosts upon our land, and the fruits of the earth, so as to mar and diminish our crops, and reduce both men and beasts to the greatest straits. And yet so great is our impenitence and perverseness, that we will not see the Lord's hand, nor be reformed by all these judgments.

It might well be expected, when the Lord's judgments are so visible in the earth, that not only his people by profession, but even the inhabitants of the world, would learn righteousness, according to Isa. xxvii. 9. But, alas! so perverse are we to walk with God, that neither the inhabitants of the world, nor those who profess to be separated from the world, will alter their course, nor learn righteousness; nay, instead of that, many are learning still more wickedness. "Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" Alas! hath he not been provoked to say concerning us, as he did concerning his ancient people, Lev. xxvi. 23, 24, "If ye will not be reformed by all these things, but will walk contrary unto me: then will I also walk contrary unto you, and will bring seven times more plagues upon you, according to your sins." And likewise to say unto us, as unto them, "When ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; and when ye fast and make many prayers, I will not hear: but I will consume you with the sword, with the famine, and with the pestilence," as in Isa. i. 15; Jer. xiv. 12.

The sword, famine, and pestilence, are God's three mortal arrows, which he commonly threatens to shoot against impenitent and incorrigible offenders. Two of these are already shot against us: the sword is drawn, and much of our countrymen's blood is already shed; and what further streams of it may flow before it be put up in its sheath, God only knows. The evil arrow of famine (as God calls it, Ezek. v. 16,) is let fly against us at the same time, and the famine is the arrow, which is the sorest of the three. When it was put to David's choice, which of the three he would be the butt of, he would not choose famine. The prophet Joel bewails and deprecates this judgment in the most pathetic manner, and calls the whole land to fasting and prayer, for removing it, Joel i. 10, 14. And we see, when God is most angry, and threatens to spend his arrows upon a guilty people, he begins with the arrow of famine as the sorest, as in Deut. xxxii. 23, 24, "I will spend mine arrows upon them, they shall be burnt with hunger." And we see what the Spirit of God saith of those who die by this arrow, Lam. iv. 9, "They that be slain with the sword, are better than they that be slain with hunger; for these pine away; stricken through for want of the fruits of the field;" and therefore their death is most lingering and miserable. Likewise, famine useth to bring on the most nauseous and mortal diseases, and frequently the pestilence follows upon the back of famine. Is it not then high time for our land to take the alarm, when God begins to shoot his evil arrows? When the lion roars, it becometh us to fear; yea, to humble ourselves in the dust, and mourn for our iniquities, which kindle the fire of wrath.

Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord, from whom we have deeply revolted; and, particularly, let us mourn for, and turn from, those sins which the word of God points out as bringing on famine; such as, 1. Ascribing our earthly comforts and blessings to other things than God the true author. This sin we find threatened with scarcity and famine, Jer. xlv. 17, 26, 27; Hos. ii. 5, 9. 2. Perverting of plenty to luxury and prodigality, sensuality and excess, revellings and dancings, balls and assemblies. We see how these are threatened, Isa. v. 11—13; Amos vi. 4, 6, 7. 3. Rejecting the bread of life, and despising the food of our souls. God used to punish men for their sins, by depriving them of bread for their bodies, Jer. xi. 21, 22. 4. Men minding their own things more than the things of God; and neglecting to build his house, and put respect upon his ordinances. Upon such account God brings on scarcity and famine, Hag. i. 9—11. 5. Covenant-breaking, and dealing cruelly with the poor, or with strangers that live among us: it was for these sins that God sent a three years' famine upon the land of Israel, 2 Sam. xxi. 1.

Moreover, let us look upon all these temporal storms and calamities which are come or coming upon the land, as warnings to prepare for a more awful storm that we must all meet with, namely, the storm of death and judgment; let us stand habitually prepared for that storm, and then other storms will not so much affect us. If it be asked, What we shall do to be safe in time of that trying storm? the answer is, Let us see that we be among the broken in heart, or the sincere penitents, who are heartily grieved for all known sin: that we be true believers in Christ, who trust in nothing but his righteousness and merits, for justification and salvation: that we be born again, and made new creatures by a saving change both in heart and life: that it be our great business to clear up our evidences of peace with God through Christ, and of our title to the mansions which he hath purchased by his blood. O that God's judgments, when they are on the earth, were means to awaken us to flee from the wrath to come, to Christ our refuge! when the floods of great waters are swelling up to the brim, our only safety is to secure a hiding-place in Christ's wounds.

Let us follow the example of Noah, who, when he saw the flood coming, took warning, and prepared an ark for saving himself and his household, Heb. xi. 7. Let us even imitate the Egyptians that feared the Lord; they, when warned of the dreadful storm of hail that was coming on the land, made their servants and cattle to flee into the houses, Exod. ix. 20. God hath in mercy provided chambers for his people to hide themselves in, when storms are coming, even the chambers of his attributes and promises, and the chambers of Christ's wounds and intercession; in these only we can find safety; let us enter into them by faith, when he invites us, Isa. xxvi. 20, 21.

Seeing in these evil days we have so many harbingers and forerunners of death before our eyes, it will be highly our wisdom to keep ourselves still in a waiting posture always ready and willing to die. What is there in this weary land to tempt us to desire to abide in it? Is it not a land overwhelmed with sin and sorrow? O believers, are you tossed with tempests here? Seek the wings of a dove, that you may fly away and be at rest. Be habitually desiring to depart, that you may be with Christ. Surely for you to die is gain, yea, infinite gain! What are the imaginary pleasures of this world to the real happiness of the next? though the struggles of death be grievous to nature, yet the gains of dying should reconcile you to it. You do not stick at the trouble of putting off your clothes at night, to gain a little rest to your bodies; and why should you stick at unclathing yourselves of the garments of flesh at God's call, to gain everlasting rest to your souls, and the fruition of Christ's glorious presence for ever? Let the thoughts of this gain put you upon using all means to get your hearts weaned from the love of the world and its comforts. Keep the mantle of earthly enjoyments hanging loose about you, especially in these calamitous times, that so it may be easily dropt when death comes to carry you to the eternal world. O for more of the lively faith of that world, and of him that is the Lord and purchaser of it! But seeing this subject is more largely insisted on in the book itself, I shall add no more here upon it; only I shall subjoin a collection of some sweet and comfortable texts of scripture, very proper for dying believers, to meditate and feed on by faith, to hold to and plead with God, and suck consolation from, when they have a near prospect of going through the dark valley, and entering into the unknown regions of eternity. God's word will then be our hope.

A COLLECTION OF COMFORTABLE TEXTS FOR DYING BELIEVERS.

COME unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest, Mat. xi. 28. Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out, John vi. 37.

In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you: I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you to myself, that where I am, there ye may be also, John xiv. 2, 3.

Because I live, ye shall live also, John xiv. 19. Christ saith, Surely I come quickly.

Ans. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, Rev. xxii. 20.

There remaineth a rest to the people of God, Heb. iv. 9.

I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord, Gen. xlix. 18.

Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace; for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, Luke ii. 29, 30.

He is the Rock, and his work is perfect, Deut. xxxii. 4.

The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me, Psal. cxxxviii. 8.

Being confident—that he which hath begun a good work in you, will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ, Phil. i. 6.

I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. And though, after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me, Job xix. 25—27.

Although my house is not so with God, yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure. For this is all my salvation and all my desire, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, Psal. xxiii. 4.

Into thine hand I commit my spirit: thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth, Psal. xxxi. 5.

For this God is our God for ever and ever; he will be our guide even unto death, Psal. xlviii. 14.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee. My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever, Psal. lxxii. 24—26.

The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise, Psal. li. 17.

O that I had wings like a dove! for then would I fly away and be at rest. I would hasten my escape from the windy storms and tempest, Psal. lx. 6, 8.

Though ye have lien among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold, Psal. lxxviii. 13.

The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin, 1 John i. 7.

Having boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, Heb. x. 19.

He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee. Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, Heb. xiii. 5, 8.

He retaineth not his anger for ever, because he delighteth in mercy, Micah vii. 18.

Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him, Job xiii. 15.

In his name shall the Gentiles trust, Mat. xii. 23.

Blessed are all they that put their trust in him, Psal. ii. 12.

He knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust, Psal. ciii. 14.

I lothe it, I would not live alway, Job vii. 16.

We know, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. We are willing rather to be absent from the body and present with the Lord, 2 Cor. v. 1, 8.

For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. Having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better, Phil. i. 21, 23.

And now, Lord, what wait I for? My hope is in thee, Psal. xxxix. 7.

My beloved is mine, and I am his. His left hand is under my head, and his right hand doth embrace me. Awake, O north wind, come, thou south, blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out. Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits. Until the day break and the shadows fly away, make haste, my beloved, and be thou like a roe, or a young hart on the mountains of spices, Cant. ii. 6, 16, 17; iv. 16; viii. 14.

O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ, 1 Cor. xv. 55, 57.

The time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course,

I have kept the faith. Henceforth is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing, 2 Tim. iv. 6—8.

The day of death is better than the day of one's birth, Eccl. vii. 1.

And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away, Rev. xxi. 4.

This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief, 1 Tim. i. 15.

God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life, John iii. 16.

For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, 2 Cor. v. 21.

Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift, 2 Cor. ix. 15.

Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for he hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David, Luke i. 68, 69.

Them which sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him. Then shall we be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord, 1 Thes. iv. 14, 17.

Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, &c. Worthy is the lamb that was slain to receive power and glory, Rev. i. 5; v. 12.

We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren, 1 John iii. 14.

I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord, Rom. viii. 38, 39.

I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day, 2 Tim. i. 12.

I count all things but loss and dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, &c., Phil. iii. 8, 9.

Christ Jesus, who is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, 1 Cor. i. 30.

We rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh, Phil. iii. 3.

Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light, Col. i. 12.

Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, Rev. i. 7; xxii. 20.

SOME EJACULATIONS AND DYING WORDS OF THE AUTHOR.

TO MY WIFE.

MY DEAR—My distress calls me to think of parting with you: the will of the Lord be done. I thank you for your tender care of me, may the Lord bless and reward you for it; and sanctify your own tenderness, and support you under it. As you have studied to live a life of faith and prayer all your days, so I hope and believe you will continue to the end. In all your difficulties and fears, encourage yourself in the Lord your God: commit your ways to him; trust him that is faithful and true. I resign you, my dear, to the Husband of husbands, our dearest Lord Jesus Christ.

TO MY CHILDREN.

DEAR CHILDREN—Your earthly father must leave you; your heavenly Father is immortal. O! cleave fast to him. Trifle not about your souls' concerns in time of health; mind these things as the one thing needful; this you will not repent of when you come within a near view of death and endless eternity. O sirs! press for clear views of your interest in Christ, the only surety and Saviour of sinners. Among other evidences of it, live by faith on him, and study holiness in heart and life. Dear children, think how you will be able to stand before Christ your judge, at the last day, unless you have Christ's image on you, and be made new creatures. Lord make you all such, and bless you with his best blessing! My blessing be upon you all.—What means God gave me, I have bestowed them on you, or left them to you.—Be kind and careful of your mother while you have her. And let none of you forget, that though I go before you to the dust, you must all quickly follow me. O! that we may all meet together at the right hand of our blessed Redeemer, to see his face, and sing his praise. The time is near, be ye therefore also ready.

Now, my dear wife and children, remember what is above, as the words of your affectionate husband and loving father, who, being dead, yet hereby speaketh to you for your eternal good and happiness; may they sink deep into your heart: So prayeth,

JOHN WILLISON.

SOME OF HIS DYING EJACULATIONS.

O LET me sleep in Jesus! I would not live always in this evil world, that has little in it tempting, and seems still to grow worse, and where the torrent of sin and backsliding seems to grow stronger.

I would desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better than to be here. I am willing rather to be absent from the body, and present with the Lord. Whom have I in heaven but thee? for though my heart, strength, and flesh fail, yet the Lord will be the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever.

Now, Lord, what wait I for, my hope is in thee, I have waited for thy salvation, O Lord.

O for Simeon's frame, to be saying, "Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

When Christ says, Surely I come quickly; may my soul answer, Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

I am living on the righteousness of Christ, yea, dying in the Lord. Even so, come. I am detained here upon the shore, waiting for a fair wind to carry me over this Jordan. I have waited, and will wait for thy salvation, O Lord. The Lord is a rock, and his work is perfect: Lord, perfect what concerneth me.

O that I could say with Paul, The time of my departure is at hand. I have kept the faith, I have run my race, I have finished my course; henceforth is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the righteous Lord will give me at his coming.

I am vile and polluted, O how shall I be cleansed! but that is a comfortable promise, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." And so is that, "Though ye have lien among the pots, ye shall be as doves, whose wings are covered with silver, and their feathers with yellow gold."

I resolve to obey, to submit to the Lord's will, to die like Moses and Aaron, the one at the mount Hor, the other at mount Abarim. They went up and died there at the command of the Lord.

O that when my strength and flesh fail, God may be the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever. When now the keepers of the house tremble, O that God may be the keeper: when the grinders cease because they are few, O that God would feed my soul with manna, that will need none of these implements; when the daughters of music are brought low, O to be fitted for the heavenly music above: when the lookers out at the windows are darkened, O that my soul may be enlightened to see Jesus my Redeemer.

Lord, help the unbelief and infidelity of my heart, and help me to more of the faith of a risen

Jesus, an ascended Redeemer. O let me believe and feel the sweetness of that word of Christ, "I ascend to my Father and to your Father, and to your God and my God."

O how shall such an unholy creature as I presume to enter into such a pure and holy place! But the apostle has taught us, we may have boldness to enter into the holiest of all by the blood of Jesus.

O that when the time of my last combat comes with my last enemy death, I may be helped above all to take the shield of faith, whereby I may be relieved from the sting of death, and may quench the fiery darts of the wicked one.

O that I may be helped to adore the sovereignty of God, kiss his rod, and humbly submit to it. Save me from both extremities; let me never despise the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when I am rebuked of him.

Now the prince of darkness will study to raise tempests of temptations to shipwreck the poor weather-beaten vessel of my soul, when it would enter into the harbour of rest above; may Christ come to be pilot, steer the helm, and it shall be safe.

O for more faith! may my faith ripen to a full assurance, that I may go off the stage rejoicing, and that abundant entrance may be ministered to me into the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

O for more faith! that I may die like Simeon, when he had Christ in his arms, saying, "Now let thy servant depart in peace, mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

Lord, one smile of thy countenance would banish away all my doubts and fears, and make me sing in pain.

Is my Redeemer gone to prepare a place for us; why should I be so slothful to follow his footsteps, when he is saying, "Come up hither; come up, dwell here; come up, reign here; come up, sing here."

O Lord, deliver my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling. O save me from the horrible pit, draw me out of the miry clay, set my feet upon a rock, and establish my goings, and put a new song in my mouth.

O give grace to strive by faith and prayer, to enter in at the strait gate. Lord, thou hast bid me knock, and it shall be opened; ask, and ye shall find. Lord, I knock, open unto me; I would be in, I must be in; let me but in over the threshold; let me in within sight of my Redeemer's face, within sight of the smiles of his countenance, let me within hearing of the songs of the redeemed; let me get to the outside of that praising company; I will be well enough if I get in.

Lord, in I must be, out I cannot stay: O shut me not out with swearers, Sabbath-breakers, and profane persons: Lord, I never chose their company while in this world; Lord, do not gather my soul with sinners hereafter.

The redeemed are gathering, and the wicked are gathering; Lord, gather me with thy flock:—They are fast agathering; the church's Head is gone; he has left the earth, and entered into his glory; my brethren and friends, many of them have arrived where he is; I am yet behind. O how great is the difference between my state and theirs. I am groaning out my complaint, they are singing God's praise: I am in darkness, and cannot see thy face, but they behold thee face to face. O should I be satisfied to stay behind, when my friends are gone?—Shall I wander here in a hungry desert, when they are triumphing above and dividing the spoil? O help me to look after them with a stedfast eye, and cry, O Lord, how long?

O heavenly Father, draw me after Jesus, for none can come to him without thy aid. O Father, draw me up there where he is, and I will mount up as on eagle's wings. O draw me, and when thou seemest to fly from me, Lord, enable me to follow hard after thee.

Lord, give me the staff of promise in my hand, that I may go over Jordan with it; O give me such a promise as that, "When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee, and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee. When thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee."

Lord, my experiences are small, my manifestations are few: these I will not lean to: yet I will remember thee from the land of Jordan, from the Hermonites, and from the hill Mizar. Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance and my God.

O thou who rememberedst the dying thief when on the way to thy kingdom, O remember me when now seated in thy kingdom, and say to my soul, when I am dying, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise."

Lord, I am called to the work I never did, O give me the strength I never had. O strengthen me like Samson for this once when at death, to pull down the strong holds of sin in me. Lord, wash away my sins in the blood of Christ, and then my soul shall not sink in the ocean of thy wrath.

O what is my life but a vapour! a sand-glass of sixty or seventy years! O how fast does it run down! How soon it runs out! Vain, vain is the love of life! O give me grace to overcome the love of life, and the fear of death. O for more patience and less fretting. If the damned had hope of being saved from hell after a thousand years of my pain, how willingly would they endure it. Blessed be God, my pains are not hell, their state is not mine.

Lord, draw near to me, and save me; my body is full of trouble, and my life draws near to the grave. But, Lord, thy loving-kindness is better than life. O make thy loving-kindness sure to me, and I will willingly part with this dying life.

O that I could make all the world see the beauty of my precious and adorable Saviour!

Nothing but an interest in Christ can give peace in life, or comfort in death. He is the chief among ten thousand, altogether lovely. My body is in part dead, but I know I cannot die eternally while Jesus lives. I must go down to the grave; but what is the grave?—It is but a refining pot, since my Saviour lay in it, it is but a bed of roses. He is the Rose of Sharon, and the Lily of the valley.

It was his free grace that drew me, and made me willing in the day of his power; no desire, no merit in me; it was all free and undeserved.

O let the chastisement of my body be the medicine of my soul, to cure me of sin, and bring me to sincere repentance for it; for Christ was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him.

Lord, remember the chastisement of Christ for sin, and let my pains be the chastisement of a father, and not the wounds of an enemy; let Christ's sufferings mitigate mine.

I rejoice in the prospect of that glorious inheritance reserved safe. I would not comfortably enter eternity any other way but in and through this God-man-mediator; if he was not God as well as man, I could not be supported:—but he is God.

O this precious Saviour, he is my all in all, he is my all-sufficient good, my portion and my choice; in him my vast desires are fulfilled, and all my powers rejoice, I am travelling through a wilderness to a city of habitation, whose builder and maker is God.

O delightful thought! that I, who was going on in sin, should be plucked as a brand out of the burning. O how will they lie on a death-bed, that have nothing but their works to fly to; with only this to depend on, I should be the most miserable of all creatures; but the long white robe of my Redeemer's righteousness is all my desire. They are truly blessed, they alone are happy, who are enabled to exult in the garment of celestial glory, which never waxeth old, in the illustrious robes of a Saviour's consummate righteousness, which are incorruptible and immortal. This is a robe which hides every sin, of thought, word, or deed, that I have committed. O how unspeakably happy are they who are justified by this all-perfect righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ, and who therein can constantly triumph and glory.

Lord, I live upon Christ, I live upon his righteousness, I live upon his blood and merits; yea, I die also, leaning wholly upon his bottom. It is not past experiences or manifestations I depend upon; it is Christ, a present all-sufficient Saviour, and perfect righteousness in him I look to. All my attainments are but loss and dung besides him.

When I find myself polluted, I go to this fountain for cleansing. Lord, give me delight in approaching to thee; delight to be at a throne of grace. O that I could make my bed there; lie and die there.

The kingdom of heaven suffers violence, and the violent take it by force. O for strength to offer a holy violence by faith and prayer.

INTRODUCTION.

MAN, when he first dropped from his Maker's hands, was a holy and innocent creature, pure from sin, and consequently free from sickness and trouble, enjoying uninterrupted health and prosperity both in body and soul. But no sooner was he tainted with sin, but he became liable to all sorts of miseries, temporal, spiritual, and eternal; his soul being the residence of his sins and lusts, his body turned the receptacle of sickness and diseases. And seeing God's own children have the relics of sin and corruption in them while in this world, they are not to expect exemption from such afflictions; and the infinitely wise God sees meet to make use of bodily distempers to correct the corruptions, and try the graces of his people, and to promote both their spiritual and eternal advantage. Hence it is said of Lazarus, John xi. 3, "Behold he whom thou lovest is sick." He was beloved, and yet sick. It is no rare thing for the dearest of God's saints to be put to chatter like cranes, and mourn like doves, by reason of sore sickness, as Hezekiah did, Isa. xxxviii. 14. Sanctified and healthy souls may be matched with weak and sickly bodies, as was Gaius, 3 John ii. Notwithstanding the case is sometimes most trying and exercising to the best of God's people, and they are never more ready to question God's love or quarrel with his Providence, than under heavy sickness and bodily distress. It is therefore highly the concernment of all, whether families or private persons, to enquire how they ought to behave under or after afflicting sickness; and how they shall provide for such an evil time before it come. And, for the help of all that desire instruction in this matter, I have written the following Directory, which, for method's sake, I shall divide into several chapters.

- I. I shall give some general directions to all families and persons visited with sickness and affliction.
- II. Some particular directions to those who are sharply afflicted with sore sickness and long trouble.
- III. Directions to the children of God under sickness.
- IV. Directions to unregenerate persons under sickness.
- V. Directions to the people of God, when recovered from sickness.
- VI. Directions to unrenewed persons recovered from sickness.
- VII. Directions to those sick persons who are apparently in a dying condition.
- VIII. Directions to the relations, acquaintances, and neighbours of the sick, who are themselves in health for the time.

N. B. Let it be remembered that what I say to those visited with sickness, is likewise applicable to all other afflicted persons, whatever their distress be.

CHAPTER I.

CONTAINING GENERAL DIRECTIONS TO ALL FAMILIES AND PERSONS VISITED WITH SICKNESS.

DIRECT. I.—DILIGENTLY INQUIRE INTO THE ENDS AND DESIGNS FOR WHICH USUALLY GOD SENDS SICKNESS AND AFFLICTION UPON PERSONS.

AN infinitely holy and gracious God hath various and wise ends in afflicting the children of men, whether they be converted or unconverted; which ought to be duly considered by all, and especially by those who are visited by sickness; some whereof I shall instance.

I. God visits with sickness, to cause careless sinners bethink themselves concerning their souls' estate and condition, who perhaps had never a serious thought about it before. There are many, who, when in health and strength, are so intent upon the pleasures and profits of the world, that they mind nothing else; all the warnings, exhortations, and counsels of ministers, teachers, and friends, are lost upon them; they cannot endure to entertain a thought of God, of the soul, of death, of heaven, of hell, or of judgment to come; till God casts them into some sickness or bodily distress, and then sometimes they begin, with the prodigal, to come to themselves, and bethink themselves concerning their souls and a future life. Now, this is God's design, 1 Kings viii. 47, "If they bethink themselves in the land whither they are carried captives, and repent," &c. By sickness, God gives a man, that before was wholly diverted from soul-matters, by business, company, and pleasures, occasion to bethink himself. The man is now confined to his chamber, is deprived of his former company and diversions, and so gets time and leisure to commune with his own heart, and reflect on his former ways, and to hear what conscience speaks concerning a judgment day, and a world to come, and the need of a Saviour. And so, by the blessing of God upon such afflictions, not a few have begun their first acquaintance with God and Christ, and serious religion. Nay, the furnace is Christ's usual work-house, where he has formed the most excellent vessels of honour and praise, Isa. xlviii. 10, "I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction." Manasseh, the Prodigal, Paul, and the Jailor, were all chosen there.

II. God visits us with sickness, in order to instruct and teach us those things we know not, Psal. xvi. 12. It was a saying of Luther, "Schola crucis est schola lucis." And indeed the school of affliction is the place where many of Zion's scholars have made good proficiency in spiritual and experimental knowledge. Now, there are several remarkable lessons which God would teach us by the rod.

1. The knowledge of God. It is said of Manasseh, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 12, 13., when he was brought to affliction, &c. "then Manasseh knew that the Lord he was God." Though Manasseh was well educated, and early taught the knowledge of God; yet, till now, he knew not the Lord. But now he knew him in his power and greatness, his holiness and hatred of sin; now he knew God in his goodness and mercy, and wondered that he had kept him so long out of hell.

2. Another lesson is the knowledge of ourselves. In time of health and prosperity, we are apt to forget ourselves, and our mortality: but sickness causeth us to know that we are but men, and frail men, Psal. ix. 20, that God hath an absolute sovereignty over us, and can as easily crush us as we do a moth.

3. He teacheth us the emptiness of the world. How vain a help is that which fails a man in the time of his greatest need! And oftentimes we see, that worldly means and friends can neither give the least ease to the bodies, nor comfort to the souls of persons under sickness and distress.

4. Another lesson is the great evil of sin, which is the cause of all sickness and diseases whatsoever, 1 Cor. xi. 30, "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you." Ah! what a root of bitterness must that be, which brings forth such bitter fruit?

5. He sheweth us the preciousness and excellency of Christ and his promises; which only can enable a Christian to rejoice in tribulation, and be easy under the greatest pains and diseases. There are many who are indifferent about Christ in time of health, that when sickness comes, change their note, and cry, O for an interest in Christ above all things!

III. God sends such trials and distresses, in order to mortify and kill sin in us, Isa. xxvii. 9, "By this shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit to take away his sin." And, indeed, sickness and affliction, through the blessing of God, hath a native tendency to weaken and subdue our prevailing sins and lusts. O man, is thy heart turned hard, so as thou art not sensible of thy own sins, or of others' sufferings? God sees meet to try the fire of affliction, to see if it will melt thy frozen heart. Hast thou undervalued health, and slighted thy mercies? Now God removes them from thee, that, by the want of them, thou mayest know the worth of them. Art thou turned proud and self-conceited? God sends thee a thorn in the flesh to prick the swollen bladder of pride, that thou mayest not be puffed up above measure: God lays thee low upon thy bed, that thou mayest be lowly in thy heart. Doth love for the world prevail in thee? God sends affliction to discover its emptiness, and wean thee from it. Art thou fallen secure, dead, and formal? God sends affliction to awake thee, that thou mayest not sleep the sleep of death.

IV. God sends sickness, to awaken in us the spirit of prayer and supplication, and make us more earnest and importunate in our addresses to the throne of grace. There is a great difference between our prayers in health and in sickness, between our humiliations in prosperity and in adversity. In prosperity we pray heavily and drowsily, but adversity adds wings to our desires, Isa. xxvi. 16, "Lord, in trouble have they visited thee, they poured out a prayer when thy chastening was upon them." Though they were backward enough to pray before, yet they pour it out most freely now. The very heathen mariners cried loud to God in a storm. What a famous prayer did Manasseh make, when he was under his fetters! We find it thrice mentioned, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 13, 18, 19. And the voice of a fervent prayer is what the Lord desires to hear.

V. Another end is, to loose our hearts from things of this world, and cause us look to and long for heaven. When we enjoy health and ease in this world, we are apt to say with Peter on the mount, "It is good for us to be here;" but, when distress cometh, God's people will turn their tongue, and say, with the psalmist, Psal. lxxiii. 27, "It is good for me to draw nigh to God." When things here go well with us, we are apt to think ourselves at home; but, when trouble ariseth, we begin to say, "Arise, let us depart, this is not our rest." Though heaven was much out of sight, and out of mind before; yet, when afflicting sickness comes, the poor believer will sigh, and say with David, Psal. lv. 6, "O that I had wings like a dove! for then would I flee away and be at rest: I would hasten my escape from the windy tempest."

VI. God designs to make the world bitter, and Christ sweet to us. By such affliction, he lets men see that the world is nothing but vanity and vexation of spirit; that riches avail not in the day of wrath; then it is they may see the insufficiency of the world to relieve them, that, as one saith, "A velvet slipper cannot cure the gout, a golden cap cannot drive away the head-ache, nor a bed of down give ease in a fever." And as the world turns bitter, so Christ grows sweet to the believer. In time of ease and health, Christ is often very much neglected and forgot. As the disciples, while the sea was calm, suffered Christ to sleep with them in the ship, thinking they might make their voyage well enough without his help; but when they were ready to be drowned, then they saw their need of Christ, they awakened him, crying, "Master, save us, or else we perish." So the best of saints, when all is easy about them, are prone to suffer Christ to sleep within them, and so to neglect the lively actings of faith in Christ; but when the storm of affliction begins to arise, and they are ready to be overwhelmed with distress, then they cry, "None but Christ, none but Christ."

VII. God tries with sickness and distress, in order both to prove and improve his people's graces, Deut. viii. 2; Rev. ii. 10. Grace is hereby both tried and strengthened. 1. Such afflictions prove both the truth and strength of our graces, as they serve to try if we love God for himself, if we can endure to hold out in serving him, waiting and depending upon him, notwithstanding of discouragements. That faith will suffice for a little affliction, that will not suffice for a great one. Peter had faith enough to come upon the sea at Christ's call; but, as soon as the waves began to swell, his faith began to fail, and his feet to sink, till Christ mercifully caught hold of him, saying, "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" Mat. xiv. 31. Little did Peter think his faith was so weak till now.

2. They tend to improve our graces also, by quickening and strengthening them. They serve as a whetstone to sharpen faith, so as the soul is made to renounce earthly shelters, and to clasp about God, in Christ, as its only refuge and portion. They excite to repentance and serious mourning for sin; for, like the winter frosts and snows, they make the fallow ground of our hearts more tender. They prompt us to heavenly-mindedness, self-denial, and patient waiting on God. Yea, the experience of God's people can attest it, that grace is never more lively than under affliction. David never found himself better, as to his spiritual state, than when he was persecuted and hunted as a partridge on the mountains; and hence he says, Psal. cxix. 17, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted."

VIII. God's aim is, to awaken us to redeem time, to prepare for dying, and clear up our evidences for heaven. In time of health, we are apt to trifle away time, loiter in our journey, and forget that we are pilgrims on the earth; wherefore God sends sickness as his messenger to mind us hereof.

Now it highly concerns us, when sickness attacks us, to consider and meditate upon those ends for which God brings on distress, and pray earnestly that they may be accomplished in us; and so our sickness shall not be unto death (spiritual or eternal); but to the glory of God, and the good of our souls.

DIRECT. II.—LET ALL WHO ARE VISITED WITH SICKNESS AND DISTRESS, SEARCH FOR THE ACHILLES IN THE CAMP, AND ENQUIRE DILIGENTLY WHAT IS THE GROUND AND CAUSE OF GOD'S CONTROVERSY WITH THEM.

It hath been the practice of God's people in scripture-times, to inquire into the cause and meaning of God's rods which have been laid upon them. So David, 2 Sam. xxi. When the land of Israel was three years under the stroke of famine, he inquired into the meaning of it. So Job is exceedingly desirous to know why God set him up as a mark for his arrows, Job vii. 20. And hence it is that he makes that petition, Job x. 2, which is most suitable for every man in distress, "Show me wherefore thou contendest with me."

I grant, indeed, that God sometimes visits his people with affliction, for the trial and exercise of their grace, and for their spiritual instruction, more than for the correction of their sin. But, sin being the origin and foundation of all affliction, it is safest, when it is our own case, and most acceptable to God, to look on sin as the procuring cause. Or, if our sins have not immediately procured the present affliction, yet the best of God's children must own, that they have at least deserved it. We see the sin of the Corinthians is mentioned as the cause of their sickness, 1 Cor. xi. 30, "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you." The psalmist concludes the very same thing, Ps. cvii. 17, 18, "Fools, because of their transgressions and their iniquities, are afflicted; their soul abhorreth all manner of meat, and they draw nigh unto the gates of death." But ordinarily by sickness the Lord points at some one sin in us more than another; some Jonah in the ship that hath raised the storm, which the Lord would have us to search out, and throw overboard without delay.

Q. But how shall we discover and find out the particular sin for which God afflicts us with sickness and distress?

Ans. 1. Study the Lord's word, and the chastisements there recorded, which he hath inflicted upon people for their sins; and inquire if you be guilty of the like. Observe what hath been God's mind to his people, and what sin he hath pointed out to them when they have been brought under such a rod, and so you may learn his mind to you, Rom. xv. 4, "For whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning."

2. Consider what is the sin which conscience doth most of all accuse thee for, in thy most serious and solitary hours. Conscience is God's deputy, and thy bosom monitor, whose voice perhaps thou hast little regarded in the day of thy health; wherefore God hath sent a sharper messenger to second the voice of conscience. Hear now the voice of the rod, for it is the same with the voice of conscience. In the day of prosperity, carnal profits and pleasures made such a noise, that the voice of conscience could not be heard; wherefore God hath brought on thee the silent night of adversity, that his deputy may obtain audience. Well then, give ear. What saith conscience now? may you not hear it saying, as Reuben to his brethren in distress, Spake I not to you in the day of health, do not commit such a sin, and do not delay repenting for such a sin, but you would not hear? O man, let conscience get a hearing at last, as it got with the patriarchs when they were brought to distress in Egypt, and made them confess their sins in the selling of Joseph, Gen. xlii. 21, "We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul, when he besought us, and we would not hear him: therefore is this distress come upon us."

3. Consider what are those evils that others have observed in you, whether they be friends or foes; hearken to what a Christian friend noticeth in you, either when speaking to you, or to others about you, "Let the righteous smite me," saith David, "and it shall be a kindness." Yea, do not disregard what even enemies say of you: as David got good by the malicious reproaches of Shimei, in the day of his affliction, so may you in the time of distress; for sometimes malice itself will speak truth. Enemies are sharp-sighted to spy out our faults, and so may prove monitors to us, both with respect to sin and duty.

4. Consider the nature and circumstances of thy distress. Ofttimes the affliction is so suitable to the transgression, that we may clearly read our sin written on the forehead of our punishment, as in the case of Adonibezek, and many others. And also you may be helped to find it out by the Lord's timing of the rod to you; was it sent when you was under much formality in duty; or when you was eagerly pursuing the things of the world; or when you was under the power of some prevailing lust or other? then the rod comes to reprove you, and awake you to see the evil thereof.

5. Consider what is the sin that hath been formerly most affrighting to thy thoughts, and perplexing to thy conscience, when thou hast been in the immediate view of death and a tribunal. It is very likely (if thou hast not truly repented of it), that is the sin which God now intends to awake thee to see the evil of, that thou mayest sincerely mourn for, and turn from it, looking to God in Christ, for pardon and mercy.

Object. "Ah! (saith one), it is my lot to lie under a dumb and silent rod, I do not understand its language, I cannot hear its voice, I cannot find out the sin that is pointed at by it; what course shall I take?"

Ans. 1. Be deeply humbled under this trial, and bewail thy case before the Lord; for it very much aggravates the affliction to God's people, when they know not the language of it; hence was it that Job lamented so heavily, that his way was hid, and he knew not the reason of God's contending with him, Job iii. 23.

2. A believer's case may be sometimes so dark, that it requires a good deal of spiritual art and wisdom to enable him to hear the voice of the rod, and understand its language. Hence it is said, "He is a man of wisdom that seeth God's name upon it," Mic. vi. 9. Now, this wisdom must only come from above: Therefore,

3. Go to God, and earnestly beg for this wisdom, that you may know his mind, and the meaning of the rod. Do as Rebekah, when the children struggled in her womb; she went to inquire of the Lord, saying, "Why am I thus?" Gen. xxxv. 22. Cry to God to give you his Spirit to teach and enlighten you to see sin in its evil, and the particular evils you are guilty of. This was Job's course in his affliction: "Shew me," says he, "wherefore thou contendest with me. That which I see not, teach thou me. Make me to know my transgression and my sin." There is no better way for a prisoner to know the reason of his confinement, than to ask the magistrate that committed him. God is a wise agent, and can give the best account of his own actions.

4. If thou canst not find out the particular sin for which God afflicts thee, then labour to repent of every known sin, and cry for pardon of every unknown and forgotten sin also. Do that out of wisdom, which Herod did out of malice; who, because he could not find out the babe Jesus, killed all the children of Bethlehem, that he might be sure to kill Jesus among them. Let us seek the utter ruin and death of all our sins, that we may be sure to destroy that sin for which God afflicts us.

5. Study to exercise a strong faith, and a humble submission, while God keeps you under the silent rod. Believe firmly that God is most just, though you know not for what he contends. And, however long he thinks fit to make you walk in the dark, resolve humbly to wait on him, and commit yourself to him, who has many times guided the blind in the way they knew not.

DIRECT. III.—WHEN ANY FIT OF SICKNESS ATTACKS YOU, THINK SERIOUSLY UPON DEATH, AND MAKE DILIGENT PREPARATIONS FOR IT.

I do not mean that any man may delay the work of preparation for death, till sickness cometh. No, no; this should be the great and uptaking business of every man in the time of his health and strength. But sickness and diseases being the harbingers of death, and messengers sent from God to warn us of its coming; every man is thereby called to renew the work of preparing for death with all earnestness and application. God's voice by every fit of sickness is that in Deut. xxxii. 29, "O that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end!" God knows our folly, and readiness to forget this great work in the day of health; and therefore in his mercy he sends sickness and affliction, to teach us so to number our days, that we may apply our hearts to this piece of heavenly wisdom, of making preparation for death.

And here I shall give, I. Some motives to press it. II. Advices for the doing it right.

I. For motives, consider these things:

1. Consider God's mercy and patience towards you, in giving you so many warnings, and so many years to prepare for death; and in sending his messengers and warnings so gently and gradually, to excite you to this work; when many younger and stronger than you are hurried into eternity, and little or no time given them to think where they are going. Have you not been spared many years in the midst of dangers, when you have seen that bold archer, Death, shooting his arrows, and killing thousands of your neighbours and friends around you? Sometimes the arrow hath glanced over your head, and slain some great man your superior; sometimes it hath lighted at your feet, and cut off a child or servant, your inferiors; sometimes it hath gone by on your left hand, and killed your enemy; at other times it hath passed on your right hand, and killed your near relations. So that you have seen friends and foes, superiors and inferiors, relations and strangers, dropping down dead round about you; and all this for a long tract of time, to give you warning to prepare for death. O let the goodness and forbearance of God towards you lead you to repentance, and persuade you to fly speedily to Christ for refuge and protection from wrath!

2. Consider how terrible death will be, if it meets you in an unprepared state, in a Christless and impenitent condition. What a fearful change will it bring upon you! A change from earth to hell, from hope to despair, from pleasure to pain, from comforts to terrors; a change from the offers of grace to the revelation of wrath; a change from probabilities to utter impossibilities of salvation. Death will cut off all your hopes and expectations of mercy for ever, Job xxviii. 3. There is no coming back to amend what hath been done amiss here; and there is no work nor device in the grave whither you go. As the tree falls, so it will lie through all eternity.

II. I come to give some advices, in order to the right preparation for death.

1. Set about self-examination work. Inquire if you be in Christ or not; if you be yet far off from God, or if you be brought near by the blood of Christ. And see that you be impartial in this search, and willing to find out the truth in this important question. Be not foolishly tender of yourself, and apt to believe that you are safe, when it is not so; for in this way thousands ruin themselves. But be content to know the worst of your case, and thoroughly to understand your soul's danger, that you may be moved to take the right way to escape it. Wherefore take a view of the mark of Christless and unconverted persons set down in God's word, and judge yourself by them: and consider also the designs of true grace there recorded, and see if they be applicable to you or not.

2. If, after inquiry, you find your state is bad, that you have been a lover of the world more than of God, you have minded your body more than your soul, you have lived in the neglect of precious Christ, allowed yourself in known sin; O then be convinced of your inability to help yourself, and of your need of Christ to help you. And labour to be deeply humbled before God, under a sense of your sin and folly. "Ah, how foolishly, how rebelliously, how unthankfully have I lived! I have abused God's mercies, and left undone the work for which I was made, preserved, and enjoyed the gospel. Oh! I had all my by-past time given me to make preparation for endless eternity, and I have never minded it, till now that sickness, the harbinger of death, is come upon me. And now what shall I do to be saved?" Well then, in order to convince and humble you the more, cast back your eyes upon the sins of your nature, and of your by-past life; view them in their nature, number, aggravations, and deserts. O, do not so many years' sins need a very deep humiliation? O, do you not stand greatly in need of such a person as Christ, to be your Saviour and Ransomer from such a vast number of sins? O but their weight will press you eternally down to the lowest hell, if left to yourself, and laid upon your back.

3. O sinner, art thou deeply humbled, and desirous of mercy upon any terms? Believe, then, that thy case is not remediless, but that there is a sacrifice provided for your sins, and an able and all-sufficient Saviour in your offer. Believe that the Lord Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and become flesh to be a surety for you, that he is both able and willing to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him. Though your sins, your dangers, and your fears, were never so great, yet he is able and willing to save. O flee presently to this refuge-city, whose gates are open to receive you. Trust your souls upon Christ's sacrifice and meritorious blood for mercy and salvation. Apply humbly to him, that he may teach you the will of God, reconcile you to his Father, pardon your sins, renew you by his Spirit, and save you from eternal wrath.

4. Give up yourselves to God in Christ, by way of covenant and solemn resignation. Every man doth this sacramentally in baptism; but you must also renew it personally and explicitly, and thereby give a cordial and voluntary consent to the covenant of grace. Acquiesce cheerfully in the gospel way of salvation through Christ and his righteousness; and accept of God, in Christ, as thy portion. Make choice of God the Father, as thy reconciled Father in Christ; and God the Son as thy Redeemer and Saviour; and God the Holy Ghost for thy sanctifier, guide, and comforter. And likewise give up thyself, soul and body, and all thou hast, to be the Lord's; engaging in Christ's strength to live for God, and walk with him in newness of life. And study to do all this deliberately, unfeignedly, and cheerfully. Though, perhaps, you have done this hypocritically at former times, you have profaned God's covenant, and behaved unsteadfastly and perfidiously therein; yet now endeavour to be sincere with God for once.

5. Be living daily in the exercise of faith and repentance; renew the acts thereof frequently, in proportion to your renewed sins and guiltiness, cleave close to glorious Christ, your high priest and surety, and be ever washing in his blood. As long as you are in the world, you have need to wash your feet, John xiii. 10. Come death when it will, let it find you at the fountain, always looking to and making use of Jesus Christ. You have great need of Christ every day of your life, more especially in sickness; but most of all at a dying hour. O what need will you have of Christ then as an advocate with God, when the question is to be determined, where your mansion is to be assigned through all eternity, whether in heaven or hell? O then be looking always to Christ with the eye of faith. Live in the constant thoughts of this blessed Mediator. Let him be first in your thoughts in the morning, and last in your thoughts at night.

6. Be striving to mortify every sin and lust, both outward and inward. Be dying to sin daily, that so you may not die for sin eternally. O that sin may be daily losing its strength, and dying in you! so that it may be certainly dead before you. Pray earnestly, that all your sins may die before you die: for if they die not before you, but outlive the dying body, they will live eternally to sting and torment the never-dying soul.

DIRECT. IV.—BE NOT ANXIOUS FOR RECOVERY TO HEALTH; BUT LEAVE THE ISSUE OF THE PRESENT SICKNESS TO THE WILL AND PLEASURE OF THE INFINITELY WISE GOD.

REMEMBER, O man, that thou art the clay, and God is the Potter; he is absolute Lord of thy life and times, therefore learn to adore his sovereignty over thee and all thy enjoyments. David doth so, when he says, "Lord, my times are in thy hand," Psal. xxxi. 15. And indeed they are only best in his hand, for he best knows how to dispose of them. The prophet saith, Isa. xxx. 18, "The Lord is a God of judgment, blessed are all they that wait for him." Judgment there signifies wisdom, the Lord is a God of wisdom, and will order and time all things well; and therefore it becomes us quietly to wait for his pleasure, saying, "the will of the Lord be done." It is taken notice of as a great sin in the Israelites, that they waited not for his counsel, but limited the Holy One of Israel, Psal. lxxviii. 14. What unaccountable folly and presumption is it for worms of the earth to seek to stint and limit the Sovereign of heaven to their measures! It becomes us at all times, and especially in sickness and affliction, to have low submissive thoughts of ourselves, and high exalted thoughts of God's sovereignty, such as Nebuchadnezzar had, Dan. iv. 35, "And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing; and he doth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What dost thou?" We should therefore refer all to his wise determination, and be willing to die or live, as he shall be pleased to appoint. I remember I have read of a godly woman, who in her sickness being asked by one whether she was most desirous to die or live; she answered, I have no choice in that matter, but refer myself unto the will of God. But, said the other, suppose God should refer it unto you, whether to die or live, which of them would you choose? If God, replied she, should refer it to me, I would even refer it back again to him. It becomes thee, O man, to be entirely resigned to the will of thy Master, and to stand like a sentinel in thy station, ready to move as thy great general and commander shall give orders concerning thee. It would be pleasant and acceptable to God, to see thee more desirous to be delivered from sin than from sickness. O, but sin is a far worse disease than any sickness in the world! Beg importunately, that the great Physician may cure this woful soul-disease, and let him do with the body what he pleaseth. This was David's practice in his affliction, Psal. xxv. 18, "Look upon my affliction and my pain, and forgive all my sins." As for his pains and afflictions, he asks no more but that God would regard them, and look upon them, and do with them as he thought fit; but, as for his sins, no less will satisfy him than a pardon, and blotting them entirely out, so as they might be remembered no more.

DIRECT. V.—BIND YOURSELF WITH HOLY PURPOSES AND RESOLUTIONS IN CHRIST'S STRENGTH, TO BE MORE WATCHFUL AGAINST SIN, MORE DILIGENT IN DUTY, AND TO IMPROVE THE TIME OF HEALTH BETTER, IF GOD SHALL BE PLEASED TO RESTORE IT AGAIN TO YOU.

WHEN God is visiting your iniquities with rods, and pleading a controversy with you for your omissions and slackness in duty, he expects that you will return from your backslidings, and set about a serious reformation and change of life, Hos. v. 15, "I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offence, and seek my face; in their affliction they will seek me early." See then that you open your ear to discipline; study to answer God's call and expectation, and in his strength resolve to enter upon a new life. "Surely now it is meet to be said unto God, I have borne chastisement, I will not offend any more. That which I see not, teach thou me: if I have done iniquity, I will do so no more," Job xxxiv. 31, 32. Now is the season you should say with Ephraim, Hos. xiv. 8, "What have I to do any more with idols?"

Having duly examined yourselves, and searched out your sins, you ought to put a bill of divorce into each of their hands. Deliberately resolve against all your sins, whether secret or open; and especially resolve against your darling and beloved sins, those sins which most easily beset you.

Resolve also against all temptations to sin; and, particularly, against the snares of bad company, whereby you have been formerly enticed; now say with David, Psal. cxix. 115, "Depart from me, ye evil doers; for I will keep the commandments of my God." You must not only purpose to forsake all sin, but also mind every known duty; that you will make religion your one thing needful; the pleasing of God, the chief business of your life; that you will set the Lord alway before you, give him your heart in all duties, aim at nearness and communion with God in every one of them; and still press forward to the full enjoyment of God in heaven through eternity.

Resolve also, through grace, that you will, in a special manner, mind secret duties, which the eyes of men do not observe, and those duties which conscience mostly challenges you for neglecting. And you that are heads of families, resolve to make more conscience of family-religion, of worshipping God with your families, both morning and evening; instructing your children and servants in the knowledge of Christ; and recommending religion and godliness to all round about you, whether relations or strangers.

And, if you would have your resolutions effectual, see that they be accompanied with a deep sense of your insufficiency to perform them in your own strength. Bear always in mind the corruption and deceitfulness of your own heart; and make all your resolutions in a humble dependence on the sufficiency of Jesus Christ your surty. Observe the apostle Paul's advice to his son Timothy, 2 Tim. ii. 1, "Be strong in the grace that is in Jesus Christ." All your stock, O believer, is in his hand, so that without him you can do nothing; but, through Christ strengthening you, thou art able to do all things.

DIRECT. VI.—SET YOUR HOUSE IN ORDER, BY MAKING YOUR LATTER-WILLS, AND SETTLING YOUR DOMESTIC AND SECULAR AFFAIRS, WHILE YOU HAVE FREEDOM AND CAPACITY FOR DOING IT.

AFTER the heart is set in order, the next work is to set your house in order, according to God's counsel to Iiezekiah, Isa. xxxviii. 1. It is recorded of the patriarch Abraham, that he was careful to settle the affairs of his family before his death, Gen. xxv. 5, 6. He disposed of his estate to Isaac, and legacies to the sons of his concubines. It is too general a fault, that men delay and put off making their wills, as they do their repentance, to the very last, and so too frequently never make them at all. Consider the evil of deferring or neglecting this necessary affair; for if you, upon whom God hath bestowed means, should die intestate, your estate may descend otherwise than you intended; much of it may be spent in tedious and expensive law-suits; such differences may fall out among relations, that should live in friendship and mutual affection, as cannot be healed; some of them may be reduced to extreme want, when a small legacy might have put them in a way of living; and many such inconveniences may follow. Well, then, if your neglect should bring on these evils, and involve posterity into endless strifes and contentions, may you not justly fear that the guilt thereof will pursue you into another world, whose wretched carelessness was the occasion of all that mischief?

Pray, what is the reason that men put off this affair? Is it not because they do not incline to think so seriously on death, as this will occasion them to do? Doth not this smell of abominable earthly-mindedness, speak as if a man desired all his portion in this life, and cared not for a better? and that he is so far from preparing for death, that he cannot endure to think of it? Alas, that this worldly disposition should so far prevail among us! But surely there is no wise man will say, that the putting off the thoughts of death will keep death at the greater distance; or, that preparing for death, and making our wills, will bring on death the sooner.

It were surely best to order our affairs timeously; yea, do it in time of health, rather than to delay unto a sick-bed, or a death-bed; for either you may be snatched off suddenly, and have no time for it; or you may be taken with such a distemper as shall seize your tongue, so as you cannot express your mind; or seize your understanding, so as you cannot rationally dispose of your effects. And though none of those should happen, yet certainly it proves a great disturbance to a dying man, to be casting up, ordering, and settling the affairs of his family, when he should be securing a heavenly mansion for his soul, and clearing up his evidences thereunto. It is great wisdom to put this affair by hand, that you may have as little to do with the world as may be, and all occasions of distraction to your immortal soul may be prevented, when it is near to its removing into an eternal and unchangeable state.

Moreover, in settling your secular affairs, observe these following advices: 1. Make your wills cheerfully, and freely lay down whatever you enjoy, when God calls you to do it. Praise God that you had those things while you needed them, and, when you have no longer use for them, leave them without repining to those that come after you. Look not back to Egypt when you are upon your march to Canaan.

2. See that you deal justly, in providing your family, paying all your just debts, and making restitution if you have wronged any. Abhor all designs of defrauding any of your lawful creditors; for, if your last act should be unjust, you leave a blot upon your name here; and since you cannot repent of this wickedness, it being among your last deeds, you expose yourself to a fearful doom in the world whither you are going.

3. In settling your estates, see that God and good uses be not forgot nor left out. When you are leaving the world, and can glorify God no longer here by your words or actions, see to honour the Lord with your substance, by leaving some part thereof to a pious and charitable use. I know, it is a work of charity to give for maintaining the bodies of the poor; and especially the poor of God's people, who belong to his family: but it is much more pious and charitable to leave somewhat for propagating Christian knowledge in dark places; for educating poor children to read the scriptures; and instructing ignorant souls in the knowledge of Jesus Christ. It is much to be lamented, that so many rich men among us die, and leave nothing to such pious uses. The liberality of papists, on their death-beds, may give a sharp challenge to many professed protestants: O what a shame is it to the professors of the doctrine of grace, that the false doctrines of merits and purgatory should produce so many donations and mortifications among the papists: and the faith of Christ's most glorious gospel should not do the like among true believers! Shall the proud conceit of merit, and the imaginary fear of purgatory, prompt men to do more this way, than the certain persuasion of the love of God in Christ, and the well-grounded hope of eternal life through the alone merits of Jesus Christ: O what a reproach is this to our holy religion!

4. It might be much to the glory of God, and good of souls, that a great part of our testaments and latter-wills should consist of solemn charges, exhortations, and blessings, to our children, or those to whom we bequeath any legacy; so as they can never open our testaments, or look into them, but they might hear something that may make impressions on their souls for their spiritual edification, and for quickening them to the diligent practice of both family and personal godliness.

CHAPTER II.

CONTAINING SOME PARTICULAR DIRECTIONS TO THOSE WHO ARE SHARPLY AFFLICTED WITH SICKNESS AND LONG TROUBLE.

DIRECT. I.—JUSTIFY GOD IN THE GREATEST AFFLICTIONS WHICH BEFAL YOU.

THOUGH God shall condemn you, see that you acquitt him, and say, he is righteous in all his dealings. When the church was under the heaviest distress, she finds cause to justify God, Lam. i. 18, "The Lord is righteous, for I have rebelled against his commandment." So doth godly Nehemiah, Neh. ix. 33, "Howbeit thou art just in all that is brought upon us: for thou hast done right, but we have done wickedly." The same doth holy David acknowledge, Psal. cxix. 75, "I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right, and that in faithfulness thou hast afflicted me." Now, in order to bring you to this agreeable frame, and to convince you of the equity and justice of God, in his dispensations, however heavy and long your distress be, I shall lay before you the following considerations:

1. Consider the infinitely holy and righteous nature of that God who smiteth thee, Psal. cxix. 137, "Righteous art thou, O Lord, and upright are thy judgments." We presume it of a righteous man that he will do righteous things; and shall we not much more believe it of a holy and righteous God? We cannot be infallibly certain that a man will always do so: for a righteous man may leave his righteousness, because the creature is mutable; but God is immutably righteous; so that we may be confident of it, that the judge of all the earth will do right, for it is impossible he can do otherwise, Zech. iii. 5, "The just Lord is in the midst thereof, he will not do iniquity." He will not, he cannot; for it is contrary to his nature.

2. Consider that God never brings on any affliction without a cause, 1 Cor. xi. 30, "For this cause many are sick." He hath still just ground for the heaviest affliction, from thy sins and provocations; and may always say to thee, as to Israel, Jer. ii. 17, 19, "Hast thou not procured this unto thyself, in that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, when he led thee by the way? Thine own wickedness shall correct thee, and thy backsliding shall reprove thee: know, therefore, and see, that it is an evil thing and bitter that thou hast forsaken the Lord." There is still ground enough for affliction to be found in the best of God's people; and therefore it is said, Lam. iii. 33, "For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men." No: it is our sins that oblige him to it. As Christ whipped the sellers of oxen and sheep out of the temple with a whip (as is generally thought), made of their own cords; so God never scourgeth us but with a whip made of our own sins, Prov. v. 22, "His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden with the cords of his sins." If we consider the mighty God as a Lord dispensing grace, then we find he acts sovereignly, and according to his will and pleasure, Mat. xi. 26, "Even so, Father, so it seemed good in thy sight." But if we consider him as a judge, dispensing judgments, he never doth it without a foregoing cause on the creature's part. God's treasure of mercy is always full, and ready to be let out to them that seek it; but his treasure of wrath is empty till men fill it up by their sins, Rom. ii. 15, "Thou treasurest up to thyself wrath against the day of wrath." We always provide fuel for God's wrath, before it kindle and break out upon us.

3. Consider further this instance of God's equity; that when there is a cause given, God doth not presently take it, but continues to threaten often, and warn long, before he executes the sentence of his word. He sends lesser strokes as warnings of greater, if we repent not; and he repeats his warnings many times, both by his word and providence, before he smite. Yea, even when repeated warnings are slighted, he delays a long time, and waits to be gracious, Isa. xxx. 18. And when men's obstinacy and incorrigibleness arrive to such a height that he can spare no longer; yet, how loth is he to give them up to severe judgment! Hos. xi. 8, "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel? how shall I make thee as Admah? how shall I set thee as Zeboim? mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together." When the Lord hath sinners in his arms, ready to give them up to severe judgments, yet he makes a stand, and would be willingly prevented before he proceeds to this strange work; for so he calls his acts of judgment, Isa. xxviii. 21. Acts of mercy are co-natural, most agreeable and pleasant to God, Mic. vii. 18, "He delighteth in mercy; but judgment is his strange act, and his strange work."

4. Consider that when at last he sends strokes on us, they are always short of the cause; he exacts not the whole debt that sinners owe to his justice, as Ezra acknowledges, Ezra ix. 13, "Thou hast punished us less than our iniquities deserve." The stroke he there is speaking of, was a most heavy judgment: fearful ruin and desolation came upon Jerusalem, and the whole of Judah; the city and temple were burnt to ashes, the people carried captive to a strange land, and treated as bond-slaves among the heathen. Yet, saith the holy man, "Thou hast punished us less than our iniquities deserve." q. d. It is true we have been carried to Babylon; but, in justice, we might have been sent to hell: our houses were burned, but our bodies might have been burned too: we have been drinking water, but we might have been drinking blood; we have had grievous burdens on earth, but we might have been groaning in hell: we were banished from the temple, but we might have been eternally banished from God's presence. We think it a great favour among men, when any punishment is mitigated, when the sentence of death is changed into banishment, or when banishment is turned into a fine, or a great fine into a smaller: and will you think that God deals severely or rigorously with you, when he lays you on a sick-bed, when he might justly have laid you in hell, and poured out all his wrath upon you there? You but taste of the brim of the cup, when God might cause you to drink of the bottom and dregs thereof.

Have you not cause then to acknowledge God's justice; nay, even his mercy, too, in his dealings with you, however rough they may seem to be! May you not, with good reason, say, any thing less than hell is a mercy to such an ill-deserving creature as I am! If even a hard-hearted Pharaoh, under distress, came the length to own the justice of God, Exod. ix. 27, "I have sinned, the Lord is righteous;" shall any professed Christian fall short of that obstinate Egyptian?

DIRECT. II.—LABOUR STILL TO BE SENSIBLE OF GOD'S HAND UNDER HEAVY AFFLICTION, AND BEWARE OF STUPIDITY AND UNCONCERNEDNESS UNDER IT.

It is a sin to faint under heavy affliction, but it is a duty to feel it, Heb. xii. 5, "My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him." The apostle there cautions against two extremes, which every Christian under the rod should be careful to avoid: 1. Despising or making light of affliction; 2. Sinking or desponding under affliction. We are in great hazard of running into the one or the other. As to the first, we may be said to despise the chastening of the Lord, when we do not observe God's hand in our affliction, so as to reform the things whereby he is displeased; or, when we resolve to abide the trial, by the strength of our own resolutions and stout-heartedness, without looking to God for supporting grace; or, when we turn stupid and insensible under the heavy and long-continued rod. This despising and slighting of the rod, is not patience, but stupidity; it is not Christian magnanimity, but a stoical temper of mind, most sinful and provoking to God. We see how angry God is with sinners when his strokes are not felt, Isa. xli. 25, "He hath poured upon him the fury of his anger; and it hath set him on fire round about, yet he knew it not; and it hath burned him, yet he laid it not to heart;" Jer. v. 3, "Thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved: Thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction; they have made their faces harder than a rock, they have refused to return." There is little hope of a scholar minding his lesson, that is regardless of whipping. It is a dreadful sign to be like Pharaoh, sleeping in our sins, when God is thundering in his wrath. He that will sleep when his house is on fire, or lie still in bed, as if he was not concerned, may assuredly expect to be consumed in its flames. As David could not bear it, when the messengers he sent to the Ammonites out of good will were affronted and despised; so neither God will endure it, when the messengers he sends to sinners are slighted; for he that slights a messenger, affronts his master. Those who make light of affliction, make light of God that sends it, and make light of sin that procures it.

Quest. "But when is it that people are suitably concerned under a heavy rod?"

Ans. When they see God's hand, hear God's voice, answer his intent, are curious to know his mind, desirous to do those things he requires, and reform those things he is displeased with. Remember every affliction is a messenger from God, and deserves a hearing from you. It comes to thee with such a message as Ehud did to Eglon, Judg. iii. 20, "I have an errand from God to thee, O king;" I have a message from God to thee, O Christian, O sinner. Well, lend an ear, and hearken with reverence and attention to this errand; say, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth, what wouldst thou have me to do?" Believe it, that God speaks as really to you by his rod, as by his word; therefore he says, hear ye the rod. God spoke as truly by his ten plagues to Egypt, as he did by his ten precepts to Israel. And if the calm voice of the word were more regarded, we should hear less of the rough voice of the rod. As Gideon took briers and thorns of the wilderness, and with them taught the men of Succoth, who would not be taught by fairer means, Judg. viii. 15, so God takes the sharp prickles of sore affliction to teach you his statutes, when you will not be taught by softer methods. Beware then of grieving God's Spirit, by turning stupid and insensible under sharp or long-continued trials: but the more pains God is at with you by his rod, hearken the more carefully to his voice, and labour to make the greater proficiency in the school of affliction, where he thinks fit to continue you; that so you may inherit that blessing, Psal. xciv. 12, "Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest him out of thy law."

world, no distinction between the good and bad; and that it is to no purpose to be religious, like those mentioned in Mal. iii. 14, "Ye have said, It is vain to serve God; and what profit is it, that we have kept his ordinance, and walked mournfully before the Lord of hosts?" Yea, even the psalmist, when he begins to compare his own sharp trials with the wicked's ease and prosperity, is tempted to think all religion is in vain, and say, Psal. lxxiii. 13, 14, "Verily, I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocence. For all the day long have I been plagued, and chastened every morning." But these are nothing but the hellish suggestions of Satan, that irreconcilable enemy of God and precious souls, against which we should closely stop our ears.

2. Beware of charging God in your hearts, with rigour and injustice in his dealings, like those, Ezek. xviii. 25, "Yet ye say, The way of the Lord is not equal." How highly unjust and injurious are such thoughts of him who is the judge of all the earth, and cannot but do right!

3. Beware of thinking that heavy afflictions always speak wrath in God against thee. No, sometimes they speak forth love, and God may be carrying on a love-design thereby to thy soul, viz., to subdue thy strong lusts, and draw thee nearer unto himself. As for those who think that the smarting rod and divine love cannot dwell together, let them read that passage, Heb. xii. 5, 6, "And ye have forgotten the exhortation, which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him. For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

4. Beware of desponding and distrustful thoughts of God under sharp afflictions. Some are ready to raze the foundation; quit their interest in God, and the promises; and cast away their hope and confidence, saying with Gideon, Judg. vi. 13, "O, my Lord, if the Lord be with us, why then is all this evil befallen us?" So David was ready to draw a hasty conclusion, Psal. xxxi. 22, "I said, in my haste, I am cut off from before thine eyes." But this was the effect of unbelief; for he that believeth will not make haste.

DIRECT. III.—BEWARE OF MISCONSTRUING GOD'S DEALINGS TOWARDS YOU, AND OF CHARGING HIM FOOLISHLY.

We are apt to believe Satan's suggestions under heavy trials, and to entertain wrong thoughts of God and his dispensations. Now, these you ought to guard against, as, for instance, 1. Beware of harbouring atheistical thoughts, as if there were no Providence, no wise governor of this lower DIRECT. IV.—UNDER SORE TROUBLE AND DISTRESS, LABOUR TO EXERCISE A STRONG AND LIVELY FAITH.

It was a noble and heroic resolution in that holy man Job, under his singular trials, Job xiii. 15, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him," q. d. Let my strokes be never so sore and heavy, yet I will not let go my hold of his words and promises, I will not raze these foundations of my hope. It was in this way the psalmist kept himself from sinking under his heavy burdens, Psal. xxvii. 13, "I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living." Consider but a little the noble influence that faith hath to strengthen and support the soul under sore trials.

1. Faith holds to the great gospel promises of salvation in and through Jesus Christ, and so secures the soul's main interest through eternity; which is enough to make the soul easy in every lot.

2. Faith views God in Christ at the helm in the greatest storm, and so it endures, as seeing him who is invisible, Heb. xi. 57.

3. Faith casts the soul's anchor upon the rock of ages, and stays itself on God and the faithful promises; whereby the soul is eased and disburdened of its fears and melancholy apprehensions, Psal. iv. 22; Isa. l. 10.

4. Faith brings new strength and auxiliary supplies of grace from heaven, when the former supply is exhausted and spent; whereof David had the sweet experience, Psal. xxvii. 13. As God plants and actuates grace in the soul, so he is pleased to come in with seasonable supplies and reinforcements to the weak and decayed graces of his people, answerable to their present exigencies and pressures; and thus he doth, from time to time, feed the believer's lamp with fresh oil, giving more faith, more love, more hope, and more desires; and hereby he gives power to the faint, and strengthens the things which remain when ready to die.

5. Faith keeps the soul from sinking under heavy trials, by bringing in former experiences of the power, mercy, and faithfulness of God to the afflicted soul. Hereby was the psalmist supported in distress, Psal. xlii. 6; lxxxvii. 4. O, saith faith, "Remember what God hath done both for thy outward and inward man; he hath not only delivered thy body when in trouble, but he hath done great things for thy soul; he hath brought thee out of a state of black nature, entered into a covenant-relation with thee, made his goodness pass before thee; he hath helped thee to pray, and many times hath heard thy prayers and thy tears. Hath he not formerly brought thee out of the horrible pit, and out of the miry clay, and put a new song in thy mouth, and made thee to resolve never to give way to such unbelieving doubts and fears again? And how unbecoming is it for thee now to sink in trouble?"

6. Faith supports the soul, by giving it a pleasant view and prospect of a happy outgate from all trouble; when it shall be admitted to see and dwell with Christ hereafter. Thus was Job supported in his great distress, Job xix. 25, 26, 29,

"For I know that my Redeemer liveth; and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold," &c. A believing view of the soul's meeting with its Redeemer, and receiving a crown of glory from him at last, is an excellent support to a Christian under the heaviest affliction; and so it was to Paul, 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8.

7. Faith gives great support, by the encouraging representations it makes of Christ, and of his present concern for the believer while under affliction. As for instance, 1. Faith represents Christ to a believer under trial, as sympathizing with him under his distress, feeling his pain, hearing his groans, bearing his burdens, and ready to relieve him in his own appointed time, which it well becometh him to wait for. 2. Faith represents Christ as putting in his Almighty arm under the believer's head, and conveying invisible strength to support and hold him up under his greatest pressures. 3. Faith represents Christ as pleading the afflicted believer's cause with God, and answering all the charges of the law, the challenges of conscience, and accusations of Satan against him. 4. Faith represents Christ as standing by the furnace as a refiner where his gold is melting; carefully overseeing the trials of his people, that they may work for their good; and ready to bring them out thereof, when they are sufficiently purified from their dross. 5. Faith represents Christ as smiling on his people under the cross, whispering peace into their ears, and saying, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

DIRECT. V.—LABOUR TO BEAR WITH PATIENCE WHATEVER LOAD OF TROUBLE THE LORD APPOINTS FOR YOU.

WE will perhaps observe some, who are strangers to religion, contentedly enduring very painful evils; and this they may do, by virtue of a natural hardness and resolution which some are endued with; or, upon the account of arguments furnished with human prudence: this is only patience as a moral virtue, which some attain to. But it is patience as a spiritual grace, or a fruit of the Spirit, which we must aim at under our trials; that we may bear them contentedly, from divine principles, to divine ends. Now, this grace of patience we must earnestly beg from God under heavy afflictions, for it is only he that must work it in us; and therefore, he is called the God of patience, Rom. xv. 5. And, in order to your attaining of this grace, I shall lay before you the following considerations, which may be useful, through the Lord's blessing, for that end.

1. Consider the patience of our Lord Jesus Christ, under sufferings inexpressibly greater than yours. When it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and put him to grief; how patiently did he bear all! According to that remarkable word, Isa. liii. 7, "He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth; he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth." Now, Christ suffered as an example of patience, though it was not his chief end: and surely all the members of the body should study to imitate the head in patience. Did your blessed Saviour patiently endure such agonies and pressures of wrath for you; and will you decline to undergo some short pains or sickness, in obedience to his commandment?
